Where a plaintiff in a replevin action gives an undertaking conditioned for the payment to the defendant of such sum as may "for any cause" be recovered against the plaintiff, and judgment for costs is rendered against the plaintiff, the surety is liable for such costs. Katz v. American Bonding & Trust Co. 86 Minn. 168, 90 N. W. 376; Rhodes v. Burkart, 28 S. C. 154, 5 S. E. 347; Tibbles v. O'Connor, 28 Barb. 538; Carlton v. Dixon, 14 Or. 293, 12 Pac. 394.

And if a judgment for costs is rendered against such plaintiff both in the trial court and on appeal, the surety on such undertaking is liable for the costs in both courts. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Tibbles v. O'Connor and Carlton v. Dixon, supra.

But an undertaking given by a defendant in an action of replevin, conditioned to pay "any damages awarded against him in said suit," does not include costs, as "damages" in a legal sense do not include costs. Brock v. Bolton, 37 S. C. 40, 16 S. E. 370.

The surety on the bond of the unsuccessful defendant in an action of replevin is liable for all of the plaintiff's costs in such action, though a former statute requiring such bond to be conditioned for the delivery to the plaintiff of the property "if such delivery should be adjudged, and for the payment of such sum as may for any cause be recovered against the defendant," was changed so as to require the bond thereafter to be conditioned "for the delivery thereof, with damages for its deterioration and its detention, if delivery can be had, and if such delivery cannot for any cause be had, for the payment to him of such sum as may be recovered against the defendant for the value of the property at the time of the unlawful taking or detention, with interest thereon, as damages for such taking and detention." Hall v. Tillman, 110 N. C. 220, 14 S. E. 745.

Expenses incurred by the successful defendant in a replevin action are not recoverable in an action on a replevin bond which, by statute, covers payment to the defendant only of "any sum which the judgment awards to him against the plaintiff." Firestone v. Aetna Indemnity Co. 67 Misc. 443, 123 N. Y. Supp. 107.

—condition to pay costs and damages eo nomine.

Costs obtained by the successful defendant in a replevin action are recoverable from the surety on the replevin plaintiff's bond, conditioned that the plaintiff should pay "all damages and costs" which should be awarded against him. Campbell v. Laue, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 63, 95 N. W. 1043.

Expense for printing necessarily expended in defeating the replevin action is recoverable in an action on the replevin bond, containing a condition for the payment of all costs and damages occasioned by the wrongful suing out of the writ of replevin. Harts v. Wendell, 26 Ill. App. 274.

In an action on a replevin bond conditioned to pay costs, etc., given in replevin of goods seized under execution, all the costs incurred in the action in which execution issued are recoverable, though part of them may have been incurred by the execution defendant. Larson v. Laird, 36 Ill. App. 402.

Where, under a statute providing that plaintiff in replevin shall give bond to pay such damages and costs as the defendant shall recover against him, and, on the plea of non cepit only, a verdict was entered for defendant and judgment rendered in his favor for costs only, such costs and interest are recoverable in an action on the bond. Hovey v. Coy, 17 Me. 266.

The sureties of a defendant in an action of replevin, who retained the property by giving a forthcoming bond, in case of his defeat, are liable, not only for the value of the property, but also for the costs, under a statute providing that "if the property be in possession of the losing party, the execution shall command the sheriff to take the property in controversy, if the same may be had, and deliver the same to the successful party; and if not to be had, that he make the value thereof, together with the damages and costs, of the goods . . . of the party and his sureties against whom the judgment is rendered," although the bond itself was not conditioned for costs. Phillips v. Cooper, 59 Miss. 18; Sparks v. Hopsen, 83 Miss. 124, 35 So. 446.

A surety on a redelivery bond "conditioned that he [defendant in replevin action] will appear in and defend the action, and deliver the property to the plaintiff, if he recovers judgment therefor, . . . and that he will pay all costs and damages that may be adjudged against him for the taking or detention of the property," cannot be held for the costs of a continuance granted at the request of the defendant in the replevin action, when the latter was ultimately successful. American Soda Fountain Co. v. Dean Drug Co. 136 Iowa, 312, 111 N. W. 534.

—condition to prosecute action.

The defendant's costs recovered in the replevin action are recoverable by him in an action on the bond, where there was a breach of a condition of the replevin bond to prosecute the suit to effect, by taking a nonsuit. Langdoc v. Parkinson, 2 Ill. App. 136.

Or by an unsuccessful suit, when the defendant in the replevin action regained possession of the property by giving a redelivery bond, and recovered a judgment for costs in such replevin action. Tibbal v. Cahoon, 10 Watts, 232; Balsley v. Hoffman, 13 Pa. 610.

A constable who seized horses on a writ of execution, which were thereafter replevied by the execution debtor, who later suffered a nonsuit, may, in an action on the replevin bond, conditioned for the prosecution of the action of replevin without delay, recover the cost of feeding the horses while in his possession. Davis v. Crow, 7 Blackf. 129.

The surety on a replevin bond conditioned that his principal shall prosecute his suit "with effect" is liable for all the costs of the successful defendant adjudged in his favor in the replevin suit, up to the penalty of the bond, although the verdict and cost exceed the appraised value of the property replevied. Ingram v. Cox, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 617.

The surety on a replevin bond conditioned according to statute that the plaintiff will prosecute the suit with effect, etc., make return of the property if return be adjudged, etc., is not bound for the costs of the replevin suit, where the statute provides that if the plaintiff in replevin fails to prosecute his suit with effect, the court or jury shall assess the value of the property and damages for the use of the same, and that in such case judgment shall be against the plaintiff and his sureties, that he return the property or pay the value so assessed, and double the damages assessed for the detention of the property; since the statute is silent as to costs. Morrow v. Shepherd, 9 Mo. 214.

—condition to return property.

The costs of a writ of retorno habendo are recoverable in an action on a replevin bond, on breach of a condition to return, as they are not the recovered costs of the replevin suit, but costs accruing after such judgment to enforce the same. Langdoc v. Parkinson, supra.

—conditions of bond not given.

It is proper to include the marshal's commission of 5 per cent in a judgment given on a replevin bond for goods distrained for rent. Alexander v. Thomas, 1 Cranch, C. C. 92, Fed. Cas. No. 174.

In Burn v. Blecher, 14 U. C. C. P. 415, it was held that the successful defendant in an action of replevin is entitled in action on the bond, to recover the costs incurred in the replevin action.

Taxable costs incurred by the successful defendant in a replevin suit, and which he rendered himself liable to pay, are recoverable in an action on the bond, but not costs made by the plaintiff in the replevin suit. Kellar v. Carr, 119 Ind. 127, 21 N. E. 463.

The costs recovered against the unsuccessful plaintiff in a replevin action are recoverable against the sureties on his bond without first making a demand on the principal in the bond, or suing out a writ of execution on the judgment. Cook v. Lothrop, 18 Me. 260.

In Howe v. Handley, 28 Me. 241, it was held that the successful defendant in a replevin action, who recovered judgment for a return of the property and for damages and costs, was entitled, in an action on the bond, the terms of which are not given, to the amount of the judgment for costs recovered in the action of replevin, with interest from the time of judgment, his reasonable expenses incurred in that action, with interest from the same time, and his reasonable expenses incurred in the suit on the bond.

The replevin bond is sufficient to cover the costs in all the courts where the replevin action was begun in the justice court, removed on certiorari to the supreme court, which reversed the judgments in the two former courts, both of which had been in favor of the plaintiff, "with costs of all the courts." Monroe v. Heintzman, 46 Mich. 12, 8 N. W. 571.

—limit imposed by penalty.

Costs of the successful party in an action of replevin are not recoverable in an action on the bond, when it causes the amount of the penalty to be exceeded. Branscombe v. Scarbrough, 6 Q. B. 13.

—liability of surety to principal.

In Hallman v. Dellinger, 84 N. C. 1, it was held that a surety on a replevin bond is not liable to his principal for costs which the latter had been compelled to pay. This would seem to be elementary, but the trial court went astray on the question.

R. A. E.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

JOSEPH LEVI, Appt.,

v.

LOEVENHART & COMPANY.

(138 Ky. 133, 127 S. W. 748.)

Bankruptcy — discharge — order for payment — effect.

The liability of an employer upon an accepted order of his employee, to pay a certain sum per week out of the latter's wages until a certain debt is satisfied, is extinguished by the discharge of the employee in bankruptcy.

(April 28, 1910.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Chancery Branch, First Division, of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County, dismissing a petition filed to enforce an assignment of wages. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — Effect of discharge in bankruptcy upon assignment of wages to be earned in the future under contract terminable at will.

But one case in point, other than LEVI v. LOEVENHART, seems to have been reported since the preparation of the note on this question appended to the Citizens' Loan Asso. v. Boston & M. R. Co. 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1025.

The case of Re Ludeke, 171 Fed. 292, involved a substantially similar point, and the same conclusion was reached as in LEVI v. LOEVENHART & Co. In the former case the question arose as to whether a discharge in bankruptcy would release the lien of an execution which, under the order of the state court, had been made a lien upon the salary of the discharged bankrupt, as the same became due and payable to him, and it was held that, as to salary earned subsequently to adjudication in bankruptcy, a discharge in bankruptcy freed the bankrupt's salary from the effect of the execution, since the judgment under which the execution was levied was thereby discharged, and the lien did not actually attach until the salary accrued.

A. G. S.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. Samuel A. Lederman and Kohn, Baird, Sloss, & Kohn, for appellant:

Wages to be earned under an existing contract have an existence as property, and are therefore the subject-matter of assignment or sale.

Holt v. Thurman, 111 Ky. 84, 98 Am. St. Rep. 399, 63 S. W. 280; Manly v. Bitzer, 91 Ky. 596, 34 Am. St. Rep. 242, 16 S. W. 464; Boone v. Connelly, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 190.

The property right created by an assignment of wages to be earned, in the wages, is distinct from the personal obligation of the assignor to pay the debt, if the assignment be to secure a money obligation.

3 Page, Contr. § 1284; Bishop, Contr. § 1193.

The acceptance by the defendant of the assignment was a confession by it of notice, and an agreement on its part to apply the wages when earned according to the terms of the assignment, thus safeguarding the property right therein of the plaintiff, and forming a contract between him and the defendant; upon the breach of which plaintiff has the right to recover as for money converted.

3 Page, Contr. § 1284; Bishop, Contr. § 1193.

The release of Metzler, the obligor, from the personal obligation to pay his debts, by the discharge in bankruptcy, did not affect the property right or interest which he conveyed to the plaintiff in the wages which he earned from the defendant, and which the defendant agreed to retain and pay to the plaintiff.

1 Loveland, Bankr. 3d ed. § 202; Citizens' Loan Asso. v. Boston & M. R. Co. 196 Mass. 528, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1025, 124 Am. St. Rep. 584, 82 N. E. 696, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 365; Bishop v. John H. Hibben Dry Goods Co. 30 Ky. L. Rep. 727, 99 S. W. 644; Brooks v. Eblen, 127 Ky. 727, 106 S. W. 308; Huffman v. Leslie, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1982, 66 S. W. 822; Starks v. Curd, 88 Ky. 167, 10 S. W. 419; Smith v. Gowdy, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 538; 1 Remington, Bankr. §§ 1144, 1150.

The wages earned by Metzler subsequent to his discharge are property subject to the lien created by him before his discharge.

Citizens' Loan Asso. v. Boston & M. R. Co. supra; Mallin v. Wenham, 209 Ill. 252, 65 L. R. A. 602, 101 Am. St. Rep. 233, 70 N. E. 564; Champion v. Buckingham, 165 Mass. 76, 42 N. E. 498; Johnson v. Donohue, 113 Tenn. 446, 83 S. W. 360; 1 Remington, Bankr. § 760, p. 451 and note; 2 Remington, Bankr. § 2677, p.

1591; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 774.

The validity of the assignment, and the right or property conveyed by it, are to be determined wholly by the law of the state of the assignment, and not by the bankruptcy law.

1 Remington, Bankr. §§ 1139, 1140; Thompson v. Fairbanks, 196 U. S. 516, 49 L. ed. 577, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306; Re H. G. Andrae Co. 117 Fed. 561; Porter v. Lazear, 109 U. S. 84, 27 L. ed. 865, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58; Long v. Bullard, 117 U. S. 617, 29 L. ed. 1004, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 917.

Mr. Nathan Kahn for appellees.

Lessing, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On October 1, 1906, Albert G. Metzler, who was then in the employ of Loevenhart & Company, gave to Joseph Levi the following order:

Louisville, Kentucky, Oct. 1, 1906.

Messrs. Loevenhart & Company,

Louisville, Kentucky.

Gentlemen:

Kindly pay to Mr. Jos. Levi $7.50/100, seven and 50/100 dollars, each week, out of my salary as long as I am in your employ, or until my indebtedness of $500 to Mr. Jos. Levi is settled.

[Signed] Albert G. Metzler.

—directing them to pay to said Levi out of his wages the sum of $7.50 per week until a debt due him, amounting at that date to $500, and evidenced by a promissory note, was satisfied. Loevenhart & Company accepted this order, as appears from the following indorsement thereon: "Accepted. Loevenhart & Company, Oct. 1st, 1906." Thereafter Metzler filed his petition in bankruptcy, and was in due time adjudged a bankrupt, and discharged. After he became a bankrupt, Loevenhart & Company discontinued the payment of the weekly stipend to Levi, and on March 10, 1908, he filed suit in the Jefferson circuit court to compel Loevenhart & Company to comply with the terms of the order, and to pay to him a balance alleged to be due him on his debt, amounting to $237.50. He pleaded, further, that Metzler was still in the employ of the defendants, and had been ever since they ceased paying him as per the order, and that, under the terms of the order, there was then in their hands, or should have been, more than enough money, if they had complied with their agreement, to satisfy the balance of his debt.

A special demurrer and certain motions 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to strike were disposed of, and the defendants answered in five paragraphs. The first is a traverse. The second pleads payment by Metzler. The third pleads usury in the note to the amount of $265.50. The fourth pleads, substantially, that Levi had taken advantage of the embarrassed financial condition of Metzler, and had overreached him, and induced him to execute an unconscionable contract, the enforcement of which was against a sound public policy, and that, because of the advantage thus taken of him in procuring him to execute the contract for $500, when, as a matter of fact, he only received $222.85, the same should not be enforced. In the fifth paragraph he set up the discharge of Metzler by the bankruptcy court, and filed with his answer copies of the orders of the Federal court for the western district of Kentucky, showing his adjudication and discharge in bankruptcy, together with a schedule filed by him in said court, in which plaintiff is given as a creditor, and he sought to be relieved from the payment of plaintiff's claim along with others. This adjudication and discharge they pleaded in bar of plaintiff's right to recover.

Plaintiff replied, traversing the allegations of the first, second, third, and fourth paragraphs, and pleaded, in response to the fifth, that he had taken no part in the bankruptcy proceedings, had filed no claim, and, in short, had ignored the proceedings therein. A demurrer was sustained to the fourth and fifth paragraphs of his reply. He declined to plead further, and, over⁹ his objection, his petition was dismissed, with judgment for costs. He appeals.

There is really but one question involved on this appeal, and that is whether or not the discharge in bankruptcy satisfied plaintiff's debt, and relieved the bankrupt, and Loevenhart & Company for him, of any further liability on account of the order and acceptance above set out. It is not seriously denied that the adjudication in bankruptcy discharged the $500 debt which plaintiff held against Metzler; but it is argued that, by this order, plaintiff acquired a property right in Metzler's wages, of which he could not be deprived by the discharge of the bankrupt, and on this theory rests his right to recover. This court has, in a number of cases, held that such an order, given by a debtor to his employer in favor of a creditor, operates as an equitable assignment of the wages designated in the order, and that the title of the creditor to the wages covered by the order is superior to that of any attaching or execution creditor. Holt

v. Thurman, 111 Ky. 84, 98 Am. St. Rep. 399, 63 S. W. 280; Manly v. Bitzer, 91 Ky. 596, 34 Am. St. Rep. 242, 16 S. W. 464; Boone v. Connelly, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 190. This is the extent to which these cases have held, and the question has arisen only as to the rights of creditors to subject wages that have been earned. The terms of the order were literally complied with by appellees at all times before Metzler's discharge, and it is only with the right of plaintiff to hold them liable for wages not then earned, but to be earned in the future, that we are now called to pass upon.

Undoubtedly the order in question secured to plaintiff an equity—suspended, as it were—which attached immediately that the wages were earned, and secured to him a priority in the earned wages to the extent stipulated in the order superior to that of any other creditor; but such right did not attach until the wages were earned. The order was valid only so long as the indebtedness to plaintiff remained unsatisfied. It is of no higher or greater dignity than the debt. It is merely an agreement that there shall be appropriated out of the debtor's wages a stipulated sum, to be credited on his debt until it is satisfied; i. e., paid or discharged. By his discharge in bankruptcy Metzler settled every debt that he owed,—was entirely, completely, and finally relieved from any and all liability on account thereof; and as plaintiff's claim was set up and described in the proceeding in the bankruptcy court as a debt owing by Metzler, it was likewise canceled, satisfied, and settled, and, being settled, the conditions of the order were fully satisfied, and appellee relieved from all liability thereunder.

This being so, it becomes unnecessary to discuss the further questions of interest raised by counsel in their briefs.

Judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

MAGDALENA STROTTMAN, Appt.,
v.

ST. LOUIS, IRON MOUNTAIN, & SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Resp't.

(228 Mo. 154, 128 S. W. 187.)

New trial — right to after reversal.

A plaintiff whose judgment is reversed on appeal after consideration of the law and the facts is not entitled to the benefit of a statute permitting the institution of a new suit within a year in case of a nonsuit or a reversal of a judgment in his favor, where 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

the appellate court is authorized to award a new trial reverse, or affirm, since the reversal referred to in the statute must be held to mean one in which the merits of the cause have not been adjudicated.

(May 13, 1910.)

Note. — Reversal on merits without remanding as a bar to a new action.

Although much general language may be found concerning the effect of a judgment of an appellate court which reverses a judgment or decree of a trial court, cases which have expressly discussed the question presented in STROTTMAN v. ST. LOUIS, I. M. & S. R. Co., that is, whether a mere judgment of reversal without remanding, after due consideration of the law and facts of the case, will bar the bringing and maintaining a new suit, have been difficult to find.

Many of the cases cited to propositions apparently in point in this note were found, upon examination, to be cases in which the cause was remanded to the lower court for further proceedings, or were otherwise disposed of than by a mere reversal. Other cases were found to use language so broad that it was impossible to determine whether the court reversing the judgment of the lower court had considered the merits of the case, or whether the judgment was reversed because of some mere technical reason. General expressions were also found to the effect that when the appellate court reverses for causes going to the merits, and the reversal shows an intention finally to decide the case upon the merits, the judgment is then a bar to a new action. Although such expressions are clearly correct, and plenty of authority may be found to sustain them, care should be taken in their citation, since the court or author using the expression very probably had in mind a judgment of reversal with petition dismissed, or cases in which final judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant, and not a bare judgment of reversal.

However, a number of authorities have been found which, without doubt, are valuable in a discussion of this question. The Missouri cases have been fully discussed in the STROTTMAN CASE, and they will not be repeated here.

In Platz v. Burton & C. Cider & Vinegar Co. 7 Misc. 473, 28 N. Y. Supp. 385, a judgment of a county court reversing on its merits a judgment in favor of plaintiff and reciting that no liability was shown on the trial against the defendant, was held to be a bar to a subsequent action for the same cause. The court, after pointing out that this case did not come within the exception of the statute, providing that the county court had no power to grant a new trial upon reversing a justice's judgment, stated that the county court was limited to the powers granted it by a statute which provided that the appellate court must render judgment according to the justice of the case without regard to technical errors or defects which do not affect the merits, and

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for City of St. Louis in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's husband. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Block & Sullivan, for appellant:

A reversal without remanding is not an adjudication of the merits, but is equivalent to a nonsuit by the plaintiff.

Robinson v. Musser, 78 Mo. 153; Musser v. Harwood, 23 Mo. App. 495; Zursfluh v. People's R. Co. 46 Mo. App. 643; Berning v. Medart, 56 Mo. App. 450; A. M. Stevens Lumber Co. v. Kansas City Lumber Co. 72 Mo. App. 258; Young v. Thrasher, 123 Mo. 312, 27 S. W. 326; Smith v. Adams, 130 U. S. 177, 32 L. ed. 899, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506; Stone v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 117 Mo. App. 297, 92 S. W. 1143; Donnell v. Wright, 199 Mo. 312, 97 S. W. 928; Briant v. Fudge, 63 Mo. 491; Estes v. Fry, 160 Mo. 81, 65 S. W. 741; Mason v. Kansas City Belt R. Co. 226 Mo. 212, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 914, 125

S. W. 1133; Hennessey v. Bavarian Brewing Co. 63 Mo. App. 111, a. c. 145 Mo. 109, 41 L.R.A. 385, 68 Am. St. Rep. 554, 46 S. W. 966; Bucher v. Cheshire R. Co. 125 U. S. 555, 31 L. ed. 795, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 974; Gardner v. Michigan C. R. Co. 150 U. S. 349, 37 L. ed. 1107, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140; Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Patting, 210 Ill. 346, 71 N. E. 371; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Bentz, 108 Tenn. 670, 58 L.R.A. 690, 91 Am. St. Rep. 763, 69 S. W. 317; Holland v. Hatch, 15 Ohio St. 465.

Messrs. J. F. Green and R. T. Ralley for respondent.

Graves, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This cause is here for a second time. There was at least an attempted adjudication of it in Strottman v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 211 Mo. 227, 109 S. W. 769. We have purposely used the word "cause" instead of the word "case." The cause when first here came by appeal from Jefferson that it may affirm or reverse the judgment of the justice in whole or in part, and as to any or all of the parties, and for errors of law or of fact.

In Larkins v. Terminal R. Asso. 122 Ill. App. 246, affirmed in 221 Ill. 428, 77 N. E. 678, it was held that a statute providing that if judgment be given for the plaintiff and the same be reversed by writ of error, or upon appeal if the time limited for bringing such action shall have expired during pendency of the suit, he may commence a new action within one year from such reversal, cannot be applied where a judgment was reversed without remanding, and a finding of facts was entered in accordance with a section of the practice act, providing in effect that if any final determination of any cause be made by the appellate court, as the result of the finding of the facts, different from the finding of the lower court, it shall be the duty of the appellate court to recite in its final order or decree, the facts as found, and that the judgment shall be final and conclusive as to all matters of fact in controversy.

The court said: "We conclude that where an appellate court has reversed a judgment for causes going to the merits, and the reversal shows an intention finally to decide the case upon the merits, such judgment is a final one upon the facts constituting the cause of action and has all the characteristics necessary to constitute it res judicata; that our statute upon the subject, declaring that it shall be the duty of the appellate court to recite in its final order, judgment, or decree in such cases, the facts as found, and that the judgment of such court shall be final and conclusive as to all matters of fact in controversy in such cases, is intended to be final, and to preclude any further litigation concerning the matters constituting the same cause of action."

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In this case the plaintiff contended that the purpose of the above section of the practice act was to enable the supreme court to determine from the finding of the facts whether the law of the case had been correctly applied, and that it was not intended that such a finding should convert a judgment of reversal into an adjudication that would operate as an estoppel. The court, however, in answer to this contention said: "In very many cases, however, there can be no reason of the amount involved, be no appeal from the appellate to the supreme court. If therefore, the finding of facts by this court is simply to show the supreme court the reasons moving the appellate court to the action taken by it in such a case, what is the effect of the statute upon those cases in which no appeal can be taken from the appellate to the supreme court? It must follow from such a construction of the statutes that in such cases the judgment of the appellate court is final and res judicata, while the same rule does not apply to cases in which an appeal may be taken. The statute, however, is general in its terms, making no distinction between the different classes of cases above referred to, but appears to be alike applicable to all cases in which the appellate court makes a finding of fact. The statute says plainly and without any equivocation, in cases where there is a reversal based wholly or in part upon the finding of facts, different from the finding of the trial court, 'it shall be the duty of such appellate court to recite in its final order, judgment, or decree the facts as found, and the judgment of the appellate court shall be final and conclusive as to all matters of fact in controversy in such cause.' The reading of the statute is not that the finding of the facts and the judgment of the appellate court shall be final and conclusive upon the supreme court, county. Plaintiff, the widow of an engineer in the employ of defendant, sues for the alleged negligent killing of her husband. The negligence charged was the failure of a telegraph operator to deliver a train despatcher's message, through which failure a collision occurred and plaintiff's husband was killed. When that case came on for hearing in this court, by majority opinion it was held that the deceased engineer and telegraph operator were fellow servants under the act of 1897 (Laws 1897, p. 90), but it was further held that such act of 1897 did not give the widow a right of action. This court upon an examination and hearing upon both the facts and the law entered a simple judgment of reversal, in words as follows: "Now at this day come again the parties aforesaid, by their respective attorneys, and the court here being now sufficiently advised of and concerning the premises, doth consider and adjudge that the judgment aforesaid, in the form aforesaid, by the said Jefferson county circuit court rendered, be reversed, annulled, and for naught held and esteemed, and that the said appellant be restored to all things which it has lost by reason of the said judgment. It is further considered and adjudged by the court that the said appellant recover against the said respondent its costs and charges herein expended, and have execution therefor. (Opinion filed.)"

The present case was instituted in the circuit court of the city of St. Louis by a petition containing two counts. The two counts are the same save and except in the second there is an allegation of wanton and wilful negligence and a prayer for punitive as well as other damages. In this count actual damages for $5,000 and additional punitive damages are claimed. Both counts of said petition contain the following allegations: "Within six months next after said accident, injury, and death of the plaintiff's husband, she brought her action against the defendant in the circuit court of Jefferson county to recover damages in passing upon the case in appeal, but that it shall be final and conclusive as to all matters of fact in controversy in such cause."

The court in this case also refused to adhere to the contention of the plaintiff, that to hold such a judgment final would be in effect to deprive him of his constitutional right to trial by jury. It should be noted that this note is not primarily concerned with the constitutionality of the above statute, and that there may be many cases not within the scope of this note which discuss that question.

There are a number of cases from Illinois which would seem, however, to favor the doctrine that a reversal without remanding, with a finding of facts pursuant to the practice act, is not a bar to a new action. Thus in Union Nat. Bank v. Manistee Lumber Co. 43 Ill. App. 525, it was said: "While a finding here of the facts after a jury trial, contrary to the verdict, may under § 87 of the practice act of 1872, be made the final determination of the cause, in case the judgment below is simply reversed without remanding, yet such judgment is no bar to another action."

So, in Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Berg, 57 Ill. App. 521, the court used the following language: "We shall therefore reverse the judgment with a finding as a fact, that the injuries of the appellee were occasioned by his own carelessness, and not by any negligence of the appellant.

"Such a finding is merely an end of this suit; it is justification for not remanding the cause, but it is no bar to a new suit."

In Chicago Forge & Bolt Co. v. Rose, 69 Ill. App. 123, where a judgment was reversed with a finding of facts, without remanding the cause, the court said: "This disposes of the present action, but it will 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

not be a bar to a future action for the same cause if one shall be brought by the plaintiff."

In West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Boeker, 70 Ill. App. 67, the court said in denying a petition for a rehearing when a judgment had been reversed with a finding of the facts and without remanding, "This disposition of this case is no bar to another suit."

The above cases were all reviewed in the Larkins Case, supra, and the expressions above set forth, in the first three at least, considered mere dicta of the courts.

In Spees v. Boggs, 204 Pa. 504, 54 Atl. 346, and Fries v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 98 Pa. 142, it has been generally held without further discussion that a reversal of judgment without a new venire is not a bar to a second action for the same cause.

A case of some interest in this connection, although not strictly in point, is Hutter v. Paige Iron Works, 127 Ill. App. 177, where it was held that the statute granting a plaintiff the right of a new action within one year after the reversal of a judgment in his favor, if during the pendency of the suit the time limited for bringing the action had expired, did not apply to a case where the appellate court not only reversed the judgment entered by the lower court, but also awarded a venire facias de novo, but that it applied only to cases in which judgments were reversed on appeal or writ of error and the cause not remanded.

The question of constitutional power of appellate court upon reversing judgment for plaintiff on verdict to direct a judgment for defendant without remanding the case for a new trial is discussed in a note to Gunn v. Union R. Co. 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 362.

G. V.

therefor, and to recover upon the cause of action sued for herein, and subsequently, on May 14, 1903, recovered a judgment against the defendant therein, and said cause was thereupon taken by the defendant to the supreme court of Missouri, on appeal, and said judgment was by the supreme court of Missouri on the 2d day of April, 1908, reversed, to the damage of the plaintiff in the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000), for which she prays judgment." Other allegations in the two respective counts of the petition were such in substance as are found in the petition when the cause was formerly here.

To this petition, the defendant filed a demurrer in this language: "Now comes the defendant in the above-entitled cause and demurs to the first count of the amended petition filed therein for the reasons following: First. Because said first count of said amended petition fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against this defendant. Second. Because it appears on the face of said first count that plaintiff has no cause of action against this defendant. And defendant demurs to the second count of said amended petition for the reasons following: First. Because said second count of said amended petition fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against this defendant. Second. Because it appears on the face of said second count that plaintiff has no cause of action against this defendant."

This demurrer, the trial court sustained, and entered its judgment for the defendant, and from such judgment the plaintiff has appealed. The cause was briefed and argued here both upon the merits and upon the question of res judicata. Such sufficiently states the case.

1. In our judgment the present case is determined without a rediscussion of the merits of the cause. The present case, whilst here upon petition and demurrer, is as if it were here upon all the original facts with an answer pleading former adjudication. The petition was evidently so drawn as to force this situation. It avers all the facts necessary to be set out in an answer pleading former adjudication, and the demurrer raises the issue by conceding the pleaded facts. The demurrer performs a further office by raising a clear issue of law, i. e., that the petition upon its face shows a former adjudication of the cause of action stated, and for that reason discloses no right of action in the present case. We are therefore brought to the single question as to the force and effect of a simple judgment of reversal in an appellate court in a case where such court passed upon the entire cause, including both the law and the facts. The exact question is here for the first time. In all the history of the court, this is the first time a judgment of reversal in a case of this character has been treated as a nonsuit, and a suit reinstituted, carried to judgment, and appealed to this court. It is therefore interesting because of its novelty, if for no other reason.

The question must turn somewhat upon our statutory provisions. The various statutes are: Rev. Stat. 1899, § 639 (Anno. Stat. 1906, p. 658), which reads: "The plaintiff shall be allowed to dismiss his suit or take a nonsuit at any time before the same is finally submitted to the jury or to the court sitting as a jury, or to the court, and not afterward." Rev. Stat. 1899, § 806 (Anno. Stat. 1906, p. 815): "The supreme court, St. Louis court of appeals, and Kansas city court of appeals, in appeals or writs of error shall examine the record and award a new trial, reverse or affirm the judgment or decision of the circuit court, or give such judgment as such court ought to have given as to them shall seem agreeable to law; but it shall not be necessary, for the review of the action of any lower court on appeal or writ of error, that the motion for new trial in arrest of judgment or instructions filed in the lower court, shall be copied or set forth in the bill of exceptions filed in the lower court: Provided, the bill of exceptions so filed contains a direction to the clerk to copy the same, and the same are so copied into the record sent up to the appellate court. When the facts in a special verdict are insufficiently found, they may remand the cause and order another trial to ascertain the facts." Rev. Stat. 1899, § 2868 (Anno. Stat. 1906, p. 1652): "Every action instituted by virtue of the preceding sections of this chapter shall be commenced within one year after the cause of such action shall accrue."

Acts 1905, p. 138, which were enacted in lieu of Rev. Stat. 1899, § 2868, read thus: "Every action instituted by virtue of the preceding sections of this chapter shall be commenced within one year after the cause of such action shall accrue: Provided, that if any action shall have been commenced within the time prescribed in this section, and the plaintiff therein suffer a nonsuit, or, after a verdict for him, the judgment be arrested, or after a judgment for him the same be reversed on appeal or error, such plaintiff may commence a new action, from time to time, within one year after such nonsuit suffered or such judgment arrested or reversed." Rev. Stat. 1899, § 4285 (Anno. Stat. 1906, p. 2357): "If any action shall have been commenced within the times respectively prescribed in this chapter, and the plaintiff therein suffer a nonsuit, or, after a verdict for him the judgment be arrested, or after a judgment for him the same be reversed on appeal or error, such plaintiff may commence a new action from time to time, within one year after such nonsuit suffered or such judgment arrested or reversed; and if the cause of action survive or descend to his heirs, or survive to his executors or administrators, they may, in like manner commence a new action within the time herein allowed to such plaintiff, or, if no executor or administrator be qualified, then within one year after letters testamentary or of administration shall have been granted to him."

Section 4285, supra, appears under article 2 of chapter 48, which pertains to limitations of personal actions. The chapter contains two articles, one pertaining to limitations of real actions and the other to limitations of personal actions. Section 2868, supra, appears in chapter 17, which is entitled, "Damages and Contributions in Actions of Tort," and the amendment of 1905 would leave the amended section in the same chapter. Sections 639 and 866 appear in chapter 8, entitled "Code of Civil Procedure." The first section mentioned is in article 5 of chapter 8, which article is entitled, "Pleadings, and the Rules of Pleadings," and the second section, supra, is in article 12 of chapter 8, and such article is entitled, "Practice in the Supreme Court and Courts of Appeals." Such are the several statutory provisions involved in a discussion of the question.

It is immaterial in our judgment how we classify the case at bar. Plaintiff proceeded upon the theory that the case falls within the limitations as to time of bringing suit fixed by the damage act. She proceeded in the first case as also in this case, upon the theory that her right of action would lapse unless suit was brought within a year from the death of her husband. We say that it is immaterial because by an examination of § 4285 under the chapter pertaining to limitations of actions generally, and the act of 1905 eliminating the old § 2808 of the damage act, and enacting a new § 2868 in lieu thereof, it will be observed that the saving clause of the general statute of limitations found in said § 4285 has been substantially transplanted to the damage act by said act of 1905, supra. Clark v. Kansas City, St. L. & S. R. Co. 219 Mo. loc. cit. 530, 118 S. W. 40.

Discussing this saving clause added to the damage act by the act of 1905, in the Clark Case, supra, we said: "There has long existed in our statutes (chapter 48 on Limitations of Actions, art. 2, Personal Actions [Anno. Stat. 1906, pp. 2345-2365]), a section containing a saving clause in case of a non-suit, and providing that a plaintiff 'may commence a new action from time to time, within one year after such nonsuit suffered' [§ 4285].

This saving clause was substantially borrowed and used in the new § 2868, supra, now part of chapter 17 on Damages and Contributions in Actions of Tort. But in said article 2, chapter 48, it is further provided as follows (§ 4292): 'The provisions of this chapter shall not extend to any action which is or shall be otherwise limited by any statute; but such action shall be brought within the time limited by such statute.' Proper construction of the last section precludes the idea that § 4285 applies to actions instituted for damages for torts under the damage act. This, because the damage act carries its own special statute of limitations, which must control. Gerren v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 60 Mo. 405; Wilson v. Knox County, 132 Mo. 387, 34 S. W. 45, 477; Davenport v. Hannibal, 120 Mo. 150, 25 S. W. 364; Revelle v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 74 Mo. 438; Packard v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 181 Mo. 421, 103 Am. St. Rep. 607, 80 S. W. 951. In the latter case it was held that a widow, nonsuited within the year, might sue again, provided she instituted her suit within a year after the cause of action accrued, not within a year after nonsuit suffered. McQuade v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. 200 Mo. loc. cit. 157, 98 S. W. 552. It is practically conceded by counsel for appellant that unless § 2868, passed in 1905, applies to the case at bar, then the demurrer is well taken; for up to that time, as the law stood, there was no saving clause tolling the statute of limitations relating to damage suits grounded on torts, and permitting a nonsuit and the institution of a new suit within one year after the nonsuit. It is conceded, too, that the act of 1905 was passed to remedy the construction put on the damage act by Gerren v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. supra."

In the Clark Case, suit had been brought within the year but before the act of 1905 was enacted. Pending the suit, the act of 1905 was enacted and went into effect on June 16, 1905. On August 19, 1905, a nonsuit was taken, and thereafter within a year after the nonsuit a new suit was filed. This second suit was more than one year after the cause of action accrued, but we reached the conclusion that § 2868, as enacted in 1905, applied, and the new suit was within time. Upon this question, the present case is not more difficult. Here the original action was brought within the year, and the reversal was had long after the act of 1905 became effective.

Section 866 simply provides for the character of judgments the appellate courts may render. Such courts "shall examine the record, and" (1) "award a new trial," (2) "reverse" the judgment, or (3) "affirm" the judgment, or (4) "give such judgment as such court (meaning trial court) ought to have given." The awarding of a new trial of necessity requires the reversal of the judgment nisi. This section is of but little importance save as a side light.

The real question is the proper construction of the new § 2868 as enacted in 1905, when taken with § 639. Under such sections, in a case where this court has passed upon both the law and facts of a case and reversed the judgment nisi, can the plaintiff bring and maintain a new suit, if brought within the year specified in § 2868? We think not, and for reasons which follow.

2. Inasmuch as our new § 2868 is in substance the same as § 4285, the history of the latter section becomes important. Section 4285 had its origin in Laws of 1807. Vide Terr. Laws (vol. 1) p. 144, chap. 42, § 2. In substance it has remained the same throughout. The original act read: "And provided also, if in any of the before-mentioned cases any plaintiff obtains a judgment, which upon appeal or writ of error shall be reversed, or any plaintiff shall suffer a nonsuit, such plaintiff, his heirs, executors, or administrators, as the case may require, may commence a new action or suit from time to time within one year after such judgment reversed or nonsuit suffered as aforesaid, and not after."

Thus throughout our existence as a state, and for years before, we have had this statutory provision, and yet this is the first time that this court has been called upon to meet the question here presented. It would seem singular that in all these years a case fully heard upon law and fact, and reversed, was considered as ended, and yet when we transplant the same statute into the damage act, that a life of a different character would be thereby infused into it.

Plaintiff is not without some authority in this state, however. We are cited to the case of Donnell v. Wright, 199 Mo. loc. cit. 304, 312, 97 S. W. 928, 930, but this case does not help the plaintiff. There are some remarks made by the writer of that opinion which might lend color to plaintiff's claim, but this color is taken away by the following subsequent statement of Judge Lamm in that case: "In leaving this view of the matter, it should be said (to guard against misunderstanding) that the question is not here, and therefore we do not decide, that an opinion of this court holding plaintiff has no case at all on the facts and the law, which opinion is followed by a judgment of reversal only, leaves the identical issue on the identical facts open to reargitation in a new suit,—it being meet to dispose of that question only when reached as a live matter in a live case, and not obiter, or by the by." It is further eliminated as an authority, because it appears that two of the judges only concurred in the result of that case. Being one of the judges thus concurring in the result, it would not be improper to state that this limited concurrence was made on the theory that some obiter remarks in the opinion might be construed as a holding of the court.

The question came up in the case of Musser v. Harwood, 23 Mo. App. 405. Musser was the defendant in the case of Robinson v. Musser, 78 Mo. 153, which case simply reversed a judgment obtained by Robinson against Musser. Robinson had given a bond for costs, and the case of Musser v. Harwood was an action on that bond. Hall, J., of the Kansas city court of appeals, in discussing the question as to the force and effect of our judgment of simple reversal, said: "The supreme court had the right to reverse the judgment of the circuit court, and to render final judgment in favor of the defendant in the case of Robinson v. Musser; it had the power to reverse such judgment and dismiss the petition in such case. Gatewood v. Hart, 58 Mo. 261; Jenkins v. McCoy, 50 Mo. 348; McGee v. Larramore, 50 Mo. 425. A reversal of the judgment and dismissal of the petition by the supreme court would have been a final determination of the case. Did the simple reversal of the judgment, without remanding the case, have the same effect? Both modes have been indiscriminately used by all the appellate courts of this state in finally determining cases. In the cases last cited the judgments were reversed and the petitions dismissed. But in other cases to accomplish the same end the judgments has been simply reversed, and the cases not remanded. In Bell v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 86 Mo. 612, the court held that the plaintiff had made no case and that the defendant ought to have had judgment in the circuit court, and finally disposed of and determined the case by simply reversing the judgment. In Walden v. Dudley, 49 Mo. 422, the court held likewise, and simply reversed the judgment. And in Speak v. Ely & W. Dry Goods Co. 22 Mo. App. 122, the St. Louis court of appeals, by Thompson, J., said: 'The judgment will be reversed. The plaintiff has had his day in court, has failed to make out a case or to offer any evidence in contradiction of the evidence of defendant, which is clear, consistent, and entirely probable, and which shows that plaintiff has no case. It does not therefore appear that the ends of justice will be served by remanding the cause. The judgment will be reversed merely. It is so ordered.' We quote the above language as so clearly showing the practice in this state in this respect. It would be an endless and fruitless task to discover and cite all the cases in our reports, in which cases have been finally determined by our appellate courts by simply reversing the judgment. We are clearly of the opinion that the supreme court, by ordering simply the reversal of the judgment in the case under discussion, intended to and did finally determine it, as said court had the full power so to do. The judgment actually entered was a final judgment upon the merits, and was a complete bar to another suit on the same cause of action by the plaintiff, Robinson. The judgment of a simple reversal was entered in accordance with the opinion of the court, and, as has been said, it was intended to and did have the effect stated."

In this opinion, Philips, P. J., and Ellison, J., concurred. Later the Kansas city court of appeals dealt with the subject and overruled the Musser Case, supra. A. M. Stevens Lumber Co. v. Kansas City Lumber Co. 72 Mo. App. loc. cit. 260. In the lumber company Case, Smith, P. J., said: "The rule to be extracted from the foregoing authorities is that the simple reversal of a judgment without remanding will destroy its effect as an estoppel and throw the whole matter open; restore the statu quo ante bellum. And if the action was commenced within the period prescribed by the appropriate statute of limitations, the unsuccessful plaintiff may bring another action on his demand within a year after the reversal of his judgment, since such judgment is no bar thereto. We are unwilling to follow the rule declared in Musser v. Harwood, supra, in so far as the same is repugnant to that just stated. The prototype of this case, as seen by reference to the allegations of the petition hereinbefore set forth, was brought within five years after the cause of action accrued, and since this was brought within one year after the reversal of the judgment in the former, we must therefore resolve the preliminary question previously stated against the defendant's contention." The cases relied upon by Judge Smith are: Berning v. Medart, 56 Mo. App. 443; Zurfluh v. People's R. Co. 46 Mo. App. 636; Briant v. Fudge, 63 Mo. 489; Shaw v. Pershing, 57 Mo. 416; Houts v. Shepherd, 79 Mo. 141; State ex rel. Lafayette County v. O'Gorman, 75 Mo. 371.

A review of these cases will be of value. The Briant Case was this: Hayes, as sheriff of Cass county, had sold lands in partition and taken notes for the purchase money, dated April, 1860. Briant, the plaintiff in the case cited above, was a subsequent sheriff and was directed by the court to close up the said partition proceeding. The notes to Hayes became due in 1862, but Hays went out of office about that time. By order of court, Dale, a sheriff between Hays and Briant, was directed to close up the partition proceedings. Dale brought suit and obtained judgment against Fudge and others in 1870, which judgment upon the motion of Fudge, filed in 1871, was set aside by the circuit court in July, 1872, because there had been no sufficient service on Fudge. This motion of Fudge had been served upon Briant, and before the motion was actually sustained, i. e., on March 11, 1872, Briant brought the suit which reached this court. Briant was defeated in the circuit court and sued out his writ of error in this court. By our decision, the cause was reversed and remanded.

In the course of the opinion, Norton, J., said: "From this state of facts the question rises whether, notwithstanding the lapse of ten years from the time the cause of action accrued and the institution of this suit, the action can be maintained under § 19, p. 919, Wagner's Stat. This is the only point presented for our consideration. The statute provides as follows: 'If any action shall have been commenced within the times respectively prescribed in this chapter, and the plaintiff therein suffered a nonsuit, or after a verdict for him the judgment be arrested, or after a judgment for him the same be reversed, on appeal or writ of error, such plaintiff may commence a new action from time to time, within one year after such nonsuit suffered or judgment arrested or reversed.' It would seem to follow from the above that on the arrest or reversal of the judgment rendered in the suit of Dale against the defendant, another suit might have been brought on the same cause of action within one year after the arrest or reversal, even although ten years had elapsed. The intention of the legislature, doubtless, was to give a party who should commence his action within the time prescribed as a bar to his recovery, and had, from any of the causes mentioned in the section, failed to succeed in his suit or obtain the benefit of a judgment, the right to renew or maintain a new action within the time specified."

To our mind this case lends no support to the views announced by Judge Smith. The facts of the case do not bring it within that clause of the statute relating to cases upon appeal.

The case of Shaw v. Pershing, supra, is not at all in point, and does not even squint at the proposition. In that case it would appear that Shaw had first instituted his action in ejectment in the United States court before the expiration of the statutory period. In that court he suffered a nonsuit, and then within a year brought his suit in the state court. The defendant urged the statute of limitations. Our court simply held that the terms of our tolling statute were sufficiently broad to cover the case, and that inasmuch as action had been brought in the United States court within time, and then reinstituted in the state court one year after nonsuit suffered, the statute of limitations did not bar the action.

Houts v. Shepherd, supra, is also relied upon by Judge Smith. That case is as far from the mark as is the Shaw Case. The second syllabus properly states the case and our holding, and reads thus: "Within five years after the plaintiffs attained their majority they brought suit to set aside defendant's final settlement as administrator for fraud. In that action there was a nonsuit. Within one year thereafter this suit was brought. More than ten years had elapsed since the final settlement. Held, that this suit was not barred by the statute of limitations."

The facts and our holding in State ex rel. Lafayette County v. O'Gorman, 75 Mo. 370, are well stated in the third syllabus, which reads: "The statute which provides that a party who suffers a nonsuit in an action commenced within the time prescribed by the statute of limitations shall have the right to commence a new action within one year, applies as well to voluntary as to involuntary nonsuits. Rev. Stat. 1879, § 3239."

The foregoing are all the cases from this court cited by the learned judge in the Lumber Company Case as the foundation for the holding therein made. The question at issue in the Lumber Company Case was not at issue in either of these cases, and our opinions furnish absolutely no basis for the conclusion reached. There is also cited the cases of Atkison v. Dixon, 96 Mo. 582, 10 S. W. 163, and Crispen v. Hannovan, 86 Mo. 160, which simply hold that a judgment of a circuit court which has been reversed by this court is a nullity. In the Atkison Case, a judgment of the circuit court, which had been reversed by this court, was offered as evidence and rejected by the trial court. The parties were trying to establish the reasonable values of rents and profits on lands. This court thus disposes of the question: "On the trial, plaintiff offered in evidence the judgment rendered by the Bates county circuit court in 1876, in his favor against Louis Dixon, in which the monthly value of the premises in dispute was fixed at $8. This evidence was objected to, the court sustained the objection and refused to receive it, and this action is claimed to be erroneous. The judgment thus offered was reversed by this court in the opinion reported in 70 Mo. 381, whereby the same became a nullity, and thereafter conferred no rights, and had no vitality for any purpose. Crispen v. Hannovan, 86 Mo. 167, 168; Freeman, Judgm. § 481. At the time said judgment was rendered Mrs. Dixon was not a party to the suit, and, as to her, the judgment was res inter alios acta. Henry v. Woods, 77 Mo. 277." It will thus be seen that this case lends no light, and the Crispen Case, supra, goes no further.

Judge Smith, in the Lumber Company Case, further relies upon two cases from the St. Louis Court of Appeals. The first is Zurfluh v. People's R. Co. 46 Mo. App. loc. cit. 642, whereat Judge Biggs, who wrote the opinion, says: "We are therefore of the opinion that the plaintiff's instructions were not authorized by the evidence, and that the verdict and judgment were against the law and the evidence. The other questions presented by the briefs, we need not discuss. My associates concur in this opinion, but we differ as to the proper disposition of the case. They are of the opinion that the cause ought not to be remanded, but a simple order of reversal be entered. I understand their position to be that a simple reversal is not an adjudication on the merits, but is equivalent only to a nonsuit; that in the present case the plaintiff ought to have been nonsuited, as asked by the defendant; and that it is the duty of this court to make such judgment as the circuit court ought to have made. I think the proper practice is to remand a cause, unless the proof is such as to authorize this court to make a final judgment for the appellant."

The second is Berning v. Medart, 56 Mo. App. loc. cit. 449, where Rombauer, P. J., said: "The supreme court and this court have recently adopted the rule not to remand a cause for new trial where the plaintiff's evidence furnishes no substantial ground of recovery, unless it clearly appears that some hiatus in plaintiff's evidence may likely be supplied on a retrial of the cause in conformity with the true state of the facts. As the reversal of the judgment for the plaintiff is equivalent to a nonsuit only, and the plaintiff is still at liberty to substantiate his recovery in a new action, if so advised, the rule works no hardship."

Such are the cases relied upon by Judge Smith in the Lumber Company Case. In so far as the opinions from this court are concerned, none of these are in point.

In the later case of Ordelheide v. Wabash R. Co. 80 Mo. App. loc. cit. 368, the St. Louis court of appeals reversed the case without remanding it. Judge Biggs filed a separate opinion and certified the case to this court. In so doing, he said: "Upon this ground I concur in reversing the judgment, but I am of the opinion the case ought to be remanded. The rule of practice is that where an appellate court in an action at law reverses a judgment in favor of plaintiff, the cause will be remanded unless it appears that all the facts have been proven, and that upon such facts the plaintiff could not possibly recover. Gateway v. Hart, 58 Mo. 261; Brown v. Home Sav. Bank, 5 Mo. App. 1; Berning v. Medart, 56 Mo. App. 443; Rutledge v. Missouri P. R. Co. 123 Mo. loc. cit. 140, 24 S. W. 1053, 27 S. W. 327. In the Berning Case, supra, we held that a cause should be remanded if it appeared that an hiatus in plaintiff's evidence might be supplied on a retrial. In the case here the plaintiff may be able on a retrial to show that the contract was entered into and the grain house built in aid of defendant's business as a common carrier, and that the house was intended to take the place of a freight house at Wright City, which under the statute the defendant was compelled to build. If these are the facts, the house when built was within the protection of the statute, which rendered the defendant absolutely liable for its destruction. The ruling of my associates in refusing to remand the case is, in my opinion, opposed to the decisions in the foregoing cases. This rule of practice is an important one, and in the disposition of causes it ought to be strictly observed. I therefore ask that the case be certified to the supreme court." When the case reached this court (175 Mo. 337, 75 S. W. 149), it was decided without adverting to the question upon which it was certified to this court. We likewise reversed the cause.

In Stone v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 117 Mo. App. 297, 92 S. W. 1143, the Kansas City court of appeals follows the ruling in the Lumber Company Case.

Upon these cases, the plaintiff contends that a judgment of reversal is equivalent to a nonsuit; that it amounts to nothing more than a nonsuit, and that a new suit can be reinstituted within a year after such judgment. In the Berning Case, supra, Judge Rombauer does say that this court has said that a judgment of reversal was equivalent to a nonsuit, but he cites us to no case, and if it has been so held where the question was an issue, we have been unable to find the case. Nor is it equivalent to a nonsuit. It is true that at common law the plaintiff could take a nonsuit at any time before verdict. 14 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 401. But this rule is modified by our statute, § 639, quoted supra, by which the 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

nonsuit must be taken before the cause is submitted to the jury or to the court. A judgment of reversal comes after a submission. Not only so, but in many cases it comes after an investigation of both law and facts, and after a judicial conclusion has been reached as to the merits of the case under the law and facts. When we consider § 639 along with § 2868, we cannot say that there is any similarity between a nonsuit and a judgment of reversal. Nor can we say, in all cases, that a judgment of reversal is equivalent to a judgment on either a voluntary or involuntary nonsuit. In nonsuits there is no adjudication of the issues involved in the case, whereas in most of the cases wherein the appellate courts simply reverse the case, there has been an adjudication of the issues on the law and facts of the case. There might be cases wherein we could reverse the case without remanding, and yet leave the issues upon the merits untouched. Thus in McQuitty v. Wilhite, 218 Mo. 586, 131 Am. St. Rep. 561, 117 S. W. 730, we reversed the case without remanding, and yet never passed upon the merits of the case at all.

By the first count of her petition the plaintiff, McQuitty, sued the administrators of W. R. Wilhite, deceased, for the value of her services. In the second count, she sued for the specific performance of a contract to convey real estate. The trial court found against plaintiff on the first count, but she failed to appeal. But the trial court found for plaintiff on the second count, and the administrators appealed. This judgment we reversed on the ground that plaintiff had sued the wrong parties. In other words, such action should have been against the heirs, and not the administrators. We have no doubt in a case like this the plaintiff could sue again, but where upon appeal we examine the facts and apply the law, and reverse the case for the reason that plaintiff upon the merits is not entitled to recover, such judgment of reversal is a finality. It ends the case for all time.

3. What we have said in the closing sentences of the preceding paragraph is certainly the reasonable thing. We should never give a statute an unreasonable construction. The word "reversed," as used in § 4285 and in the new § 2868, should be construed to mean a reversal wherein the merits of the cause have not been adjudicated, as in the McQuitty Case, supra. If the statute is to receive the construction contended for by the plaintiff, there would be no end to litigation. The statute says, "Such plaintiff may commence a new action, from time to time, within one year after . . . such judgment . . . reversed." This would mean, according to plaintiff's contention, that if the plaintiff was successful below and we reversed the judgment, she could bring the action over within one year, and if again successful before the jury and we reversed that judgment, she could again bring it over, and so on until such time as she might be defeated, nisi, or until we entered or directed a verdict for defendant. It must be observed that the statute uses the words "from time to time," and if she can reinstitute her suit after one reversal, she can continue to so reinstitute it after each subsequent reversal.

By statute, we are authorized to enter judgments of simple reversal, and these judgments may or may not be finalities. If the merits of the cases are adjudicated and passed upon, they are final, but if not, they are not necessarily so. So that, considering the whole statute, we are of opinion that a reasonable construction thereof precludes the plaintiff from again suing after a judgment of reversal in a case wherein the merits of the controversy have been investigated and adjudicated by the court; and this fact is one of easy determination.

In the case at bar, it is not claimed that the plaintiff is relying upon any new facts, but is relying upon the same facts adjudicated in the former case. But if she had new facts, she has lost her opportunity. She might have asked for a modification of the judgment, as such has been permitted in some instances. Thus in Rutledge v. Missouri P. R. Co. supra, this court thus spoke in an opinion on a motion to modify a judgment of reversal: "On motion to modify the judgment, it has been suggested that plaintiff may have a cause of action upon further proof that the signal on which the engineer acted originated with the yard master. Plaintiff hence prays that the judgment be modified so as to remand the case; and thus give him an opportunity to amend, and present that phase of the case to the trial court, the statute of limitations having intervened as against any new action he might bring. On consideration of this motion we are of opinion that it should be granted. Bowen v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1893) 118 Mo. 541, 24 S. W. 430; Lilly v. Tobbein (1891) 103 Mo. 477, 23 Am. St. Rep. 887, 15 S. W. 618. Accordingly, the final judgment of this court will be that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the cause remanded."

It would appear that both plaintiff and the court in that case understood that the judgment of reversal was a finality, and unless modified no further action could be taken by plaintiff. Other cases of like tenor might be cited.

4. But going a step further we are of opinion that this court has in effect refused 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to entertain the views urged by plaintiff. Thus in the case of Carroll v. Inter-State Rapid Transit Co. 107 Mo. loc. cit. 664, 17 S. W. 891, Barclay, J., said: "My associates entertain a positive opinion that where (as here) it appears that, in every view of the facts, plaintiff has no right of action whatever, the cause should not be remanded for a new trial upon the reversal of an erroneous judgment. Many cogent reasons, no doubt, can be given for that opinion, and it has the sanction of precedents, extending through many years. My personal impression has been that where the trial court in an action at law refuses to nonsuit, and we conclude that its ruling in that regard is erroneous, the cause should, on a reversal of the judgment, be remanded so that plaintiff might, if so advised, dismiss his action, or take a voluntary nonsuit, and thus avoid such effects as might possibly be held to flow from a plain judgment of reversal. Plaintiff would have the right to take such course in the circuit court before the latter could properly enter a final judgment against him (Rev. Stat. 1889, § 2084; Lawrence v. Shreve [1858] 26 Mo. 492), and the reviewing power of this court extends no further in actions at law than to pronounce such judgment as the trial court 'ought to have given.' Rev. Stat. 1889, § 2304. But this view of the subject has not met the approval of my colleagues, and the point involved is not such as seems to demand further persistency on my part to maintain an individual opinion. Accordingly, the judgment of the circuit court is reversed, with the concurrence of all the judges of this division."

We can but conclude from this that the court entertained the opinion that a judgment of reversal was a finality. At that time Judges Sherwood, Black, Brace, and Barclay constituted Division 1 of this court. Later, the personnel of the court changed, and in the case of Keown v. St. Louis R. Co. 141 Mo. loc. cit. 95, 41 S. W. 929, the question must have again come up, for Judge Barclay, who wrote the opinion in this case as well as in the Carroll Case, supra, concludes his opinion thus: "Conceding the full force of plaintiff's evidence, it does not tend to prove the essential facts of a breach of duty toward Keown. Whether submitted testimony tends to establish negligence is a question of law. Where the testimony does not have such tendency it is the duty of the court to so declare upon a proper request. The learned trial court should have given the instruction asked, denying plaintiff a recovery on the merits. It is hence unnecessary to go into an inquiry as to the alleged contributory negligence of Keown. The judgment is reversed, in which conclusion the writer concurs, referring to his observations in Carroll v. Inter-State Rapid Transit Co. (1891) 107 Mo. 653, 17 S. W. 889, touching that disposition of cases of this sort. Macfarlane, Robinson, and Brace, JJ., concur."

It must be concluded that the court again discussed the character of the judgment to be entered, because Judge Barclay refers especially to his individual views in the Carroll Case. In both of these cases, Judge Barclay was insisting upon remanding the cause so as to allow the plaintiff to take a nonsuit, but the other members of the court were evidently of the opinion that there were no merits in either case, and finally determined them by a simple judgment of reversal. Had it ever occurred to them that a judgment of reversal was tantamount to a nonsuit they evidently would have answered Judge Barclay's insistence by so suggesting.

But beyond this, the vast number of cases which this court has disposed of by a simple judgment of reversal bespeaks the interpretation placed upon § 4285 at least. This section has been with us since the organization of the court. Section 2868, supra, is in words the same, so that the interpretation given to the one must be applied to the other.

Counsel for defendant has industriously collated a great number of our cases wherein we have fully adjudicated the merits and entered a simple judgment of reversal. He has selected some opinions from every judge upon this bench in three or more decades. We shall not burden this opinion with a list of the cases, but they are causes wherein we have said that under the facts no recovery could be had, and then entered a simple judgment of reversal. The curious can examine the brief for the interesting collation of the cases both from this court and the several courts of appeals.

If the conduct of this court means anything, in view of the fact that § 4285 has been upon the Missouri Statutes since the territorial days of 1807, it means that we have always understood that a simple reversal was the end of a case wherein we undertook to determine the merits of the controversy. And we now say that the statute under consideration in the case at bar should be so construed.

It follows from this, that Judge Hall, in the original case in this state, i. e., Musser v. Harwood, 23 Mo. App. 495, was right when he said: "It would be an endless and fruitless task to discover and cite all the cases in our reports, in which cases have been finally determined by our appellate courts by simply reversing the judgment.

We are clearly of the opinion that the supreme court by ordering simply the reversal of the judgment in the case under discussion intended to and did finally determine it, as said court had the full power so to do." The doctrine of the Musser Case we approve, and those differing therefrom, which we have elsewhere mentioned, should be and are overruled.

5. A thought or two more and we dismiss the subject, save and except to note some cases outside of Missouri cited by the plaintiff. An examination of our cases shows that we have indiscriminately used judgments of reversal, and judgments of reversal and dismissal of the petition. For instance, in Gatewood v. Hart, 58 Mo. loc. cit. 205, we disposed of the case thus: "The judgment is reversed, and as it is evident that a new trial could be of no avail to the plaintiffs, their petition will be dismissed; all the judges concur." In Rutledge v. Missouri P. R. Co. 123 Mo. loc. cit. 137, 24 S. W. 1057, 27 S. W. 327, at the conclusion of the opinions written in Division 1, we used this language: "We hold that plaintiff's injuries cannot justly be ascribed to the want of such a rule as their juridical cause; and that the trial court should have given the defendant's instruction in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence. It follows that the judgment should be reversed (Carroll v. Inter-State Rapid Transit Co. [1891] 107 Mo. 664, 17 S. W. 889), and it is so ordered."

Thus it will be observed that we have reached the same object, i. e., a disposition of the merits of the controversy through different wordings of our opinions and judgments. Other similar instances could be cited, but these serve to illustrate. There can be no doubt that a reversal of the judgment and a dismissal of the plaintiff's petition finally determines the cause. So, too, may the simple judgment of reversal, if it appear that the merits of the cause were submitted and adjudicated. What was held in judgment does not always appear from the judgment itself, but may be gathered from the pleadings and whole record of the case. In the case at bar it appears from the plaintiff's petition that we held in judgment at the prior hearing both law and facts, and therefore the merits of the controversy.

6. Plaintiff, in addition to the cases in this state, has cited us the following: Smith v. Adams, 130 U. S. 167, 32 L. ed. 895, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566; Gardner v. Michigan C. R. Co. 150 U. S. 349, 37 L. ed. 1107, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140; Bucher v. Cheshire R. Co. 125 U. S. 555, 31 L. ed. 795, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 974; Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Patting, 210 Ill. 342, 71 N. E.

371; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Bentz, 108 Tenn. 670, 58 L.R.A. 690, 91 Am. St. Rep. 763, 69 S. W. 317.

The Smith Case, supra, does not reach the question. Mr. Justice Field, in discussing an incidental question in the case, used this language: "But there is a ground, not taken by the respondent, which forces itself upon our consideration, and that is, that the judgment of the supreme court of the territory is not in form a final judgment. It not merely reversed the judgment of the district court, but remanded the cause to that court for further proceedings according to law and the judgment of the appellate court. A judgment of a lower appellate court which reverses the judgment of the court of original jurisdiction, and remands the case to it for further proceedings, is not a final judgment. A judgment of reversal is only final when it also enters or directs the entry of a judgment, which disposes of the case. On this ground, therefore, as well as on the previous ground, the appeal must be dismissed."

This is every line in that opinion discussing the effect of a judgment; and it will be observed that the judgment which Mr. Justice Field denominated not final was a judgment wherein the judgment nisi had been reversed and the cause remanded. In the Gardner Case, supra, plaintiff had first sued in the state courts of Michigan. In the lower court of the state he recovered. This judgment was reversed by the supreme court, but the cause was remanded. Plaintiff then went to the lower court and took a nonsuit, but thereafter brought his suit in the United States court. In the Federal court the defendant contended that plaintiff was estopped by the judgment of the Michigan court. This contention was disallowed because there had been no final judgment. This was clearly right, because the remanding of the case left it open for further proceedings, including a nonsuit, if plaintiff desired such.

The Bucher Case, supra, is well stated in the first syllabus, which reads: "The plaintiff sued the defendants in a state court and recovered judgment. The highest appellate court of the state, reviewing the case, decided the points of law involved in it against the plaintiff, set aside the judgment for error in the ruling of the court below, and sent the case back for a new trial. The plaintiff then became nonsuit, and brought the present suit in the circuit court of the United States on the same cause of action. Held, that he was not estopped." The point is the same as that in the Gardner Case just adverted to, but neither of these cases refer in the least to the situation of the case we have at bar. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The Illinois case, supra, covers the same question as in the Bucher and Gardner Cases. The first syllabus states the case and reads: "A judgment by the United States circuit court of appeals reversing a judgment of the United States circuit court in a personal injury case, and remanding the cause for a new trial, is not a final judgment, and, if followed by a nonsuit, cannot be pleaded as an estoppel in a subsequent suit in a state court on the same cause of action."

The Tennessee case, supra, is fully covered by the first syllabus, which reads: "Where the United States circuit court of appeals reverses a judgment in favor of plaintiff, declaring that he has no right of recovery, even upon his own theory, under the law as administered by the Federal courts, and remands the cause for a new trial, and the plaintiff thereupon takes voluntary nonsuit and brings a new action in the state court, the decision of the Federal court is not conclusive, either as res adjudicata or as a declaration of the law of the case, upon plaintiff in the prosecution of his action in the state court, where a different view of the law applicable to the case prevails, under which he is entitled to recover."

It will be observed that in each of the five cases the judgment under discussion was one wherein the judgment nisi had not only been reversed, but the cause had been remanded. The cases are therefore absolutely foreign to the question at issue in this case. No one would contend that a judgment of this court which reversed the judgment nisi, and remanded the cause, would be a final judgment.

Later the plaintiff added to her brief the following cases: Spees v. Boggs, 204 Pa. 506, 54 Atl. 346; McOmber v. Chapman, 42 Mich. 117, 3 N. W. 288; Coffin v. Cottle, 16 Pick. 383; Wooster v. Forty-Second Street & G. T. Ferry R. Co. 71 N. Y. 473. As to these be it said that the statutes of the several states as to the character of judgments which appellate courts may render are so different that but little light can be gathered from the opinions without considering the statutes. Of these cases, when the statutes are considered, the Pennsylvania case is the only one which subserves the purposes of the plaintiff in this case, if, in fact, under all the statutory provisions of that state, that case should be considered in point.

After all, the question here as in all states is one which must be determined upon the statutory provisions, and the construction thereof, either tacit or explicit, given by the court.

We shall not consume further time and space. It follows from what has been said that the judgment of the lower court is right and should be affirmed.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

All concur.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

DUNDEE REALTY COMPANY

v.

ISAAC S. LEAVITT, Impleaded, etc., Appt.

(— Neb. —, 127 N. W. 1057.)

Innocent purchaser — unrecorded deed.

1. A purchaser of real estate from one who has already sold and conveyed the same to another, whose deed is not recorded, cannot hold the land as an innocent purchaser unless he was, at the time of his purchase, without notice, actual or constructive, of the rights of the prior purchaser.

Same — burden of proof.

2. The burden of proof is upon the party who alleges that he purchased without notice.

Same — unrecorded deed — constructive notice.

3. The plaintiff purchased a lot in Omaha, and failed to record his deed, but took possession, and caused the grade to be lowered by removing large quantities of soil therefrom at an expense of nearly $200. Afterwards the defendant purchased the lot at about one half of its value from the same grantor, and caused his deed to be recorded. The defendant made no inquiry as to the rights of plaintiff. Held, that defendant is chargeable with constructive notice of plaintiff's rights in the lot, and is not an innocent purchaser without notice.

(October 22, 1910.)

APPPEAL by defendant Leavitt from a judgment of the District Court for Douglas County, quieting title to certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. P. Leavitt, for appellant:

The essentials and character of possession of real property, sufficient to constitute constructive notice of title or claim in the occupant, must be sufficient to charge the purchaser with bad faith, and must be actual, open, visible, notorious, unequivocal, Headnotes by SEDGWICK, J.

Note. — Possession of vendee under unrecorded deed as notice of title, see note to Niles v. Cooper, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 109.

And as to requisites and sufficiency of possession generally to impart notice, see pages 78 et seq., of the same note. 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) and exclusive,—not occasional, for a special or temporary purpose, and not consistent with the title of the apparent owner by the record.

Crooks v. Jenkins, 104 Am. St. Rep. 337, note; Millard v. Wegner, 68 Neb. 574, 94 N. W. 802; Hunt v. Lipp, 30 Neb. 469, 46 N. W. 632; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Welch, 83 Neb. 106, 118 N. W. 1116; Townsend v. Little, 109 U. S. 504, 27 L. ed. 1012, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Holland v. Brown, 140 N. Y. 344, 35 N. E. 577; Brown v. Volkening, 64 N. Y. 76.

The rule relates to present actual possession, existing at the time of the transfer to the subsequent purchaser.

Bingham v. Kirkland, 34 N. J. Eq. 230; Hunter v. Watson, 12 Cal. 376, 73 Am. Dec. 543; Roussain v. Norton, 53 Minn. 560, 55 N. W. 747; Coleman v. Barklew, 27 N. J. L. 357; Hiller v. Jones, 66 Miss. 636, 6 So. 465.

The burden of proof is upon the holder of the unrecorded instrument, to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the purchaser from the record owner had actual notice, or implied notice, necessarily inferred from actual, open, visible, and unambiguous possession at the time of the conveyance.

Anthony v. Wheeler, 130 Ill. 128, 17 Am. St. Rep. 281, 22 N. W. 404; Holmes v. Stout, 10 N. J. Eq. 419; Sheldon v. Powell, 31 Mont. 249, 107 Am. St. Rep. 429, 78 Pac. 491; McMechan v. Griffing, 3 Pick. 149, 15 Am. Dec. 198; Gratz v. Land & River Improv. Co. 40 L.R.A. 393, 27 C. C. A. 305, 53 U. S. App. 499, 82 Fed. 381; Hiller v. Jones, supra; Atlantic City v. New Auditorium Pier Co. 67 N. J. Eq. 610, 59 Atl. 158; Red River Valley Land & Invest. Co. v. Smith, 7 N. D. 236, 74 N. W. 194; Lacustrine Fertilizer Co. v. Lake Guano & Fertilizer Co. 82 N. Y. 476; Marshall v. Dunham, 66 Me. 539; Bush v. Golden, 17 Conn. 594; Wilkins v. Anderson, 11 Pa. 399; Morris v. Daniels, 35 Ohio St. 406; Catrett v. J. S. Brown Hardware Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 86 S. W. 1045; Hooper v. De Vries, 115 Mich. 231, 73 N. W. 132; Walter v. Brown, 115 Iowa, 360, 88 N. W. 832; Center v. Planters' & M. Bank, 22 Ala. 743; Hoyt v. Jones, 31 Wis. 389; Beman v. Douglas, 1 App. Div. 169, 37 N. Y. Supp. 859; Smith v. Yale, 31 Cal. 180, 89 Am. Dec. 167; Hamilton v. Williford, 90 Ga. 210, 15 S. E. 753; Gerson v. Pool, 31 Ark. 88; Giles v. Hunter, 103 N. C. 194, 9 S. E. 549; Lamar v. Hale, 79 Va. 147; Varwig v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 54 Ohio St. 455, 44 N. E. 92; Advance Thresher Co. v. Esteb, 41 Or. 469, 69 Pac. 447; Lake v. Hancock, 38 Fla. 53, 56 Am. St. Rep. 159, 20 So. 811; Sheffey v. Bank of Lewisburg, 33 Fed. 315;

Jones, Real Prop. in Conveyancing, § 1500; Lowden v. Wilson, 233 Ill. 340, 84 N. E. 245; Schwoebel v. Storrie (N. J. Eq.) 74 Atl. 969; Scott v. Farnam, 55 Wash. 336, 104 Pac. 639; Feinberg v. Stearns, 56 Fla. 279, 131 Am. St. Rep. 119, 47 So. 797; Ely v. Pace, 139 Ala. 293, 35 So. 877; Cranes Nest Coal & Coke Co. v. Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Co. 108 Va. 862, 62 S. E. 954, 1119; Boltz v. Boain, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 842, 90 S. W. 503; Sidelinger v. Bliss, 95 Me. 316, 49 Atl. 1094; Hull v. Diehl, 21 Mont. 71, 52 Pac. 782; Austin v. Staten, 126 N. C. 783, 36 S. E. 338; Wilkins v. McCorkle, 112 Tenn. 688, 80 S. W. 834; Paul v. Kerswell, 60 N. J. L. 273, 37 Atl. 1102; Daly v. Rizzutto (Wash.) 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 467, 100 Pac. 276; Kruse v. Conklin, 82 Kan. 358, —L.R.A. (N.S.)—, 108 Pac. 856.

The defendant had a right to examine and rely upon the record.

Ames v. Miller, 65 Neb. 204, 91 N. W. 250.

Messrs. McGilton, Gaines, & Smith, with Mr. Frank H. Gaines, for appellee:

Possession of the property by one under contract of purchase is notice to the world of his claims thereunder.

Uhl v. May, 5 Neb. 158; Nolan v. Grant, 51 Iowa, 519, 1 N. W. 709; Lyman v. Russell, 45 Ill. 281; Rogers v. Turpin, 105 Iowa, 183, 74 N. W. 925; Lantry v. Parker, 37 Neb. 353, 55 N. W. 962; Dorweiler v. Callanan, 91 Iowa, 299, 59 N. W. 74; Tate v. Pensacola Gulf, Land & Development Co. 37 Fla. 439, 53 Am. St. Rep. 258, 20 So. 542; Lipp v. South Omaha Land Syndicate, 24 Neb. 609, 40 N. W. 129.

Where a claim to real estate can be sustained only upon the ground that the person asserting it is a subsequent purchaser in good faith, such person is required to show affirmatively that he purchased without notice of the equities of another, and relying upon the apparent ownership of his grantor.

Bowman v. Griffith, 35 Neb. 362, 53 N. W. 140; Pfund v. Valley Loan & T. Co. 52 Neb. 474, 72 N. W. 480.

Sedgwick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff and defendant both derive their claims to the real estate in question through one Miles Moore; the plaintiff through an unrecorded contract of purchase and alleged possession and improvement of the property, and the defendant through a warranty deed, duly recorded. The defendant claims to be an innocent purchaser without notice of plaintiff's rights. The trial court found against him, and he has appealed.

1. The first question requiring consideration relates to the burden of proof in such 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

cases. Many courts have held that when one party produces a warranty deed which recites full consideration, and has been duly recorded, the burden is upon the prior purchaser with an unrecorded title to prove notice or circumstances equivalent to notice. Indeed, it would appear from the note to Anthony v. Wheeler, 17 Am. St. Rep. 288, and authorities there cited, that this rule is almost universal. Although the court of appeals of Texas has held otherwise, and the courts of Alabama, California, Iowa, Missouri, and some decisions in the state of New York have to some extent modified the rule, our own decisions have placed the burden of maintaining this issue upon the party who alleges that he purchased the property without notice of outstanding claims. In Bowman v. Griffith, 35 Neb. 361, 53 N. W. 140, the third paragraph of the syllabus states the law as follows: "Where a claim to real estate can be sustained only upon the ground that the person asserting it is a subsequent purchaser in good faith, such person is required to show affirmatively that he purchased without notice of the equities of another, and relying upon the apparent ownership of his grantor." And in the body of the opinion it is said: "The burden was upon him, and he was bound to prove both payment in ignorance of defendant's equities, and that he relied upon the title of his grantor." To support this proposition decisions are cited from Iowa, Michigan, and New York.

The defendant argues that these statements of the court are dicta merely, and says in his brief that the rule thus stated is undoubtedly correct, but that "the question as to whether the plaintiff would not have sustained his burden of proof, and made a prima facie case, if he had shown the purchase and payment of the consideration, after having examined and relied upon the record title appearing in his grantor," was not involved in the case. This language concedes that the burden of proof was upon the party who alleges that he purchased without notice of outstanding equities, and assumes that that burden is sustained by making the proof suggested in the above quotation from the brief. The above holding in Bowman v. Griffith is referred to with approval in Baldwin v. Burt, 43 Neb. 245, 61 N. W. 601, and Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 37 Neb. 705, 56 N. W. 488, and is expressly approved in Pfund v. Valley Loan & T. Co. 52 Neb. 473, 72 N. W. 480. It may be that some of the cases holding a contrary doctrine can be distinguished on account of the legislation upon this subject in those jurisdictions. Our statute provides that deeds and other instruments not recorded "shall be adjudged void as to all creditors and subsequent purchasers without notice, whose deeds, mortgages, and other instruments shall be first recorded." [Comp. Stat. 1897, § 4108.] It would seem that one who expects to bring his claim within this statute should allege and prove all of the statutory requirements, including that he was without notice of the outstanding deed. This requires him to allege and prove a negative, and undoubtedly the ordinary rule would obtain as to the sufficiency of the proof offered to make a prima facie case, and as to the necessity that the opposing party produce such evidence as was in his possession or under his control; but, when the evidence upon this point is all before the court or jury, there must be a preponderance in favor of the party alleging purchase without notice, or the issue cannot be found in his favor.

2. The plaintiff alleges that the defendant had actual notice of the plaintiff's interest in the land, and also that the plaintiff had taken such possession and made such improvements upon the land as to give constructive notice to anyone who attempted to deal with it. Mr. George, who is principally interested in the plaintiff company, testified positively that he told the defendant, prior to the defendant's purchase, that he (George) had a contract for the land, and was improving it for his company. The defendant as positively denies these statements. It has, however, been universally held that actual personal notice is not indispensable. The plaintiff purchased the land at an agreed price of $300, $100 of which was paid at the time of purchase. The plaintiff soon afterwards took possession of the land, which is a lot in Dundee place, in the city of Omaha, and made a contract with a grading firm to grade this lot, together with various other lots owned by the plaintiff. These lots were graded under this contract, and the soil was removed from the lot in question to about the depth of 2 feet. The defendant was familiar with these lots, and knew that this grading was being done, including the grading upon the lot in question. He saw Mr. George while the grading was being done, and admits that he asked no questions in regard to the ownership of the lots, nor whether the parties grading it were doing so in their own right, as owners, or for some other person. The grading of this lot cost the plaintiff something over $180. There is no other evidence in the record as to the real value of the lot than that plaintiff contracted to pay $300 for the lot before it was graded, and expended nearly $200 in grading it. After this grading was done, the defendant bought the lot of Mr. Moore for $250, obtained his deed, and placed it upon record.

ord. He says that soon after that he had a conversation with Mr. George, in which Mr. George told him that the plaintiff was the owner of the lot, and he made no denial of that fact. He thought, he says, that he would permit Mr. George to find out who was the owner when he examined the record. Mr. George, as above stated, testifies that this conversation took place before the date of the purchase by the defendant.

The defendant insists that this grading of the lot was not such an act of possession as required him to make any inquiry in regard to the rights of the parties who were doing the grading or procuring it to be done. He insists that the same parties were grading other lots at the same time that did not belong to them, nor to this plaintiff, and that he had the right to assume that Mr. Moore still owned the lot and was procuring this grading to be done. We think the defendant is wrong in this position. When he saw unequivocal acts of ownership being exercised over the property, he was under obligations to inquire who was thus assuming to be the owner of the property; and under such circumstances he could not presume, without inquiry, that Mr. Moore was expending about $200 in improving the lot, and immediately thereafter would sell to him for $250 a lot that, before the improvement, was worth $300.

If the defendant was innocent in the transaction, his neglect to follow up the inquiry so plainly suggested by the circumstances will bring the loss, if any, upon him, rather than upon the plaintiff, who was at least equally innocent.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

NEW MEXICO SUPREME COURT.

TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO

v.

DICK EAGLE, Appt.

(— N. M. —, 110 Pac. 862.)

Evidence — dying declaration — extremity.

1. Where a dying person makes no declaration that he knows his danger or is conscious of his impending death, and there is nothing in his conduct, or that of those Headnotes by WRIGHT, J.

Note. — Dying declarations; how sense of impending death evidenced.

This question is fully treated in a subdivision of the note, "Dying declarations as evidence," in 56 L.R.A., beginning at present, understandingly acquiesced in by him, from which such consciousness of impending death may be ascertained, yet, where it is reasonably to be inferred from the terrible character of the wound and his state of illness that he was sensible of his danger and conscious of impending death, his statements, made under such circumstances, relative to the homicide, are properly admitted as a dying declaration.

Criminal law — taking dying declaration to jury room — error.

2. Under a statute (Comp. Laws, § 3002) providing, "when the jury retires to consider its verdict, it shall be allowed to take the pleadings in the cause, the instructions of the court, and any instruments of writing admitted as evidence, except depositions," it is error to permit the dying declaration, which has been reduced to writing, to be page 406, and this note accordingly includes only cases decided since the time of the former note.

For later cases as to the right of the jury to determine from the facts whether sufficient foundation has been laid for admitting certain statements as dying declarations, see note to State v. Doris, in 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 660.

Statements of deceased.

One of the best and most common forms of evidence of a sense of impending death is statements of the deceased. He alone can know the condition of his own mind. And thus it has frequently been held that proof of statements of a declarant, alone, sufficiently evidences a sense of impending death on his part. No particular form of expression is necessary for this purpose, but in the following cases proof of various forms of statements by dying persons to the effect that they believed they were about to die have been held sufficiently to evidence a sense of impending death: Starks v. State, 137 Ala. 9, 34 So. 687; Walker v. State, 146 Ala. 45, 41 So. 878; Moore v. State, 146 Ala. 687, 40 So. 345; Gregory v. State, 140 Ala. 16, 37 So. 259, second trial, 148 Ala. 566, 42 So. 829; Pate v. State, 150 Ala. 10, 43 So. 343; Brown v. State, 150 Ala. 25, 43 So. 194; Henninburg v. State, 151 Ala. 26, 43 So. 959; Twitty v. State (Ala.) 53 So. 308; Grant v. State, 118 Ga. 804, 45 S. E. 603; Cleveland v. Com. 31 Ky. L. Rep. 115, 101 S. W. 931; Kelly v. Com. (Ky.) 119 S. W. 809; Pryor v. State (Miss.) 39 So. 1012; State v. Biango, 75 N. J. L. 284, 68 Atl. 125; Patterson v. State, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 613, 95 S. W. 129.

And repeated and persistent statements of this kind sufficiently indicate an abandonment of hope in spite of attempts of friends or physicians to encourage the decedent. Pitts v. State, 140 Ala. 70, 37 So. 101; State v. Brady, 124 La. 951, 50 So. 806.

So, where deceased, on the day of his death and the day before, repeatedly said 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

taken to the jury room for investigation and examination by the jurors.

(August 29, 1910.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Bernalillo County, convicting him of murder. Reversed.

Statement by Wright, J.:

The defendant, Dick Eagle, was indicted at the September, 1908, term of Valencia county district court for murder in the first degree for killing a Pueblo Indian, Santiago Eteewa; said killing having taken place in Valencia county. After the finding of the indictment and arrest of the defendant, but he would die, and had a written declaration prepared by a magistrate, his sense of impending death was held to be sufficiently apparent, although, when the declaration was being taken down by the magistrate, deceased said he felt very well, and asked the magistrate if he thought he was going to die. Rose v. State, 144 Ala. 114, 42 So. 21.

And where evidence of repeated statements and of the condition of the deceased shows that he was hopeless, and witnesses testify that a declaration was made with a full sense of impending death, the admissibility of the declaration is not affected by a bare expression of deceased at another time, to a physician who had told him that he would recover, "that he hoped for the best." Highsmith v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 32, 50 S. W. 723, 51 S. W. 919.

It is not necessary, in order to show a sense of impending death, that deceased should state at the time of his declaration that it was made under a sense of impending death, but it is sufficient if he made other statements from which it is clearly apparent that he firmly believed that death was imminent, and had no hope of recovery. Zipperian v. People, 33 Colo. 134, 79 Pac. 1018; Clemmons v. State, 43 Fla. 200, 30 So. 699; Smith v. Com. 113 Ky. 19, 67 S. W. 32.

And the following expressions have been held to show sense of impending death:

—a remark of deceased to his wife, that he had something to say to her before he died, and a statement that he was cut to death. Greer v. State, 156 Ala. 15, 47 So. 300;

—a statement in a written declaration, "being in fear and expectation of death, do make the following statement as my dying declaration." State v. Jeswell, 22 R. I. 136, 46 Atl. 405, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 260;

—repeated exclamations by deceased, shortly after being wounded, to the effect that he was going to die, and expressing concern for his family. People v. Del Vermo, 192 N. Y. 470, 85 N. E. 690;

—a request, together with a statement that he was going to die, that he be gotten before arraignment, he was confined in the county jail of Bernalillo county, at Albuquerque, New Mexico. On the 27th day of November, 1908, in the district court of Valencia county, then in session at the courthouse in the county of Bernalillo, in the territory of New Mexico, this cause being then pending in the said district court of the county of Valencia, and the district court of Bernalillo county being also in open session on some part of said day, the district attorney being present in behalf of the territory, the defendant was brought into court, in custody of the sheriff, and was arraigned upon the indictment, and entered a plea of "not guilty." He was afterwards remanded to the custody of the sheriff of Bernalillo county to await trial.

At the time of said arraignment, defendant was not represented by counsel nor had he been prior thereto. No other arraignment was ever had in this matter other than above stated. Afterwards, when counsel was appointed to defend him, at their request the venue of the case was changed from the county of Valencia to the county of Bernalillo, and without any further arraignment the case proceeded to trial. The territory produced an alleged dying declaration of the deceased, Santiago Eteewa. This was introduced in evidence over the objections of defendant. At the conclusion of the trial, and when the case was submitted to the jury, the dying declaration of Santiago Eteewa, which had been reduced to writing, was taken by the jury to the jury room, home as soon as possible, that he might be there when he died. Logan v. State, 149 Ala. 11, 43 So. 10; —and a request, together with similar statements, that his wife and the doctor be sent for. Graham v. State, 57 Tex. Crim. Rep. 104, 123 S. W. 691;

—so, "I am shot to death. Send for my wife and children and the doctor." State v. Bordelon, 113 La. 690, 37 So. 603; —and "I am going to die. I want my children." Rice v. State, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 569, 94 S. W. 1024.

The decedent's hopeless state of mind is sufficiently shown, even as against the testimony of a witness that deceased, shortly before he died, "seemed to be getting along very well," where it appears that deceased, after being shot, said he was killed, and thereafter frequently and repeatedly said that he was going to die from the wound, and asked the witness to take care of his family. Smith v. State, 145 Ala. 17, 40 So. 957.

Evidence that deceased begged witness to knock him in the head is admissible as tending to show that he had no hope of recovery. Willis v. State, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 139, 90 S. W. 1100.

And deceased's statement to his physician in regard to his condition, that "this is mighty bad, isn't it?" or words to that effect, is admissible as tending to show, though not within and of itself sufficient to show, that he was then conscious of approaching death. Long v. State, 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 175, 88 S. W. 203.

But, on the other hand, a sense of impending death is not sufficiently evidenced merely by showing that deceased said he believed he was going to die, where there is also evidence of statements tending strongly to show that he expected to live. Coyle v. Com. 122 Ky. 781, 93 S. W. 584.

And that at the time of making a declaration, declarant stated that he did not expect to live, does not render the declaration admissible as a dying declaration, if all the other conversation and acts tend to show that he did not expect to die. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Tibbs v. Com. 138 Ky. 558, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 665, 128 S. W. 871.

So, in the following cases, indirect statements have been held not sufficiently to evidence a sense of impending death: Collins v. People, 194 Ill. 506, 62 N. E. 902; Brom v. People, 216 Ill. 148, 74 N. E. 790; State v. Phillips, 118 Iowa, 660, 92 N. W. 876; State v. Knoll, 69 Kan. 767, 77 Pac. 580; Barnes v. Com. 110 Ky. 348, 61 S. W. 733; Bilton v. Territory, 1 Okla. Crim. Rep. 566, 99 Pac. 163.

In People v. Brecht, 120 App. Div. 769, 105 N. Y. Supp. 436, affirmed in 192 N. Y. 581, 85 N. E. 1114, it was held that the element of abandonment of hope of recovery was not shown by deceased's answers to categorical questions by a coroner, that he believed he was about to die, and that he hoped God would let him recover, where it further appeared that no one had told him of his dangerous condition and the likelihood of his soon dying, and his condition was not such as would probably impress him with a consciousness of the nearness of death.

Statements of deceased and surrounding circumstances combined.

It is not necessary that a written statement contain an express declaration of belief in impending death, nor that such express words be shown by other evidence to have been used by a deceased, but a sense of impending death is sufficiently evidenced by any credible testimony showing such statements or circumstances as would convince a reasonable mind that the declarant was under the belief that he was about to die. State v. Bridgham, 51 Wash. 18, 97 Pac. 1096.

So, also, it is not necessary, in order to show a sense of impending death on the part of a deceased declarant, that he should have said in so many words that he believed he was going to die, or that he could not live longer, but this may be shown by any statements of deceased, by the surrounding conditions, and all the circumalso over the objection of defendant. The jury returned a verdict of murder in the second degree. After the verdict, motion for a new trial and motion in arrest of judgment were made by defendant's counsel, and overruled by the court. The defendant was sentenced to twenty years in the penitentiary, and from this verdict and sentence defendant appealed to this court.

Messrs. Frank H. Moore and H. F. Raynolds for appellant.

Mr. Frank W. Clancy, Attorney General, for the Territory:

The dying declaration of the deceased was properly admitted.

McLean v. State, 16 Ala. 672; Wills v. State, 74 Ala. 21; Kilpatrick v. Com. 31

Pa. 198; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 158; Wharton, Crim. Ev. § 282; Ward v. State, 78 Ala. 446.

A dying declaration is not a deposition.

Lutcher v. United States, 19 C. C. A. 259, 41 U. S. App. 54, 72 Fed. 968; Crenshaw v. Miller, 111 Fed. 451; Indianapolis Water Co. v. American Straw-Board Co. 65 Fed. 535; 1 Bouvier's Law Dict. title, Deposition; The Sallie P. Linderman, 22 Fed. 558; 21 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 979, 980.

Wright, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Considering the assignments of error in the order of importance rather than in the order discussed in the brief, we find that stances. State v. Power, 24 Wash. 34, 63 L.R.A. 902, 63 Pac. 1112.

And in most of the cases there are circumstances in addition to the statements of the decedent which are relied upon as evidence of his sense of impending death at the time of making a dying declaration; and a sense of impending death may be evidenced either by affirmative statements or by circumstances, or by both. Robinson v. State, 130 Ga. 361, 60 S. E. 1005.

So, a sense of impending death "may be shown not only by what the injured person said, but by his conduct and condition, and by the nature and extent of his wounds; and it is sufficient if these show that the declarations were made without expectation of recovery, and under a sense of impending death, notwithstanding the declarant may not have said that he was without hope, or that he was going to die." State v. Roberts, 28 Nev. 350, 82 Pac. 100.

And a sense of impending death "may be inferred from the general statements, conduct, manner, symptoms, and condition of the declarant, which flow as the reasonable and natural results from the extent and character of his wound or the state of his illness." Williams v. State, 108 Ind. 87, 79 N. E. 1079.

A "court must draw a rational conclusion from all that was said, taken in connection with such surrounding circumstances as must have been known to the declarant, as to whether said declarant was in such condition of mind as would render his declaration competent." Winfrey v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 538, 56 S. W. 919.

"This appreciation of certain dissolution may be inferred from the conduct, condition, or statements of declarant." State v. Kuhn, 117 Iowa, 216, 90 N. W. 733.

So, in State v. Bohanon, 142 N. C. 695, 55 S. E. 797, a dying declaration was held admissible where deceased said that he was dying, and "there was other sufficient evidence tending to show that he knew he was in extremis," and he in fact died within two hours after making the declaration.

Each case, therefore, depends to a large 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

extent upon its own circumstances; but without attempting to detail the circumstances of each case, the general nature of some of the circumstances relied upon, together with statements, to show a sense of impending death on the part of a decedent, may be indicated. Thus, in the following cases the circumstances showing the sense of impending death were the actual condition and conduct of the deceased at the time, together with his words, tending to show his state of mind. McKwen v. State, 152 Ala. 38, 44 So. 619; Ward v. State, 85 Ark. 179, 107 S. W. 677; State v. Uzzo (Del.) 65 Atl. 775; Copeland v. State, 58 Fla. 26, 50 So. 621; Gipe v. State, 165 Ind. 433, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 419, 112 Am. St. Rep. 238, 75 N. E. 881; State v. McKnight, 119 Iowa, 79, 93 N. W. 63, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 252; Arnett v. Com. 114 Ky. 593, 71 S. W. 635; Com. v. Hargis, 124 Ky. 356, 99 S. W. 348; Kennedy v. Com. 30 Ky. L. Rep. 1063, 100 S. W. 242; State v. Dixon, 131 N. C. 808, 42 S. E. 944; State v. Quick, 150 N. C. 820, 64 S. E. 168; Connell v. State, 46 Tex. Crim. Rep. 259, 81 S. W. 746.

And these circumstances may sufficiently show a sense of impending death on the part of the declarant, although, both before and after his declaration, his physician informed him that there was a chance for him to recover if an operation were performed. Wheeler v. State, 112 Ga. 43, 37 S. E. 126.

So, expressions of belief that he was dying, taken in connection with the fact that he was in fact in extremis, sufficiently show a decedent's sense of impending death, although he also asked for a doctor. Milton v. State, 134 Ala. 42, 32 So. 653.

And where deceased was in a dying condition, and had several times said that he would die from his wounds, and had given no indication of a change of conviction on this subject, the fact that he hoped to live until the next day was no indication that he did not still regard himself as rapidly approaching death. State v. McCoomer, 79 S. C. 63, 60 S. W. 237.

Sense of impending death is shown where a deceased, ten or fifteen minutes before his death, said he was going to die, asked the second error complained of relates to the admission in evidence of the dying declaration of Santiago Eteewa. The general rules governing the admissibility of dying declarations are too well established to need any lengthy discussion. In the case of Blackburn v. State, 98 Ala. 63, 13 So. 274, the court, in discussing this question, uses the following language: "Such declarations are not admissible unless they appear to have been made under a sense of certain and impending death. It is not what the court which passes upon their admissibility may believe the character of the deceased was; for, although it may appear to the court, or to anyone capable of thinking rationally, that there was no possible hope of recovery, yet the question, aside from that, is, What was the state of the declarant's mind when the declarations were made? Did he appreciate the fatal character of his injury, and were his declarations uttered under the sense and solemnities of impending dissolution? If so, then, 'when the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge, and the circumstances the subject of the dying declarations,' they may be admitted in evidence, otherwise not." Walker v. State, 52 Ala. 192; Kilgore v. State, 74 Ala. 7; Ward v. State, 78 Ala. 441; Hussey v. State, 87 Ala. 121, 6 So. 420. See also Wharton, Homicide, 3d ed. §§ 631, 632, 634, 637; Underhill, Crim. Ev. §§ 102-104, inclusive; 4 Enc. Ev. pp. 922-930.

that his family be sent for, told them he was going to die, and told them good-by, although he had previously been hopeful since he was shot, five days before. Rice v. State, 51 Tex. Crim. Rep. 255, 103 S. W. 1156.

Other cases holding the actual condition and conduct of the declarant, together with his statements and the fact that his physician had told him in effect that he could not recover, to be sufficient evidence of a sense of impending death, are: R. v. Louie, 10 B. C. 1; State v. Fleetwood (Del.) 65 Atl. 772; State v. Dennis, 119 Iowa, 688, 94 N. W. 235; State v. Nowella, 135 Iowa, 53, 109 N. W. 1016; Pennington v. Com. 24 Ky. L. Rep. 321, 68 S. W. 451, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 238; Boyd v. State, 84 Miss. 414, 36 So. 525; State v. Barnes, 75 N. J. L. 426, 68 Atl. 145; State v. Fuller, 52 Or. 42, 96 Pac. 456; Com. v. Rhoads, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 512; Roberts v. State, 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 378, 88 S. W. 221; O'Boyle v. Com. 100 Va. 785, 40 S. E. 121; State v. Mayo, 42 Wash. 540, 85 Pac. 251, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 881.

And these circumstances, together with sending for a priest, are sufficient evidence (People v. Stacy, 119 App. Div. 743, 104 N. Y. Supp. 615, affirmed in 192 N. Y. 577, 85 N. E. 1114), although deceased stated in answer to a question before making his statement that he felt very well (People v. Buettner, 233 Ill. 272, 84 N. E. 218, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 235).

In the following cases a sense of impending death has been held to be sufficiently evidenced by the character of the declarant's wound or wounds, or the nature of his illness, together with statements: Kirklin v. State (Ala.) 53 So. 253; State v. Cord, 157 Cal. 562, 108 Pac. 511; Harper v. State, 129 Ga. 770, 59 S. E. 792; Oliver v. State, 129 Ga. 777, 59 S. E. 900; Rowsey v. Com. 116 Ky. 617, 76 S. W. 409; People v. Governale, 193 N. Y. 581, 86 N. E. 554; Jones v. State, 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 303, 124 Am. St. Rep. 1097, 106 S. W. 345.

And these circumstances, together with sending for a priest or preacher, have been 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

held sufficient, in People v. Conklin, 175 N. Y. 333, 67 N. E. 624, and State v. Ilead, 60 S. C. 516, 39 S. E. 6.

In other cases the circumstances considered have included both the nature and condition of the injuries and the condition and conduct of the declarant, together with his statements. Such cases are: Smith v. State, 136 Ala. 1, 34 So. 168; Walker v. State, 139 Ala. 56, 35 So. 1011; Parker v. State (Ala.) 51 So. 260; People v. Shehadey, 12 Cal. App. 648, 108 Pac. 146; Weaver v. People, 47 Colo. 617, 108 Pac. 331; State v. Bonar, 71 Kan. 800, 81 Pac. 484; Asher v. Com. 28 Ky. L. Rep. 1342, 91 S. W. 662; Guest v. State (Miss.) 52 So. 211; State v. Brown, 188 Mo. 451, 87 S. W. 519; State v. Kelleher, 201 Mo. 614, 100 S. W. 470; State v. Hennessy, 29 Nev. 320, 90 Pac. 221, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1122; Nelson v. State, 3 Okla. Crim. Rep. 468, 106 Pac. 647; Hawkins v. United States, 3 Okla. Crim. Rep. 651, 108 Pac. 561; Keaton v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 621, 57 S. W. 1125; State v. Clark, 64 W. Va. 625, 63 S. E. 402.

So, in Hunter v. State, 54 Tex. Crim. Rep. 224, 130 Am. St. Rep. 887, 114 S. W. 124, these circumstances were held to show a sense of impending death, although a brother of the deceased did not think the latter was going to die at the time his dying declaration was made.

In addition to these circumstances, it has further appeared in some cases that deceased had been told by his physician that he could not live. Thus, in Burton v. Com. 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1162, 70 S. W. 831, the court said: "The nature of the wounds, the length of time that had elapsed since he received them, the advice of the physician, and the condition of the deceased at the time, all taken together, must have satisfied the deceased that death was impending."

Other somewhat similar cases are: People v. Dobbins, 138 Cal. 694, 72 Pac. 339; Fuqua v. Com. 24 Ky. L. R. 2204, 73 S. W. 782, on second appeal after new trial, 118 Ky. 578, 81 S. W. 923; Morgan v. State,

An examination of the evidence in this case discloses the fact that the evidence upon which the admission of the dying is predicated is contained wholly in the testimony of Dr. Dillon, Mr. Allen, and Mr. Bibb, the notary public who took the statement.

Q. Describe what you found—what his condition was?

A. Well, I found a wound, a bullet wound, supposed to have entered—about—the point of entrance about half an inch to the left of the ensiform appendage, and it ranged downward. The bullet had left the body at about the mid scapular line, posteriorly just above the brim of the pelvis.

Q. Stand up and show where it went in and went out.

A. (Witness demonstrating.) The bullet entered about here (indicating).

Q. Yes?

A. About half an inch to the left of the top of this little cartilage that comes down on the breast bone, and it came out right about there (indicating), just above this pelvic bone. The wound where the bullet had entered was a small puncture—aperture—from which there had been little blood, if any,—external bleeding,—but the wound here was a large gaping wound from which there was bleeding when I examined him. That day there was no intestinal discharge; but the second time I saw him there was a discharge of the intestinal contents at the point of exit of the bullet. Further examination showed that there had 54 Tex. Crim. Rep. 542, 113 S. W. 934; Douglas v. State (Tex. Crim. Rep.) 124 S. W. 933.

And such circumstances may be sufficient, although the deceased also used the words, "I can't afford to die." State v. Craig, 190 Mo. 332, 88 S. W. 641.

Or the words, "If I have to die." House v. State, 94 Miss. 107, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 840, 48 So. 3.

A sense of impending death is also sufficiently evidenced where the physicians have told the deceased that he was about to die, and he had told his wife that he was dying, and to make arrangements about the insurance on his life, and he had received extreme unction, which is administered only when death is impending. R. v. Laurin, 6 Can. Crim. Cas. 104.

And the fact that a person mortally wounded consents to be moved to a sanitarium for the satisfaction of his wife and children is not inconsistent with his own abandonment of the hope of recovery, as shown by all the other circumstances. State v. Howard, 120 La. 311, 45 So. 200.

Circumstances in the absence of statement.

In some cases, as in TERRITORY v. EAGLE, it does not appear that the dying person made any statement tending to show that he knew his danger or was conscious of his impending death. It is not essential, however, that he should have made any statement or given utterance to language expressive of a sense of impending death, but this may be inferred by deceased's conduct and deportment, his apparent condition, involving the nature and extent of the wounds inflicted, being obviously such that he must have felt and known that he could not survive, and the communications made to him, if any, especially by his medical advisers, if assented to or understandingly acquiesced in by him. State v. Gray, 43 Or. 440, 74 Pac. 927.

So, in the absence of any statement showing deceased's state of mind, a sense of impending death has been inferred in the following cases, from the circumstances indicated:

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

—character of wound and deceased's condition and conduct. Newberry v. State, 68 Ark. 355, 58 S. W. 351; Jones v. State, 88 Ark. 579, 115 S. W. 166; —nature of wound and information by physician, acquiesced in by decedent. Jarvis v. State, 138 Ala. 17, 34 So. 1025; —information by physician and father, impliedly acquiesced in. Stevens v. State, 138 Ala. 71, 35 So. 122.

So, a sense of impending death is shown where deceased was told by his physician that he could not recover unless by a rare chance, after a surgical operation, whereupon he made a statement, and within a few minutes thereafter died, although he agreed to submit to the operation. State v. Thompson, 49 Or. 46, 124 Am. St. Rep. 1015, 88 Pac. 583.

And likewise, where deceased was in fact dying from a gunshot wound, had been informed that, in the opinion of his physician, he could survive but a few hours, and it appears from the testimony of an interpreter that he realized and apprehended his condition and the imminence of death. State v. Ju Nun, 53 Or. 1, 97 Pac. 96, affirmed on rehearing in 53 Or. 8, 98 Pac. 513.

In very few cases is there an entire absence of anything in deceased's conduct or that of those present, and of a physician's advice, as well as of any statement of deceased, tending to show his state of mind, as in TERRITORY v. EAGLE, making it necessary to infer a sense of impending death merely from the character of the wound and his physical condition.

But in Jones v. State, 130 Ga. 274, 60 S. E. 840, it was held that the circumstances were sufficient to make a prima facie showing of deceased's sense of impending death, where it appeared that he had just been shot through the heart, and was found lying prostrate on the ground, was scarcely able to move, never spoke again, and died in fifteen or twenty minutes.

On the other hand, "where the question is one of life and death to a man who has been suddenly stricken down, who has still something to live for, and whose mind is busy with the idea of prosecuting those been marked internal hemorrhage. The abdomen was markedly distended. His temperature was subnormal, about 96, I think. His heart action—the heart was rather rapid, about 88 to 90, varying. The man was conscious, but in a rather semiconscious, or rather dazed condition. He was not fully normal. He vomited blood; vomited all the nourishment we could give him, and even vomited water, and later he developed an almost incessant hiccup, or rather, it would come on and last for probably thirty minutes or an hour, and then subside for a little while and then return again.

Q. Can you state from the course and direction, or from the point of entrance and point of exit of the bullet, what organs were traversed by the bullet?

A. Not absolutely. . . .

Q. From that examination of him and your attendance upon him, state, if you can, what was the cause of his death?

A. I think the chief lesion, or chief cause of death, was peritonitis, due to the bullet wound.

Q. The primary cause of death, then, was the bullet wound?

A. The bullet wound; yes, sir.

Q. What was your professional opinion as to the character of the wound—that is, as to whether it was—it would be fatal or not, when you first saw him?

A. I told his friends that I thought he would die in a few days.

Nowhere in this testimony does it appear by whom he has been injured, proof that the last spark of hope has left his breast can hardly be considered convincing unless it comes in the form of a specific admission to that effect, by word or sign from the man himself, since no one else can know." State v. Daniels, 115 La. 59, 38 So. 894.

And a sense of impending death is not shown by deceased's mere assent, when asked by a physician if he did not recognize that he was in a critical condition. Phillips v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 127, 94 S. W. 1051.

Expressions of physician's opinion.

As seen in many of the above cases, the fact that a physician had expressed to the declarant his opinion that the latter could not recover is admissible in evidence as a circumstance tending to show that deceased was conscious of approaching death.

So, in Com. v. Rhoads, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 512, the court said: "His own belief in his impending death was confirmed by the statements to him of the surgeon."

Other cases relying upon the expression of the physician's opinion to the deceased, together with statements of the latter, as showing, his sense of impending death, are Jackson v. State, 94 Miss. 83, 47 So. 502; State v. McMullin, 170 Mo. 608, 71 S. W. 221.

And a sense of impending death may be sufficiently shown by evidence of surgeons' advice to deceased that he could not live, and statements of the latter, showing his concurrence in their views, although the wife of deceased denies that deceased thought he was going to die. State v. Parker, 172 Mo. 191, 72 S. W. 650.

But it is not necessary that a physician should have told deceased he was going to die. Grant v. State, 118 Ga. 804, 45 S. E. 603.

And in State v. Boggan, 133 N. C. 761, 46 S. E. 111, statements of deceased, after his doctors had told him that his wound would very probably prove fatal, though they extended some hope that he might be saved by means of an operation, were held to show an absence of all hope. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

So, in State v. Brady, 124 La. 951, 50 So. 806, the court said: "Physicians do not always impress their patients in assuring them that there is hope . . . That physicians and others have hope does not affect the admissibility of the declaration if the dying man had no hope."

On the other hand, physicians do not always impress their patients with their opinions that there is no hope. So, although a decedent said at the time that he believed he was fatally shot, and he was in fact dangerously wounded, and although he was later told by one of his doctors that he was bound to die, but then said in answer to a question that he did not know that he realized how mortally wounded he was, his sense of impending death thereafter was held not to be sufficiently evident. Craven v. State, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 78, 122 Am. St. Rep. 799, 90 S. W. 311.

Aside from the cases where evidence of the physician's opinion as to decedent's condition, communicated to the decedent, is admissible as tending to show the latter's state of mind, such opinion, when not communicated to the deceased, may be given in evidence to show that deceased was actually in a condition from the very nature of which he either would or would not have a sense of impending death. Heningburg v. State, 153 Ala. 13, 45 So. 246; Gipe v. State, 165 Ind. 433, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 419, 112 Am. St. Rep. 238, 75 N. E. 881; Newton v. State, 51 Fla. 82, 41 So. 19.

Sending for physician.

The effect of showing that the deceased asked for a physician seems to depend largely upon the other circumstances of the case. A "request made by the deceased for a physician's aid may, in connection with his other expressions and the circumstances, be regarded as indicating a hope of cure. . . . But not necessarily so, since a physician may be desired merely to alleviate pain, or other purpose than to prolong life. . . . Taken in connection with the proof that the deceased was in fact in extremis while speaking them, the expressions of belief as to his condition are not controlled that Dr. Dillon told Eteewa of his condition, or in his presence, in any manner, indicated that Eteewa could not recover.

Mr. Allen testified as to the character of the wound to the same general effect as did Dr. Dillon, and, in addition thereto, testified with reference to what was said and done in the presence of Eteewa at the time of the taking of the deposition, as follows:

A. It was only a few words. I was only there just a short time, and I told him that I was going back. I made up my mind to send for a notary or bring a notary at once and take his statement. I told him I would be back in an hour or so. I sent a messenger for Mr. Bibb and returned to McCarty's in an hour or so—two or three hours, and he made a second statement similar to the first one.

The Court: That was to Mr. Bibb?

A. Yes; to Mr. Bibb, and I was present.

Q. You were present?

A. I was present. I told him that I was going to bring a justice of the peace, or Mr. Bibb.

Q. There was nothing said directly as to whether he would get well or would not?

A. No, sir; I did not mention it to him.

Q. How was his condition the second time as compared with the first?

A. Well, about the same, as far as I could see, he had taken no nourishment or anything of the sort. They told me—about the same, and I did not see any material difference in the length of time.

Q. Was this statement supposed to be after the doctor had been there?

A. The doctor was there at the same time—at my first visit. The doctor lived in Laguna and went home. I returned with Mr. Hunt and Mr. Bibb. Mr. Bibb met me there. The doctor and I were there together on other matters.

Q. Mr. Allen, from your observation of his condition at the time that Mr. Bibb was there, what, if any, opinion did you form as to whether he would live or die? . . .

A. I thought he would die.

Q. Describe his appearance, and what indications there were that led you to the opinion.

by his request for a doctor." Milton v. State, 134 Ala. 42, 32 So. 653.

"The fact that he asked that the doctor be sent for was not, in itself and alone, sufficient to affect the admissibility of the declarations under the predicate. It was shown that he was at the time suffering with severe pain . . . and it was natural that he should want the doctor to allay his sufferings." Pitts v. State, 140 Ala. 70, 37 So. 101.

"His desire to reach a physician was doubtless only to relieve present pain." State v. Kuhn, 117 Iowa, 216, 90 N. W. 733.

The words "send for the doctor" are not an indication of hope. "It often happens that dying men wish to see a physician in order to obtain some relief from pain. The mere desire to see a physician does not rebut the declaration that he was shot to death." State v. Bordelon, 113 La. 690, 37 So. 603.

In Hawkins v. State, 98 Md. 355, 57 Atl. 27, the court said: "To assume in the face of all the testimony in this case that her cry for relief disproved the sincerity of her statement that she knew she was dying would be to deny to her the privilege of asking the alleviation of what the doctor said he knew, as soon as he saw her, was intense agony."

But where the deceased, at and after the time of making certain declarations, was going about, and later requested that a physician be sent for, his sense of impending death was not sufficiently shown, though he afterwards said he was about to die. Brown v. Com. 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1269, 83 S. W. 645.

In Bilton v. Territory, 1 Okla. Crim. Rep. 566, 99 Pac. 163, sending for additional 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

medical aid was said to show hope of recovery.

And though deceased said he thought he was going to die, yet if he eagerly asked a physician what he thought of the case, and on his advice started on a journey to a distant city for an operation as being his one chance of recovery, his sense of impending death, without any hope of recovery, is not sufficiently shown. State v. Gianfala, 113 La. 463, 37 So. 30.

Sending for priest, etc.

"The expression of the desire of the deceased for the consolations of religion, and especially when the particular religion or church of the deceased provides for the administering of certain rites to its members when, and only when, they are actually in articulo mortis, has always been regarded by the courts as one of the strongest proofs that the deceased is in that condition of mind which is requisite to the admission in evidence of his statements as dying declarations." People v. Buettner, 233 Ill. 272, 84 N. E. 218, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 235.

So, in the following cases, sending for a priest or preacher, or a request that one be sent for, has been held to be evidence tending, in connection with other circumstances, to show a sense of impending death: State v. Kelleher, 201 Mo. 614, 100 S. W. 470; People v. Conklin, 175 N. Y. 333, 67 N. E. 624; People v. Stacey, 119 App. Div. 743, 104 N. Y. Supp. 615, affirmed in 192 N. Y. 577, 85 N. E. 1114; State v. Head, 60 S. C. 516, 39 S. E. 6.

And in R. v. Laurin, 6 Can. Crim. Cas. 104, the fact that deceased had received extreme unction, which is administered only

A. Well, his ghastly appearance—his face, and his pulse was very weak.

Q. Anything else about his appearance that you noted specially at that time?

The Court: What appearance of blood about him?

A. Very little of it on the outside, I think. He was bleeding internally—very little on the outside. He had the same shirt on when he was shot—supposed to be. The hole was in the shirt in both sides. He was in his shirt sleeves. It was warm weather.

Q. At any time when you were with him did you notice any vomiting?

A. Yes, sir; later in that day.

Q. Not either of those times?

A. No, sir; I did not notice him vomiting.

Mr. Bibb had no conversation with Eteewa other than the direct questions shown in the dying declaration, and did not at any time ask Eteewa as to his condition or his hope or lack of hope of recovery. There was nothing in the dying declaration itself to indicate the state of mind of the when death is impending, was held to be one circumstance showing a sense of impending death.

Arranging business.

Another circumstance tending strongly to show a sense of impending death on the part of the deceased is his arranging business matters. Thus, in People v. Shehadey, 12 Cal. App. 648, 108 Pac. 146, the fact that deceased gave directions for the division of his estate was one element of the evidence of his sense of impending death.

So, in State v. Colvin, 226 Mo. 446, 126 S. W. 448, deceased's sense of impending death was evidenced in part by the fact that he sent in the night for a neighbor to write his will, which he thereupon executed.

And calling a lawyer and making a will disposing of his property, and telling his wife what to do about managing his business, etc., were among the circumstances showing sense of impending death in Crockett v. State, 45 Tex. Crim. Rep. 276, 77 S. W. 4.

Conclusion of witness.

In Delaney v. State, 148 Ala. 586, 42 So. 815, it was held that a sense of impending death cannot be shown by the bare conclusion of a witness that "deceased knew he was going to die in a short time." A witness cannot "testify that another knew or did not know a certain fact, but must detail the facts from which such conclusion is drawn."

In Davis v. State, 120 Ga. 843, 48 S. E. 305, however, a sense of impending death on the part of deceased was held to be sufficiently shown to admit a dying declaration.

deceased at the time the declaration was made. From an examination of the testimony, it nowhere appears that Santiago Eteewa indicated at any time, by word of mouth or otherwise, that he realized his condition, and had surrendered all hope of recovery. Under the foregoing evidence, it then becomes necessary to determine whether the dying declaration of Santiago Eteewa was made under the sense of impending death, and thereby became admissible under the rule heretofore stated. There being no expressions from Eteewa himself from which this can be determined, and nothing in his conduct at the time the declaration was made from which it may be inferred that he was conscious of his condition, and no communications having been made to him by his medical adviser or friends which were assented to or understandingly acquiesced in by him, we must rely solely upon the terrible character and extent of the wound inflicted in determining whether Eteewa was under the sense of impending death at the time he made the declaration admitted in evidence as a dying declaration, by testimony of a witness that "he realized that he was mortally wounded."

And in some other cases this class of evidence seems to have been admitted. Thus, in Lang v. State (Ala.) 52 So. 340, a witness testified that deceased knew he was going to die, and that witness did not encourage deceased, but told him he thought he would die; and this, together with evidence that deceased said that he was killed and bound to die, was held to show a sense of impending death on the part of the deceased.

And in Lewis v. State, 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 614, 89 S. W. 1073, a sense of impending death was shown by testimony of the mother of deceased that she was with him for three days previous to his death, and that he realized that he was going to die, and stated he was conscious of approaching death, and had no hope of recovery.

So, in State v. Ju Nun, 53 Or. 1, 97 Pac. 96, affirmed on rehearing in 53 Or. 8, 98 Pac. 513, testimony of an interpreter that deceased realized and apprehended his condition and the imminence of death was relied on in part to show the latter's sense of impending death.

And where the witness to whom deceased's statement was made said he did not think deceased realized that he was going to die, a sense of impending death was held not to have been shown by evidence that deceased, on the way to the hospital, said, "I am done for," and that upon arrival there the physician told him "his chances were pretty slim." People v. Hayes, 9 Cal. App. 301, 99 Pac. 386.

A. C. W.

declaration. In discussing this question, 2 Wigmore on Evidence, § 1442, says: "In ascertaining this consciousness of approaching death, recourse should naturally be had to all the attending circumstances. It has been contended that only the statements of the declarant could be considered for this purpose, or, less broadly, the nature of the injury alone could not be sufficient; i. e., in effect, that the declarant must have shown in some way by conduct or language that he knew he was going to die. This, however, is without good reason. We may avail ourselves of any means of inferring the existence of such knowledge; and, if in a given case, the nature of the wound is such that the declarant must have realized his situation, our object is sufficiently attained. Such is the settled judicial attitude." See also Gipe v. State, 105 Ind. 433, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 421, 112 Am. St. Rep. 238, 75 N. E. 881. This seems to have been the well-settled rule in England also. In John's Case, as reported in 1 East, P. C. 357, 358, it appears that it was the unanimous opinion of the judges that "if a dying person either declare that he knows his danger, or it is reasonably to be inferred from the wound or state of illness that he was sensible of his danger, the declarations are good evidence." See also R. v. Woodcock, 1 Leach, C. L. 503; Anthony v. State, Meigs, 265, 33 Am. Dec. 143; McLean v. State, 16 Ala. 672; Hill v. Com. 2 Gratt. 595, 608; 3 Russell, Crimes, 9th American from 4th London ed. p. 250. And see Green v. State, 154 Ind. 655, 57 N. E. 637; John's Case, 1 East, P. C. 358, supra; Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 463; Starkey v. People, 17 Ill. 17; 1 Roscoe, Crim. Ev. 37; 1 Bishop, New Crim. Proc. 1212; 1 Elliott, Ev. 355. In the case of Mattox v. United States, 146 U. S. 140, 151, 38 L. ed. 917, 921, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50, the court commented upon and approved this doctrine. See also Wharton, Homicide, 3d ed. § 634. In the case at bar it appears that, on the day the declaration was made, the doctor examined the wounds of Santiago Eteewa and pronounced the same fatal. From his testimony (quoted supra) it appears that the wound was of such a terrible nature and character that his symptoms as to vomiting, internal bleeding, subnormal temperature, rapid pulse, distended abdomen, and later the excretions from the wounds, were of such a serious and dangerous nature that it must be inferred therefrom that Eteewa was conscious of his condition and under the sense of impending death at the time the statement was made. In the case of Anthony v. State, supra, the court used the following language: "If the dangerous nature and character of the wound, the state and illness of the party, her sinking condition, and her statement of extreme suffering, and of those symptoms which usually precede death, are circumstances from which in any case the consciousness of danger can be collected, they exist in the present case, and would justify the inference of such consciousness." The facts in this case, therefore, can lead to but one conclusion; viz., that the statement of Santiago Eteewa was made under the sense of impending death, and properly admitted as a dying declaration.

The appellant also assigns as error the taking of the dying declaration to the jury room, over the objection of appellant. This dying declaration had been reduced to writing and introduced in evidence. The supreme court of Washington, in passing upon this point under a statute similar to ours, in the case of State v. Moody, 18 Wash. 176, 51 Pac. 359, says: "Again, it is claimed that the court erred in allowing the dying declaration to go to the jury room for the investigation of the jury, over the objections of the appellant. We think, without any question, that this was reversible error. The statute does not permit witnesses or depositions to go to the jury room, and for the very best of reasons. And certainly the dying declaration is in substance a deposition of a witness; the solemnity of the occasion simply taking the place of the oath which is ordinarily administered to a witness who subscribes to a deposition. No cases are cited on this proposition, but we think it so plainly falls within the ban of the statute and of the law that the citation of authorities is unnecessary." The dying declaration in this case contains all of the evidence of the deceased, and it would appear to us that the reasoning of the court in the case cited supra is sound. Our statute provides as follows: "When the jury retires to consider its verdict, it shall be allowed to take the pleadings in the cause, the instructions of the court, and any instruments of writing admitted as evidence, except depositions." N. M. Comp. Laws 1897, § 3002. It would not be contended for a moment that a witness could be introduced into the jury room after the case had been closed. The same argument would apply with equal force to the deposition of a witness, and under the rule laid down in the Washington case cited supra, a dying declaration has all of the essential characteristics of a deposition. If permitted in the jury room for examination and investigation by the jurors, being all of the evidence of that particular witness, it gives undue prominence and weight to the evidence of the deceased, and clearly comes within the ban of the statute cited supra.

The appellant also assigns as error the fact that he was arraigned at the court-house in Bernalillo county, outside of the county of Valencia, the county where appellant was indicted, and where the homicide occurred. The circumstances surrounding this arraignment appear in the statement of facts. In view of the fact that the case must be reversed and remanded for a new trial below, and that the alleged irregularity will doubtless be obviated upon the further proceedings in the cause, we do not find it necessary to pass upon this assignment.

Two other assignments of error were made by the appellant, both of which, in the opinion of the court, were serious, but inasmuch as they will not, in all probability, arise upon a retrial of this case, the court declines to discuss and pass upon the same.

For the reasons above stated, the cause is reversed and remanded for a new trial; and it is so ordered.

POPE, CH. J., and PARKER, McFIE, and MEACHEM, JJ., concur. ABBOTT, J., having tried the case below, did not participate in this opinion.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
G. W. WALLIS.

(133 Ga. 553, 66 S. E. 370.)

Carrier — duty to stop at flag station — demurrers overruled — error.

1. A railway company is bound to stop its passenger trains in response to proper signals at a flag station at which it is in the habit of stopping trains of that character.

(a) There was no error in overruling the special demurrers.

Same — operation of trains on Sunday — work of necessity.

2. The general assembly, by enactments codified in Penal Code 1895, § 420, wherein the running of the freight and excursion trains on Sunday is made a misdemeanor, and wherein regular trains for the carrying of the mails or passengers are expressly excepted from its provisions, gave expression to public policy as to the legality of running the excepted trains on Sunday, and a legislative construction that the running of regular mail and passenger trains comes within the exception of Penal Code 1895, § 422, which makes it a misdemeanor for any person to pursue his ordinary calling on the Sabbath day, works of necessity and charity excepted.

Trial — instructions — confusion.

3. In a suit for damages alleged to have been occasioned by the negligence of a defendant railroad company, a charge "that the plaintiff must further show that his injury, if any, was not caused by his own negligence, and that he could not have avoided the injury by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence," is not open to the criticism that it confused and blended §§ 2322 and 3830 of the Civil Code of 1895, to the prejudice of the defendants.

Damages — excessiveness — injury to passenger.

4. The verdict was not excessive.

(November 20, 1909.)

Note. — Duty to give regular train service on Sunday.

This note does not cover the question of whether a carrier has a right to operate trains on Sunday. Nor does it cover the question of whether the operation of trains is a work of necessity.

Where a carrier undertakes to operate trains on Sunday there can be no question but that it is bound to perform its legal duties incidental thereto. It has been laid down in a number of cases, however, that where a carrier does not hold itself out to operate trains on Sunday, it is not bound to do so.

Thus, in Walsh v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 42 Wis. 23, 24 Am. Rep. 376, where an action was brought for failure to perform a special contract to transport plaintiff to a certain place and return on Sunday, the court said: "From this reference to the allegation of the complaint, it seems obvious that it is in reality an action on contract, and must be treated as such. It is manifest that the action is not sustainable for a breach of duty as carrier, because the defendant was under no obligation to carry the plaintiff or any other person on its road on that day. It does not run passenger trains on Sunday for the accommodation of the public, nor does it hold itself out to the world as ready to engage in the transportation of passengers on that day. If the plaintiff had presented himself at the passenger depot on the morning of the 14th of September, offered to pay the usual fare, and insisted upon being carried to Watertown that day, it is very evident that it would not have been a breach of duty for the defendant to have refused to carry him. The common carrier is bound to transport an individual upon being paid a reasonable rate of fare, unless it has a valid excuse for not performing that duty. Here the defendant had a perfectly valid excuse for not running its passenger trains on Sunday (Rev. Stat. chap. 183, § 5), and this was doubtless well understood by the plaintiff. Hence the plaintiff felt the necessity of counting upon an express contract of carriage in both counts, and of proving such contract, in order to maintain the action."

So, in Merchants' Wharfeboat Asso. v.

ERROR to the Superior Court for Fayette County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for defendant's alleged wrongful failure to stop its train and receive plaintiff as a passenger. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charlton E. Battle, Howell Hollis, and Blalock & Culpepper for plaintiff in error.

Mr. J. W. Wise for defendant in error.

Evans, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

G. W. Wallis sued the Southern Railway Company for failing to stop its train at a station and to receive him as a passenger, alleging that he was a physician, and had patients at Kenwood and Helmer, regular stations on the line of defendant's road, where the defendant's passenger cars stopped to take on and let off passengers. The remaining paragraphs of the petition were as follows:

Wood, 64 Miss. 661, 60 Am. Rep. 76, 2 So. 76, it is implied that carriers are not bound to transact business on Sunday, but it is held that if they do enter upon business on that day, they cannot protect themselves for negligence because it occurred on Sunday. In this case an action was brought against a warehouseman and forwarder, to recover for a loss sustained through the burning of goods while on defendant's wharf, awaiting transportation. It appeared that the defendant had an opportunity to forward the goods by steamer on Sunday, and that if this had been done, the loss would have been prevented. It also appeared that defendant was accustomed to ship such goods on Sunday. The court said: "By the laws of this state (Code of 1880, § 2949) the transaction of secular business on the Sabbath is prohibited and made penal, but the proviso to that section is 'that nothing in this section shall apply to railroads or steamboat navigation in this state.' The business in which appellant was engaged in reference to the property of the appellees was so intimately connected with that of steamboat navigation, and so necessary to it, as to fall within the exception of the proviso to the statute. We do not understand that a railroad company or a steamboat is bound to transact business on the Sabbath merely because the statute permits it to be done, but if they hold themselves out to the public as so doing, and enter upon business which, according to their usages and habits, will be transacted on that day, they cannot shield themselves for either misfeasance or nonfeasance, because it was done or omitted to be done on the Sabbath."

So, in Guinn v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 20 Mo. App. 453, recovery was allowed for damage resulting from delay in forwarding hogs received on Sunday for transportation. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"(4) That on February 2, 1908, your petitioner was not well, and went on said train to said above-named place for the purpose of seeing his patients, and to keep from driving through the country in the cold and bad weather, on account of his physical condition.

"(5) That in the afternoon on said day your petitioner went to Helmer, Georgia, a station on said railroad company's line, and where they take on passengers, and is a regular flag station for the purpose of taking on passengers, for the purpose of boarding said train, and when said train came, he, in accordance with the rules of the company and the custom, flagged said train, and tried to wave the same down to a stop for the purpose of getting on said train.

"(6) Your petitioner shows that the engineer on said train saw him, and saw him give the signal to stop; but said engineer refused to stop or notice your petitioner, but went on by said station, and portation. The court here also expressed an opinion that a carrier is not bound to transact business of this kind on Sunday. It was there said: "while the company could not lawfully be required to furnish cars on Sunday to load the hogs and move them, yet, having received them into its pens for transportation, the law imposed upon it the duty as a common carrier to ship them after that day without unreasonable delay. The gist of this section is the negligent delay in shipping the hogs, which extended far beyond this Sunday."

And where the proprietor of a stage coach books a passenger on Sunday for transportation on that evening, he is liable to the latter for the amount paid by him for a post chaise to reach his destination after the proprietor had refused to make the trip, because there were no other passengers. Sandiman v. Breach, 7 Barn. & C. 96.

And in Philadelphia W. & B. R. Co. v. Lehman, 56 Md. 209, 40 Am. Rep. 416, where the plaintiff sued to recover for a loss sustained by reason of the defendants' delay in forwarding cattle received by them on Sunday, it was held that, after acceptance for transportation, it became the carriers' duty to forward the stock without unnecessary delay, and that if any damage resulted from a neglect of this duty, the fact that they had been received or carried on Sunday would afford no excuse for the injury. To the same effect in Merritt v. Earle, 29 N. Y. 115, 86 Am. Dec. 292.

In Gauthier v. Cole, 17 Fed. 716, where a contract was made with the proprietors of a steamboat line to send one of its steamers, in continuation of its Sunday trip, to a specified place for freight, in an action for a breach, the contract was held void.

J. T. W.

left your petitioner standing there on the ground, without any means of conveyance for the purpose of getting home, which acts of said engineer petitioner charges as negligence.

"(7) Your petitioner says that he had no means of conveyance for reaching home, and could not get any; that it was just at night, cold and bad weather, dark and muddy roads, and your petitioner had to walk home, a distance of 7 miles, through mud, water, and ice; and on account of said walk and said exposure he was made sick and confined to his bed for some time, causing him severe pain and suffering, and that he has not fully recovered from same up to this time."

The defendant demurred generally and specially to the petition. The court overruled the demurrers, and the case was tried, with the result that the plaintiff was allowed $250 as damages. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was refused, and it excepts.

1. The relevancy and pertinency of the allegations in the fourth paragraph were challenged by special demurrer. The averments of this paragraph are but matters of inducement, introductory to the narrative of the plaintiff's cause of action. The defendant demurred specially to the fifth paragraph, because of a failure to specify in what way the train was flagged, or what custom or rule of the company was violated. The allegation of this paragraph is tantamount to saying that it was the habit of the defendant to stop its passenger train at this particular station whenever signaled, but that it failed to do so on this occasion when flagged. No agent in the service of the company could fail to know what was meant by this allegation. The defendant also by special demurrer moved to strike that portion of the sixth paragraph which alleged that the plaintiff was without means of conveyance for the purpose of getting home, and all of paragraph 7. These averments describe the circumstances under which the plaintiff found himself after the defendant's train failed to stop, and were proper to be considered by the jury in estimating his damages, if, under the allegations of the petition, the plaintiff was entitled to recover. The rule is well established that a railroad company is bound to stop its trains in response to proper signals at a flag station at which it is in the habit of stopping trains of the kind so signaled. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Safford (Tex. Civ. App.) 48 S. W. 1105; Wilson v. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. 63 Miss. 352; Thomas v. Southern R. Co. 122 N. C. 1005, 30 S. E. 343; Morse v. Duncan (C. C.) 14 Fed. 396. Such is the case made by the 30 L.R.A., (N.S.) petition, and the general demurrer was properly overruled.

2. The defendant pleaded "that the 2d day of February, 1908 [the day the plaintiff avers the train failed to stop], was upon the Sabbath Day, and the defendant had the right to refuse to enter into a contract of carriage if it desired to do so, and that it was guilty of no breach of duty as a carrier by not stopping at said station." The defendant contends that it is under no duty to enter into any contract of carriage on Sunday, nor is it under duty to stop its passenger trains at a particular station, when run on Sunday, for the purpose of receiving passengers. This contention is not sound. At common law, contracts made on Sunday were valid and enforceable. Hayden v. Mitchell, 103 Ga. 431 (3), 440, 30 S. E. 287; Bishop, Contr. 2d ed. § 536. Nor was it a crime at common law to pursue one's ordinary calling on the Sabbath Day. Bishop, supra, § 538; 2 Bishop, New Crim. Law, §§ 950 et seq. By statute the doing of certain acts on the Sabbath Day has been made penal. And a contract made on the Sabbath Day in furtherance of a violation of a criminal statute is obnoxious to public policy, and will not be enforced. But unless the contract is in furtherance of a violation of a criminal statute, or is prohibited, it is valid and enforceable. Sanders v. Johnson, 29 Ga. 526; Dorough v. Equitable Mortg. Co. 118 Ga. 178, 45 S. E. 22; Red Cypress Lumber Co. v. Perry, 118 Ga. 879, 45 S. E. 674. There is no statute in this state prohibiting a carrier from running a passenger train on the Sabbath Day, or prohibiting it from entering into contracts of carriage on that day. By Penal Code 1895, § 420, it is made penal to run freight or excursion trains on the Sabbath Day; but "regular trains" for the carrying of the mails or passengers" are expressly excepted therefrom. The prohibition of Penal Code 1895, § 422, against any person pursuing his business or ordinary calling on the Lord's Day when not a work of necessity or charity, does not apply to the running of passenger trains; otherwise, it would have been idle for the general assembly to have made the running of an excursion passenger train on the Sabbath Day an indictable offense. The two sections (420 and 422) are in pari materia, and must be construed together. It would seem that, the general assembly having expressly or by necessary implication legalized the running of passenger trains on the Sabbath Day, the doing of the work necessary thereto is to be regarded as a "work of necessity." But, aside from this, a railroad company which runs a regular passenger train on the Sabbath will not be relieved of the performance of its legal duties incidental thereto.

3. One of the grounds of the motion complains that the court erred in charging "that the plaintiff must further show that his injury, if any, was not caused by his own negligence, and that he could not have avoided the injury by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence." The vice of this charge is said to consist in blending two separate and distinct rules of law applicable to the defense; the same being in part the provisions of Civil Code 1895, §§ 2322, 3830. We see no error in this instruction of which the railroad company can complain.

4. It is also said that the verdict is excessive. Under the case made, as contained in the record, we cannot so say.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Impleaded, etc., Plff. in Err.,
v.

W. J. HARBIN.

(— Ga. —, 68 S. E. 1103.)

Joint tort — acquittal of one defendant — effect.

In an action against a railway company and its servant, to recover damages for the homicide of the plaintiff's son, solely in consequence of the servant's misfeasance, where a verdict is returned finding the servant not liable, but finding in favor of the plaintiff against the railway company, such verdict should be set aside and a new trial granted.

(Holden, J., dissents.)

(September 22, 1910.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Fulton County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor as to defendant Southern Railway Company, in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's son. Reversed.

Statement by Beck, J.:

W. J. Harbin brought suit against the Southern Railway Company and James Michael to recover damages for the homicide of a son, James Harbin, who was struck and killed by a locomotive of the defendant company which was being operated on its tracks by the codefendant, James

Michael, who was an engineer in the employment of the company. The suit was "brought jointly against said defendants for their concurrent acts of negligence which caused the homicide." It was alleged in the petition that the decedent was in the employment as a switchman on a yard crew, and that, in the discharge of his duties, he had to throw two switches which connected what is known as a shop track with the north-bound main line, in order to allow the engine with which he was working to pass on and over said main line, and eventually to get to the south-bound main line; that it was necessary for him to go along the tracks a certain distance to another switch in the discharge of his duties; that while proceeding along the track and changing the switches, he could easily have been seen by the engineer and fireman, who were directing the engine which killed him, for Note. — Effect of verdict for servant in an action against master and servant for servant's negligence or misfeasance.

This subject was discussed in a note to McGinnis v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 880. Several decisions upon this question have been handed down since the preparation of the earlier note.

The cases very generally sustain the rule laid down both in the McGinnis Case and in SOUTHERN R. Co. v. HARBIN, that a verdict exonerating the servant in an action brought against the master and the servant, for personal injuries caused solely by the misfeasance of the servant, requires an acquittal of the master also.

Thus, in Morris v. Northwestern Improv. Co. 53 Wash. 451, 102 Pac. 402, in which the master mechanic of the defendant company was also sued, the court, following Doremus v. Root, 23 Wash. 710, 54 L.R.A. 649, 63 Pac. 572, and Stevick v. Northern P. R. Co. 39 Wash. 501, 81 Pac. 699, both of which are referred to in the McGinnis Case, to which the earlier note is appended, said: "There is no allegation of independent negligence on the part of appellant. Its negligence grows out of and follows from the negligence of its master mechanic, in his neglect in the performance of the duty it had intrusted to him. If Cadwell was negligent, then appellant was negligent in law, and must answer for the consequent injury; if Cadwell was not negligent, no liability could be imposed upon appellant, because the only negligence upon which its negligence was predicated did not exist. Appellant's relation to the cause of action falls clearly within the rule of respondet superior, and the verdict in favor of Cadwell was in legal effect a verdict in its favor, and no judgment against it could be founded thereon."

The same rule was followed in Sipes v. Puget Sound Electric R. Co. 54 Wash. 47, 102 Pac. 1037, where the plaintiff, a con-

a distance of 500 feet from the place where he was struck; that he had to work with his face towards the north, and, in the exercise of due care, he proceeded to walk upon the south-bound main line so as to have his face in the direction from which trains or engines might come upon him, and while so walking, in plain view of the employees operating the engine which struck him, he was run down without any warning or any effort to stop the engine until after he was struck; that the engine was operated at a high and negligent rate of speed; that the engineer, one of the defendants, failed to blow the whistle or ring the bell of said engine, or cause the same to be rung, and failed to keep proper lookout ahead, and failed to check his engine and to slow up as the engine approached the switch point, as ordinary care required; that this conduct of the defendant Michael was very negligent in view of the crowded condition of the yard at that time and the loud noises being made with escaping steam from other engines; that instead of running in the proper direction on the south-bound track,—that is, towards the south,—Michael was running his engine north on said track; that the engine which killed decedent was being run in violation of law, in that there was, on a street which crosses the defendant company's tracks at grade, a line of electric railroad, and the defendant engineer failed to cause the engine to come to a full stop within 50 feet of the place of crossing, and then to move slowly for-ductor in the employment of an electric railway company, sued both the railroad company and its general manager. The court said: "The decision in Doremus v. Root is based upon the principle that the master and servant are privies in law, and therefore a judgment in favor of the servant in an action to recover damages for a tort committed by the servant is a bar to an action against the master, to recover damages for the same tortious act of the servant. The principle of that case has been repeatedly reaffirmed in this court, and the case has often been cited with approval in other jurisdictions."

And in Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. McManigal, 73 Neb. 580, 103 N. W. 305, 107 N. W. 243, the court said: "The company and Rogers were privies in a sense other and different from that in which that term is used in ordinary cases of alleged joint tortfeasors. . . . A verdict and judgment in favor of the agent, free from error, and such as the evidence alone supports, must exonerate the principal."

In the Sipes Case, supra, the court said that the only distinction between the case at bar and the Doremus Case was that, in the latter case, the negligent servant was charged with misfeasance, and in the Sipes Case with nonfeasance; but that this did not affect the liability of the servant in that jurisdiction. Upon the subject, liability of an agent or servant for his own negligence or nonfeasance, see note to Ward v. Pullman Co. 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 343.

The decision in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Huber (Tex. Civ. App.) 95 S. W. 568, is contrary to the decisions in the cases cited above. The action was against the railroad company and its engineer, and the verdict was in favor of the latter and against the railroad company. On appeal, the verdict was sustained for the reasons given in the following quotation from the case: "We also overrule the tenth assignment, which contends that a motion in arrest of judgment ought to have been sustained because the verdict in favor of Oliphant was a finding that he was free from negligence and he being the agency through which the 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

railway company committed the negligence, if any was committed, the verdict against this appellant was unfounded. The question was considered in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. James, 73 Tex. 12, 15 Am. St. Rep. 743, 10 S. W. 744, where it was held, in a case of similar character, that, although such a verdict has the appearance of being based on inconsistent and contradictory findings of the jury, this is not of itself enough to require the reversal of a judgment against the passive defendant; the reason being that the finding in favor of the defendant whose act constitutes the negligence complained of, and the finding against the other, in the same case, by the same jury, can be attributed to improper conduct of the jury in arbitrarily exonerating the former, and not necessarily to a finding that there was no negligence on his part."

It should be noted, however, that the James Case was an action for malicious prosecution against a principal and an agent, and the court expressly distinguished between an action for a tort characterized by the existence of a wrongful intent, such as an action for malicious prosecution, and an action for a tort arising from negligence merely. In view of the distinction carefully made in the James Case, it might be questioned whether it could be considered in any way authority for the decision in the Huber Case.

And the decision in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Murphy, 123 Ky. 789, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 352, 97 S. W. 729, is apparently to the contrary, although the court does not seem to meet the question squarely. It was held that in an action against a railroad company and its engineer for negligent killing a person on the track, where the negligence of the company in running the train at an excessive speed is clearly established, a verdict against it, and in favor of the engineer, will not be disturbed on appeal, where the jury may have found that the engineer acted as a prudent man in attempting to avoid the accident after the peril was discovered.

The decision appears to present the rath-ward, in violation of § 515 of the Penal Code, as well as in violation of the rules of the defendant company; and that in running across and beyond said crossing, the engineer was violating the laws of the state, and that he also violated a valid ordinance of the city of Atlanta by running at a speed exceeding the limit fixed by the ordinance. And it was alleged that "the said Michael, being in sole charge of the movement of said engine, was the entire representative of the defendant railway in the movements thereof."

There was evidence supporting the allegations of negligence upon the part of the engineer. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff against the railway company, but in favor of the company's codefendant, James Michael. The railway company made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and it excepted.

Messrs. McDaniel, Alston, & Black for plaintiff in error.

Mr. A. H. Davis, for defendant in error:

As the law of Georgia allows the railway company to be sued as a joint tortfeasor with the employee whose negligence caused the damage, it necessarily follows that the law governing such actions must apply, and by that law the jury has the right to hold neither, both, or either of the defendants liable.

Mashburn v. Dannenberg Co. 117 Ga. 580, 44 S. E. 97; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Griffith, 111 Ga. 558, 36 S. E. 859; Hollingsworth v. Howard, 113 Ga. 1099, 39 S. E. 465; Finley v. Southern R. Co. 5 Ga. App. 728, 64 S. E. 312; Walton v. Miller, 109 Va. 210, 132 Am. St. Rep. 908, 63 S. E. 458; 2 Hilliard, Torts, p. 312.

The capacity of a suit of this kind to eventuate in discharging the engineer from liability, and still render the company liable, has been recognized.

Southern R. Co. v. Cash, 131 Ga. 540, 62 S. E. 823.

Beck, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Under the decision of this court in the case of Southern R. Co. v. Grizzle, 124 Ga. 735, 110 Am. St. Rep. 191, 53 S. E. 244, a railway company and its engineer may be jointly sued for a negligent homicide, where the negligence of the company results solely from the act and conduct of the engineer. And in the case at bar counsel for plaintiff relies for authority to support the finding er curious result of holding that the negligence of the railroad company due solely to the negligence of the engineer in running the train at an excessive rate of speed, was continued up to the point of the injury, so as to make the railroad company liable therefor, while the engineer himself might be exonerated from liability if he, after becoming aware of the danger, used all reasonable efforts to avoid it.

Although the case would seem to be squarely in point, some doubt of the position which the court really intended to take is presented by the following quotation: "If the plaintiff is entitled to his verdict against two tortfeasors, but the jury are able to agree only as to one of them, and gives a verdict accordingly, we know of no law that prevents the plaintiff from having at least what the jury has given him." This suggests, at least, that the court considered that there was some negligence on the part of the company beyond the negligence of the engineer, which was imputable to the company.

The decision in Bedenbaugh v. Southern R. Co. 69 S. C. 1, 48 S. E. 53, has been cited as contrary to the general rule as laid down in the HARBIN and Doremus Cases, but it is not at all clear that the decision in the HARBIN CASE has any bearing upon this question. The verdict was for the defendant servant, and against the defendant railway company, and the attorney for the latter moved that judgment be entered in its favor notwithstanding the verdict, upon the ground that the plaintiff's cause of ac- 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

tion was based entirely upon the alleged negligence of the engineer, and the jury by their verdict having exonerated the engineer, the basis of the action was gone. The court, without any discussion, decided against the contention of the defendant railway company, basing its decision upon Gardner v. Southern R. Co. 65 S. C. 341, 43 S. E. 816, and Carson v. Southern R. Co. 68 S. C. 55, 46 S. E. 525. In the Gardner Case, however, the decision was reversed because of the error of the court in instructing the jury that there must be a verdict for the defendant if the agent or servant was not guilty of negligence, the court saying that, under the charge, the jury would have been bound to find in favor of both defendants, even though they believed that the master himself did the acts complained of, as alleged in the cause of action. And in the Carson Case, the complaint alleged that the master was negligent in furnishing defective appliances, and that the servant was negligent in his use of them. It will be seen that in both of these cases there was negligence, or, at least, there might have been negligence found on the part of the master or some other servant, which was entirely disconnected from the negligence of the defendant servant; and consequently these cases are not authority for the decision in the Bedenbaugh Case, if in that case the liability of the master was based wholly upon the negligence of the defendant servant.

The proposition that a verdict in favor of a defendant servant who was charged with in favor of the plaintiff against the railway company (while in the same verdict the codefendant, the engineer, whose actual negligence is alleged to have caused the homicide, is exonerated) upon decisions of this and other courts and the rule laid down in text-books, to the effect that, where several are sued as joint tort-feasors, there may be a finding against one or all of the defendants joined in the action. But we do not think that this rule, in view of the acts of negligence pleaded in this case, is applicable. Under the allegations of negligence in the petition, made to show liability upon the part of the defendants, the only acts of negligence were committed by the engineer who was operating the engine at the time it struck and killed the deceased, James Harbin; and under the decision in the case of Southern R. Co. v. Grizzle, supra, the negligence alleged in the present case constituted misfeasance upon the part of the railway company's employee, its codefendant. If he were guilty of the negligence pleaded, the railway company, of course, was liable upon the principle of respondent superior. The company itself was not, and could not have been, guilty of any negligence independently of the acts of misfeasance upon the part of its engineer. By the verdict of the jury, Michael was found not guilty of negligence causing the death of the plaintiff's son; and where the codefendant was not and could not have been guilty of negligence that would render it liable save on the principle of respondent superior, we do not think that liability could be imputed to it where its employee was exonerated, when he alone performed the act which constitutes the basis for the charge of negligence.

In the case of McGinnis v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 200 Mo. 347, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 880, 118 Am. St. Rep. 661, 98 S. W. 590, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 656, where a verdict was found exonerating the servant in an action against the master and servant for personal injuries caused by the misfeasance of the servant, the Missouri supreme court said: "We are firmly of the opinion that in cases where the right to recover is dependent solely upon the doctrine of respondent superior, and there is a finding that the servant, through whose negligence the master is attempted to be held liable, has not been negligent, as was true in the case negligence does not exonerate the master, sued in the same action for other negligence, either on his part or on the part of the other servants, resulting in injury to the plaintiff, needs but to be stated; and it is plain that such cases present an entirely different question from that presented by the title to this note, where the sole basis of the cause of action is the negligence of the defendant servant, and which is imputed to the master, under the doctrine of respondent superior. A few cases emphasizing the distinction, however, may be cited.

Thus, in Finley v. Southern R. Co. 5 Ga. App. 722, 64 S. E. 312, where the railroad and the yard master and assistant yard master were sued together, and negligence on the part of the individual defendants and also on the part of the engineer was alleged, the court directed a new trial upon the ground that the verdict was against all three defendants, and there was no negligence shown on the part of the individual defendants; but the court said: "We are of the opinion, also, that the court erred in charging the jury that the plaintiff could only recover upon such acts of negligence as were shown to be chargeable to the servants Hagan and Turner. . . . But the defendant company, as a tort feasor, though sued jointly with Hagan and Turner, might be liable for the negligence of some employee other than they, if, as is alleged in the petition, the negligence of the engineer contributed to the injury."

So, in Clay v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 104 Minn. 1, 115 N. W. 949, the defendant railway company claimed that judgment should have been directed for it notwithstanding the verdict, since the jury, having exonerated the alleged negligent conductor, thereby also exonerated the company; but the court held that the defendant company was not entitled to a directed verdict for the reason stated, in the absence of evidence showing that the negligence alleged was the breach of a duty imposed upon the conductor solely.

And in Republic Iron & Steel Co. v. Lee, 227 Ill. 246, 81 N. E. 411, a judgment in favor of a vice principal sued with the master was held not to be necessarily inconsistent with a judgment against the master, where the negligence alleged consisted of a negligent order, given by both the defendant vice principal and another vice principal, and the evidence showed that the defendant vice principal had not given the order.

Attention should be called to the dissenting opinion in SOUTHERN R. Co. v. HARBIN, where the argument is made that, inasmuch as, under the Code, the presumption of negligence on the part of the company arises upon proof that, without fault on the part of deceased, he was killed, and no such presumption prevails against the servant, the jury might be fully justified in finding against the company, against whom the plaintiff would be aided by the presumption, while there might not have been sufficient evidence, unaided by the presumption, to justify the jury in finding against the defendant servant. This argument is very plausible, but it is also very subtle and somewhat intangible.

W. M. G.

in hand, there should be no judgment against the master. The verdict in this case is a monstrosity. The jury say French was guilty of no negligence, yet, in the same breath, say the company was guilty of negligence, although nothing further was done by the company than what it did through French, its servant." And in the case of Doremus v. Root, 23 Wash. 715, 54 L.R.A. 649, 63 Pac. 574, the court says: "Joint tort feorsors are liable to the injured person (other than that he may have but one satisfaction) as if the act causing the injury was the separate act of each of them; and they have, except in certain special cases, no right of contribution among themselves. But the defendants in this character of action are in no sense joint tort feorsors, nor does their liability to the plaintiff rest on the same or like grounds. The act of an employee, even in legal intentment, is not the act of his employer, unless the employer either previously directs the act to be done or subsequently ratifies it. For injuries caused by the negligent act of an employee not directed or ratified by the employer, the employee is liable because he committed the act which caused the injury, while the employer is liable, not as if the act was done by himself, but because of the doctrine of respondent superior,—the rule of law which holds the master responsible for the negligent act of his servant, committed while the servant is acting within the general scope of his employment, and engaged in his master's business. The primary liability to answer for such an act, therefore, rests upon the employee; and when the employer is compelled to answer in damages therefor, he can recover over against the employee. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Compañía Transatlántica Española, 134 N. Y. 461, 30 Am. St. Rep. 685, 31 N. E. 987; note to Carterville v. Cook, 16 Am. St. Rep. 248; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 242; 2 Van Fleet, Former Adjudication, p. 1162." Again, on page 716 of 23 Wash., Fullerton, J., in that case, further says: "So also, in such an action, whether brought against the employer severally or jointly with the employee, the gravamen of the charge is, and must be, the negligence of the employee, and no recovery can be had unless it be proved, and found by the jury, that the employee was negligent. Stated in another way: If the employee who causes the injury is free from liability therefor, his employer must also be free from liability. This was held in New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Jopes, 142 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 919, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109." 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In the note to case of McGinnis v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. supra, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 881, it is said: "In Montfort v. Hughes, 3 E. D. Smith, 591, it was held that if, in a joint action against master and servant, founded solely upon the negligence of the servant, the master not being present nor acting in the matter, the servant is acquitted, there can be no recovery against the master. In such a case a verdict against the master and in favor of the servant would be self-contradictory. Indiana Nitroglycerine & Torpedo Co. v. Lippincott Glass Co. 165 Ind. 361, 75 N. E. 649." See, in same connection, note to the McGinnis Case in 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 660. And in the case of Ivanhoe Furnace Corp. v. Crowder, 110 Va. 387, 66 S. E. 63, the supreme court of appeals of Virginia, affirming the judgment of the court below in overruling a motion in arrest of judgment and a motion for a judgment notwithstanding a verdict, said: "If the court had adhered to its original position, and entered judgment upon the verdict for $3,500 which was first rendered by the jury, and the case in that situation had been brought before us upon the petition of the Ivanhoe Furnace Corporation, McGinnis v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 200 Mo. 347, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 880, 118 Am. St. Rep. 661, 98 S. W. 590, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 656, and Doremus v. Root, 23 Wash. 710, 54 L.R.A. 649, 63 Pac. 572, relied upon by plaintiff in error, would have been pertinent and entitled to very grave consideration; but the case before us differs materially from the cases cited." Other cases in support of the conclusion which we have reached might be cited, but the question involved is elaborately discussed in the decisions which we have referred to and in the cases there cited.

Judgment reversed.

All the Justices concur, except

Holden, J., dissenting:

I cannot concur in the ruling made by a majority of the court, and must dissent from the judgment of reversal. In a suit for damages brought against a railroad company and its engineer, for the killing of the son of the plaintiff, where the sole ground upon which liability of the defendants is claimed is the misfeasance of the engineer, the servant of the company, in operating one of its trains, it is not proper to rule that a verdict in favor of the engineer, and against the company, cannot stand, because it is contradictory. If the proof of the facts raising a presumption that the railroad company was guilty of the acts of negligence alleged did, under the law, raise such presumption against the engineer as well as against the railroad company, or if such proof raised no presumption against either, a verdict finding against the railroad company, and in favor of the engineer, might be said to be contradictory, and it might be proper to set it aside for this reason. But the presumption of negligence of the railroad company created by the law of this state upon proof by the plaintiff that the company, in the operation of its train, killed the son of the plaintiff, without fault of the deceased, is not applicable to the servant who is charged with the acts causing the homicide, in a suit against the latter and the railroad company. Under Civil Code 1895, § 2321, upon the trial of such a case, upon proof that, without fault of the deceased, he was killed by the running of the train of the company, the presumption that the company was negligent, as alleged in the declaration of plaintiff, arises. Such proof alone would raise no presumption of negligence against the engineer, the other defendant, or that he did the acts of which complaint is made. Southern R. Co. v. Cash, 131 Ga. 537, 62 S. E. 823. If, upon the trial, the plaintiff proved the homicide, and that it occurred without fault of the deceased, and no other evidence was introduced by plaintiff, or by either of the defendants, the evidence introduced would authorize a recovery against the railroad company, but there would be no evidence before the jury authorizing a recovery against the engineer. If, after plaintiff introduced such evidence, making the proof of the facts above stated, other evidence was introduced by plaintiff and defendants, and this other evidence was equally balanced in its effect upon the mind of the jury upon the question as to whether or not the engineer was guilty of the acts complained of, it would be the duty of the jury to render a verdict against the railroad company because it had not rebutted the presumption of negligence against it, and to render a verdict in favor of the engineer, because the plaintiff had not shown by a preponderance of the testimony that the engineer was guilty of such acts. The law gave the plaintiff the right to sue the defendants jointly; and it is not proper to set aside the verdict of the jury because it was rendered in accordance with, and in the observance of, the rules of evidence prescribed by the law, to be applied by the jury in trying the case and rendering a verdict.

30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

IDAHO SUPREME COURT.

ELISHA STRONG et al., Appts.,

v.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY, Respt.

(18 Idaho, 389, 109 Pac. 910.)

Telegraph rules — limitation of liability — validity.

1. A telegraph company is chartered for public purposes, has the power of eminent domain, is a public agent, and exercises quasi public employment, and is required to perform the duties it was chartered to perform with the same care, skill, and diligence that a prudent man would, under like circumstances, exercise in his own affairs; and it is contrary to public policy to permit it, by rules and regulations, to restrict its liability for damages resulting from its own negligence or carelessness.

Same — reasonableness — determination.

2. The reasonableness or unreasonableness of rules and regulations made by a telegraph company must be determined with reference to public policy, precisely as in the case of common carriers, and a stip-

Headnotes by SULLIVAN, Ch. J.

Note. — Validity of limitation of liability of telegraph company for unrepeatd messages.

This note is supplementary to the note in 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 560, where the general question of the validity of a stipulation limiting the liability of a telegraph company for unrepeatd messages is discussed, and also supplementary to the note to Box v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 566, discussing the application of such stipulation to failure or delay in transmission or delivery.

It will be observed from the earlier notes that there is considerable conflict of opinion as to the validity of a stipulation relieving a telegraph company from liability for mistake or delay in transmission, or delay or failure in delivery, of an unrepeatd message. It will also be noted that the courts in New York and Massachusetts, as well as the earlier decisions of other states, were uniform in holding that such a stipulation is valid, at least in the absence of gross negligence or wilful misconduct.

This was also recognized in Halsted v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 193 N. Y. 293, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1021, 127 Am. St. Rep. 952, 85 N. E. 1078, affirming 120 App. Div. 433, 104 N. Y. Supp. 1016, where the mere change of the word "eighty" to "eighth" in the transmission of a telegram was held not to show gross negligence on the part of the telegraph company. In this case it was contended that the printed blank was insufficient to limit the telegraph company's liability for negligence. The court, however, said: "It was not necessary that the word 'negligence' should be used in the stipulation which exempts such company from damages for its own negligence is void.

Same — negligence in transmission — appeal — reversal — amendment.

3. Held that the evidence in this case shows negligence on the part of the telegraph company, and that the sufficiency of the complaint not having been challenged by demurrer or upon the introduction of evidence, but being first challenged by a motion for a nonsuit, which is not a ground for a nonsuit, that upon a reversal of this case, the plaintiff should be allowed to amend his complaint so as to allege negligence in the transmission of said telegram.

Negligence — gross — ordinary.

4. The term "gross negligence" is used to denote a degree of carelessness greater than the degree implied by "ordinary negligence," and is sometimes used to denote wilful negligence or fraud.

Telegram — incorrect transmission — negligence.

5. Where a telegraph company fails to transmit a message correctly, the proof of that fact is prima facie evidence of the company's negligence.

Same — burden of proof.

6. If the failure to correctly transmit a telegram was not the result of the negligence of the company, the means of show-ulations of the contract. It was a sufficient protection to the defendant that the contract required a repetition of the message, or an insurance, in order to make the defendant liable for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, beyond the amount received for sending the same. Such mistakes or delays, whether caused by the negligence of the defendant's servants, if not gross, as by wilful misconduct, or by causes beyond its control, were covered sufficiently by the clause of the contract."

So, in Wheelock v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 197 Mass. 119, 83 N. E. 313, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 188, where a message addressed to Australia was never delivered, the stipulation as to unrepeatd messages was held reasonable and binding, in the absence of wilful misconduct or gross negligence on the part of the telegraph company.

In accord with the above cases, but contrary to the weight of authority, and the modern trend of opinion, is the recent case of M. M. Stone & Co. v. Postal Teleg. Co. (R. I.) 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 795, 76 Atl. 762, where the court, after setting out in full the usual stipulation found on the backs of telegraph blanks in regard to unrepeatd messages, the insurance of repeated messages, and messages sent over other lines, said: "We are of the opinion that the regulation set out in this question is a reasonable one. The provision seems primarily intended to limit the liability of the company for mistakes in transmission rather than for delay, though the rule includes a limitation of the company's liability for delay in transmission. The liability of the company under this agreement is graded 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) ing that fact is within the possession of the company, and it may show it as a defense.

Same — negligent transmission — evidence — sufficiency.

7. Held that the evidence shows that said telegram was delivered to the agent of the company for transmission, and was accepted by it, that the company made a mistake in its transmission; and that showing made a prima facie case in favor of the plaintiff, and the court erred in granting a nonsuit and entering a judgment of dismissal.

Agent — contract with — modification by principal — effect.

8. Held that the contract for the sale of the cattle was made with the commission company.

On rehearing.

Telegram — company as agent of sender.

9. A sender of a telegraphic message does not constitute the telegraph company his agent, and is not bound to the receiver of the message by the terms of the message as negligently changed or altered by the company.

Same — independent principal — liability.

10. A "telegraph company" is a public service corporation engaged in a public utility, and in receiving, transmitting, and in accordance with the compensation received for transmitting the message. Correctness in transmission, which, from a consideration of the whole rule, appears to include promptness in delivery, may be insured by a contract and the payment of an additional fee. All these provisions in the contract of sending appear to be reasonable, and within the right of the company to impose. As is urged in the argument of the defendant's counsel, the sender is fully aware how important the prompt delivery of his message is; the message as delivered to the company ordinarily gives no indication of its importance. If the sender desires to have special care expended upon it, it is not unreasonable to ask him to pay for such particular attention. Some messages may be of trivial importance, others of great importance. By negligence in the transmission or delivery of one message, the damages incurred may amount to no more than the cost of sending the message. In respect to another message, the damages might amount to a large sum. These facts are unknown to the telegraph company, but they are within the knowledge of the sender. In these circumstances, therefore, it is fair to allow the telegraph company to enter into some agreement with the sender for liquidating or ascertaining the damages which it may be called upon to pay, and grading its charges for the service in accordance therewith. If the company is to be held to a very small liability, as for the bare amount of the tolls, it can afford to transmit the message for a very small sum; but if it may be held liable for large damages, it must, for its own protection, charge more delivering messages should be treated as an independent principal or contracting party, and be held liable both in contract and tort, the same as other principals.

Same—mistake—measure of damages.

11. Where S. & S. sent a telegram to C. L. S. & C. Co., inquiring if the company would honor draft in payment for eighty-four head of steers at $3.95 per hundred, and the telegraph company negligently changed or altered the message so that, when received at its destination and delivered to the sendee, it read $3.25 instead of $3.95, and the stock was shipped and C. L. S. & C. Co. paid therefor, at the rate of $3.25, if S. & S. acted prudently and with due diligence after discovering the mistake, so as to minimize the damage and loss, the measure of damage which they will be entitled to recover from the telegraph company for its tort will be the difference between the market value of the stock the day the message was sent, and the price actually paid by C. L. S. & C. Co.

(January 15, 1910.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the District Court for Bear Lake County dismissing an action brought to recover damages for alleged negligent failure for the service." It will be noted that the language of the court is directly opposed to that of the court in STRONG v. WESTERN U. TELEG. CO.

Following the rule laid down in the earlier Texas cases, it was held in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Robertson (Tex. Civ. App.) 126 S. W. 629, that, while a telegraph company may limit its liability for an unrepeatable message, the limitation cannot be extended so as to relieve it from the consequences of its negligence; and therefore in this case, where it appeared that, through the negligence of the company, a message stating the price of land to be one twenty-five per acre was changed to read seventy-five per acre, the company, through its stipulations as to unrepeatable messages, could not defeat recovery of the consequent damages.

This would seem also to have been recognized in Joshua L. Bailey & Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 227 Pa. 522, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 76 Atl. 736, where a cipher message was slightly changed in transmission, and the court said: "In this and many other jurisdictions, a telegraph company may make reasonable rules affecting its responsibility, but it cannot stipulate for exemption from liability caused by its own negligence."

That the stipulation as to unrepeatable messages is void as against public policy is also recognized in Williamson v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 151 N. C. 223, 65 S. E. 974. The real question in issue in this case, however, was whether the court would recognize the rule laid down in New York, merely because the contract was there entered into. (For notes on the law governing liability correctly to transmit and deliver a telegram. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Thomas L. Glenn, for appellants:

The stipulations on the back of the message providing that the sender must, to hold the company liable, order the message to be repeated, and pay a fee therefor, are void as against public policy.

Joyce, Electric Law, §§ 681, 683-685; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510, 18 Am. St. Rep. 148, 7 So. 419; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542, 4 So. 844; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Short, 53 Ark. 434, 9 L.R.A. 744, 14 S. W. 649; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Cobbs, 47 Ark. 344, 58 Am. Rep. 756, 1 S. W. 558; Hart v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 66 Cal. 579, 56 Am. Rep. 119, 6 Pac. 637; Redington v. Pacific Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 107 Cal. 317, 48 Am. St. Rep. 132, 40 Pac. 432; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 299, 45 Am. Rep. 480; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Shotter, 71 Ga. 760; Adams v. Bunker Hill & S. Min. Co. 12 Idaho, 637, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 844, 89 Pac. 624; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Tyler, 74 Ill. 168, 24 Am. Rep. 279; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Jones, 95 Ind. 228, 48

bility of telegraph companies, see notes in 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 751; 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 648; 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 490; and 63 L.R.A. 532.)

In Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Smith (Tex. Civ. App.) 130 S. W. 622, it was held that the stipulation in regard to unrepeatable messages would not protect a company from liability when, through its negligence, the name of the addressee, "Tom Smith," was changed to "M. Smith," in consequence of which the message was delayed several days in delivery.

In Lothian v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (S. D.) 126 N. W. 621, where a message was delayed in delivery at least five days, the court after saying that according to a statute a carrier of messages by telegraph was a common carrier, and required to use the "utmost diligence," held that, even assuming its obligation as a common carrier might be limited by a special contract, its stipulation in regard to unrepeatable messages could not exonerate it from the gross negligence, fraud, or wilful wrong of itself or its servant.

As above pointed out, in New York the stipulation is held valid in the absence of gross negligence or wilful misconduct on the part of the telegraph company or its employees, and therefore, where such gross negligence or wilful misconduct is present, the stipulation will not protect the company. A case of this nature is Weld v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 199 N. Y. 88, 92 N. E. 415, which distinctly recognizes the above doctrine. In this case, besides several minor and immaterial mistakes, a material mistake was made in a price at which an agent was directed to sell cotton.

G. V.

Am. Rep. 713; Sweatland v. Illinois & M. Tele. Co. 27 Iowa, 433, 1 Am. Rep. 285; Russell v. Western U. Tele. Co. 57 Kan. 230, 45 Pac. 598; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Eubanks, 100 Ky. 591, 36 L.R.A. 711, 66 Am. St. Rep. 361, 38 S. W. 1068; Ayer v. Western U. Tele. Co. 79 Me. 493, 1 Am. St. Rep. 353, 10 Atl. 495; United States Tele. Co. v. Gildersleve, 29 Md. 232, 96 Am. Dec. 519; Shaw v. Postal Tele. & Cable Co. 79 Miss. 670, 56 L.R.A. 486, 89 Am. St. Rep. 666, 31 So. 222; Reed v. Western U. Tele. Co. 135 Mo. 661, 34 L.R.A. 492, 58 Am. St. Rep. 609, 37 S. W. 904; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Kemp, 44 Neb. 194, 48 Am. St. Rep. 723, 62 N. W. 451; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Longwill, 5 N. M. 308, 21 Pac. 339; Schwartz v. Atlantic & P. Tele. Co. 18 Hun, 157; Brown v. Postal Tele. Co. 111 N. C. 187, 17 L.R.A. 648, 32 Am. St. Rep. 793, 16 S. E. 179; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Griswold, 37 Ohio St. 301, 41 Am. Rep. 500; New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. ed. 627; Southern Exp. Co. v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. 267, 22 L. ed. 558; Passmore v. Western U. Tele. Co. 78 Pa. 242; Walker v. Western U. Tele. Co. 75 S. C. 512, 56 S. E. 38; Kirby v. Western U. Tele. Co. 7 S. D. 623, 30 L.R.A. 621, 65 N. W. 37; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Mellon, 100 Tenn. 429, 45 S. W. 443; Pepper v. Western U. Tele. Co. 87 Tenn. 554, 4 L.R.A. 600, 10 Am. St. Rep. 699, 11 S. W. 783; Marr v. Western U. Tele. Co. 85 Tenn. 544, 3 S. W. 496; Wertz v. Western U. Tele. Co. 8 Utah, 499, 33 Pac. 136; Gillis v. Western U. Tele. Co. 61 Vt. 461, 4 L.R.A. 611, 15 Am. St. Rep. 917, 17 Atl. 736; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Reynolds Bros. 77 Va. 173, 46 Am. Rep. 715; Berry v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. 44 W. Va. 538, 67 Am. St. Rep. 781, 30 S. E. 143; Beatty Lumber Co. v. Western U. Tele. Co. 52 W. Va. 410, 44 S. E. 309; Thompson v. Western U. Tele. Co. 64 Wis. 531, 54 Am. Rep. 644, 25 N. W. 789; White v. Western U. Tele. Co. 5 McCrary, 103, 14 Fed. 710; Abraham v. Western U. Tele. Co. 11 Sawy. 28, 23 Fed. 315; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Cook, 9 C. C. A. 680, 15 U. S. App. 445, 61 Fed. 624; Great Northwestern Tele. Co. v. Laurance, Rap. Jud. Quebec 1 B. R. 1.

Messrs. Clark & Budge, for respondent:

The stipulation limiting liability is valid.

Primrose v. Western U. Tele. Co. 154 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 883, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1098; Camp v. Western U. Tele. Co. 1 Met. (Ky.) 164, 71 Am. Dec. 461; Hart v. Western U. Tele. Co. 66 Cal. 579, 56 Am. Rep. 119, 6 Pac. 637; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Carew, 15 Mich. 525; Coit v. Western U. Tele. Co. 130 Cal. 657, 53 L.R.A. 678, 80 Am. St. Rep. 153, 63 Pac. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

83; Kiley v. Western U. Tele. Co. 109 N. Y. 231, 16 N. E. 75; Grinnell v. Western U. Tele. Co. 113 Mass. 299, 18 Am. Rep. 485; Birney v. New York & W. Printing Tele. Co. 18 Md. 341, 81 A Dec. 607; United States Tele. Co. v. Gildersleve, 29 Md. 232, 96 Am. Dec. 519; Ellis v. American Tele. Co. 13 Allen, 226; Redpath v. Western U. Tele. Co. 112 Mass. 71, 17 Am. Rep. 69; Clement v. Western U. Tele. Co. 137 Mass. 463; Wann v. Western U. Tele. Co. 37 Mo. 472, 90 Am. Dec. 395; Becker v. Western U. Tele. Co. 11 Neb. 87, 38 Am. Rep. 356, 7 N. W. 868; Breese v. United States Tele. Co. 48 N. Y. 132, 8 Am. Rep. 526; Pegram v. Western U. Tele. Co. 97 N. C. 57, 2 S. E. 256; Lassiter v. Western U. Tele. Co. 89 N. C. 335; Harris v. Western U. Tele. Co. 9 Phila. 88; Passmore v. Western U. Tele. Co. 78 Pa. 238; Aiken v. Western U. Tele. Co. 5 S. C. 358; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Neill, 57 Tex. 283, 44 Am. Rep. 589; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Catchpole, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (White & W.) 108; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Smith, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 86; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Hearne, 77 Tex. 83, 13 S. W. 970; Womack v. Western U. Tele. Co. 58 Tex. 176, 44 Am. Rep. 614; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Coggin, 15 C. C. A. 231, 32 U. S. App. 245, 68 Fed. 137; Birkett v. Western U. Tele. Co. 103 Mich. 361, 33 L.R.A. 404, 50 Am. St. Rep. 374, 61 N. W. 645; Jacob v. Western U. Tele. Co. 135 Mich. 600, 98 N. W. 402; Riley v. Western U. Tele. Co. 8 Misc. 217, 28 N. Y. Supp. 581; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Elliott, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 482, 27 S. W. 219; Wheelock v. Postal Tele. Cable Co. 197 Mass. 119, 83 N. E. 313, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 188; Halsted v. Postal Tele. Cable Co. 193 N. Y. 293, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1021, 127 Am. St. Rep. 952, 85 N. E. 1078; Monsees v. Western U. Tele. Co. 127 App. Div. 289, 111 N. Y. Supp. 53.

Proof of an error is not sufficient proof of negligence.

White v. Western U. Tele. Co. 5 McCrary, 103, 14 Fed. 710; Becker v. Western U. Tele. Co., Western U. Tele. Co. v. Neill; and Western U. Tele. Co. v. Hearne.—supra: Sweatland v. Illinois & M. Tele. Co. 27 Iowa, 433, 1 Am. Rep. 285; Thompson v. Western U. Tele. Co. 64 Wis. 531, 54 Am. Rep. 644, 25 N. W. 789; Halsted v. Postal Tele. Cable Co.; Womack v. Western U. Tele. Co.; Breese v. United States Tele. Co., and Aiken v. Western U. Tele. Co.,—supra.

Sullivan, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by the appellants, as plaintiffs, to recover damages in the sum of $581.17, alleged to have been sustained by reason of an error in the transmission of a telegraphic message delivered by appellants to respondent, at the town of Soda Springs, Idaho, on or about March 6, 1907, to be transmitted to parties in Denver, Colorado. The principal issue made by the pleadings was whether the defendant was liable because of a mistake made in the transmission of said telegram. The action was tried by the court and a jury, and at the close of plaintiffs' evidence, counsel for the defendant moved for a nonsuit, which motion was granted by the court, and judgment of dismissal was entered. The appeal is from said order and the judgment.

The following facts, among others, appear from the record: The telegraphic message was written upon one of the respondent company's telegraph blanks, with all the printed provisions upon said blanks. Said telegraph blank contained the following matter, to wit: "Western Union Telegraph Company, Incorporated. . . . Send the following message subject to the terms on back hereof, which are hereby agreed to." The following is the telegram written thereon:

Soda Springs, Idaho, March 6, 1907.
To Colorado Live Stock & Commission Company,

Denver Stock Yards, Denver, Colorado.

Will you honor draft of W. L. White on you in payment of eighty-four head of steers, at three ninety-five per hundred, 2 per cent shrink, weighed here?

Strong & Stark.

On the face of said telegram the following printed matter occurred: "Read the notice and agreement on the back," and on the back of the said telegraph blank appears the following:

All messages taken by this company are subject to the following terms: To guard against mistakes or delays, the sender of a message should order it repeated; that is, telegraphed back to the originating office for comparison. For this, one-half the regular rate is charged in addition. It is agreed between the sender of the following message and this company, that said company shall not be liable for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for nondelivery, of any unrepeated message, beyond the amount received for sending the same; nor for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for nondelivery, of any repeated message, beyond fifty times the sum received for sending the same, unless especially insured; nor in any case for delays arising from unavoidable interruption in the working of its lines, or for errors in cipher or obscure messages. And this company is hereby made the agent of the sender, without liability, to forward any message over the lines of any other company when necessary to reach its destination. Correctness in the transmission of a message to any point on the lines of this company can be insured by contract in writing, stating agreed amount of risk, and payment of premium thereon, at the following rates, in addition to the usual charge for repeated messages, viz., 1 per cent for any distance not exceeding 1,000 miles, and 2 per cent for any greater distance. No employee of the company is authorized to vary the foregoing. No responsibility regarding messages attaches to this company until the same are presented and accepted at one of its transmitting offices; and if a message is sent to such office by one of the company's messengers, he acts for that purpose as the agent of the sender. Messages will be delivered free within the established free delivery limits of the terminal office. For delivery at a greater distance, a special charge will be made to cover the cost of such delivery. The company will not be liable for damages or statutory penalties in any case where the claim is not presented in writing within sixty days after the message is filed with the company for transmission.

Robert C. Clowry,
President and General Manager.

Said telegram was introduced in evidence on the trial, and one of the plaintiffs testified as follows: "No, sir; at the time I delivered the telegram to the defendant, I did not ask that it be repeated; I have reference to plaintiffs' Exhibit A; I did not request that it be telegraphed back for comparison. No, I did not offer the telegraph company any additional compensation for such purpose. . . . We were negotiating the sale with one W. L. White, who was agent for the Colorado Live Stock & Commission Company; he was acting as their agent; we agreed to sell the company quite a number of cattle, beef steers. I do not remember the weight of the steers. I have got it down; there were eighty-four head of steers, they weighed something near 1,000 pounds; we at this time agreed with this agent as to the price per hundred weight, that is to say, $3.95 per cwt.; this was net with 2 per cent shrink; I agreed with the agent on the price for the cattle, and then went and sent a message to the company to find out whether the agent was responsible or not." In response to said telegram, the following reply was received:

Denver, Colorado, 3, 6, 1907.
To Strong & Stark,
Soda Springs, Idaho.

Will honor draft as per telegram if cattle are billed to us.

Colorado Live Stock & Commission Company.

It further appears from the testimony that the telegram, when delivered to the commission company, read $3.25 per hundredweight, making a difference of 70 cents per hundredweight between the offer and the acceptance, and that was caused by the mistake made by the respondent in transmitting the telegram from Soda Springs to Denver; and that the steers referred to were delivered to the said W. L. White, and shipped by him to the Colorado Live Stock & Commission Company, at Denver; and that said commission company paid for them at the rate of $3.25 per hundredweight, and refused to pay $3.95 per hundred, as stated in the telegram as delivered to the telegraph company for transmission. Upon that state of facts, the question is presented whether the telegraph company is liable for the difference of 70 cents per hundredweight.

The respondent does not deny that a mistake was made, but contends that it is not liable for the reason that the telegraph blank contained a certain, printed stipulation, to the effect that the telegraph company should not be liable for a mistake or delay in the transmission or delivery of the message, unless the sender ordered it repeated, and paid one half of the regular charge in addition to the regular charge for sending such message, and it is admitted by the appellants that they did not request the respondent to repeat said message.

There appears to be considerable conflict in the various decisions upon the question of the validity of the printed stipulation upon a telegraph blank, limiting the liability of the company for mistakes and delays in transmission of messages. In some of the decisions it is held that such stipulations are valid, and in others, that they are not valid, and are contrary to public policy. Kemp v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 28 Neb. 661, 26 Am. St. Rep. 363, 44 N. W. 1064, held that such stipulations are invalid under a statute which expressly declares that they shall not be binding. In that case there was a mistake made in transmitting the telegram. "8 o'clock" was written in the telegram delivered for transmission, and when delivered it read "10 o'clock." The court held, under § 12 of an act relating to telegraph companies, that said company was "liable for the nondelivery of despatches intrusted to its care, and for all mistakes in transmitting messages made by any person in its employ."

In Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Lowrey, 32 Neb. 732, 49 N. W. 707, the court held, under the provisions of said § 12, supra, that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for delay in delivering an unrepeatable message. It thus appears that the legislature of the state of Nebraska has considered that such stipulations printed on a telegraph message, relieving the company of liability for mistakes in transmitting or delay in delivering messages, were contrary to public policy, and settled the matter by enacting a law to that effect.

In Mississippi, Kentucky, and Oklahoma, telegraph companies are by law declared to be common carriers, and the supreme courts of those states held that said stipulation above quoted is invalid, and unavailing as a defense, under the Constitution and statute which declared telegraph companies to be common carriers in their line of business, and subject to liability as such. Postal Teleg. & Cable Co. v. Wells, 82 Miss. 733, 35 So. 190; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Eubanks, 100 Ky. 591, 36 L.R.A. 711, 66 Am. St. Rep. 361, 38 S. W. 1068; Blackwell Mill. & Elevator Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 17 Okla. 376, 89 Pac. 235, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 855.

It was held in the Oklahoma case that telegraph companies were liable for the full amount of the loss sustained by reason of their failure properly to deliver messages within a reasonable time, notwithstanding an express stipulation in the contract of carriage that such company shall not be liable for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for nondelivery, of unrepeatable messages, beyond the amount received for sending the same, and that, construed in the light of the statutes of Oklahoma, such stipulation is unreasonable and contrary to public policy, and therefore void. In that case the negligence consisted in the unreasonable delay in the delivery of a message.

These decisions proceed upon the theory that telegraph companies are common carriers, made so by the provisions of the Constitutions or the statutes in those states. We have no constitutional or statutory provision in this state that such stipulation is void, or that telegraph companies are common carriers. Then the question is presented: What should be the rule in this state as to such rules and regulations, in the absence of any constitutional or statutory provisions?

It is contended by counsel for respondent that the great weight of authority upholds the right of the telegraph company to adopt reasonable rules and regulations to govern the sending of messages, and to adopt rules and regulations such as the stipulation under consideration, fixing the liability of the company for delay or mistakes in the transmission or delivery of messages to the sum paid for sending the message, and that said stipulation is a reasonable one. In support of this contention, they cite, with other decisions, Primrose v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 154 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 883; 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1098. In that opinion the court declares that telegraph companies are not common carriers, except in so far as they are obliged to serve all alike, and that they may protect themselves by stipulations similar to those under consideration in this case. The court said: "By the regulation now in question, the telegraph company has not undertaken to wholly exempt itself from liability for negligence; but only to require the sender of the message to have it repeated, and to pay half as much again as the usual price, in order to hold the company liable for mistakes or delays in transmitting or delivering, or for not delivering, a message, whetler happening by negligence of its servants or otherwise."

That case involved the sending of a message which was in cipher and intelligible only to the sender and his agent to whom it was addressed. The court there holds that telegraph companies resemble railroad companies and other common carriers in that they are instruments of commerce, and in that they exercise a public employment, and are therefore bound to serve all customers alike, without discrimination; that they have a duty to the public, but that they are not common carriers; and that their duties are different and are performed in different ways; and that they are not subject to the same liabilities; and that, like common carriers, they cannot contract with their employers for exemption for liabilities occasioned by their own negligence, but that they may by such contracts, or by their rules and regulations brought to the knowledge of their employers, limit the measure of their responsibility to a reasonable extent; and whether their rules are reasonable or unreasonable must be determined with reference to public policy, precisely as in the case of a carrier,—citing Southern Exp. Co. v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. 264, 22 L. ed. 556.

In the Primrose Case, the court referred to the fact that the telegram did not impart to the telegraph company an important business transaction, and did not indicate that if it were not transmitted correctly, pecuniary loss might be incurred. In the case at bar, where it appears that the telegram was legibly written and delivered to the operator, it did impart to the telegraph company that it concerned an important business transaction, and imparted notice to the company to the effect that pecuniary loss might result in case a mistake was made in correctly stating the price per hundred-weight of the cattle referred to. It was not like a cipher telegram, that was "nonsense" to the operator. In the Primrose Case stress is laid upon the fact that the telegram there involved was in cipher and unintelligible. The only mistake made in that telegram was the change of an "a" to a "u," the telegraphic character for an "a" being a dot and a dash, and for "u," two dots and a dash. In the telegram involved in the case at bar, the word "ninety" was changed to "twenty." The telegraphic characters for the word "ninety" are as follows: "- . . - . . - . . ."—and the word for "twenty" as follows: "- . - . - . - . . ." It will be observed from the foregoing that those words when written out in telegraphic characters are very different; and if the figures were used in sending said telegram, the characters for the figure "9" are "- . . -" and for the figure "2" "- . . . ;" and it was carelessness and negligence for an operator to either send or receive the word "twenty" for the word "ninety" in either figures or words.

Counsel also cites Camp v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 1 Met. (Ky.) 164, 71 Am. Dec. 461, where it was held that a person desiring to send a message is admonished by the notice printed across said message that, to guard against a mistake in transmission, it should be repeated. The court said: "He is also notified that if a mistake occur, the company will not be responsible for it unless the message be repeated. There is nothing unreasonable in this condition."

Counsel also cites Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Carew, 15 Mich. 525. The court there holds that it would be extremely unjust, considering the small amount of compensation for sending a message, and would effectually put an end to this method of correspondence, to hold them liable for the entire correctness of all messages transmitted; or to hold them responsible for all damages which may accrue from an error, especially when only a single transmission, without repeating, is relied upon or paid for; or to deny them all power to make rules and regulations to limit their liability even in the case of repeated messages; and the court says it would be equally unreasonable to require them to repeat a message when they are paid only for a single transmission. Some of the courts have based their decisions on the rule laid down in those cases.

The last two decisions were rendered, one in 1858 and the other in 1867, when telegraph

raphy was in its infancy, and in a very imperfect, uncertain condition, and messages could not be sent or received with the correctness and accuracy with which they are sent in the present day with the improved telegraphic machinery and appliances, and greater expertness of operators. The court in the latter case refers to the small amount paid for the transmission of a message, and it was evidently in the mind of the court that telegraph companies were poor, struggling corporations; but experience and history now bears out the statement that telegraph companies have become immensely rich on the "small stipend" charged for sending messages, which would indicate that they are charging a great deal more than it actually costs to transmit such messages, and to give them a fair return upon the capital invested in the business. The Michigan court, it seems, was mistaken when it suggested that to hold them liable "would effectually put an end to this method of correspondence," as it is shown that a number of the states have held telegraph companies liable, and it has not "effectually put an end to this method of correspondence," as it is used a great deal more at the present time than it ever was before, regardless of the courts holding it liable for damages arising because of its negligence. Telegraphy has been so perfected with its improved machinery, instruments, equipment, and appliances that, with competent and careful operators, telegrams may be sent with accuracy. That being true, telegraph companies should be held to a higher degree of care, fidelity, and diligence than could reasonably have been required of them at the dates when the last above-cited opinions were rendered, and they should be held to a higher degree of care in sending and delivering telegrams that involve the property rights of either the sender or receiver than perhaps they would be in social telegrams, or telegrams that do not involve property rights, and others of particular interest to the sender or receiver. While, under the decision of the United States Supreme Court above cited, a telegraph company is held not to be a common carrier, it is, however, a corporation doing business for the public, and must be held liable for damages arising from its own carelessness and negligence or the carelessness and negligence of its agents. While it may make rules and regulations in regard to the conduct of its business, the reasonableness or unreasonableness of such rules must be determined with reference to public policy, precisely as in the case of common carriers. Public policy is that principle of law under which freedom of contract or private dealing is restricted by law for the good of the community,— the public good. 32 Cyc. Law. & Proc. p. 1251. A stipulation in a contract which exempts the corporation from damages for its own negligence is void, when applied to a telegraph company, as well as when applied to a common carrier.

In Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Eubanks, 100 Ky. 591, 36 L.R.A. 711, 66 Am. St. Rep. 361, 38 S. W. 1068, the supreme court of that state has clearly distinguished, if not reversed, the doctrine laid down in Camp v. Western U. Teleg. Co. supra, and there holds that a stipulation such as the one under consideration in this case, providing that unless the message is repeated, the company is not liable, is invalid, and says: "It is true that in Camp v. Western U. Teleg. Co. supra, the same or a similar stipulation as the one in question, as to the repetition of messages, was held to be valid, but that case was decided in 1858, and before the adoption of the present Constitution."

In the Eubanks Case the decision of the Supreme Court in Primrose v. Western U. Teleg. Co. supra, is referred to in the following manner by the court: "It is true that that decision upheld the stipulation in question as well as the stipulation in regard to cipher messages and obscure messages, but it is also true that Chief Justice Fuller and Mr. Justice Harlan dissented, and Mr. Justice White took no part in the decision. It will also be seen from the opinion that many courts of last resort had decided otherwise as to such stipulations,"—and then cites many other authorities holding that such stipulations are invalid.

In Smith v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 83 Ky. 112, 4 Am. St. Rep. 126, the court, in discussing the obligation of telegraph companies, said: "It is, however, a public agent; it exercises a quasi public employment; carefulness and fidelity are essentials to its character as a public servant, and public policy forbids that it should abdicate as to the public by a contract with the individual. He is but one of millions; his business will perhaps not admit of delay or contest in the courts, and he is ex necessitate compelled to submit to any terms which the company might see fit to impose; but the law should not uphold a contract under which a public agent seeks to shelter itself from the consequences of its own wrong and neglect. Its liability for neglect is not founded purely upon contract. It is chartered for public purposes; extraordinary powers are therefore conferred upon it; it has the power of eminent domain; if it did not serve the public, it could not constitutionally lay a wire over a man's land without his consent; and by reason of the gift of these privileges, it is required to receive and transmit messages, and is liable for neglect, independent of any express contract. The public are compelled to rely absolutely upon the care and diligence of the company in the transaction of this business, so wonderful in its growth, so necessary to the life of commerce, and useful beyond estimate; and if it relies upon a notice or contract to restrict its liability, it must be one not in violation of public policy; and in view of the vast interests committed to a telegraph company, the extraordinary powers given it, and the virtual monopoly it almost necessarily enjoys, the court should compel it nolens volens to perform the corresponding duties of diligence and good faith to the public thereby created. Any other rule would defeat the very purposes for which these companies are chartered, to wit, the safe and speedy transmission of messages for the public; and while they may reasonably restrict their liability, yet they cannot do so as against their own negligence. They undertake to exercise a public employment which in many respects is analogous to that of a common carrier, and they must therefore bring to it that degree of skill and care which a prudent man would under the circumstances exercise in his own affairs; and any stipulation by which they undertake to relieve themselves from this duty, or to restrict their liability for its nonuse, is forbidden by the demands of a sound public policy. To hold otherwise would arm them with a very dangerous power, and leave the public comparatively remediless."

As holding or tending to hold that a telegraph company is liable for misconduct or negligence, regardless of said stipulation, see Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510, 18 Am. St. Rep. 148, 7 So. 419; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Short, 53 Ark. 434, 9 L.R.A. 744, 14 S. W. 649; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 299, 45 Am. Rep. 480; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Tyler, 74 Ill. 168, 24 Am. Rep. 279; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Jones, 95 Ind. 228, 48 Am. Rep. 713; Sweatland v. Illinois & M. Teleg. Co. 27 Iowa, 433, 1 Am. Rep. 285; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Eubanks, supra; Ayer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 79 Me. 493, 1 Am. St. Rep. 353, 10 Atl. 495; United States Teleg. Co. v. Gildersleve, 29 Md. 232, 96 Am. Dec. 519; Shaw v. Postal Teleg. & Cable Co. 79 Miss. 670, 56 L.R.A. 486, 80 Am. St. Rep. 666, 31 So. 222; Reed v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 135 Mo. 661, 34 L.R.A. 492, 58 Am. St. Rep. 600, 37 S. W. 904; Kemp v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 28 Neb. 661, 26 Am. St. Rep. 363, 44 N. W. 1064; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Longwill, 5 N. M. 308, 21 Pac. 339; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Robertson, 36 Misc. 785, 74 N. Y. Supp. 876; Brown v. Postal Teleg. Co. 111 N. C. 187, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

17 L.R.A. 648, 32 Am. St. Rep. 793, 16 S. E. 179; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Griswold, 37 Ohio St. 301, 41 Am. Rep. 500; Aiken v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 5 S. C. 358; Kirby v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 7 S. D. 623, 30 L.R.A. 621, 624, 65 N. W. 37; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Mellon, 100 Tenn. 429, 45 S. W. 443; Wertz v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 8 Utah, 499, 33 Pac. 136; Gillis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 61 Vt. 461, 4 L.R.A. 611, 15 Am. St. Rep. 917, 17 Atl. 736; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Reynolds Bros. 77 Va. 173, 46 Am. Rep. 715; Beatty Lumber Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 52 W. Va. 410, 44 S. E. 309; Thompson v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 64 Wis. 531, 54 Am. Rep. 614, 25 N. W. 789; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Cook (C. C. A., Cal.) 9 C. C. A. 680, 15 U. S. App. 445, 61 Fed. 624; Great Northwestern Teleg. Co. v. Laurance, Rap. Jud. Quebec, 1 B. R. 1; also Joyce, Electric Law, 2d ed. §§ 681, 683-685, 689, 692, 701, 702, 707, 712.

In summarizing the diversity of decisions as to such stipulations by telegraph companies, that text writer (Joyce), in § 716, says: "It is evident from the preceding decisions that it is impossible to formulate any other than what might well be called a composite rule, and inasmuch as the state courts are showing a more decided inclination to adhere to their own precedents, it is doubtful whether, as against such precedents, a court would follow decisions of other state courts, even though they might be deemed to constitute what has been called the weight of authority."

Owing to the fact that many of the decisions which hold that the stipulation under consideration is valid and binding are based upon the decisions of Camp v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 1 Met. (Ky.) 164, 71 Am. Dec. 461, decided in 1858, and Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Carew, 15 Mich. 525, which was decided in 1867, and long before telegraphy had reached its present state of efficiency and accuracy, this court is not inclined to follow that line of decisions. Since a telegraph company is a public agent, exercising a quasi public employment, carefulness and fidelity are essentials to its character as a public servant, and public policy forbids that it should be released by its own rules or regulations from damages occasioned by its carelessness and negligence. It is chartered for public purposes; it has the power of eminent domain; the public are compelled to rely absolutely on the care and diligence of the company in the transmission of messages, and by reason of those powers and the relation it sustains to the public, it is obligated to perform the duties it is chartered to perform with the care, skill, and diligence that a prudent man would under like circumstances exercise in his own affairs; and if it fails to do so, it is liable in damages for such failure, and cannot restrict its liability by rule or regulation which attempts to excuse it for its own negligence. It is a public servant and must serve the people impartially, carefully and in good faith. We do not hold that the company is an insurer against mistakes or delays arising from causes beyond its own control, but it is liable for damages arising from the use of defective instruments or want of skill or care on the part of operators. A stipulation exempting it from liability for its own negligence would be contrary to public policy.

Some of the authorities hold that a telegraph company may adopt rules and regulations which legally exempt it from "ordinary negligence," but that they cannot make such rules or regulations that will shield or protect them from damages arising from "gross negligence." They draw a distinction between "ordinary negligence" and "gross negligence." Bouvier, in his Law Dictionary, defines negligence to be "the omission to exercise proper care and caution, guided by those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or the doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do." Mr. English, in his Law Dictionary, defines negligence to be the "omission to exercise proper care and caution; failure to perform a duty or doing it improperly," and the facts in such case must decide the degree of negligence. Thompson, on Electricity, § 186, referring to the different degrees of negligence, says: "Modern Judicial opinion is drifting toward the view that a division of care and correlatively of negligence into degrees is a matter too subtle and refined for the ordinary purposes of justice, and it has been well said that gross negligence is nothing more than negligence with an epithet."

The term "gross negligence" undoubtedly describes colloquially a greater degree of carelessness than the term "ordinary negligence," but the legal significance of the term is difficult to ascertain. In one view, "gross negligence" is deemed equivalent in law to fraud or to intentional wrong; in another, it is deemed exactly synonymous with ordinary negligence; while in a third, it is deemed to be applicable to those degrees of carelessness, whatever they may be, existent between ordinary negligence and wilful negligence or fraud. Gray, Communication by Teleg. § 37. And in § 38, the author says: "The doctrine that in legal contemplation there is no distinction between gross negligence and ordinary negligence has certainly not been adopted uniformly by the courts 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) which have considered negligence on the part of a telegraph company."

In certain cases "gross negligence" is evidently deemed the equivalent in legal contemplation of "ordinary negligence." In many cases, however, "gross negligence" is used to denote a degree of carelessness greater than the degree implied by "ordinary negligence," and one of which the law takes distinct legal cognizance. It is thus used in those cases in which telegraph companies are permitted to limit their liability for losses occurring through their ordinary negligence, but at the same time are not permitted to limit their liability for losses occurring through their gross negligence. Unfortunately, in only one of these cases is an attempt made to define gross negligence, or a test offered to distinguish it from either ordinary negligence or fraud. In the rest of these cases, therefore, it is impossible to determine whether gross negligence is deemed to be synonymous with wilful negligence or fraud, or to be applicable only to those degrees of carelessness, whatever they may be, existent between wilful and ordinary negligence.

In the fourth volume of "Words and Phrases," pp. 3168, 3169, we find the following definitions of "gross negligence," supported by the many authorities cited there: "Gross negligence is the want of even a slight care and diligence." And again: "Gross negligence is the want of that diligence which even careless men are accustomed to exercise." And, "Gross negligence is the want of that care which every man of common sense, however inattentive he may be, takes of his own property," and "is nothing more than negligence with the addition of a vituperative epithet."

We shall not undertake to add anything to the numerous definitions cited of "negligence," and "gross negligence," but do hold that if damages occur by reason of mistakes made because of defective instruments or incompetent operators, or through carelessness or negligence that with ordinary care might have been avoided, the company is liable. And where it appears that the word "ninety" was erroneously transmitted "twenty," the company is liable, unless it can show that the mistake was made under circumstances and conditions over which it had no control. Telegraph companies must therefore be held to a greater degree of care than is included in "wilful negligence" or "fraud."

It is contended by counsel for respondent that the complaint does not allege negligence on the part of the company in making the mistake in sending said telegram, and for that reason does not state a cause of action. The sufficiency of the complaint, however, was not challenged by demurrer or upon the admissibility of evidence, and was only raised upon the motion for a nonsuit. This, however, is not a ground for a nonsuit. Section 4354, Rev. Codes, provides that an action may be dismissed or a judgment of nonsuit entered on five separate grounds. None of the first four mentioned applies to the case at bar, but the fifth is applicable, and provides that the court upon motion may grant a nonsuit, if plaintiff fails to prove a sufficient case for the jury. It was evidently on that ground that the court sustained the motion for a nonsuit, and entered a judgment of dismissal, as it is virtually conceded the court held that said stipulation was valid. This court holds that the evidence introduced on the trial was sufficient to show negligence; in other words, to make a prima facie case, and as the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded, the plaintiffs should be permitted to amend their complaint, if they desire to do so. If application had been made at the close of the trial, to amend the complaint to conform to the proof, the court no doubt would have granted the application, as, under the views expressed in this opinion, the plaintiffs made a prima facie case by the evidence introduced. Where a telegraph company fails to transmit a message correctly, the proof of that fact is prima facie evidence of the company's negligence. So, proof by the plaintiff of the contract, which may be implied by the delivery of the message to be transmitted and its acceptance by the defendant's agent, and of the breach, makes out a prima facie case, and the plaintiff need not go further and show any further negligence or omission of the defendant. Jones, Teleg. & Teleph. Co. § 36. If the failure was not the result of negligence, the means of showing that fact is almost invariably within the exclusive possession of the company, and for the courts to require the sender to prove the negligence, after showing the mistake, would be in many cases to require an impossibility, not infrequently resulting in enabling the company to evade a just liability. Section 36, supra, and authorities there cited.

We conclude that when the sender delivers a message to the agent of a telegraph company for transmission, and it is received by him for transmission, it is clearly implied and understood that the message must be correctly sent, and upon proof that it was not correctly sent, a prima facie case is made. Then if the mistake was not occasioned by incompetent operators or defective instruments, and was occasioned by the elements or some matter or thing over which the company had no control, it devolves upon the company to prove that as a matter of defense. Therefore, when the plaintiff proved that said message was delivered to the agents of the company for transmission, and that they accepted it and made a mistake in its transmission, the plaintiff had made a prima facie case, and the court erred in granting a nonsuit and entering a judgment of dismissal.

It is also contended by counsel for respondent that the agreement for the sale of the cattle was made with the agent of the Colorado Live Stock & Commission Company, and that, by reason of that contract, the steers were shipped to said commission company, and that fact would render said company liable for the balance due on said steers, at the rate of $3.95 per hundred-weight. There is nothing in that contention, for the reason that the appellants did not close the contract for the sale with White, but closed it with the commission company. The negotiation for the sale of the steers was begun with White, but appellants would not sell them until they communicated with the company by telegraph. In the reply telegram, the company stated that they would honor the draft if the cattle were billed to them. The contract was made directly with the commission company, and not with White, and on that state of facts the commission company could not be compelled to pay a greater price than it had agreed to pay as per its reply telegram.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings, in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion. Costs of appeal are awarded to appellant.

Stewart and Ailshie, JJ., concur.

A rehearing having been granted, Ailshie, J., on June 28, 1910, handed down the following additional opinion:

A rehearing was granted in this case on that particular portion of the original opinion of the court, which holds that "the contract was made directly with the commission company, and not with White, and on that state of facts the commission company could not be compelled to pay a greater price than it had agreed to pay as per its reply telegram."

On the reargument of this case on the point submitted, the controversy has revolved about the legal proposition as to whether or not a telegraph company, in receiving and sending a message, acts as the agent of the sender. A determination of this question is necessary to a correct and proper understanding of the principle of law applicable in the determination of the case. We have made a very careful and somewhat extended examination, both of the text writers and the court decisions on this question, and emerge from the investigation fully convinced that the authorities are irreconcilable on the question. This confusion, it seems to us, has arisen out of the endeavor on the part of the courts to determine just what particular settled and established rule of law is applicable, and should be invoked in dealing with an entirely new agency as applied in business and commerce. This is a difficulty which constantly confronts the courts. New inventions are constantly coming into use; new uses, both public and private, are coming into being; new methods and means of transacting and carrying on business are applied; and it is a problem fraught with too many difficulties and embarrassments, as the books will readily disclose, for the courts to apply, in every instance, the correct principle of law, so as to accomplish substantial justice to all concerned, and at the same time promote the public interests involved.

In the early days of communication by telegraph, when cases began to find their way into the English and Scotch courts, it was held by those courts that the law of agency did not apply, and that the company should not be treated as an agent of the sender of a message, but rather as an agency of the government. Henckel v. Pape, 40 L. J. Exch. N. S. 15, L. R. 6 Exch. 7, 23 L. T. N. S. 419, 19 Week. Rep. 106; Allen, Teleg. Cas. 567; Verdin Bros. v. Robertson (1871) 10 Sc. Sess. Cas. 3d series, 107; Allen, Teleg. Cas. 697. To the same effect see Playford v. United Kingdom Electric Teleg. Co. L. R. 4 Q. B. 706; Allen, Teleg. Cas. 437; Dickson v. Reuter's Teleg. Co. L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 62, L. R. 3 C. P. Div. 1, 24 Eng. Rul. Cas. 774. There the telegraph is under the control of the government and is operated in connection with the postoffice department (32 & 33 Vict. chap. 73), and the cases were apparently decided on the theory that the government is not responsible for the negligence, errors, or mistakes of its clerks and servants. In this country there seems to have been more or less diversity of opinion. Some of the cases, and especially the early cases, proceeding upon the implied, if not express, theory that the company is the agent of the sender, and that the law of agency is the rule of law to be applied in such cases.

Mr. Gray, in his work on Communication by Telegraph, written twenty-five years ago, at § 104, says: "While the employer of a telegraph company is responsible upon the words of a message as delivered, where they are the ones that he authorized, is he responsible upon them where, owing to the negligence of the company, they differ materially from the ones that he authorized? 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

This question is answered in the negative in England and in Scotland. In this country, on the other hand, it is answered, as a general rule, in the affirmative. Courts have rarely considered at length the relationship between a telegraph company and its employer. The view that the employer of a telegraph company is responsible upon a negligently altered message has been rested, it seems, upon two different grounds: (1) A telegraph company is the agent of its employer; consequently, it renders the employer responsible upon any message which it delivers. (2) One who employs a telegraph company employs it to do a certain act,—to communicate a certain message; consequently, he is responsible for the torts of the company committed in the performance of that act. These grounds will now be considered separately and in order."

In a note to this section the author cites Durkee v. Vermont C. R. Co. 29 Vt. 127; Saveland v. Green, 40 Wis. 431; and Wilson v. Minneapolis & N. W. R. Co. 31 Minn. 481, 18 N. W. 291, with the following comment on those cases: "These cases overlook, it seems, the fact that a telegraph company, in delivering an altered message, does an act beyond the scope both of the authority which the employer actually delegates to it, and of the authority that he holds it out as possessing."

Subsequent to the issuance of Gray's work and in 1891, Judge Seymour D. Thompson issued his work on the Law of Electricity, and in § 480 says: "In England and Scotland, the idea that the telegraph company is the agent of the sender, to transmit his communication to the addressee, is repudiated." In § 481 he discusses and reviews the decision of the supreme court of Tennessee in Pepper v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 87 Tenn. 554, 4 L.R.A. 660, 10 Am. St. Rep. 699, 11 S. W. 783, and disapproves the holding, which he calls "dictum," in that opinion, and in § 482 the author says: "It is obvious, however, that the foregoing principle cannot be of universal application. Many cases will arise where the material fact will be, not what was the message which was delivered, but what was the message which was received. The party who originally sends an order by telegraph makes the telegraph company his agent for its transmission and delivery, and, as between himself and the person to whom it is addressed, he is bound by the message as delivered. It follows that where the legal rights of the receiver of the message founded upon an order transmitted therein are in question, he is entitled to put in evidence the message actually received as the original."

Some seventeen years later and in 1907,

Joyce & Joyce issued the second edition of their work on Electric Law, and in § 905 review the conclusion reached by the different text writers as follows: "Mr. Gray (Gray, Communication by Teleg. § 104, note 3) states the rule as holding nonagency of the telegraph company in England, and says that the rule here is contra, although he inclines to the English rule [see also Scott & J. Teleg. §§ 340, 341]. Judge Thompson (Thomp. Electricity, 1891 ed. §§ 483-487) holds to the rule which makes the sender who telegraphs a proposal bound by the terms of the message as delivered, on the ground of agency of the telegraph company. In other words, the sender must stand by the proposition embodied in the message as delivered by his agent, and sue the company for the damages he has sustained by its misfeasance; but he qualifies this by the rule that the party who first invites the use of the telegraphic agency impliedly undertakes to assume the risk of the telegraph company's mistakes. This author relies upon Ayer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 79 Me. 493, 1 Am. St. Rep. 353, 10 Atl. 495; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Shotter, 71 Ga. 760; Dunning v. Roberts, 35 Barb. 463, and Durkee v. Vermont C. R. Co. 29 Vt. 127, 140. Mr. Crosswell (Crosswell, Electricity, 1895 ed. §§ 684-687) notes substantially the English rule, and briefly considers the Georgia and Maine cases, and states no rule so far as we can discover."

Joyce & Joyce state their conclusion, in § 907, as follows: "We must confess that we believe there can be no logical deduction from the various principles involved, as to what should be the rule. The determination must contain some element of what is called a "moral" ground, or must be an arbitrary, absolute one. We favor, however, the rulings in the Tennessee and Mississippi cases, but admit there is much force in Judge Thompson's conclusion, although that conclusion might have been in accord with the Tennessee and Mississippi cases, if he had had these cases before him."

The American courts are by no means in harmony over this subject. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Shotter, supra, decided in 1884, held unqualifiedly that the telegraph company is the agent of the sender of a message, and that if the message as actually delivered offers merchandise at a less price than the message as written by the sender offered, and the proposition is accepted, the sender is bound by the contract. This rule seems to have been uniformly adhered to by the Georgia courts. See Brooke v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 119 Ga. 695, 46 S. E. 826; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Flint River Lumber Co. 114 Ga. 576, 88 Am. St. Rep. 36, 40 S. E. 815; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Cooper, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

2 Ga. App. 376, 58 S. E. 517. The Shotter Case has been frequently cited and commented on by the courts and text writers,—sometimes with approval, sometimes with doubts or express disapproval.

The greater number of cases that have had occasion to consider the question of agency have arisen out of the introduction of evidence, or have in some way involved the question of either what constituted the original message or what was the best evidence. Cases dealing with the admission of evidence, or what constituted the best evidence, of the original message, are Save-land v. Green, supra; Durkee v. Vermont C. R. Co. 29 Vt. 127; Howley v. Whipple, 48 N. H. 487; Morgan v. People, 59 Ill. 58; Smith v. Easton, 54 Md. 138, 39 Am. Rep. 355; Barons v. Brown, 25 Kan. 410; Matteson v. Noyes, 25 Ill. 591; Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Mahoney, 82 Ill. 73, 25 Am. Rep. 299; Williams v. Brickell, 37 Miss. 682, 75 Am. Dec. 88; State v. Hopkins, 50 Vt. 316, 3 Am. Crim. Rep. 357; Bond v. Hurd, 31 Mont. 314, 78 Pac. 579, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 566.

Pepper v. Western U. Teleg. Co. supra, decided by the supreme court of Tennessee in 1889, is perhaps the most widely cited, exhaustive, and well-considered American case to repudiate the doctrine that the company is the agent of the sender of the message. This case states the English rule, and reviews the American authorities, and indulges in some independent reasoning and consideration of the rule, and concludes that what is known as the American rule—that the company is the agent of the sender of a message—really rests on the single case of Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Shotter, supra. The court concludes by repudiating the agency rule, and holds the company as an independent principal.

In 1895 the supreme court of Mississippi was confronted with the same question, and in Shingleur v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 72 Miss. 1030, 30 L.R.A. 444, 48 Am. St. Rep. 604, 18 So. 425, cited, approved, and followed the Pepper Case, and held that a telegraph company is liable either to the sender or sendee of the message by reason of the delivery of an altered message—to the sender in contract or tort, and to the sendee in tort. This case holds that the liability of a telegraph company for incorrectly transmitting a message, and thus delivering an incorrect copy of the original, is that of an "independent principal" to either the sender or sendee, whichever may be injured thereby. The Mississippi court calls attention to the Shotter Case, and declines to follow it. To same effect, see the later case of Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Potts, 120 Tenn. 37, 19

L.R.A.(N.S.) 479, 127 Am. St. Rep. 991, 113 S. W. 789.

In 1901 the Kentucky court of appeals in Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Schaefer, 110 Ky. 907, 62 S. W. 1119, had under consideration the liability of the sender of a message to comply with the contract proposed by his message, where the message had been changed or altered in the transmission and delivered to the sendee in the changed form. The court reviews the authorities at some length, and then says: "This exact question was fully considered in the case of Pepper v. Western U. Teleg. Co. decided by the supreme court of Tennessee, and reported in 87 Tenn. 554, 4 L.R.A. 661, 10 Am. St. Rep. 699, 11 S. W. 783. In that case the court said, viz.: 'The minds of the party who sends a message in certain words, and the party who receives the message in entirely different words, have never met. Neither can, therefore, be bound the one to the other.' " To the same effect, see Pegram v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 100 N. C. 28, 6 Am. St. Rep. 557, 6 S. E. 770.

The case of Germain Fruit Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 137 Cal. 598, 59 L.R.A. 575, 70 Pac. 658, is relied upon by respondent as authority for the contention that Strong & Stark could recover the full market value of this property from the commission company, notwithstanding the mistake in the telegram and that there was no meeting of the minds of the parties. In that case the plaintiff received a telegram from Cornforth & Company, of Denver, Colorado, asking for prices on oranges. The plaintiff thereupon sent the following message: "Offer Los Angeles, San Gabriel, Santa Anna oranges one fifty, Riversides two sixty." As received the message read: "Offer Los Angeles, San Gabriel, Santa Anna oranges one fifty, Riversides one sixty." Cornforth & Company immediately wired for two carloads of Riverside oranges, which were immediately shipped. After receiving the oranges they paid the fruit company "one sixty" per box, and refused to pay any more. The fruit company thereupon sued the telegraph company for the difference between the price quoted and that received under the altered message. The court cites no authorities, and does not consider the question of agency or whether there was a meeting of the minds of the contracting parties. That case turns wholly upon the finding of the trial court that Cornforth & Company knew that there was a mistake in the telegram, and that Riverside oranges were at that time current on the market at $2.60 per box. The court held that Cornforth & Company were liable to the fruit company for the reasonable and market value of the fruit, which was $2.60, and that, knowing 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

that there was a mistake in the telegram, they were committing a fraud on the fruit company, and that the fruit company could have and should have recovered the full market price from Cornforth & Company. The case also inferentially holds that the fruit company could not waive its right to proceed against Cornforth & Company to collect the market value of the property, and thereby minimize the loss to all parties, and instead thereof sue the telegraph company for the difference, and allow the purchaser of the fruit "to get away with a fraudulently acquired advantage" in such a manner. That case turned upon the peculiar facts there involved, and contains no holding contrary to the general principle of law running through the cases heretofore considered. A consideration of this question of agency has been required, and its determination has been necessary, in order to ascertain whether the sender of a proposition to buy or sell is bound to the sendee, if his proposition is incorrectly delivered. If the company is his agent, then, of course, he is bound by the contract whether the proposition be delivered as given or not, and in such case the sendee would have to look to the sender for any damages he might sustain, while, if no agency exists, there would be no meeting of minds and no contract in a case where the company changed or altered the message making the proposition, and the sendee, if damaged by reason of the delivery of the changed or false message, would be relegated to his action in tort against the company for the wrong committed. If it should be conceded that the company is the agent of the sender of the message, that agency can in no sense extend to the change or alteration of the message. The agency would be special, and limited to the identical message authorized by the sender, and the sendee and everyone else has notice that the company has no authority from the sender to deliver to him or to anyone else an altered or changed message, or one in any manner different from the one filed in the transmitting office. See foregoing quotation from Gray's note to text; Pegram v. Western U. Teleg. Co. supra.

Our consideration of the authorities, and of the nature and character of the service rendered by a telegraph company, the public utility it serves, and the public character of its existence, and the franchise it enjoys,—all constrain us to hold that the law of agency is not applicable, and that the company cannot be properly held to be the agent of the sender of the message. A telegraph company should rather be treated as an independent principal or contracting party, and liable as other principals. These companies are in fact very similar to common carriers, and ought to be treated by the law as it deals with the common carrier. It is true, as said by many of the authorities, that the company is not expected to take the written message as delivered to it, and transport it on the same sheet of paper to the sendee, but that is not the test and is an evasion of the real question. What the sender of a telegraphic message wants and expects is that the words, figures, or characters of his message—not the paper containing them—shall be delivered to the sendee exactly as expressed by him, without change or alteration. He asks the company to become the transmitter or carrier of the inquiry, proposition, news, or intelligence contained in his message, and for this purpose makes the contract and pays the toll or rate established. This is the service of a common carrier. The only difference of any consequence which we can discover is that the telegraph company is not an absolute insurer of the literal accuracy of delivery of every message under all circumstances, yet in this the difference is not so great as was supposed twenty-five years ago. Indeed, the books disclose that telegraph companies were not held to anything like the degree of accuracy a few years ago as is now required of them, and this is at once apparent. Telegraphy had not been developed and perfected then to anything like the exactness, either mechanically or scientifically, that it is now.

Having determined that the telegraph company was not the agent of Strong & Stark, it follows that there was no meeting of the minds of the contracting parties as to the price for which the cattle were to be sold, and that Strong & Stark had a right to reclaim the same upon learning of the mistake made in the delivery of their proposition. They received a draft from White, the agent of the commission company, and shipped the cattle, and did not learn that any error had been made in the transmission and delivery of their message, until after the draft had been presented and the commission company had refused to pay any greater rate than $3.25 per hundred. While there is no evidence in the record which shows just where the cattle were or what had become of them at the time Strong & Stark received the information of this mistake and the refusal of the commission company to pay $3.95 per hundred, still it is apparent that they had already been shipped, and that they had very likely been received at the stock yards and perhaps sold, and possibly butchered. This, of course, is somewhat conjectural from the present record. It is clear, however, that the freight rates and expense of shipping had already been incurred, and that if the shippers should have reclaimed their property, they had still incurred a large expense which they must necessarily take into consideration as prudent and reasonable men, if they should have refused to allow the commission company to retain the stock at $3.25 per hundred, which the latter had promised and agreed to pay. Whatever damage and loss may have been sustained by the sellers of this property on account of the transaction is directly traceable to the tort committed by the telegraph company in delivering to the commission company an altered and false message. As said by the court in Pepper v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 87 Tenn. 571, 4 L.R.A. 663, 10 Am. St. Rep. 699, 11 S. W. 783: "They [Strong & Stark] were bound to have taken just such steps as a reasonably prudent man would take to save himself, had the mistake or error been his own. A man, under such circumstances, is not to be held to have done the wisest and best thing, but to the exercise of reasonable skill and diligence. Whether he so acted or not is a question of fact to be left to the jury under proper instructions by the court." The question would necessarily present itself to the sellers of the property the minute they learned of this mistake and of the condition under which the purchasers had accepted the proposition, as to what was the best thing to do in order to minimize the loss and damage,—whether it was better to let the purchasers take the property at the price they had proposed to pay, and then look to the tortfeasor (the telegraph company) for their damages, or to reclaim the property and seek another purchaser. It may have been impossible to reclaim the property, as it may have been used or consumed or so dissipated that it could not have been found or identified; or the expense of reclaiming it and securing another purchaser might have exceeded by far the difference between the price as named in the proposition and that named in the message as delivered by the telegraph company to the purchaser.

These questions are all proper matters to be submitted to the jury in ascertaining the damage to be awarded. These phases of the question are very clearly and learnedly discussed and considered in the closing portion of the Pepper Case. See Hocutt v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 147 N. C. 186, 60 S. E. 980, and cases there cited. Since this case must go back for a new trial, it is proper to say here that the measure of damages is not the difference between the price proposed in the telegram delivered by Strong & Stark to the respondent, and that given in the message as delivered to the live stock company. On the contrary, the measure of damages in this case would be the difference between the market value of the property on the day of sending the telegram, and the price paid by the live stock company in accordance with the telegram as delivered to them. The price of $3.95 as fixed in the telegram filed at Soda Springs may have indicated the correct market price on that day, but since there was no contract made and no meeting of the minds as to the price, it could not be said as a fact, in the absence of proof, that Strong & Stark could have procured this price for their property, nor can they say with any degree of certainty that the live stock company would have accepted the proposition, had the message been delivered quoting that price. It is true, as said in the Pepper Case, that this telegram might be taken as prima facie evidence that such was the market price on that day. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Crawford, 110 Ala. 460, 20 So. 112; Bowie v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 78 S. C. 424, 59 S. E. 66; Barker v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 134 Wis. 147, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 533, 126 Am. St. Rep. 1017, 114 N. W. 440.

This brings us to the concluding and ultimate proposition for which the respondent contends in this case, and that is that a contract was in fact made between Strong & Stark and the live stock company independently of the communication by telegraph. White was apparently a purchasing agent for the commission company, and was at Soda Springs on the date this telegram was sent. He had been negotiating with the appellants concerning the purchase of this stock, and the state of the negotiations is given by Stark in his testimony as follows: "On or about the 6th day of March, 1907, we sold to the Colorado Live Stock & Commission Company a lot of cattle. We were negotiating the sale with W. L. White, who was agent for the Colorado Live Stock & Commission Company; he was acting as their agent; we agreed to sell the company quite a number of cattle, beef steers. I do not remember the weight of the steers, they weighed something near 1,000 pounds; we at this time agreed with this agent as to the price per hundredweight, that is to say, $3.95 per hundredweight, this was net with 2 per cent shrinkage; I agreed with the agent on the price for the cattle, and then went and sent a message to the company to find out whether the agent was responsible or not." It will be seen that the appellants up to the time of sending the telegram had been negotiating with the commission company through the medium of their purchasing agent, White. They had apparently reached an agreement as to the terms and conditions of the sale, but the vendors of the stock evidently had some question as to the authority of the agent in some or all respects, and so they sent the telegram set forth in the original opinion in this case. The commission company, on the other hand, instead of advising the vendors that they would abide by any agreement made by White, wired the vendors: "Will honor draft as per telegram if cattle are billed to us." The "telegram" referred to in this reply, as it had been delivered to the commission company, quoted the cattle at $3.25 instead of $3.95, as had been agreed upon by the vendors and White. This communication by wire taking place between Strong & Stark, the vendors of the property, and the commission company, the purchasers, was an attempt at abrogation or modification by the principals themselves of the contract which had been entered into by the principal on the one hand and the agent of the company on the other. It relegated the parties to the terms of the new or modified contract. It would be quite a different proposition had White been negotiating and contracting with the vendors of this property as a principal himself; in that case a contract would have been closed and consummated, but since he was dealing as an agent for a principal, and the party with whom he was dealing and his principal subsequently took up the negotiations themselves, they might cancel, affirm, or modify the contract, as they saw fit, and the subsequent affirmance, modification, or cancellation of the contract would be binding on both the principals. The principal could take the matter out of the hands of his agent either in whole or part, and if concurred in by the other contracting party, it would leave the two contracting parties to the new status to be fixed by them.

We conclude, therefore, that in this case the contract made between Strong & Stark on the one hand, as principals, and White on the other hand, as agent for the commission company, was subsequently abrogated by the principals themselves, and that, by reason of the tort committed by the telegraph company in altering the communication, there was finally no meeting of the minds of the contracting parties.

For the foregoing reasons, the original opinion in this case must stand as the opinion and judgment of the court. The judgment of the trial court must be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to grant a new trial. Costs awarded to appellant.

Sullivan, C. J., concurs.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

CHARLES PATTERSON'S ADMINIS-TRATOR, Appt.,
v.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY.

(138 Ky. 648, 128 S. W. 1068.)

Carrier — passenger on roof — injury — liability.

No recovery can be had for the death of one thrown by a jerk from the top of a car, on which he was riding in preference to riding with the crowd within, in the absence of anything to show that the jerk was so violent as to show want of proper care in the operation of the train.

(June 10, 1910.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Bell County in defendant's favor in an action brought to Note. — Riding on top of car as contributory negligence.

As to the liability of the proprietor of a logging or other railroad used for private purposes for injuries sustained by other than employees, while being carried thereon, see Harvey v. Deep River Logging Co. 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 131, and the note appended thereto.

Whether a passenger is guilty of contributory negligence in riding on top of a car depends largely upon the facts of each particular case; and in the following cases it was held that such conduct was not contributory negligence per se, so as to warrant taking the case from the jury:

—Sherman v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 72 Mo. 62, 37 Am. Rep. 423. Although this case denied recovery for injury to a boy, riding on top of a freight car, in performing a service by direction of a brakeman, because of the latter's want of authority to bind the company, the court said: "If, by reason of an accident to the train, the plaintiff had been injured while simply riding on a freight car, the defendant would, on the record before us, be held liable, as it does not appear that the regulations of the company prohibiting passengers from riding elsewhere than in the caboose were conspicuously posted, as required by law;"

—Gray v. Columbia River & O. C. R. Co. 49 Or. 18, 88 Pac. 297, where an employee of a contractor whose contract called for carriage of his employees was riding to work on a tank car, with the consent of those in charge of the train, and was injured by a derailment;

—Missouri P. R. Co. v. Callahan (Tex.) 12 S. W. 833, where plaintiff, a cattle man, was obliged to get on top of the train after a stop, because the train started before he could reach the caboose, and he was struck recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, for which defendant was alleged to be responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Leabow & De Busk and Henritze & Dawson for appellant.

Mr. Benjamin D. Warfield, for appellee:

In taking passage on a freight train, the passenger takes upon himself the additional risk, if any, in excess of the risks incident to a passage on the same railroad on a passenger train.

Ohio Valley R. Co. v. Watson, 93 Ky. 559, 19 L.R.A. 310, 40 Am. St. Rep. 211, 21 S. W. 244; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Morris, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 448, 62 S. W. 1012; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Austin (Ky.) 126 S. W. 144; 3 Hutchinson, Carr. 3d ed. § 1217.

Deceased should either have ridden inside one of the coaches or cars, or have stayed off the train, and abandoned his

by a water spout, as he was entering the caboose from the top;

—Trinity Valley R. Co. v. Stewart (Tex. Civ. App.) 62 S. W. 1085, where the plaintiff was riding to work as a passenger on a flat car which was being pushed ahead of the engine, and was injured by derailment of the car;

—Mexican C. R. Co. v. Lauricella (Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 301, where there was evidence that plaintiff was ordered out of the caboose, and took a position in a buggy on a flat car, which was derailed;

—Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Horst, 93 U. S. 291, 23 L. ed. 898, where a drover went upon the cars when ordered out of the caboose, and commanded by the conductor to do so, to ride to where another caboose would be attached, the only alternative being to let his cattle go on without him;

—Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Carpenter, 5 C. C. A. 551, 12 U. S. App. 392, 56 Fed. 451, where a drover in charge of cattle mounted the train on its starting before he could reach the caboose, and started to walk back on top of the train, as was customary with cattle men, and was struck by a bridge; of which he had no knowledge or warning; —New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Thomas, 9 C. C. A. 29, 23 U. S. App. 37, 60 Fed. 379, where a cattle man rode on top of the car with the acquiescence of the train men, though such riding was prohibited by the company.

And in Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Miles, 40 Ark. 298, 48 Am. Rep. 10, where plaintiff accompanied stock, and rode on top of the car by direction of the station agent, the court held that it was the duty of a passenger to occupy a seat inside the passenger car; and while, if he occupied an improper place by the conductor's permission, or with his acquiescence, this would exempt trip, rather than have taken the risk of riding on top.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sickings, 5 Bush, 9, 96 Am. Dec. 320; Favre v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 91 Ky. 546, 16 S. W. 370; Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Thomas, 79 Ky. 167, 42 Am. Rep. 208; Clarke v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 101 Ky. 34, 36 L.R.A. 123, 39 S. W. 840; Morel v. Mississippi Valley L. Ins. Co. 4 Bush, 537; Shelton v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 19 Ky. L. Rep. 215, 39 S. W. 842; 3 Hutchinson, Carr. § 1198; Worthington v. Central Vermont R. Co. 64 Vt. 107, 15 L.R.A. 326, 23 Atl. 590; Hickey v. Boston & L. R. Co. 14 Allen, 429; Meyere v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 110 Tenn. 166, 72 S. W. 114; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 678, 679; Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 149; Goodwin v. Boston & M. R. Co. 84 Me. 203, 24 Atl. 816; Crawford v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 122 S. W. 220; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moneyhun, 146 Ind. 147, 34 L.R.A. 141, 44 N. E. 1106; 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1630.

Messrs. C. W. Metcalf and J. W. Alcorn also for appellee.

Hobson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On April 21, 1908, a special train was run from Middlesboro to Pineville, to take persons to a political convention held at Pineville on that day. No fares were collected on the train, and, as everybody went free, there was a considerable crowd. The train consisted of three or four passenger cars, four or five cabooses, and four or five freight cars; there being in all fourteen cars in the train. The cars were full, and a number of persons were riding on the top of the train when it pulled out from Middlesboro. Pineville is 12 miles from Middlesboro, and the persons on top of the train were riding on top of the cabooses or the freight cars. Charles Patterson, a coal miner, twenty-two years old, was one of those on top of the cars. All went well until they reached Pineville. As the train was pulling into that station, it took up the slack, causing the rear cars of the train to jerk, and Patterson, who was riding on one of the rear cars, was by the jerk thrown therefrom, and fell into Straight creek, and was drowned. This action was brought to recover for his death; and at the conclusion of the evidence for the plaintiff, the circuit court instructed the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant. The plaintiff appeals.

Some ten or fifteen witnesses were introduced by the plaintiff. They were on the train and felt the jerk. The sum of their testimony is that there was a considerable jerk of the train, caused by the slack be-him from blame, the burden of proof is on him to show that he took the position by direction of someone having authority to bind the company; and it not being an incident of the employment of the station agent to assign places in the train to passengers, the direction of such agent to plaintiff to ride on top of the car would not relieve him from contributory negligence.

But under the following circumstances, the courts held that there was such contributory negligence that, as matter of law, recovery would be precluded:

—where a passenger in charge of a car attempted to go to it over the other cars; at least, in the absence of a showing that this method was the usual and perhaps the only one. Kimball v. Palmer, 25 C. C. A. 394, 42 U. S. App. 399, 80 Fed. 240;

—where a passenger on an excursion train took a position on the edge of an open coal car, with his foot on a seat in front of him, so that he had no protection in case of a sudden jerk. Jackson v. Crilly, 16 Colo. 103, 26 Pac. 331;

—where one in charge of cattle had time to get into the caboose, but, instead, got on top of a freight car, and was injured as a result of this position. Player v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 62 Iowa, 723, 16 N. W. 347;

—where a shipper's contract provided that he should remain in the caboose while the train was moving, and he was injured while voluntarily upon the moving cars. Ft. Scott, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

W. & W. R. Co. v. Sparks, 55 Kan. 288, 39 Pac. 1032;

—where plaintiff rode on top of a car after assisting a brakeman, and was injured when the cars were derailed, the court saying that he was not justified in taking a position on top of the car because the caboose was full. Chaney v. Louisiana & M. River R. Co. 176 Mo. 598, 75 S. W. 595;

—where plaintiff was riding on the top of the cupola of the caboose, from which he was thrown by the concussion of coupling. Tuley v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 41 Mo. App. 432;

—where plaintiff left the passenger coach, and took a position upon the top of the caboose, without any emergency making it necessary. McLean v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 81 S. C. 100, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 763, 128 Am. St. Rep. 892, 61 S. E. 900, 1071;

—where plaintiff took a position with others upon the cupola of the caboose because the caboose was crowded, and was struck by a defective water pipe. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Rice, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 509, 29 S. W. 525.

And in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Brown, 77 Miss. 338, 28 So. 949, it was held that while the negligence of a drover in riding on top of the car would relieve the company from liability for ordinary negligence, it was not so relieved from the consequences resulting to the drover from its gross negligence, as disclosed by the evidence.

R. L. S.

ing taken up as it pulled up from Straight creek into the station. But, as there were fourteen cars in the train, and it was practically a freight train, on account of the number of cars that were in it, such a jerk was unavoidable, and was such as was fairly incidental to the operation of such a train when the slack was taken up. While there is some proof in the record that the train was operated roughly on the journey, the proof of all the witnesses as to what occurred at the time Patterson fell off is to the effect that the jerk was due to the taking up of the slack; that the train was pulling into the station, and was running at a reduced speed. There is nothing in the record to show that the jerk was greater than was incidental to the movement of such a train, or that it was due in any measure to a want of care on the part of those in charge of the train. There is nothing in the record to show that the jerk was more violent than should have been anticipated by a person of ordinary prudence, riding on such a train.

The plaintiff proved by one witness that he was on the station platform at Middleboro with a number of others; that, while they were standing around there, the conductor said to them, "Boys, crowd it, crowd the train, go to the top;" that the witness then went to the ladder and went up on top of one of the cars, and that Charles Patterson came up right behind him. It is insisted that, as Patterson went up on the cars in obedience to what the conductor said, he was not guilty of contributory negligence, in doing so, and that the company is therefore liable for his death. In support of this we are referred to the case of Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Horst, 93 U. S. 291, 23 L. ed. 898. In that case a stock drover who had a right to transportation on a freight train which carried his cattle was riding in the caboose, and, when they had reached a certain point, the conductor, in the night, waked him up, telling him that they were going to leave the caboose there, and that he would have to ride to the next point on the top of the cars. He, at the request of the conductor, got on top of the cars, and thus rode about three fourths of a mile, when they undertook to couple the other caboose to the train, and, in making the backward movement, gave the train a terrible bump, which knocked the drover from the top of the car upon which he was riding. A recovery was sustained. But in that case the drover was required by the conductor to get upon the top of the car. He had to do this, or let his cattle go on without him. He had entered upon his journey, and was entitled to transportation as a passenger. The conductor was wrong in requiring him to leave the caboose and get on top of the car. But here the conductor required nobody to get on top of the car. His language meant that they must crowd the train or go on top. He required nobody to go on top, and the deceased and his companions evidently went on top of the train because they thought it was pleasanter riding there than in the crowded cars. It is true the conductor knew they were up there, and acquiesced in their riding there, but he did not require them to ride there, and when they voluntarily rode on the top of such a train, they took the risk of such jerking and bumping as are fairly incidental to the operation of the train, run without negligence. The falling of the deceased from the train was due to the taking up of the slack when the train was not running at an unusual speed, and it does not appear that anything was omitted by those in charge of the train which they should have done. One of the plaintiff's witnesses, who was one of the companions of the decedent on the train, being asked how the men happened to be on the top of the cars, said: "Why, they just climbed up. I don't know that anybody said climb on top. They just commenced going on top, and it seemed that all the coaches were full. Now, I couldn't say rightfully that they were obliged to go on top, but they just like to ride on top. A great many men love to ride on the top of the train." There were, according to the evidence, about 100 men on the top of the train. Only two of them fell off. The deceased, like the others who were with him, evidently went to the top of the train because he preferred to ride there, rather than in the crowded cars. In doing so, he took the risk due to this mode of travel, and there can be no recovery here, in the absence of proof showing that the jerk from which he fell off was so violent as to show a want of proper care in the operation of the train. This does not appear. We therefore conclude that the death of the deceased was simply due to an accident from a risk which he had assumed in riding upon the top of the train, and that the circuit court properly instructed the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant.

Judgment affirmed.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

J. O. RICH, Appt.,
v.

ASHEVILLE ELECTRIC COMPANY.

(152 N. C. 689, 68 S. E. 232.)

Proximate cause — defective street car curtain — fall of conductor.

1. The binding of the side curtain of a summer street car in the crevice in which it runs is not the proximate cause of injury to a conductor who, in collecting fares, attempts to raise the curtain to reach passengers in a seat behind it, and because it does not work properly falls from the car. Same — disobeying statute — injury to servant.

2. A street car company is not, although it is disobeying a statute in using a car without a vestibule in front in the winter time, liable for injury to a conductor who falls from the running board while attempting to raise a side curtain to collect a fare, since the injury was not one which should have been anticipated, and is therefore not the proximate cause of the wrongful act.

(Clark, Ch. J., dissents.)

(May 27, 1910.)

Note. — Liability of street railway company to employees for failure to perform statutory duty to provide vestibules on cars.

Upon employee's right of action for employer's violation of statute not expressly conferring the right, see note in 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 376.

The foregoing case appears to be the only one passing squarely upon the liability of a street car railway company to its employees for failure to provide vestibules as required by statute. It is to be noted that the decision is based rather upon the fact that the failure to provide the vestibules was not the proximate cause of the injury, than upon the proposition that the company would not be liable if the injury had been the proximate result of the failure to perform its statutory duty.

It is interesting to note the conflicting views taken by the prevailing and the dissenting opinions. In the former, the statute is considered as being solely for the benefit of the motorman, so that the same style of car might have been so equipped as to have satisfied its requirements. In such a case, of course, the statute could not have benefited the plaintiff in any way. But in the dissenting opinion, it is said that the injury could not possibly have occurred had the defendant obeyed the statute, from which it may be inferred that a different style of car must necessarily have been used. Had the majority taken this view as to the style of the car required by 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Buncombe County granting a nonsuit in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Manning, J.:

The plaintiff sued to recover damages for injuries received by him on Sunday morning, December 3, 1905, between 10 and 11 o'clock A. M., while acting as conductor on one of the defendant's cars in Asheville. The plaintiff testified that he had been, prior to the injury, a conductor for three years; that he asked to be relieved of his regular run that morning, and to fill an extra man's run, which was to take cars empty to Riverside Park—a distance of about 3 miles—to bring the cadets of Bingham School into church; that when he reported to the car barn he found "signed up" on the bulletin board two open summer cars for this special run; that the weather was cold, something near freezing, a strong wind blowing from the north, cloudy and "spitting snow;" the thermometer had dropped from 49° Far. at midnight to 33° Far. between 10 and 11 A. M.; that the summer cars are not equipped with a vestibule, the statute, a different conclusion as to the law might have been reached.

The decision in RICH v. ASHEVILLE ELECTRIC Co. finds some authority in the decision in R. v. Toronto R. Co. 21 Canadian Law Times, Occ. N. 120, as cited in the Digest of Canadian Case Law, in which it is suggested that a conductor, unless he is actually acting as motorman, is not an employee operating a car within the meaning of a statute of the same general effect as the one discussed in the RICH CASE.

In a number of cases it has been held that statutes requiring cars to be equipped during the winter time with vestibules or screens so as to protect the motorman or other person controlling the motive power propelling the car are valid as the reasonable exercise of the police power of the state. State v. Smith, 58 Minn. 35, 25 L.R.A. 759, 59 N. W. 545; State v. Whitaker, 160 Mo. 59, 60 S. W. 1068; State v. Nelson, 52 Ohio St. 88, 26 L.R.A. 317, 39 N. E. 22; Beaumont Traction Co. v. State, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 576, 103 S. W. 238.

In Yonkers v. Yonkers R. Co. 51 App. Div. 271, 64 N. Y. Supp. 955, an ordinance of the city of Yonkers containing similar provisions was held invalid upon the ground that the legislature had not given the city authority to pass such an ordinance.

In all of these cases the question arose upon the attempt of the state or city to enforce penalties for failure to obey the statute or ordinance. W. M. G.

but they have a glass front in the rear of the front platform, and in front of the rear platform; that the seats run across the car and at each end there is a roller curtain which can be pulled down or rolled up as the weather conditions require; that these curtains work in grooves cut in posts at the ends of each seat; that fastened on the outside of each post is a substantial stanchion for holding to as one walks or stands on the running board or step, which board or step runs lengthwise the car on either side, and is used by passengers alighting from or getting on the car, and likewise used by the conductor in going from one end of the car to the other, in collecting fares of passengers; that after reporting at the car barn on the morning of December 3d to Mr. White, the man in charge, he observed that the open cars were "signed up" for the run he was to make; that he complained and requested closed cars on account of the weather; that White told him he would see about it; that he, the plaintiff, looked around and saw three closed cars apparently in good order, and went to report to White, but he had gone, and the other car crews had left, so he took out the open car at 10:05 A. M. and proceeded on his run to Riverside Park; that he had no passengers and took on none; that he had his overcoat, but did not put it on, and stood on the rear platform; that his car made the trip to the park in about twenty minutes; the cadets got aboard, pulled down the curtains, certainly on one side of the car, and the plaintiff started his car back to Asheville; that the car had gone about 200 or 300 yards when he started to collect fares; that he had to roll up the curtain, which was done by a pull, when it rolled up by a spring; that the curtain caught and he jerked it with his right hand, his hand slipped off and either struck his left hand with which he was holding to a stanchion, or it being numbed with cold, slipped loose, and he fell from the running board, and received the injuries for which he sues to recover damages. At the conclusion of the evidence, his Honor allowed the motion, made under the statute, for judgment as of nonsuit, and the plaintiff excepted and appealed to this court.

Messrs. Frank Carter and H. C. Chedester for appellant.

Messrs. Martin & Wright, for appellee:

Plaintiff's fall was an accident, and being one which defendant would not reasonably anticipate, no liability attaches.

Lassiter v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 150 N. C. 483, 64 S. E. 202.

Only reasonable care was required of defendant, and there was no evidence of a defect in the car.

Elliott, Railroads, 2d ed. §§ 1273-1275, 1343-1348.

Before the plaintiff could recover, he must show that the absence of the vestibule front was the proximate cause of his injury.

Shaw v. Highland Park Mfg. Co. 143 N. C. 131, 55 S. E. 433.

Manning, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Construing the evidence in the view most favorable to the plaintiff, as we must do under the uniform rulings of this court, where the motion for judgment as of nonsuit is allowed, we are not convinced that his Honor committed error in allowing the motion. In speaking of an injury occurring to the plaintiff, in House v. Southern R. Co. 152 N. C. 397, 67 S. E. 981, where the plaintiff, a servant of the defendant, employed to clean its cars and wash its windows, was injured by attempting, with unusual force, to raise a window which had become tight in the sash, when her hand slipped, broke through the glass, and was severely cut, Mr. Justice Hoke said: "We have repeatedly decided that an employer of labor is required to provide for his employees a reasonably safe place to work, and to supply them with implements and appliances reasonably safe and suitable for the work in which they were engaged. As stated in Hicks v. Naomi Falls Mfg. Co. 138 N. C. 319-325, 50 S. E. 703, 705, and other cases of like import, the principle more usually obtains in the case of 'machinery more or less complicated, and more especially when driven by mechanical power,' and does not, as a rule, apply to the use of ordinary everyday tools, nor to ordinary everyday conditions, requiring no special care, preparation, or provision, where the defects are readily observable, and where there was no good reason to suppose that the injury complained of would result. The reason for the distinction will ordinarily be found to rest on the fact that the element of proximate cause is lacking,—defined in some of the decisions as 'the doing or omitting to do an act which a person of ordinary prudence could foresee would naturally or probably produce the injury.' Brewster v. Elizabeth City, 137 N. C. 392, 49 S. E. 885. These windows not infrequently become tightened from different causes, and, while it may be a great inconvenience, and should perhaps be given more attention than it receives, no one would say that an injury of this character would ordinarily arise or be likely to ensue, and therefore no actionable wrong has been established." This case, we think, is decisive of the point presented in the present case, as to the tightening of the curtain which plaintiff was attempting to roll up. No one would say that the injury which plaintiff received—falling from the running board or step—would ordinarily arise or be likely to ensue from this cause. No reason is given, nor does any appear, why the plaintiff, as he had charge of the car, did not examine these curtains before leaving the barn, if he had apprehended any injury as likely to ensue to him from their becoming tightened in the grooves, as such a condition was readily observable. The liability of the defendant, however, was urged before us chiefly upon the ground that it was operating a car for passengers on its line in violation of §§ 2615, 3800, Revisal, which provides that "all street passenger railway companies shall use vestibule fronts. . . on all passenger cars run by them on their lines during the latter half of the month of November, and during the months of December, January, February and March of each year. . . . Provided, further, such companies may use cars without vestibule fronts in cases of temporary emergency in suitable weather," etc. While the evidence does not disclose any causal connection between the failure to use the vestibule front on the car the plaintiff was using and the injury received by him, or that defendant's failure to provide a vestibule front was an act which a person of ordinary prudence could foresee would naturally or probably produce the injury complained of, yet it is insisted by the plaintiff that the running of a passenger car without the vestibule front was forbidden by statute, and constituted negligence, for which the defendant is liable to plaintiff. In Henderson v. Durham Traction Co. 132 N. C. 779, 44 S. E. 598, this court said: "After a careful examination of a number of authorities, we are of the opinion that the sound doctrine is that a violation of the public statute or a city ordinance is evidence of negligence, to be submitted to the jury. 'It is generally held, and this we regard as the true doctrine, that the element of proximate cause must be established, and it will not necessarily be presumed from the fact that a city ordinance or statute has been violated. Negligence, no matter in what it may consist, cannot result in a right of action unless it is the proximate cause of the injury complained of by the plaintiff.' Elliott, Railroads, § 711." This case has been approved in Cheek v. Oak Grove Lumber Co. 134 N. C. 225, 46 S. E. 488, 47 S. E. 400.

In Leathers v. Blackwell Durham Tobacco Co. 144 N. C. 336, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 340, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

57 S. E. 11, Mr. Justice Connor, speaking again for this court, reviewed in an elaborate opinion the whole doctrine, and quoted with approval, as expressing the conclusion reached by the best-considered authorities, the following language from Thompson on Negligence, vol. 1, § 10: "When the legislature of a state or the council of a municipal corporation, having in view the promotion of the safety of the public or of individual members of the public, commands or forbids the doing of a particular act, the general conception of the courts, and the only one that is reconcilable with reason, is that a failure to do the act commanded, or doing the act prohibited, is negligence as mere matter of law, otherwise called negligence per se; and this, irrespective of all questions of the exercise of prudence, diligence, care or skill, so that if it is the proximate cause of hurt or damage to another, and if that other is without contributory fault, the case is decided in his favor, and all that remains is to assess his damages." The conclusion of this court is thus stated in that opinion: "Upon careful consideration, we conclude that the law is correctly laid down by Judge Thompson and the other authors quoted, and sustained by the best-considered decided cases. . . . While it is true that if there be any dispute regarding the manner in which the injury was sustained, or if, upon the conceded facts, more than one inference may be fairly drawn, the question should be left to the jury, yet it is equally well settled that when there is no dispute as to the facts, and such facts are not capable of more than one inference, it is the duty of the judge to instruct the jury, as a matter of law, whether the injury was the proximate cause of the negligence of the defendant." Rolin v. R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. 141 N. C. 300, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 335, 53 S. E. 891, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 638. Again, this court was called upon to consider the question in Starnes v. Albion Mfg. Co. 147 N. C. 556, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 602, 61 S. E. 525, 15 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 470, and, speaking through Mr. Justice Brown, said: "As to the second contention, it is decided squarely against the defendant in the recent case of Leathers v. Blackwell Durham Tobacco Co. supra, where it is held not only that a cause of action accrues to the child, if injured, but that it is negligence per se, and not merely evidence of negligence, to violate the statute. [Revisal 1905, § 3362.] . . . This brings us to consider defendant's third contention, a matter not fully determined in the Leathers Case, and which may be thus stated: That the plaintiff cannot recover, because the employment of him, although wilfully and knowingly done in violation of the statute, was not the proximate cause of this injury, inasmuch as he did not receive the injury while in the discharge of the duties to which he was assigned." After reviewing the evidence in that case tending to show that the violation of the statute was the proximate cause of the injury received, the court proceeded: "We do not mean to hold that the employer violating the act would be liable in damages for every fatality that might befall the child while in its factory. For instance, had the plaintiff died of heart disease, or from a stroke of paralysis, or been seriously injured by the wilful and malicious act of a workman in knocking him against a machine, or injured from some cause wholly disconnected from the unlawful employment, the defendant could not be held liable in damages simply on account of the employment in violation of the statute. But we do hold that the employment, when wilfully and knowingly done, is a violation of the statute, and that every injury that reasonably and naturally results is actionable. In this case, the connection between the employment and the injury is that of cause and effect, and brings the defendant within the operation of the statute." Fowle v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 147 N. C. 491, 61 S. E. 262. It seems to us that the principle is clearly settled by this court in the cases cited, that while the violation of a statute is negligence, yet to entitle the plaintiff seeking to recover damages for an injury sustained, he must show a causal connection between the injury received and the disregard of the statutory prohibition or mandate,—that the injury was the proximate cause, and this requirement is fundamental in the law of negligence. In the present case, there is an entire absence of evidence tending to show such causal relation, but on the contrary the plaintiff's evidence negatives it. If we suppose the car equipped with a vestibule front, as required by statute, and the open cars are so equipped in many parts of the country, what causal connection existed between the injury and the negligence, or how could the failure to have a vestibule front be reasonably inferred as the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury? Besides, the manifest purpose of the statute, considered in the Leathers Case and the Starnes Case, being the statute forbidding the employment of children under twelve years of age in manufacturing establishments (Revisal 1905, § 3362), was not only to protect children of such tender years and immature judgment from injuries likely to ensue from their coming in contact with machinery, but their health from injury by such close confinement, as pointed out in Rolin v. R. J. Rey- 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

nolds Tobacco Co. supra; while the manifest purpose of the statute in the present case was to protect the motorman (not the conductor) from unnecessary exposure to the weather while performing his duty. It will be observed that the statute does not require any particular kind or make of car to be used, but refers only to its equipment. The same necessity for showing the causal or proximate relation between the injury and the alleged negligence is recognized as essential in Troxler v. Southern R. Co. 124 N. C. 189, 44 L.R.A. 313, 70 Am. St. Rep. 580, 32 S. E. 550, and the numerous cases citing and approving that decision; for as is said in that case, "where the negligence of the defendant is a continuing negligence (as the failure to furnish safe appliances, in general use, when the use of such appliances would have prevented the possibility of the injury) there can be no contributory negligence which will discharge the master." And the second headnote in Biles v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 139 N. C. 528, 52 S. E. 129, thus states the principle: "In an action against the defendant railroad, if the jury should find that the plaintiff, while in the performance of his duty, was injured, as the proximate consequence of a defective engine or defective appliance, then the defense of assumption of risk is not open to the defendant, by reason of the fellow-servant act." We have found no case in which the plaintiff was not required to show that his injury was the proximate consequence of the defendant's negligence; even in those cases where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies, this causal or proximate relation is sufficiently shown by the act itself, and is inferred from the act from which the injury results. The evidence of the plaintiff, construed in the view most favorable to him, failing to show this causal or proximate relation between the injury received and the negligence of the defendant, we must hold that the judgment of nonsuit was properly rendered, and it is affirmed.

Clark, Ch. J., dissenting:

Two sections of the Code, 2615 and 3800, forbade the defendant to use the summer car (which has no wind shields) at the time it did,—in December,—and the latter section made it a misdemeanor. In Leathers v. Blackwell Durham Tobacco Co. 144 N. C. 330, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 349, 57 S. E. 11, this court expressly repudiated the doctrine that the violation of a statute was merely "evidence of negligence," and held that such conduct was "negligence per se." Connor, J., pages 345-348 of 144 N. C., citing a wealth of authorities to that effect. He thus summed up: "Upon careful consideration, we conclude that the law is correctly laid down by Judge Thompson and the other authors quoted, and sustained by the best-considered decided cases." That case was well considered and is based upon numerous authorities of great weight. A due consideration for the dignity and consistency of our own decisions requires that we adhere to what was there said, after so great deliberation. Even if an unlawful act is only evidence of negligence, that would entitle the plaintiff to have the injury committed in the perpetration of the unlawful act submitted to the jury. If one is engaged in an unlawful act and unintentionally or accidentally slays another, he is not absolved from responsibility, but it is manslaughter. State v. Vines, 93 N. C. 493, 53 Am. Rep. 466; State v. Hall, 132 N. C. 1107, 44 S. E. 553. If one while engaged in doing an unlawful act injures another, it is certainly negligence. The defendant was violating the law and in the commission of a misdemeanor in running the car. The injury to the plaintiff could not possibly have occurred if the defendant had not disobeyed the statute. There was no evidence of contributory negligence, —though the burden to prove that was upon the defendant, —and it was necessarily error to withdraw the case from the jury.

Aside from the statute, it was negligence for the defendant in midwinter, with the temperature down to freezing and a strong wind blowing from the north, cloudy and "spitting snow," to refuse the plaintiff's request for a closed or winter car, of which there were three, at least, idle under the shed, ready for use. It was in violation of the ordinary dictates of humanity as well as of the statute to require the plaintiff to take instead an open summer car in such weather on a run of 3 miles out beyond the city limits and back. The plaintiff, in the regular winter car which could and should have been given him as he requested, would have been protected in the aisle, from the weather while collecting the fares, and could not have slipped and been hurt. As it was, the curtains being let down to protect the passengers, the plaintiff was obliged to dodge along, under one curtain after another, which he had to lift so that he could collect the fares. While doing this he had to walk along the running board, which was slippery, for it was "spitting snow," and his hands being numb with cold, and the strong north wind blowing the curtains, his hands slipped when trying to raise a curtain which was "caught." The plaintiff in consequence fell off the running board and was hurt.

The facts not being denied, and the law fixing the defendant with negligence, the judge might well have held as a matter of 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

law that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. Certainly he should not have denied the plaintiff the right to have a jury pass on the question. The exposure by the defendant to such weather, unnecessarily and over his protest, was more than negligence. It was inhumane. The statute made the conduct of the company a misdemeanor, even if no harm had accrued to the plaintiff.

The plaintiff, in my judgment, has a right to have a jury, instead of the judge, to pass upon his issues. Employees are entitled to protection from such heedless disregard of their comfort and safety as was shown on this occasion, and are surely entitled to recover for injuries which a jury shall find was sustained from such cause.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND, & PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

GEARY L. NEWBURN.

(— Okla. —, 110 Pac. 1065.)

Carrier — ticket — signature — waiver.

1. Plaintiff purchased a first-class, round-trip, nontransferable ticket, which contained on its face a requirement that he must sign it in ink, and a proviso that, if presented for passage by other than the original purchaser, the same was void; also, a line for his signature, with a line for the signature of the agent, as witness. Without being signed, said ticket was honored for plaintiff's going passage. On his return, he was Headnotes by DUNN, Ch. J.

Note. — Carriers: waiver of requirement of signature of ticket or coupon.

While the cases involving the question presented by CHICAGO, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. NEWBURN are not numerous, they sustain the position taken by the court in that case.

Thus, in Elser v. Southern P. Co. 7 Cal. App. 493, 94 Pac. 852, it was held that a requirement that the ticket be signed by the purchaser was waived where one party purchased a ticket for another, and, on the request of the agent, signed the other party's name, so that the latter was unable to identify himself by signing his name when requested to do so by the conductor.

And in the similar case of Mexican C. R. Co. v. Goodman (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 580, it was held that plaintiff, a married woman, was entitled to ride on a ticket which her husband purchased for her, and to which he signed his own name, on being assured by the selling agent that that would be sufficient.

In Southern P. Co. v. Bailey (Tex. Civ.

ejected from the train because said ticket was not signed. There was no evidence showing plaintiff had refused to sign the same. Held, even if essential to the validity of the ticket, plaintiff's signature was waived by the company, and his ejection was wrongful.

Damages — exemplary — act of agent.

2. Under the decisions controlling in the Indian territory, exemplary or punitive damages were not allowable against the principal, unless the evidence showed that the principal participated in the wrongful act of the agent, expressly or impliedly, by his conduct, authorizing or approving it, either before or after its commission; and where there is a total absence of such evidence, an instruction authorizing a jury to allow plaintiff such damages is erroneous.

Same — ejection of passenger — loss of time.

3. In an action by a passenger for wrongful ejection from a train, plaintiff's loss of time cannot be considered in assessing his damages, in the absence of evidence as to the value of his time.

(July 12, 1910.)

ERROR to the District Court for Le Flore County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful ejection of plaintiff from defendant's train. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

App.) 91 S. W. 820, it was held that plaintiff was entitled to ride on a ticket purchased and signed by a daughter, whose description was put on the ticket, instead of the mother's, by the agent, who was informed who the ticket was for, and said it would be all right that way.

In Kent v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 45 Ohio St. 284, 4 Am. St. Rep. 539, 12 N. E. 798, where an agent, in selling a mileage book, did not require the purchaser to sign his name on the back thereof, though such were his instructions and the usual custom in selling such books, and the book was recognized by several conductors as valid before plaintiff was finally ejected, it was held that the requirement that the book be signed was waived.

In Gregory v. Burlington & M. River R. Co. 10 Neb. 250, 4 N. W. 1025, recovery for ejection was permitted where plaintiff purchased a reduced-rate, round-trip ticket, and the agent at the destination point refused to validate the ticket for return because it was not signed by plaintiff originally, it not appearing that he was directed or requested to sign when he purchased the ticket.

And in Head v. Georgia P. R. Co. 79 Ga. 358, 11 Am. St. Rep. 434, 7 S. E. 217, where the ticket was signed in the wrong place, under the direction of the selling agent, it was held that plaintiff could recover for being ejected because of that fact. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. C. O. Blake, Thomas R. Beman, and Stuart & Gordon, for plaintiff in error:

The fact that the plaintiff rode on the going portion of the ticket would not estop the defendant, by its conductor, on the train from which plaintiff was ejected, from asserting the invalidity of the ticket for transportation.

Poulin v. Canadian P. R. Co. 17 L.R.A. 800, 3 C. C. A. 23, 6 U. S. App. 298, 52 Fed. 202; Bowers v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 158 Pa. 302, 27 Atl. 893; Boylan v. Hot Springs R. Co. 132 U. S. 146, 33 L. ed. 290, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50; Dangerfield v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 62 Kan. 85, 61 Pac. 405; Thorp v. Concord R. Co. 61 Vt. 378, 17 Atl. 791; Watson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 104 Tenn. 194, 49 L.R.A. 454, 56 S. W. 1024; Hanlon v. Illinois C. R. Co. 109 Iowa, 136, 80 N. W. 223; Clark v. Great Northern R. Co. 31 Wash. 658, 72 Pac. 477.

The acceptance of a special-contract ticket by the purchaser binds him to the conditions thereof, even though he fails to sign it.

Drummond v. Southern P. Co. 7 Utah, 118, 25 Pac. 733; Abram v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 83 Tex. 61, 18 S. W. 321; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Bennett, 1 C. C. A. 544, 6 U. S. App. 95, 50 Fed. 496; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Daniels (Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 426; Rahilly v. St. Paul &

But where plaintiff refused to sign the ticket when requested to do so by the selling agent, it was held that the requirement was not waived by the fact that the agent sold it without such signature, and that a conductor was justified in putting plaintiff off the train on his refusal to sign, though other conductors had recognized the ticket for passage. Ketcheson v. Southern P. Co. 19 Tex. Civ. App. 288, 46 S. W. 907.

In Dangerfield v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 62 Kan. 85, 61 Pac. 405, where a ticket which required that the purchaser sign it, and that he be identified before the return trip, was purchased from a broker by another party, it was held that he was properly refused passage, and the fact that the selling company did not require the original purchaser to sign the ticket did not waive its provisions or make the ticket transferable.

And in Comer v. Foley, 98 Ga. 678, 25 S. E. 671, where a company was authorized to sell tickets in Chicago for Jacksonville, Florida, and return, partly over defendant's road, the tickets to be signed by the purchaser and witnessed by the selling agent, it was held that such company could not bind defendant by selling the return coupons of unsigned tickets with the signature of its agent as witness thereon, to be filled in with the name of the purchaser.

R. L. S.

D. R. Co. 66 Minn. 153, 68 N. W. 853; Hanlon v. Illinois C. R. Co. supra; Walker v. Price, 62 Kan. 327, 84 Am. St. Rep. 392, 62 Pac. 1001.

It was the purchaser's duty to read the ticket, and to know that the conditions imposed thereby were complied with.

Reed v. Texas & N. O. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 50 S. W. 432; Watson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 104 Tenn. 194, 49 L.R.A. 454, 56 S. W. 1024.

Mr. T. T. Varner for defendant in error.

Dunn, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was begun in the United States court for the central district of the Indian territory, sitting at Poteau, in January, 1907, by Geary L. Newburn, defendant in error, hereafter called "plaintiff," against the plaintiff in error, to recover the sum of $2,000, for damages for an alleged wrongful ejection from a train of defendant on December 13, 1906, at a point between McAlester and Haileyville, in what was then Indian territory. To the complaint defendant filed its answer, consisting of a general and specific denial of all the material allegations contained therein. The cause was tried January 2, 1908, and the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff in the amount prayed for. The evidence showed that plaintiff purchased a first-class, round-trip ticket at Poteau on the line of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway Company, over that line and the Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific Railway Company, to South McAlester and return, the ticket on its face, among other things, containing a provision that it was not transferable, and that it "must be signed in ink by the person who is to use it, and if presented for passage by other than original purchaser, or if it shows any alterations, by erasures or otherwise, or more than one date or route is designated, it shall be void, and conductor will refuse to honor, and will take up and collect full fare;" also, an agreement on the part of the purchaser to be governed by all the conditions as stated in the contract, which it recites are fully understood. Immediately following thereafter was a line with "signature for original purchaser" printed beneath, and another line with the word "witness" printed above, and the word "agent" beneath. Plaintiff testified that he used the ticket in going to McAlester, and that on his return, at some point between McAlester and Haileyville, the conductor asked him for his ticket; that he showed the same to him, and the conductor said the ticket was not good, and demanded cash fare; that he then left him until he had collected the tickets and fares throughout the balance of the train, when he returned and told him that he must either pay his fare or get off the train; that after talking a while he was grabbed by his shoulder and pushed out of the car door, and after stepping off the car he was given a push and fell, hurting his leg. The testimony of plaintiff stands alone on what took place at the time of his ejection. The conductor, brakeman, and porter all testified that they never saw the plaintiff, that the train did not stop at the time or place where he stated that it did, and that he was not ejected. This evidence was also corroborated by the testimony of the train despatcher, who showed that by his records no reports of any such occurrence had been made to him, although it was the duty of the train operative to make them. As the plaintiff does not testify that the conductor assigned any reason for ejecting him, the record is silent on this proposition; but counsel for defendant, though relying and insisting upon the proposition that the testimony of plaintiff as to his having been ejected is false, assert that, by reason of the fact that plaintiff had failed to sign the ticket, the same was void, and that, even had he been ejected after having refused to pay fare, as stated, the action on the part of the train operative was legal, and that plaintiff had no cause of action; hence the question is raised whether or not plaintiff could be lawfully ejected from the train for the sole reason that the ticket which he held, containing the terms above set forth, had not been signed by him. Plaintiff asserts, and it is not denied, that he was the original purchaser of the ticket, and his possession of it carried with it the presumption of ownership. The manifest purpose requiring it to be signed was to render it nontransferable, and to identify the purchaser, and the mere absence of the signature would not render it void. Walker v. Price, 62 Kan. 327, 84 Am. St. Rep. 392, 62 Pac. 1001; Gregory v. Burlington & M. River R. Co. 10 Neb. 250, 4 N. W. 1025; Kent v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 45 Ohio St. 284, 4 Am. St. Rep. 539, 12 N. E. 798.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The company sold plaintiff the ticket to enable him to take passage thereon. It could not with reason accept his money and give to him a contract which its agent knew was void. The requirement of the signature was for the benefit of the company. It was beneficial to it that no one but the purchaser should use the ticket, and the time when that fact was intended to be made manifest was at the time of its purchase. This is clear, not only from conditions surrounding and existing in the transaction, but from the fact that the face of the ticket itself shows that the agent was expected to witness the purchaser's signature. It may be said to be a matter of common knowledge that passengers purchasing tickets state to ticket agents their route and destination, and rely largely on the agents to supply them with tickets meeting their requirements. And certainly it cannot be said to be a reasonable and just rule which would permit the agent of a company to sell and deliver to a passenger a ticket in such condition that the same will be refused and the passenger ejected on its presentation. If, under the facts in this case, the signing of this ticket was essential to its validity, the time to have required that was when the company took plaintiff's money for transportation; and it was too late to insist upon this right under the contract after plaintiff had boarded the train, and was taking passage on the return part thereof. In other words, the company cannot accept and keep plaintiff's money, and then refuse to carry him because of an oversight of this character on the part of one of its agents. In the condition that this record comes to us, the plaintiff's evidence must be taken as true. He was the original purchaser, and, under the circumstances, his ejection from the train was wrongful. In a similar case, the supreme court of Ohio, in the case of Kent v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. supra, said: "According to the company's instructions to agents, and by the uniform custom regulating the sale of such tickets, they were required to be signed before their delivery to the purchasers. The company saw fit, in the case at bar, to dispense with this requirement. It received the plaintiff's money, delivered him the ticket, in his ignorance of any request that he sign it, honored it for several trips without first requiring him to sign its conditions. It thereby waived this requirement, and its conductor was not justified, while it still retained plaintiff's money, in ejecting him from its cars by reason of his failure to sign the ticket, which had already gone into full effect between the parties, and his failure to pay the usual fare in money for a passage which was already paid for."

And the supreme court of Nebraska, in the case of Gregory v. Burlington & M. River R. Co. supra, said: "The general rule is 'that proof of possession of personal property is presumptive proof of ownership.' 1 Greenl. Ev. § 34. This presumption certainly obtains in this case. The plaintiff was in possession of a ticket issued by a lawfully authorized agent of the company. It was regular in form, properly stamped; in fact, a first-class ticket, with certain conditions. The conditions were not signed, but there is no proof that the holder was requested to sign the same. There is no allegation in the answer that the ticket was stolen, nor that the plaintiff was not the original purchaser, nor is there a particle of proof to that effect; yet we are asked to declare the ticket void, because the agent selling the same did not require the purchaser to sign the conditions, as it is claimed the rules of the company require. There is no proof whatever that the plaintiff had any knowledge of such rules. And the fact that he presented the ticket for stamping at Lincoln without such signature is evidence tending to prove such lack of knowledge on his part. It will hardly be contended that the plaintiff can be affected by the neglect of the company's agent. He was the agent of their own selection for the sale of tickets. He was authorized to receive the consideration and issue and stamp the ticket and coupons. Can the company plead his default as a defense? Suppose the rules of the company required each conductor of the train to require the holder of such ticket to sign his name to the same, and a portion or all of them neglected to do so, would the ticket thereby be rendered void, if the company retained the consideration? The statement of the proposition shows its absurdity. But even if the agent has failed in some respects in the performance of his duty, still as between the plaintiff and the company, it must bear the loss. And in any event, the defendant cannot retain the consideration and plead the laches of its agent as a defense to the ticket."

Counsel for defendant also complain in their third assignment that the court erred in giving an instruction authorizing the jury to impose exemplary damages upon the defendant as punishment for the offense of ejecting plaintiff. There is a diversity of judicial expression upon this subject, but it is not necessary for us in this case to enter into any protracted discussion thereof. The facts in this case arose and it was brought in the Indian territory, prior to the erection of the state of Oklahoma, and, the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States being controlling in that jurisdiction, this court is bound by the same. See Moore v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (Okla.) 110 Pac. 1059, which, upon this question, is on all fours with the instant case, and the cases therein cited, wherein the rule above noted is laid down and observed, and wherein this court, following the case of Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 109, 37 L. ed. 102, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 261, held substantially that, under the decisions controlling in a territory, exemplary or punitive damages are not allowable against a principal unless the evidence showed that the principal participated in the wrongful act of the agent, expressly or impliedly, by his conduct, authorizing or approving it, either before or after its commission. Under the authorities noted therein, the instruction given, authorizing the jury to return a verdict for exemplary damages, was error.

This conclusion on our part renders it unnecessary to notice the other questions raised in the case, except the error of the court alleged to have been committed in instructing the jury to allow plaintiff such damages as would compensate him for loss of time occasioned by the wrongful ejection. As there was no evidence in the record upon which this instruction could be predicated, and no showing of the value of time lost, this was error. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Daniels (Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 426.

The judgment of the trial court is, accordingly, reversed, and the case remanded, with instructions to set the same aside, and allow defendant a new trial.

Turner, Williams, Hayes, and Kane, JJ., concur.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

LOWE MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
Appt.,

v.

CLARA PAYNE.

(— Ala. —, 52 So. 447.)

Master — dangerous order — right to obey.

The operator of a machine in a factory is not justified in obeying an order of his boss to clean the machine while it is in motion, if he knows the operation to be dangerous, so as to be entitled to hold his master liable for an injury resulting from the attempt.

(April 21, 1910.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Law and Equity Court for Madison County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Lawrence Cooper and George P. Cooper, for appellant.*

The master is not liable, as plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

Mundhenke v. Oregon City Mfg. Co. 47 Or. 127, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 278, 81 Pac. 977; 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Townsend v. Langles, 41 Fed. 919; St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 63 L.R.A. 551, 61 C. C. A. 477, 126 Fed. 495; Ennis v. The Maharajah, 1 C. C. A. 181, 1 U. S. App. 20, 49 Fed. 111; Williams v. J. G. Wagner Co. 110 Wis. 458, 86 N. W. 157; Foley v. Pettet Mach. Works, 149 Mass. 294, 4 L.R.A. 51, 21 N. E. 304; Wilson v. Massachusetts Cotton Mills, 169 Mass. 67, 47 N. E. 506; Goodridge v. Washington Mills Co. 160 Mass. 234, 35 N. E. 484; Russell v. Tillotson, 140 Mass. 201, 4 N. E. 231; Cudahy Packing Co. v. Marcan, 54 L.R.A. 258, 45 C. C. A. 515, 106 Fed. 645; E. S. Higgins Carpet Co. v. O'Keefe, 25 C. C. A. 220, 51 U. S. App. 74, 79 Fed. 900; Fones v. Phillips, 39 Ark. 17, 43 Am. Rep. 264.

Messrs. Taylor & Drake for appellee.

Simpson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action by the appellee against the appellant, for damages on account of an injury to the hand, received by the plaintiff as an employee of the defendant. The injury complained of is the loss of a por-

Note. — Servant's right of action for injuries received in obeying a direct command.

The earlier cases of this character are collected and discussed in a note to Dallemand v. Saalfeldt, 48 L.R.A. 753, and this note is supplemental thereto.

Cases are not included in which the servant was acting under general orders or commands of the master, or where the orders could not be considered in any way the proximate cause or one of the proximate causes of the injury, or, as is said in Illinois Car & Equipment Co. v. Walch, 132 Ala. 490, 31 So. 470, where the direction was not a part of the res gestæ.

Cases have not been included in which the servant, while employed in the execution of orders from the master, is injured by some positive act of negligence on the part of the master which is entirely disconnected from the orders.

An example of this kind is Illinois C. R. Co. v. Jones, 119 Ky. 158, 80 S. W. 484, where it was held that the fact that the servant voluntarily took part in attempting to make a flying or running switch, which was prohibited by a rule of the company, will not alone prevent his recovery for injuries caused thereby if his superiors ordered it, and then negligently failed to take the ordinary care required by the circumstances to avoid injuring him. A very similar case is that of Crotty v. Chicago. G. W. R. Co. 95 C. C. A. 91, 169 Fed. 593.

As to assumption of risk of overstraining muscles in lifting weights under immediate direction of master or vice principal, see note to Stenvog v. Minnesota Transfer R. Co. 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 362.

As to servant's disobedience for rule in tion of one of the fingers of plaintiff, and the first count alleges defects in the ways, works, etc., in that the cogs were not sufficiently covered to prevent injuries, and that said defect had not been remedied, etc. (in the language of subd. 1 of § 3910, Code of 1907). The second count alleges that plaintiff was a minor, twelve years old, working at a spinning frame, under the orders of a section hand, who ordered her to work at said spinning frame machine, and to whose orders she was bound to conform and did conform, etc., and that "the said Jim Hudgins, as section hand," failed to inform plaintiff of the defective and dangerous condition of the machine, which he knew, and ordered her to clean the cogs while the machine was in rapid motion, etc.

obedience to orders of superior, see note to Dougherty v. Dobson, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 90.

As to servant's right of action for injuries received in obeying direct command accompanied by assurance of safety, see note to Brown v. Lennane, post, 453.

Effect of command in general.

In the great majority of all the cases involving the liability of the master for injuries received by a servant in obeying a direct command, the court recognizes that the command may modify to some degree the rule of law otherwise applicable. Frequently, however, the facts are such that the ordinary rules govern notwithstanding the order or command; as, for instance, where the servant is himself reckless in the manner in which he performs the act, or where the servant was in entire ignorance of the danger, and acted with due care for his own safety; in other words, the servant does not gain anything by the fact that he is acting in obedience to the master's commands, either because of his own conduct, or because the master's liability is definitely fixed independent of the direct command.

Even in many cases in which the facts are such that the command or order may affect the result, it is very difficult to determine just to what extent the result is affected. The direct command of the master merely adds one more circumstance to the case, and its weight will be different in practically every case. It is said in Jensen v. Kyer, 101 Me. 106, 63 Atl. 389, in the infinite variety of facts and circumstances presented by negligence cases it is rarely of profit to examine and compare the facts of other cases; the difficulty is in drawing the inference from the facts under the rules of law. While this is an extreme statement, and perhaps not especially applicable to the question under discussion, it points out the extreme difficulty of accurately classifying cases of the character included in this note.

It may be said generally that some cases apparently lay down the rule that neither 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The third count is based upon the inexperience of the plaintiff, the failure to warn her of the dangers, and ordering her to clean the cogs while in motion. Demurrer was sustained to count 4, and count 5 relies upon the negligence of said Hudgins, who had superintendence, etc., in directing plaintiff to perform dangerous work, she being inexperienced, etc. Pleas of contributory negligence and assumption of risk were interposed.

No evidence was offered by the defendant. The plaintiff testified that she was fourteen years old last December; that she received the injury while cleaning the frame, and that "Jim Hudgins, section hand," ordered her "to clean the frame when it was running;" also that she had been engaged in the question of assumption of risk nor that of contributory negligence is affected by the fact that the servant is injured while obeying the master's command; while, on the other extreme, many cases hold that all question of assumption of risk is eliminated, and that the question of contributory negligence, so far as it arises from the mere fact that the servant obeyed the command, is for the jury. Between these extremes, a great variety of expressions of the rule may be found, all probably more or less affected by the facts before the court. The attempt has been made, so far as possible, to group the cases according to very general rules, rather than for the purpose of asserting and supporting specific rules for the individual case.

Of course, no liability attaches to the master because of his orders unless the master is in some way negligent, either in connection with the order, or in connection with the conditions under which the order must be executed.

St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Goins, 90 Ark. 387, 119 S. W. 277; Garden City Wire Spring Co. v. Boecher, 94 Ill. App. 96; Gallivan v. McCarthy, 147 Ill. App. 545; Ervin v. Evans, 24 Ind. App. 335, 56 N. E. 725; Weed v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 5 Neb. (Unof.) 623, 99 N. W. 827.

The order will not create any liability on the part of the master if he is not negligent in respect thereto. Swierz v. Illinois Steel Co. 231 Ill. 456, 83 N. E. 168.

Negligence will not be inferred from the mere fact that the servant was ordered to do a dangerous piece of work; some act of positive negligence must be shown. Turner v. Southern P. Co. 142 Cal. 580, 76 Pac. 384.

The direct command of the master to do a work does not affect his liability, where the risks incurred are only the ordinary risks of the service.

Dixon v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 71 Fed. 143; The Pegasus, 96 Fed. 623; Greeley v. Foster, 32 Colo. 292, 75 Pac. 351; Poorman Silver Mines v. Devling, 34 Colo. 37, 81 Pac. 252; Coal Valley Min. Co. v. Nelson, 87

the work for nearly a year, that she cleaned around the cogs every day, but that she always stopped the frame before cleaning, until the day of the injury; that she was rubbing around the cogs with a piece of cotton when her hand was caught; that the cogs were all covered by a case, but she got behind the case and put her hand in under the case, where the wheels were, and got caught; that she could have stopped the frame, and the cogs would have stopped running, in which case there would be no danger; but the lever by which the cogs would be stopped was easily movable by the hand; that she knew the cogs were turning when the frame was running; that she knew it was dangerous to touch the cogs when in motion; that she had done the same work at the knitting mills for several months before going to work at defendant's mill; that she knew the spinning frame well, and knew all about the frame, that there was nothing about it that she did not fully understand; that when she first went to work she was told that the cogs were under the casing, and that it was dangerous to handle them when the frame was running; that the frame was in good order, and there was no defect about it; that she had attended school for four years, and could read and write very well.

Jim Hudgins was examined as a witness by the plaintiff, and testified that he had not given any orders to clean the cogs; that it was dangerous to clean them when the machine was running, and against the rules to Ill. App. 180; Linderman Box & Veneer Co. v. Thompson, 127 Ill. App. 134; O'Hare v. Cochecho Mfg. Co. 71 N. H. 104, 93 Am. St. Rep. 499, 51 Atl. 257.

If the act ordered done is not a dangerous thing for the servant to undertake, then the master incurs no responsibility because of the order. Coosa Mfg. Co. v. Williams, 133 Ala. 606, 32 So. 232.

It is unnecessary to cite cases to the proposition that a servant who, while obeying the master's orders, is injured because of some act of positive negligence on his own part which was in no wise the proximate result of the order, cannot rely upon the master's order to relieve him from the effects of such negligence.

If the order which was given was that of a fellow servant merely, of course the servant cannot rely upon it in any way.

An order does not affect the servant's right of recovery in any way unless it was relied upon by him. Knorpp v. Wagner, 195 Mo. 637, 93 S. W. 961.

The doctrine of assumption of risk is not applicable to a seaman where, under the orders of a superior, he makes use of appliances with patent defects. Lafourche Packet Co. v. Henderson, 36 C. C. A. 519, 94 Fed. 871.

In Murphy v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 127 Ill. App. 446, it was held that an order jokingly given by a foreman, and so understood by the employee, is not a command such as would justify an employee in encountering a danger to life or limb, and, when injury results, permit him to recover.

View that assumption of risk is not affected by obeying direct command.

In some jurisdictions, it is the rule that if a servant is aware of the danger, and appreciates it, he will be held to have assumed the risk, regardless of the fact that he may have been acting under a direct command of the master. It should be noted, however, that, in these cases, the servant was not confronted by any sudden emergency requiring immediate action on his part, without time for reflection. Such a 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) condition might modify the rule as applied.

Thus, the assumption of the risk of open and apparent dangers is imposed by law upon a servant, and that he undertook the task under the orders of the foreman does not change the rule. Lee v. Northern P. R. Co. 30 Wash. 388, 81 Pac. 834.

Orders do not modify assumption of risk. Karczewski v. Wilmington City R. Co. 4 Penn. (Del.) 24, 54 Atl. 746; Punkowski v. New Castle Leather Co. 4 Penn. (Del.) 544, 57 Atl. 559.

The master's orders do not relieve the plaintiff where he was experienced in the work, and the danger was obvious. Luckey v. Soffield (N. J. L.) 57 Atl. 870.

Where a servant knows and appreciates the danger of the act which he undertakes, he does not any the less assume the risk of injury, or become chargeable with contributory negligence, as the case may be, because he undertakes it under the direction of his superior. Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Crotty, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 832, 73 C. C. A. 147, 141 Fed. 913.

Even though the servant may perform the work unwillingly, under orders from his superior, yet, if there was no physical compulsion, and if he knew and appreciated the danger thereof, he will in law be treated as having elected to bear the risk, and cannot hold the employer liable if injury results. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Jones, 77 Ark. 367, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 837, 92 S. W. 244, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 430.

It is the general rule that an employee who, knowing and appreciating the danger, enters upon a perilous work, even though he does so unwillingly, and by order of his superior officer, assumes the risk of injury, and cannot recover damages therefor. Haywood v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. 38 Tex. Civ. App. 101, 85 S. W. 433.

And in Dickenson v. Vernon, 77 Conn. 537, 60 Atl. 270, the court said: "Although he may have been unwilling to undertake this duty, which was more dangerous than those he had engaged to do, yet if, with such knowledge of its dangerous character, he attempted its performance, because directed by do so. Tom Pruitt, a witness for plaintiff, testified substantially to the same effect, and also testified to a copy of the rules which were printed and hung on the wall at the entrance of the spinning room, one of which is: "Cleaning of machinery must be done after stopping time. All help are cautioned not to clean machinery while running, as it is dangerous." He also testified that he had spoken to the plaintiff, about the danger of cleaning while the frame was running, had told her of this danger not more than an hour before she was hurt, had seen her wiping off the frame while it was in motion, and told her to keep her hand away from the gear head, that she stopped while he was there, and in half or three quarters of an hour she had been hurt and was being carried out.

It will be noticed that the only evidence which has the least tendency to sustain any allegation of the complaint is the statement by the plaintiff that "Jim Hudgins, section hand," ordered her "to clean the frame when it was running." Whether that expression means that his order was that she should clean it while it was running, or merely that the order was given while it was running, does not clearly appear; but, however that may be, the plaintiff does not testify that he was one whose orders she was bound to obey, etc., nor that he had any superintendence, nor is there any testimony tending to show that. On the contrary, her witness, Hudgins, testified that Tom Pruitt was over his employer, and from fear that he might otherwise lose his employment, he was not, for these reasons, relieved of the assumption of the hazards incident to the employment."

So, the question of the servant's assumption of risk is determined in the following cases as dependent, as in all other cases, solely upon the servant's knowledge and appreciation of the danger and his willingness to incur it; and no additional responsibility attaches to the master because of his direct commands to the servant.

Sauvageau v. River Spinning Co. 120 Fed. 961; Kinzel v. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. 69 L.R.A. 757, 70 C. C. A. 73, 137 Fed. 489; Southern R. Co. v. Logan, 71 C. C. A. 281, 138 Fed. 725; New England Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Butler, 84 C. C. A. 217, 156 Fed. 321; Briggs v. Tennessee, Coal, Iron & R. Co. 163 Ala. 237, 50 So. 1025; Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Walker, 164 Ala. 33, 51 So. 169; Dickenson v. Vernon, supra; Worlds v. Georgia R. Co. 99 Ga. 283, 25 S. E. 646; Hanson v. Hammell, 107 Iowa, 171, 77 N. W. 839; Reis v. Struck, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1113, 64 S. W. 729; Cunningham v. Lynn & B. Street R. Co. 170 Mass. 298, 49 N. E. 440; Cristanelli v. Saginaw Min. Co. 154 Mich. 423, 117 N. W. 910; Miller v. Grieme, 53 App. Div. 276, 65 N. Y. Supp. 813; Kueckel v. O'Connor, 73 App. Div. 594, 76 N. Y. Supp. 829; Gensen v. Ohio Oil Co. 22 Ohio C. C. 276; Mayott v. Norcross Bros. 24 R. I. 187, 52 Atl. 894; Russell v. Riverside Worsted Mills, 24 R. I. 591, 54 Atl. 375; Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Ramp, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 483, 70 S. W. 568; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Sanchez (Tex. Civ. App.) 65 S. W. 893; Gilmartin v. Kilgore (Tex. Civ. App.) 114 S. W. 398; Texas Bitulithic Co. v. Hutton (Tex. Civ. App.) 116 S. W. 146; Krisch v. Richter (Tex. Civ. App.) 130 S. W. 186; Bier v. Hosford, 35 Wash. 544, 77 Pac. 867; Hencke v. Ellis, 110 Wis. 532, 86 N. W. 171.

A complaint was held to be insufficient in Chicago & B. Stone Co. v. Nelson, 32 Ind. App. 355, 69 N. E. 705, in not alleging that the servant did not know of the dangers of the place in which he was ordered to work. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And in Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Hill, 112 Ill. App. 475, it was held that, notwithstanding the servant was injured while obeying a direct command of the master, the complaint was defective in not alleging that the danger was not an obvious one to the servant.

So, in Shaver v. Home Teleph. Co. 36 Ind. App. 233, 114 Am. St. Rep. 373, 75 N. E. 288, it was held that a complaint must negative the servant's knowledge of the danger.

In Gould Steel Co. v. Richards, 30 Ind. App. 348, 66 N. E. 88, an instruction was held not to be erroneous as tending to mislead the jury into concluding that there might have been a recovery even if the plaintiff had actually known of the danger in obeying the command of a superior.

And in Wilson v. Southern R. Co. 73 S. C. 481, 53 S. E. 968, the trial court charged the jury as follows: "That the fact that the servant's work is done in the presence and under the immediate direction of the master's foreman . . . is equivalent to the assurance by the master that the servant may safely proceed to the work required of him, and he is therefore not bound in such a case to search for danger. He may rely for safety upon the conduct of the conductor." This instruction was held not to be erroneous, against the contention that it relieved the plaintiff from the obligation to exercise ordinary care to avoid danger, and that it declared that, no matter what the conditions were, whether known to the conductor or not, or whether known to the plaintiff or not, the latter might blindly go ahead and do what he was told to do.

—illustrative cases.

In the following cases, the servant was denied a recovery upon the ground of assumed risk, notwithstanding he was, when injured, acting in obedience to a direct command:

A brakeman who, in the absence of an emergency justifying his action, participated in staking a car, with full knowledge seer and acting section hand, and that it was his duty to give orders to the hands. In addition, her own testimony shows that she was perfectly familiar with the machine, and fully aware of the danger; and, even if such order had been given by a proper person, she should not have obeyed it. 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 438, pp. 1234 et seq. See also as to the general liability in such cases, Mundhenke v. Oregon City Mfg. Co. 47 Or. 127, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 278, 81 Pac. 977; Townsend v. Langles (C. C.) 41 Fed. 919; St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 63 L.R.A. 551, 61 C. C. A. 477, 126 Fed. 495; Ennis

v. The Maharajah, 1 C. C. A. 481, 1 U. S. App. 20, 49 Fed. 111; E. S. Higgins Carpet Co. v. O'Keefe, 25 C. C. A. 220, 51 U. S. App. 74, 79 Fed. 900; Fones v. Phillips, 39 Ark. 17, 43 Am. Rep. 264; Moss v. Mosely, 148 Ala. 168, 41 So. 1012.

The plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. The court should have given the general affirmative charge, as requested by the defendant. The judgment of the court is reversed, and the cause remanded.

Dowdell, Ch. J., and McClellan and Mayfield, JJ., concur.

and appreciation of the danger, assumed the risk of injury, although the conductor may have been negligent in directing that the car be staked when there was another and safe method of accomplishing the same result, and in directing the use of an engine and train in the process of staking when the use of the engine alone was reasonably possible and less dangerous. Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Crotty, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 832, 73 C. C. A. 147, 141 Fed. 913.

A railroad engineer who obeys, although reluctantly, an order to take his train through a mountainous region on its regular trip at a time of heavy rains, when landslides are anticipated, assumes the risk of such slides, and cannot hold the company responsible in case his train is carried from the track by a slide which comes upon it so suddenly that there is no time to escape, and the danger of which was not observed by a track inspector, who had passed the spot just before the train reached there; since it must be regarded as pure accident. Kinzel v. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. 69 L.R.A. 757, 70 C. C. A. 73, 137 Fed. 489.

The mere fact that a section man was proceeding along the track in pursuance of an order of his foreman does not relieve him of assuming the risk from passing trains of which the foreman had no knowledge greater than that of the servant. Ives v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 128 Wis. 357, 107 N. W. 452.

A servant employed in deepening a canal assumes the risk of the fall of standing trees, in complying with the request of his foreman to assist in extinguishing a fire spreading through swamp and underbrush towards property of the employer on the canal bank, the danger of which is as obvious to him as to any person engaged in saving the property. Maltbie v. Belden, 167 N. Y. 307, 54 L.R.A. 52, 60 N. E. 645.

If the danger incurred by the servant was not in the manner of digging in a clay bank, but in undermining without leaving supports, and was fully understood by the servant, then there is no ground for the application of the principle that an employee does not assume the risks so as to preclude a recovery where he is acting in obedience to a positive order at a work which, while perilous, threatens no immediate danger. Cisney v. Pennsylvania Sewer Pipe Co. 199 Pa. 519, 49 Atl. 309.

In International & G. N. R. Co. v. Royall, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 261, 83 S. W. 713, the court said that if the plaintiff was aware of the danger, or if it was obvious and apparent, or if he should, in the exercise of common prudence or ordinary care, have become aware of the danger of going under a car which was being lifted by hydraulic jacks, in obedience to the orders of a superior, it was a risk that was assumed, notwithstanding that the superior may have negligently ordered him to go under there.

After stating that a servant is not required to exercise diligence in order to discover that the master is personally negligent after receiving an order to do a certain work under the immediate control and supervision of the master, the court further said: "But if, during the progress of the work which the servant is then engaged in, in obedience to the direction of the master, the latter, by his negligent conduct, then exposes the servant to peril, and the servant becomes aware of that fact in time, by the means and opportunities then existing, to escape from such danger, but negligently fails to do so, he is precluded from a recovery, notwithstanding the master's negligence."

A lineman who knows of the danger incurred in passing a rope under charged wires incurs the risk of obeying an order to so pass the rope. Newnom v. Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 669.

An adult employed in driving a mule to remove coal from a mine, which became frightened at an object which it was required to pass, and broke away and ran out of the mine, assumed the risk of injury when, upon the direction of the boss, he resumes work with the same animal, although under protest, so that he cannot hold the mine owner liable for injuries caused by a similar performance on the part of the mule when again encountering the same object. Milby & B. Coal & Min. Co. v. Balla, 7 Ind. Terr. 629, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 695, 104 S. W. 860.

A servant assumes the risk of the danger of the slipping of an ordinary ladder, although directed to use the same by a superintendant. McDonnell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 192 Mass. 538, 78 N. E. 548.

And in Consolidated Barb Wire Co. v. Maxwell, 116 Ill. App. 296, it was held that the direction of a foreman to "go ahead, the tools are all right," would not relieve the plaintiff from the operation of the rules respecting assumption of risk, where he was able fully to comprehend and understand the dangers. In this case, however, the servant was injured by reason of the failure of the defendant to furnish him with a small clutch or clamp for the purpose of holding a steel tool, and the fact that the promise was made in regard to the furnishing of a simple tool may affect the decision.

View that contributory negligence is not affected by obeying direct command.

The test of a servant's conduct as to negligence is in many cases asserted to be the same where he is obeying a direct command as in all other cases; namely, was the conduct that of a reasonably prudent man under like circumstances?

Thus, in Tubler v. Johnson-McLean Co. 74 Neb. 840, 105 N. W. 247, in speaking of the contributory negligence of a servant in obeying an order of the master, the court said: "The test of contributory negligence in such cases, as in others, is whether the servant, in obeying, conducts himself as a man of ordinary prudence would conduct himself under the circumstances."

And in Kelland v. Jos. W. Noone's Sons Co. 75 N. H. 168, 71 Atl. 947, where the servant was obeying a direct command, the court said that the test of his contributory negligence was to inquire whether the risk he supposed he was running was so great that all fair-minded men would agree that the ordinary man would not have encountered it.

Where a servant knows and appreciates the danger of the act which he undertakes, he does not any the less become chargeable with contributory negligence because he undertakes it under the direction of his superior. Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Crotty, supra.

The rule that a fireman shall obey the engineman is limited by the other rule that the fireman shall refuse to obey an order which exposes him to known danger; and the true meaning of the latter rule is that the employee must refuse to obey orders known to him to be dangerous beyond the peril to be regarded as reasonably incident to his employment. Stephens v. Southern R. Co. 82 S. C. 542, 64 S. E. 601.

A superior in authority has no authority to order a servant to commit an act the doing of which would obviously, naturally, or necessarily be attended with danger to life or limb, and obedience to such order under such circumstances would be such negligence as would defeat a recovery by the servant. Joswoyak v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 4 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 317.

Where the servant acts voluntarily, and the danger to be incurred is open and obvious, if the master is to be chargeable with negligence for giving the order, then the servant is equally guilty of negligence in obeying it, and cannot recover. Greeley v. Foster, 32 Colo. 292, 75 Pac. 351.

The master is not estopped to claim that the act of the servant was foolhardy and reckless, but, in view of his previous command, such a defense should be viewed with suspicion and scrutinized with care. William v. Tenino Stone Quarries, 48 Wash. 127, 92 Pac. 900.

The giving of an order generally to go to work and do something that is part of the general work in hand which is not, in the doing of it, an increase of the hazard, does not imply an assurance to the employee that there is no danger in the doing of it, irrespective of how the employee may perform what he is told to do. McArthur Bros. Co. v. Nordstrom, 87 Ill. App. 554.

— illustrative cases.

In the following cases the employee was denied a recovery upon the ground of contributory negligence, notwithstanding he was obeying a direct command of the master:

A general order from a conductor to a flagman to catch a train will not justify the latter in attempting to do so at the time when the car is moving at an obviously dangerous rate of speed. Whitley v. Macon & N. R. Co. 104 Ga. 764, 30 S. E. 1003.

A finding of negligence on the part of a foreman who ordered the plaintiff to alight from a moving train, and a finding of freedom from negligence on the part of the plaintiff in obeying the order, are not justified where the danger was equally obvious to both. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Sanders, 42 Ind. App. 585, 86 N. E. 430.

An experienced train man who, at the command of his foreman, jumps off a moving train, is not, as a matter of law, in the exercise of due care, where the command was not accompanied by any words from which a threat of discharge in case of refusal could be inferred. McArthur Bros. Co. v. Troutt, 88 Ill. App. 638.

A servant is not justified in crawling under cars so as to obey an order to cross over the tracks and load cars on the opposite side, where he might have gone around the cars, or might have crossed over the bumpers in comparative safety. Slota v. Albert Lewis Lumber & Mfg. Co. 215 Pa. 434, 64 Atl. 632.

A command to go ahead and start the engine does not justify a servant in running around in front of a moving car, when he could have executed the order as well by passing around the rear of the car. Kansas & T. Coal Co. v. Reid, 29 C. C. A. 475, 57 U. S. App. 464, 85 Fed. 914.

A motorman in charge of a car is guilty of negligence which will bar his recovery for injuries in case he leaves a switch at a passing point, and proceeds toward the next one with full knowledge that the car from the opposite direction has passed it, and is coming toward him at a high rate of speed, although his car has the right of way, and he proceeds under the orders of his conductor and the general instructions of the superintendent. Mason v. Post, 105 Va. 494, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1038, 54 S. E. 311.

The fact that a motorman was ordered to cross a steam railroad track without stopping, and assured that there was no liability of accident, is no excuse to an employee of full age and capacity, who can appreciate the danger as fully as his employer, when, in crossing it, he fails to look or listen for approaching trains. Goodrich v. Chippewa Valley Electric R. Co. 108 Wis. 329, 84 N. W. 419.

The finding by the jury that plaintiff, while executing an order of his superior, came in contact with cog wheels through his own thoughtlessness, is in irreconcilable conflict with a general verdict in his favor. Moorewood Co. v. Smith, 25 Ind. App. 264, 57 N. E. 199.

The negligence of the plaintiff in setting a stool upon which he was to stand while starting a fly wheel in such a way as to require him to catch hold of a cog for support, which resulted in his hand being crushed, precludes a recovery, notwithstanding the foreman ordered him to start the wheel. King v. Southern R. Co. 148 Ala. 666, 41 So. 639.

If a superintendent orders the plaintiff in so many words to adjust the belting on moving machinery in the dark, the servant will be deemed guilty of contributory negligence if he obeys the order. Attleton v. Bibb Mfg. Co. 5 Ga. App. 777, 63 S. E. 918.

If a servant knows that an elevator will fall if he leaves his post, and allows a slack to occur in a rope used to operate the elevator, he is guilty of contributory negligence in leaving such post, even at the command of the foreman, although it was accompanied by a threat of the loss of his employment, where there was no exigency or necessity for him immediately to obey the order. Gensen v. Ohio Oil Co. 22 Ohio C. C. 276.

A servant of long experience as a mill hand, who had acted for months as a foreman of that section of the mill wherein he was injured, and was entirely familiar with the danger of belting pulleys while in motion, was under no duty to subject himself to the danger at the command of the superintendent, and his doing so was such want of due care as to constitute a full defense against the alleged negligence of the superintendent in directing him to belt the revolving pulley. Cousa Mfg. Co. v. Williams, 133 Ala. 606, 32 So. 232.

An experienced miner cannot recover for injuries received in obeying the order of a foreman to sink deeper a hole which contained an unexploded charge of dynamite, where the foreman had, in his presence, examined the hole, and told him to go to work at it. The injury was due either to one of the ordinary risks of the service, or else he himself contributed to it by his remissness in not making a further examination, which his orders in no wise precluded. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Poorman Silver Mines v. Devling, 34 Colo. 37, 81 Pac. 252.

Where the plaintiff knew that he was standing upon loose slats resting upon the edges of a vat containing boiling liquor, and knew that any pressure not vertical might cause them to slip, it was held in Marsen v. Nichols Copper Co. 134 App. Div. 294, 118 N. Y. Supp. 867, that the servant's knowledge of the situation and of the danger was the same as that of the foreman, and if the foreman was negligent in directing the plaintiff to stand upon the slats, it would seem to follow that the plaintiff was negligent in doing it.

An employee cannot recover damages of a railroad company for an injury proximately caused by his violation of a penal statute or municipal ordinance, notwithstanding the fact that the employer may have ordered him to violate the law. Little v. Southern R. Co. 120 Ga. 347, 66 L.R.A. 509, 102 Am. St. Rep. 104, 47 S. E. 953.

View that direct command makes assumption of risk and contributory negligence questions of fact only.

Other cases hold that where the servant is injured while obeying a direct command, the question of the servant's assumption of risk or of his contributory negligence, so far as it consists merely of his obedience, is for the jury,—the fact that the servant was obeying the master's orders having the effect of eliminating both defenses as matters of law.

Thus, in Perrier v. Dunn Worsted Mills, 29 R. I. 396, 71 Atl. 796, the court said: "The questions whether an employee has assumed the risk or has been guilty of contributory negligence, in a case where he is required to do his work in haste, either under orders of his superior, or by reason of the exigency of his position, or because of an emergency, and where his whole energy and attention are absorbed in his work; or whether he may be excused from the degree of care ordinarily required, or for temporary forgetfulness of a risk previously known to him, or of a risk which he might under other circumstances, have remembered or appreciated,—have been generally held to be questions for the jury upon all the facts of the particular case."

So, where a servant, in obedience to the requirements of his master, incurs the risk of machinery or appliances which, although dangerous, are not of such character that they may not be safely used by the exercise of reasonable skill and caution, he does not, as a matter of law, assume the risk of injury from accidents resulting from the master's negligence. Sapp v. Christie Bros. 79 Neb. 701, 113 N. W. 189, 115 N. W. 319.

And a laborer not familiar with the work he was imperatively directed to perform, nor with the situation into which he was hurriedly ordered, and who objected when ordered to do the work, but finally yielded when the foreman insisted, cannot be held, as a matter of law, to be guilty of contributory negligence. Zearfoss v. Norway Iron & Steel Co. 218 Pa. 594, 67 Atl. 867.

In Sherman v. Texas & N. O. R. Co. 99 Tex. 571, 91 S. W. 561, the court said that the law does not require a servant in doubtful matters to disobey the orders of the master at his peril, and where a boy seventeen years of age was put to his election to obey the direction of a superior, and lift a piece of iron which was in fact of too great weight for the boy's strength, or to be discharged "right there," the boy would not be precluded from recovery for injuries received in obeying the order.

Although the plaintiff must have been aware of the serious danger of working where he did, he will not be held guilty of contributory negligence, where he felt obliged to work, under the peril of dismissal if he disobeyed. Oliver v. Dominion Iron & Steel Co. 37 N. S. 183.

In a number of cases it is stated that something must be accorded to the fact that the servant was acting in obedience to a direct command, and a less stringent rule would be applied under such circumstances, and this applies both to assumption of risk and contributory negligence.

Thus, some risk must necessarily be taken in obedience to orders, and the mere exposure to extra hazard under the direct orders of a superior will not defeat a recovery. Southern R. Co. v. Rutledge, 4 Ga. App. 80, 60 S. E. 1011.

So, in Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Thornhill, 141 Ala. 215, 37 So. 412, it was held that the question of the negligence of a section boss in ordering a hand car to be removed from the track in front of an approaching train, and the question of the negligence of the plaintiff, a member of the crew, who attempted to obey the order, were not to be judged by the same standard, for, in addition to the fact that the foreman was in a better position than the plaintiff to comprehend the situation, something was to be accorded, even in the face of such a danger, to the plaintiff's duty and habit of obedience, and to the lack of time for him to consider the situation and to determine his action advisedly, especially as the sudden emergency was itself the product of the boss's negligence; something to his probable and not unreasonable assumption that the foreman would seasonably warn him of the danger, and yet something more to his probable belief that the removal of the car from the track was necessary for the safety of the train men.

And the giving of the order creates the duty of the servant. Republic Iron & Steel Co. v. Williams (Ala.) 53 So. 76.

So, where the servant acts in the presence of the master, and by his personal direction, a much less stringent rule is applied as to his assuming the risk than in other cases. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Graves, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 972, 104 S. W. 356.

The general rule is that a servant may often be deemed to have used ordinary care when acting under the express invitation or the advice of the master, though, but for 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

that circumstance, his conduct would be deemed clear evidence of negligence. Butler Ballast Co. v. Hoshaw, 94 Ill. App. 68.

So, the plaintiff's obedience to the direction of the foreman is a circumstance favoring the absence of contributory negligence as a matter of fact. Regling v. Lehmaier, 50 Misc. 331, 98 N. Y. Supp. 642.

And the effect of a direct order of the master is to tend to relieve the servant from the exercise of that degree of caution which would lawfully be expected of him in the absence of such a command. Moore v. Dudlin Cotton Mills, 127 Ga. 609, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 772, 56 S. E. 839; Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. v. Tilson, 131 Ga. 395, 62 S. E. 281; Southern Cotton-Oil Co. v. Gladman, 1 Ga. App. 259, 58 S. E. 249; Bush v. West Yellow Pine Co. 2 Ga. App. 295, 58 S. E. 529; Southern R. Co. v. Rutledge, supra; Holsey v. Macon, D. & S. R. Co. 6 Ga. App. 637, 65 S. E. 690; Hobbs v. Small, 4 Ga. App. 627, 62 S. E. 91.

A charge upon the question of contributory negligence which eliminated the right of the servant to rely to any extent upon the judgment of his superior, who, with an assurance of safety, had ordered the servant to go ahead, was held in Alabama Consol. Coal & I. Co. v. Heald (Ala.) 53 So. 162, to be erroneous.

It would be unreasonable to require a deliberate judgment from a servant who has received a peremptory order to remove "quick" a dangerous obstruction from in front of a rapidly approaching passenger train. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Atwell, 100 Ill. App. 513, affirmed in 198 Ill. 200, 64 N. E. 1095.

A servant ordered by the foreman of a master to perform a particular work has the right to assume that he will not be exposed to unnecessary perils, and to rest upon the implied assurance that there is no danger. Marshall v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 107 S. W. 883.

In a few cases, it has been held that the order of the master is to be taken into account in determining whether the danger was one which the servant ought to have discovered in the use of reasonable care.

This is the view taken in McClure v. Detroit Southern R. Co. 146 Mich. 457, 109 N. W. 847, where, in passing upon the question whether or not the risk was so obvious that the plaintiff must be held to have assumed it, the court said that the fact that the deceased was ordered under the car by one in authority was to be taken into account in determining whether the deceased was negligent in not informing himself of the danger. Although there is an apparent confusion of the defenses of assumption of risk and contributory negligence, what the court means is clearly that while, in the absence of an order, the court might be able to say, as a matter of law, that the risk undertaken was so obvious that the servant must be held to have known of it if he had exercised ordinary care in observing his surroundings, yet, in view of the act that he was executing a direct order of the master when he incurred the risk, whether or not it was obvious would be a question for the jury.

So, in determining what a servant ought to have known in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, the command of the master and his assurance of safety are to be weighed as part of the attendant circumstances. Jensen v. Kyer, 101 Me. 106, 63 Atl. 389.

An order accompanied by an assurance of safety may properly be considered by the jury in connection with other evidence, in determining whether or not the employee at the time knew and appreciated the risk. Anderson v. Pitt Iron Min. Co. 103 Minn. 252, 114 N. W. 953.

A direct order to do certain work relieves the servant of any necessity of looking for defects. Wilder v. Great Western Cereal Co. 130 Iowa, 263, 104 N. W. 434.

—illustrative cases.

A section hand cannot be presumed to have assumed the risk of removing a hand car from the track in front of an approaching train when ordered so to do by the representative of the master. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Bossert, 44 Ind. App. 245, 87 N. E. 158.

A section hand who is injured while removing a hand car from the track in front of an approaching train, in obedience to the orders of the foreman, had a right to presume that the foreman, who was in a situation to devote his whole attention to the approaching train and to the efforts of his men to get the hand car off the track, could better determine than he what was best to be done under the circumstances, and could not be charged with contributory negligence. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Rickman, 65 Ark. 138, 45 S. W. 56; St. Louis & N. A. R. Co. v. Mathis, 76 Ark. 184, 113 Am. St. Rep. 85, 91 S. W. 763.

An allegation that a hand car was stopped only a few yards in front of an approaching engine, and that the plaintiff and others of the crew were ordered by the boss to remove the car from the track, which order the plaintiff attempted to perform without time to understand and realize the danger, does not show that the plaintiff assumed the risk of the danger. Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Thornhill, supra.

Where the only theory upon which it could be contended that a brakeman was negligent was his failure to jump from a car when he discovered that the brake was not working, the direct command of the conductor would justify him in not jumping, or, at least, it would take away from his act the quality of negligence as a matter of law. Holsey v. Macon, D. & S. R. Co. supra.

Whether a section hand was guilty of contributory negligence so as to preclude a recovery in obeying an order of a superior to jump off a car moving at the rate of 4 or 5 miles an hour was held to be a question for the jury in Chattanooga Electric R. Co. v. Lawson, 101 Tenn. 406, 47 S. W. 489.

An engineer who, by the rules of the company, must obey the orders of the conductor as to starting trains, unless such orders are in violation of the rules of the company, is not deprived of a recovery for injuries received by a collision due to his train passing from a double track to a single track, in violation of the rules of the company, where he had asked the conductor if it was all right to go ahead, and the conductor had given him the regulation signal for starting. Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Miller, 32 Can. S. C. 454.

A car repairer, in going under a motor car at the command of a superior, is not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to notify the motorman or conductor of his position, when the superior issuing the order was in a position to do so, as the repairer had the right to assume that the superior would look out for his safety. Sorenson v. Oregon Power Co. 47 Or. 24, 82 Pac. 10.

In determining whether or not a servant was guilty of contributory negligence while working in a pit under a car, in reaching up over a rail in front of the wheel to feel of a journal, the jury were properly charged that they might take into consideration the fact that the foreman of the car barn had directed the plaintiff to feel of the journal boxes, and find out which one was hot. Jelinek v. St. Paul City R. Co. 104 Minn. 249, 116 N. W. 480; Kochta v. St. Paul City R. Co. 104 Minn. 528, 116 N. W. 482.

A brakeman is not chargeable with contributory negligence nor with assumption of risk in attempting to make a coupling between an engine and a car whose coupler was 7 inches higher than that of the engine, where a similar coupling had been made twice before that day, and he was acting directly under the commands of a superior servant. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Craig, 79 Ark. 53, 95 S. W. 168.

A declaration which alleges that a brakeman obeyed the order of a conductor to station himself on the cab or car at the rear end of the train, for the purpose of giving signals to the engineer as to the backing of the train, does not necessarily, as a matter of law, show that the plaintiff voluntarily exposed himself to an obvious and imminent danger. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Beazley, 54 Fla. 311, 45 So. 761.

A servant called from other work to assist in a ditch, upon work of the manner of doing which the master assumes direction and control, is not bound to inquire into the safety of the place where he is told to stand while working. Hilgar v. Walla Walla, 50 Wash. 470, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 367, 97 Pac. 498.

Whether a servant at work in a trench, who, at the command and under the eyes of the foreman, takes a position under the machinery used for carrying and lowering into the trench heavy iron pipes, is guilty of contributory negligence, is a question of fact for the jury. Pierce v. Arnold Print Works, 182 Mass. 260, 65 N. E. 368.

Where the master directed a servant to go from the trenches where he was at work to assist other men upon a scaffold, in putting up heavy iron pipes, he did not assume the risk of defects in the scaffold, notwithstanding the fact that the scaffolding had been erected by fellow servants of the plaintiff. Hagerty v. Evans, 87 Minn. 435, 92 N. W. 399.

A servant's right to recover cannot be defeated on the ground that he disobeyed an order not to work under certain overhanging ore, where he had been ordered to assist at another kind of work, at another place, and was injured by the fall of the ore. Illinois Steel Co. v. Olste, 214 Ill. 183, 73 N. E. 422.

An experienced lineman is not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to inspect a pole before climbing it, where a foreman, after making an inspection, orders the employee to climb it. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Holtby, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 523, 93 S. W. 652.

An inexperienced lineman working under the direction of the foreman is not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to make an inspection of a pole that he has been ordered to climb. Sias v. Consolidated Lighting Co. 79 Vt. 224, 64 Atl. 1104.

Although a servant may know that a belt is not as safe as it ought to be, yet the judgment of the servant must be held subservient to that of the master who directs him to proceed with the work, except in cases where the danger is plainly observable. Goldthorpe v. Clark-Nickerson Lumber Co. 31 Wash. 467, 71 Pac. 1091.

A servant sent to get two shovels which were standing under a telegraph pole will not be held to have assumed the risk of the pole falling upon him as a result of its being sawed by other servants, under the direction of the same boss. Southern R. Co. v. Rutledge, 4 Ga. App. 80, 60 S. E. 1011.

It is error to hold, as a matter of law, that an employee twenty-four years old, of average intelligence and fair education, is chargeable with knowledge that to throw a bucket of water into the fire box of a smelting furnace, containing a bed of highly heated coals, about 9 feet long, 3 or 4 feet wide, and 3 feet deep, is liable to result in a dangerous explosion, where the evidence warrants the inference that he did the act in obedience to an order from the foreman under whom he worked. Malone v. American Smelting & Ref. Co. 77 Neb. 876, 110 N. W. 572.

Failure of a thirteen-year-old boy to stop and reflect upon the danger of the proceeding before attempting to obey the sudden command of his foreman to remove threads caught in a moving cogwheel does not, as matter of law, render him guilty of negligence, where he does not put his hands upon the cogs, but grasps the threads, which being too strong for him to break, draw his hand into the cogs. Dougherty v. Dobson, 214 Pa. 252, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 90, 63 Atl. 748.

son, 214 Pa. 252, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 90, 63 Atl. 748.

Where a boy sixteen years of age went into an oat bin with which he was not familiar, pursuant to a specific order, it was held in Meier v. Way, J. L. & Co. 136 Iowa, 302, 125 Am. St. Rep. 254, 111 N. W. 420, that the doctrine of assumption of risk had no place, or, at least, it was only a question for the jury.

Whether an order, "When you have a stock, you take some other work to do. Go over to some machine and work," justified a boy fifteen years of age in going to work at a different kind of machine than the one that he had been at work upon, was held to be a question for the jury in Manola v. Enterprise Stamping Co. 223 Pa. 116, 72 Atl. 234.

A plea setting up contributory negligence on the part of the servant is defective in not averring that the safer position therein described, which the servant is alleged to have abandoned for a more dangerous one, was one in which he could have complied with the order of his superior in doing the work; and in not further averring that going between the rails to couple cars was so obviously dangerous under the prevailing conditions that an employee should have disregarded the order of his superior and not undertaken it. Bear Creek Mill Co. v. Parker, 134 Ala. 293, 32 So. 700.

View that servant is not precluded from recovery unless danger is great and imminent.

In some jurisdictions the courts have laid down the rule that a servant will not be denied a recovery for injuries received in obeying a direct command of the master unless the danger to be incurred is so great and imminent that a reasonably prudent man would have refused to incur it. This, in effect, eliminates the defense of assumption of risk, and confines the master to the defense of contributory negligence. In many cases it is stated that the servant does not assume the risk of obeying a direct command unless the danger is so great and imminent that a reasonably prudent man would not assume it. But such a statement implies the proposition that, in order to assume the risk, the servant must act as a reasonably prudent man would not; in other words, he must be negligent. Consequently the legal effect of this rule is that a servant injured in obeying a direct command of the master may recover therefor unless he himself has been negligent, and the question of assumption of risk is wholly eliminated. And the question whether the danger was great and imminent within this rule is almost invariably held to be a question for the jury.

In some states this rule has been declared with such frequency and emphasis that it may safely be stated as the established rule of those jurisdictions, and cases from those states are grouped at the close of this subdivision of the note.

A few judicial statements embodying this rule may be given, and it is to be noted that some of these statements refer to assumption of risk, others to contributory negligence, while still others merely state that the servant is not precluded from recovery unless the risk is great and imminent. The legal effect, however, is the same in all cases.

The doctrine of assumed risks does not obtain when the master is present and the servant is ordered under his eye and by his direction to proceed with the work, although the risk or hazard in prosecuting it is as well-known to the servant as to the master, subject always to the exception that the master may excuse himself upon the ground that the work was obviously and clearly dangerous, and so known to be by the servant. Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. v. Armstrong (Ky.) 125 S. W. 276.

If the danger of obeying an order is not so glaring that no prudent man would have undertaken it, the law will not declare the servant's act of obedience negligence per se, but will leave it to the jury to say whether he ought to have obeyed the order. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Puente, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 246, 70 S. W. 362.

The risk of injury is not taken by a section hand waiting with the crew of a hand car at a station without telegraph connection for the passage of a fast train known to be overdue, in obeying the orders of the boss to the crew, to take the car on to the next station, and permit the train to pass it there, unless the risk is such that a man of ordinary prudence would not assume it, which is a question for the jury. Long v. Illinois C. R. Co. 113 Ky. 806, 58 L.R.A. 237, 101 Am. St. Rep. 374, 68 S. W. 1095.

Where the danger is not so evident that plaintiff might not have relied on the supposedly better judgment of the foreman, or that no prudent man would have obeyed the order of the foreman, then there can be no assumption of risk. Hunley v. Patterson, 116 La. 736, 41 So. 54; Lee v. Powell Bros. & S. Co. (La.) 52 So. 214.

In Perry-Matthews-Buskirk Stone Co. v. Spear (Ind. App.) 73 N. E. 933, the following instruction was held awkward, but was not held erroneous: "Where the servant is ordered to perform his work at a certain place, he may obey such order without being charged with the assumption of risk or contributory negligence unless the danger is so apparent that no prudent person would encounter it."

Where the master commands the servant to go into a dangerous place and perform a dangerous task, or use a defective tool, at a particular time, in a particular way, leaving the latter no discretion as to the time or manner of his performance, the servant may rely upon the command of the master at the master's risk, and not be put to the alternative of either quitting the employment or encountering danger at his own risk, unless the danger is so glaring and extreme as to be apparent to anyone, and one that a prudent man would not encounter. Mellette v. Indianapolis Northern Traction Co. (Ind. App.) 86 N. E. 433.

Similar statements were made in the following cases: Wrightsville & T. R. Co. v. Lattimore, 118 Ga. 581, 45 S. E. 453; Truly v. J. E. North Lumber Co. 83 Miss. 430, 36 So. 4; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Scott (Miss.) 48 So. 239; Ittner Brick Co. v. Killian, 67 Neb. 589, 93 N. W. 951; Lowe v. Southern R. Co. (S. C.) 67 S. E. 460; Houston, E. & W. T. R. Co. v. De Walt, 96 Tex. 121, 97 Am. St. Rep. 877, 70 S. W. 531; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Kelly, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 21, 80 S. W. 1073, affirmed in 98 Tex. 123, 80 S. W. 79; Hightower v. Gray, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 674, 83 S. W. 254; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Wray, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 380, 96 S. W. 74; St. Louis & S. W. R. Co. v. Schuler, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 356, 102 S. W. 783; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Jones (Tex. Civ. App.) 123 S. W. 434; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Swearingen (Tex. Civ. App.) 127 S. W. 1192; Faulkner v. Mammoth Min. Co. 23 Utah, 437, 66 Pac. 799; Washington Southern R. Co. v. Cheshire, 109 Va. 741, 65 S. E. 27; Christianson v. Pacific Bridge Co. 27 Wash. 583, 68 Pac. 191; Green v. Western American Co. 30 Wash. 87, 70 Pac. 310; Withiam v. Tenino Stone Quarries, 48 Wash. 127, 92 Pac. 900.

A similar rule has been asserted in a number of Kentucky cases: Smith v. Kentucky Lumber Co. 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1386, 78 S. W. 120; Dryden v. H. E. Pogue Distillery Co. 26 Ky. L. Rep. 528, 82 S. W. 262; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Keebler, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 305, 84 S. W. 1167; Lindsay v. Hollerbach & M. Contract Co. 29 Ky. L. Rep. 68, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 830, 92 S. W. 294; Central Coal & I. Co. v. Thompson, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 276, 102 S. W. 272; Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Graves, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 972, 104 S. W. 356; Kirby v. Hillside Coal Co. 32 Ky. L. Rep. 519, 106 S. W. 278; Pullman Co. v. Geller, 128 Ky. 72, 129 Am. St. Rep. 295, 107 S. W. 271; Owensboro Stave & Barrel Co. v. Daugherty, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 328, 110 S. W. 319; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Edmonds, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 933, 111 S. W. 331; Long v. Illinois C. R. Co. 113 Ky. 806, 58 L.R.A. 237, 101 Am. St. Rep. 374, 68 S. W. 1095; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Langan, 116 Ky. 318, 76 S. W. 32; Ross-Paris Co. v. Brown, 121 Ky. 821, 90 S. W. 568; Owensboro v. Gabbert, 135 Ky. 346, 122 S. W. 178; Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Schaub, 136 Ky. 652, 124 S. W. 885; Mason, H. & C. Co. v. Henry, 134 Ky. 844, 121 S. W. 1001.

In Kansas a similar rule prevails. Thus, in St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Morris, 76 Kan. 836, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1100, 93 Pac. 153, the court laid down the following rule: Where a master orders a servant into a situation of danger, and, in obeying the command, the servant is injured, he will not be charged with contributory negligence, or with an assumption of the risk, unless the danger was so glaring that no prudent man would have encountered it, even under such orders, provided he acts with reasonable prudence in executing such orders.

The same general rule was asserted in the following cases: Wurtenberger v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 68 Kan. 642, 75 Pac. 1049; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Walker, 79 Kan. 31, 99 Pac. 269; Young v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 82 Kan. 332, 108 Pac. 99.

In Pennsylvania the courts have adopted the rule that if the master give a servant positive orders to go on with the work under perilous circumstances, the servant may recover for an injury thus incurred if the work was not "inevitably and imminently" dangerous; and this is a question for the jury. Reese v. Clark, 198 Pa. 312, 47 Atl. 994; Williams v. Clark, 204 Pa. 416, 54 Atl. 315; Sweigert v. Klingensmith, 210 Pa. 565, 60 Atl. 253; Schiglizzo v. Dunn, 211 Pa. 253, 107 Am. St. Rep. 567, 60 Atl. 724; Gerding v. Standard Pressed Steel Co. 220 Pa. 229, 69 Atl. 672; Hartman v. Reading Wood Pulley Co. 38 Pa. Super. Ct. 587.

In Van Duzen Gas & Gasoline Engine Co. v. Schelies, 61 Ohio St. 298, 55 N. E. 998, the court laid down the following rule: Where an order is given a servant by his superior to do something within his employment apparently dangerous, and in obeying he is injured from the culpable fault of the master, he may recover unless obedience to the order involved such obvious danger that no man of ordinary prudence would have obeyed it; and this is a question of fact for the jury to determine under proper instructions, and not of law for the court.

And the Van Duzen Case was followed in City & Suburban Teleph. Asso. v. Kelly, 28 Ohio C. C. 820; Crockett v. Michael, 29 Ohio C. C. 41.

But in Northern Ohio R. Co. v. Rigby, 69 Ohio St. 184, 68 N. E. 1046, it was held that where the superior, while absent, sends an order to an employee to perform certain work or duty, but leaves to such employee the selection of the means and manner of performing the service, the doctrine of the Van Duzen Case does not apply.

Nor does it apply where the order was merely a general order. Cleveland v. Wolf, 25 Ohio C. C. 406.

—Illinois.

In Illinois the general rule asserted by many cases is that a servant, in obeying a direct command of the master, does not assume the risk of any injury thereby unless the danger is so great that an ordinarily prudent man would not have encountered it; this, as has been pointed out, practically eliminates all question as to assumption of risk. Illinois Steel Co. v. Schymanowski, 162 Ill. 447, 44 N. E. 876; Offutt v. World's Columbian Exposition, 175 Ill. 472, 51 N. E. 651; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Kinnare, 190 Ill. 9, 60 N. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

E. 57; William Graver Tank Works v. O'Donnell, 191 Ill. 236, 60 N. E. 831; Gundlach v. Schott, 192 Ill. 509, 85 Am. St. Rep. 348, 61 N. E. 332; Illinois Steel Co. v. McFadden, 196 Ill. 344, 89 Am. St. Rep. 319, 63 N. E. 671; Western Stone Co. v. Muscial, 196 Ill. 382, 89 Am. St. Rep. 325, 63 N. E. 664; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Sporleder, 199 Ill. 184, 65 N. E. 218; Slack v. Harris, 200 Ill. 96, 65 N. E. 669; Illinois Steel Co. v. Ryska, 200 Ill. 280, 65 N. E. 734; Hartrich v. Hawes, 202 Ill. 334, 67 N. E. 13; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Heerey, 203 Ill. 492, 68 N. E. 74; Cobb Chocolate Co. v. Knudson, 207 Ill. 452, 69 N. E. 816; Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Herath, 207 Ill. 576, 69 N. E. 959; Barnett & R. Co. v. Schlapka, 208 Ill. 426, 70 N. E. 343; Henrietta Coal Co. v. Campbell, 211 Ill. 216, 71 N. E. 863; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Swift, 213 Ill. 307, 72 N. E. 737; Illinois Steel Co. v. Olste, 214 Ill. 181, 73 N. E. 422; Leighton & H. Steel Co. v. Snell, 217 Ill. 152, 75 N. E. 462; Consolidated Coal Co. v. Shepherd, 220 Ill. 123, 77 N. E. 133; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Aufmann, 221 Ill. 614, 112 Am. St. Rep. 207, 77 N. E. 1120; Springfield Boiler & Mfg. Co. v. Parks, 222 Ill. 355, 78 N. E. 809; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Rathneau, 225 Ill. 278, 80 N. E. 119; East St. Louis Connecting R. Co. v. Meeker, 229 Ill. 98, 82 N. E. 202; Marquette Cement Mfg. Co. v. Williams, 230 Ill. 26, 82 N. E. 424; Yarber v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 235 Ill. 589, 85 N. E. 928; Lee v. Republic Iron & Steel Co. 241 Ill. 372, 89 N. E. 655; Union Show Case Co. v. Blindauer, 75 Ill. App. 358, affirmed in 175 Ill. 325, 51 N. E. 709; Colson v. Craver, 80 Ill. App. 99; Pagels v. Meyer, 88 Ill. App. 169, reversed on other grounds in 193 Ill. 172, 61 N. E. 1111; Bennett v. Brown Hoisting & Conveying Mach. Co. 89 Ill. App. 113; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Sporleder, 90 Ill. App. 590; Butler Ballast Co. v. Hoshaw, 94 Ill. App. 68; McFadden v. Sollitt, 94 Ill. App. 271; Hass v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 97 Ill. App. 624; Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hewitt, 102 Ill. App. 428, affirmed in 202 Ill. 28, 66 N. E. 829; Chicago Hair & Bristle Co. v. Mueller, 106 Ill. App. 21, affirmed in 203 Ill. 558, 68 N. E. 51; Illinois Steel Co. v. Wierzbicky, 107 Ill. App. 69, affirmed in 206 Ill. 201, 68 N. E. 1101; Kapaczynski v. Wells & F. Co. 110 Ill. App. 477, affirmed in 218 Ill. 149, 75 N. E. 751; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Bell, 111 Ill. App. 280, reversed on other grounds in 209 Ill. 25, 70 N. E. 754; Sattley Mfg. Co. v. Wendt, 116 Ill. App. 375; Hinchliff v. Robinson, 118 Ill. App. 450; Waukegan v. Sturm, 118 Ill. App. 479; Kraft v. Neunkirchen, 119 Ill. App. 369; American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co. v. Jankus, 121 Ill. App. 267; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Rathneau, 124 Ill. App. 427, affirmed in 225 Ill. 278, 80 N. E. 119; Jefferson Theatre Program Co. v. Crejczyk, 125 Ill. App. 1; Dalton v. Ogden Gas Co. 126 Ill. App. 502; Roehling Constr. Co. v. Thompson, 129 Ill. App. 20, affirmed in 229 Ill. 42, 82 N. E. 106; Chicago, R. I.

& P. R. Co. v. Strong, 129 Ill. App. 196, affirmed in 228 Ill. 281, 81 N. E. 1011; Chicago Suburban Water & Light Co. v. Hyslop, 129 Ill. App. 575, affirmed in 227 Ill. 308, 81 N. E. 379; Glucose Sugar Ref. Co. v. McConnell, 132 Ill. App. 386; Acme Harvester Co. v. Chittick, 132 Ill. App. 611, affirmed in 230 Ill. 553, 82 N. E. 647; Mattoon City R. Co. v. Graham, 138 Ill. App. 70, affirmed in 234 Ill. 483, 84 N. E. 1070, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 853; Corn Product Ref. Co. v. Cherry, 140 Ill. App. 1; Shirk v. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. 140 Ill. App. 22, affirmed in 235 Ill. 315, 85 N. E. 262; Tygett v. Sunnyside Coal Co. 140 Ill. App. 77; Kennedy v. Swift & Co. 140 Ill. App. 141, affirmed in 234 Ill. 606, 123 Am. St. Rep. 113, 85 N. E. 287; Heywood & M. Rattan Co. v. Jacobson, 140 Ill. App. 319, affirmed in 236 Ill. 570, 86 N. E. 110; Illinois Steel Co. v. Brenshall, 141 Ill. App. 36; Malloy v. Kelly-Atkinson Constr. Co. 141 Ill. App. 226, affirmed in 240 Ill. 102, 88 N. E. 234; Chenoweth v. Burr, 146 Ill. App. 443, affirmed in 242 Ill. 312, 89 N. E. 1008.

A servant is not required by law to disobey his master, or, by obeying, assume the hazard of obedience, unless the danger is so imminent that an ordinarily prudent man would not incur it. Offutt v. World's Columbian Exposition, supra.

A servant acting under direct orders of the master assumes no risk unless he acts recklessly in obeying them. Western Stone Co. v. Muscial, supra.

A servant ordered by one in authority to do a dangerous act is not required to balance the degree of danger, and decide with absolute certainty whether he may safely do the act, and, even if he had knowledge of such danger, it would not defeat a recovery for injury, if, in obeying his master's command, he acted with that degree of prudence which an ordinarily prudent man would have used under the same circumstances. Illinois Steel Co. v. McFadden, supra.

Some decisions clearly recognize that under such a rule as asserted by the Illinois courts, the defense of assumption of risk is entirely eliminated, and the master must rely solely upon the defense of contributory negligence.

Thus, in Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Heerey, supra, the court said: "In the case of a promise to repair or of a command, and perhaps some other cases, the question is one of contributory negligence on the part of the servant, depending upon whether the danger was so great that an ordinarily prudent person would not have encountered it. . . . The employee must always exercise the degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would have exercised under the same circumstances, but he does not assume the risk resulting from a direct command."

So, in Springfield Boiler & Mfg. Works v. Parks, supra, it was held that where the danger is so great and imminent that an ordinarily prudent person would not have 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

encountered it, the master escapes liability on the ground of contributory negligence rather than of assumption of risk.

In a few decisions in the appellate courts of Illinois, the rule recognized by many of the Illinois decisions, particularly in the supreme court, namely, that a direct command of the master eliminates any question of assumption of risk, is apparently repudiated, and a servant is held to have assumed the risks of which he has knowledge. Logically these cases should be placed in another division of this note, but it would seem that they do not correctly express the view taken by the supreme court, and probably would be overruled if they were carried to the latter court. It will be seen that they are clearly at variance with the rule of that court as set out above.

Thus, a servant is within the operation of the rule as to assumption of risk where, in obeying the order of the master, the risks incurred are as plainly apparent and understood as they are to the master, who gives the order. Slavik v. Cal Hirsch & Sons Iron & Rail Co. 143 Ill. App. 509.

So, a command of the master will not take away the defense of assumption of risk where the servant knows as well or better than the master that the work is dangerous. Conklin Constr. Co. v. Walsh, 131 Ill. App. 609.

And the direction of the master to a servant to perform an act entirely within the general scope of the employment of the servant does not operate to absolve the servant from the assumption of the risk involved. Kolp v. Decatur R. & Light Co. 145 Ill. App. 645.

So, in Thomas v. John Armstrong Lime & Quarry Co. 147 Ill. App. 88, it was held that a servant is not excused in obeying an order where the danger is as apparent to him as to the master.

The exception to the rule as to assumption of risk was said in Royal Trust Co. v. National Provision Co. 139 Ill. App. 136, to exist where a servant is ordered by his master to do certain work which is attended with danger of which he is not fully cognizant, and he relies upon the order to do the work as an assurance that he may safely perform the task. But the qualification "not fully cognizant" is not given in the great majority of the cases of the supreme court in which the rule is laid down.

An order to continue work, with a promise to sharpen the punch head, without notice or knowledge that the work had become extrahazardous on account of the punch being dull, is not a waiver of the assumption of risk on the part of the master. Equitable Powder Mfg. Co. v. Green, 109 Ill. App. 403.

Where a servant knows and apprehends the danger to which he is exposed quite as well as the foreman, it cannot be said that, in obeying the order of the latter to cross a track in front of a train, in full view, and running at a high rate of speed, he was in the exercise of due care for his own safety.

Weber v. Illinois C. R. Co. 143 Ill. App. 498. And it was further held that the court was justified in directing a verdict for the defendant.

— North Carolina.

In North Carolina the general rule is that the servant does not assume the risk of the master's negligence unless the danger is so great and imminent that a reasonably prudent man would not undertake it. Consequently, if the master or his representative is negligent in giving an express order to do a particular piece of work, and the servant is injured, the latter will not be denied a recovery solely upon the ground of assumption of risk, unless the danger is unreasonably great and imminent, in which case he is in reality guilty of contributory negligence.

And the general implication given in the North Carolina cases of this character is that, except in extreme cases, the question of the servant's contributory negligence, where he is injured by obeying an order of the master, is for the jury; and this especially if the alleged contributory negligence consists solely in remaining at work in obedience to the master's commands in the face of great and imminent danger. Halton v. Southern R. Co. 127 N. C. 255, 37 S. E. 262; Allison v. Southern R. Co. 129 N. C. 336, 40 S. E. 91, reversed on questions of jurisdiction in 190 U. S. 326, 47 L. ed. 1078, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 713; Thomas v. Raleigh & A. Air Line R. Co. 129 N. C. 392, 40 S. E. 201; Elmore v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 132 N. C. 865, 44 S. E. 620; Harrill v. South Carolina & G. Extension R. Co. 135 N. C. 601, 47 S. E. 730; Jones v. American Warehouse Co. 137 N. C. 337, 49 S. E. 355, rehearing denied in 138 N. C. 546, 51 S. E. 106; Fearington v. Blackwell Durham Tobacco Co. 141 N. C. 80, 53 S. E. 662; Liles v. Fosburg Lumber Co. 142 N. C. 39, 54 S. E. 795; Biles v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 143 N. C. 78, 55 S. E. 512; Avery v. West Lumber Co. 146 N. C. 592, 60 S. E. 646; Noble v. John L. Roper Lumber Co. 151 N. C. 76, 134 Am. St. Rep. 974, 65 S. E. 622.

In the Allison Case, supra, the court approved instructions to the following effect: If a vice principal suddenly commands a laborer to do an extrahazardous act in the course of his duty (remove a hand car from the track in front of a rapidly approaching train), one that may, though not probably, be safely done by observing due care, and one that must be done at once if done at all, and if the laborer obeys the command promptly, moved only by a faithful sense of duty, and, as a consequence, suffers serious bodily injury, in that case the injured party does not contribute to his own injury.

The order of a foreman is pertinent to repel an imputation of contributory negligence. Fearington v. Blackwell Durham Tobacco Co. supra.

But in extreme cases the servant may be held guilty of negligence as a matter of law.

Thus, the court in Allison v. Southern R. Co. supra, said that a person would certainly be guilty of contributory negligence if he obeyed the orders of his superior in cases where it appeared reasonably certain that his obedience would be attended with injury to himself.

To order a brakeman to get a rock and scotch a rolling car in the night time is negligence on the part of a railroad company, acting through its conductor, and therefore the company is liable unless the injury was caused by the negligent manner in which the brakeman performed the duty assigned him. Haltom v. Southern R. Co. supra.

— Missouri.

In Missouri, according to the overwhelming weight of authority, a servant never assumes the risk of the master's negligence, and his knowledge of the danger does not affect his right of recovery so far as the question of assumption of risk is concerned, and consequently an order of the master can only affect his right of recovery to the extent that it may be considered as modifying the standard of due care which the servant is obliged to exercise.

In a few Missouri cases in which there was a direct command of the master, the courts do speak of the servant's assumption of risk, and in such cases hold that if the servant is acting under the immediate commands of his master, he will not be held to have assumed the risk of dangers unless they are so glaring and imminent that a reasonably prudent man would not have encountered them. Bokamp v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 123 Mo. App. 270, 100 S. W. 689; Buckner v. Stock Yards Horse & Mule Co. 221 Mo. 700, 120 S. W. 766; Dean v. St. Louis Woodenware Works, 106 Mo. App. 167, 80 S. W. 292.

Although a servant knows that a machine is dangerous, yet, if she is ordered to proceed to work upon it, under a penalty of losing her position or being reduced in pay, the question of the assumption of the extra risk of using the dangerous machine is a question for the jury. Adolff v. Columbia Pretzel & Baking Co. 100 Mo. App. 199, 73 S. W. 321.

In many cases the court states that if the master orders the servant into a place of danger, and the servant is injured, he is not guilty of contributory negligence unless the danger was so glaring that a reasonably prudent man would not have entered into it. Harff v. Green, 108 Mo. 308, 67 S. W. 576; Butz v. Murch Bros. Constr. Co. 199 Mo. 279, 97 S. W. 895; Kennedy v. Laclede Gaslight Co. 215 Mo. 688, 115 S. W. 407; Thompson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 86 Mo. App. 141; Browning v. Kasten, 107 Mo. App. 59, 80 S. W. 354; Buckalew v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. 107 Mo. App. 575, 81 S. W. 1176; Wilson v. Kansas City Southern R. Co.

122 Mo. App. 667, 99 S. W. 465; Bokamp v. Chicago & A. R. Co. supra; Jennings v. Swift & Co. 130 Mo. App. 391, 110 S. W. 21; Morgan v. Missouri P. R. Co. 136 Mo. App. 337, 117 S. W. 106; Wilson v. United R. Co. 142 Mo. App. 676, 121 S. W. 1083.

In such a statement of the rule, however, it is difficult to see how the order of the master affects the situation in any way, because, independent of the order of the master, the servant would be considered guilty of contributory negligence if the danger was so glaring that a reasonably prudent man would not encounter it, and probably the only effect of the master's orders in such cases would be that the orders were to be considered by the jury as one of the circumstances which they were to consider in determining whether or not the danger was so glaring that a reasonably prudent man would not have encountered it. As was said above, it is difficult clearly and definitely to express just to what extent the order of the master does affect the situation.

Where a servant was at work on the third floor of a building in the process of erection, engaged in passing up lumber to carpenters at work on the roof, and the floor on which he was standing consisted simply of a network of girders and joists, with an occasional board left lying from girder to joist, it was held in Butz v. Murch Bros. Constr. Co. supra, that the mere fact that obedience to the order of the master to do that particular work was accompanied by some danger, and that the danger was known to the servant, would not prevent a recovery unless the danger was so glaring that a reasonably prudent man would not have undertaken it; and that was a question for the jury.

An instruction assuming it to be the servant's duty to obey a city ordinance should not, in a suit between the master and servant, ignore the question of the master's order on the subject. Moore v. St. Louis Transit Co. 193 Mo. 411, 91 S. W. 1060.

Even in Missouri, a servant must use ordinary reasonable care for his own safety, notwithstanding he is obeying a direct command of the master.

This, although a street car foreman may have issued a negligent order requiring a motorman to make a run within a certain time, such order does not excuse the motorman from exercising due care in avoiding a collision with another car. McGahan v. St. Louis Transit Co. 201 Mo. 500, 100 S. W. 601.

If the master negligently orders and directs the servant's act which renders it unsafe and occasions an injury, a prima facie liability arises on account of the negligent order, unless the dangers are so obvious and imminent as to preclude the right of recovery on the theory of contributory negligence, or it appears the risk is an ordinary one, assumed by the servant. In the circumstances stated, the order of the master implies an assurance that the place is reasonably safe. Bennett v. Crystal Carbonate Lime Co. (Mo. App.) 124 S. W. 608.

Where master's liability is fixed regardless of the command.

In many cases, although the order to do certain work had been given, it does not appear that such order affected the decision in any way, as the facts of the case are such that the order does not add any to the liability of the master; as for instance, where the servant was entirely ignorant of the danger to be incurred, or where he was inexperienced, and the master had failed to instruct him of the danger, etc. The Ethelred, 96 Fed. 446; McGhee v. Campbell, 42 C. C. A. 94, 101 Fed. 936; National Steel Co. v. Hore, 83 C. C. A. 578, 155 Fed. 62; American Window Glass Co. v. Noe, 86 C. C. A. 133, 158 Fed. 777; American Window Glass Co. v. Arnold, 86 C. C. A. 137, 158 Fed. 781; Snipes v. Southern R. Co. 91 C. C. A. 593, 166 Fed. 1; Delaware & H. Co. v. Beemer, 96 C. C. A. 493, 171 Fed. 821; Moss v. Mosely, 148 Ala. 168, 41 So. 1012; Alabama Steel & Wire Co. v. Tallant (Ala.) 51 So. 835; Goosby v. Crossett Lumber Co. 91 Ark. 86, 120 S. W. 399; Staubley v. Potomac Electric Power Co. 21 App. D. C. 160; Western & A. R. Co. v. Bryant, 123 Ga. 77, 51 S. E. 20; Diezi v. G. H. Hammond Co. 156 Ind. 583, 60 N. E. 353; Republic Iron & Steel Co. v. Berkes, 162 Ind. 517, 70 N. E. 815; Struble v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 128 Iowa, 158, 103 N. W. 142; Wildner v. Great Western Cereal Co. 130 Iowa, 283, 104 N. W. 434; B. F. Avery & Son v. Meek (Ky.) 45 S. W. 355; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cason (Ky.) 116 S. W. 716; Southern R. Co. v. Hart, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1054, 64 S. W. 630; Shanks v. Citizens' General Electric Co. 25 Ky. L. Rep. 811, 76 S. W. 379; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Metcalf, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 870, 96 S. W. 525; Monongahela River Consol. Coal & Coke Co. v. Coleman, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 1347, 108 S. W. 859; Bonnin v. Crowley, 112 La. 1025, 36 So. 842; Stewart v. Texas & P. R. Co. 113 La. 525, 37 So. 129; James v. Rapides Lumber Co. 50 La. Ann. 717, 44 L.R.A. 33, 23 So. 469; Drapeau v. International Paper Co. 96 Me. 299, 52 Atl. 647; Patnode v. Warren Cotton Mills, 157 Mass. 283, 34 Am. St. Rep. 275, 32 N. E. 161; Austin v. Fitchburg R. Co. 172 Mass. 484, 52 N. E. 527; Bowes v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 181 Mass. 89, 62 N. E. 949; Joyce v. American Writing Paper Co. 184 Mass. 230, 68 N. E. 213; Murphy v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 187 Mass. 18, 72 N. E. 330; Edgar v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 188 Mass. 420, 74 N. E. 911; Peterson v. Morgan Spring Co. 189 Mass. 576, 76 N. E. 220; Byrne v. Lennard, 191 Mass. 269, 77 N. E. 316; Hodde v. Attleboro Mfg. Co. 193 Mass. 237, 79 N. E. 252; Lammi v. Milford Pink Granite Quarries, 196 Mass. 336, 82 N. E. 26; Connolly v. Booth, 198 Mass. 577, 84 N. E. 799; Brosnan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.

200 Mass. 221, 85 N. E. 1050; Shannon v. Shaw, 201 Mass. 393, 87 N. E. 748; Berry v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 202 Mass. 197, 88 N. E. 588; Proulx v. J. W. Bishop Co. 204 Mass. 130, 90 N. E. 539; Igo v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 204 Mass. 197, 90 N. E. 574; Doe v. Boston & W. Street R. Co. 195 Mass. 168, 80 N. E. 814; Saures v. Stevens Mfg. Co. 196 Mass. 543, 82 N. E. 694; Bartley v. Boston & N. Street R. Co. 198 Mass. 163, 83 N. E. 1093; Hayes v. Frederick Stearns & Co. 130 Mich. 287, 89 N. W. 947; Pecard v. Menominee River Sugar Co. 153 Mich. 84, 116 N. W. 532; Sipes v. Michigan Starch Co. 137 Mich. 258, 100 N. W. 447; Bernard v. Pittsburg Coal Co. 137 Mich. 279, 100 N. W. 396; Belmer v. Boyne City Tanning Co. 160 Mich. 689, 125 N. W. 726; Perras v. A. Booth & Co. 82 Minn. 191, 84 N. W. 739, 85 N. W. 179; Gray v. Commutator Co. 85 Minn. 463, 89 N. W. 322; Clay v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 104 Minn. 1, 115 N. W. 949; Bigum v. St. Paul Sash, Door & Lumber Co. 107 Minn. 567, 119 N. W. 481; Wickham v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 110 Minn. 74, 124 N. W. 639, rehearing denied in 110 Minn. 78, 124 N. W. 994; Barrett v. Reardon, 95 Minn. 425, 104 N. W. 309; Bane v. Irwin, 172 Mo. 306, 72 S. W. 522; Franklin v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 97 Mo. App. 473, 71 S. W. 540; Mitchell v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 108 Mo. App. 142, 83 S. W. 289; Riggsby v. Oil Well Supply Co. 115 Mo. App. 297, 91 S. W. 460; Norfolk Beet-Sugar Co. v. Hight, 59 Neb. 100, 80 N. W. 276; Parker v. Omaha Packing Co. 85 Neb. 515, 123 N. W. 1026; Rathjen v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 85 Neb. 808, 124 N. W. 473; Lintott v. Nashua Iron & Steel Co. 69 N. H. 628, 44 Atl. 98; Finn v. Cassidy, 165 N. Y. 584, 53 L.R.A. 877, 59 N. E. 311; Tully v. New York & T. S. S. Co. 10 App. Div. 463, 42 N. Y. Supp. 29, affirmed without opinion in 162 N. Y. 614, 57 N. E. 1127; Dzinbienski v. J. L. Mott Iron Works, 56 App. Div. 58, 67 N. Y. Supp. 256; Eichholz v. Niagara Falls Hydraulic Power & Mfg. Co. 68 App. Div. 441, 73 N. Y. Supp. 842, affirmed without opinion in 174 N. Y. 519, 66 N. E. 1107; Klein v. Garvey, 94 App. Div. 183, 87 N. Y. Supp. 998; Motzing v. Excelsior Brewing Co. 107 App. Div. 275, 94 N. Y. Supp. 1118, affirmed in 186 N. Y. 577, 79 N. E. 1111; Burke v. Manhattan R. Co. 109 App. Div. 722, 96 N. Y. Supp. 516; Perrotta v. Richmond Brick Co. 123 App. Div. 626, 108 N. Y. Supp. 10; McAleer v. Walter, 34 Misc. 474, 70 N. Y. Supp. 335; Laporte v. Cook, 21 R. I. 158, 42 Atl. 519; Cox v. American Agri. Chemical Co. 24 R. I. 503, 60 L.R.A. 629, 53 Atl. 871; Greenville Oil & Cotton Co. v. Harkey, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 225, 48 S. W. 1005; Waxahachie Cotton Oil Co. v. McLain, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 334, 66 S. W. 226; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Walden, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 567, 66 S. W. 584; Bering Mfg. Co. v. Femelat, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 36, 79 S. W. 869; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Stevens, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 80, 83 S. W. 235; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Bonn, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

44 Tex. Civ. App. 631, 99 S. W. 413; Hillsboro Oil Co. v. White (Tex. Civ. App.) 54 S. W. 432; Texarkana & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Preacher (Tex. Civ. App.) 50 S. W. 595; Bonn v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 82 S. W. 808; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Vestal, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 554, 86 S. W. 790; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Johnson (Tex. Civ. App.) 99 S. W. 738; Marshall v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 107 S. W. 883; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jackson, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 573, 109 S. W. 478; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Worth (Tex. Civ. App.) 116 S. W. 365; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Malloy (Tex. Civ. App.) 118 S. W. 721; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Johnson (Tex. Civ. App.) 118 S. W. 1150; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Marshall (Tex. Civ. App.) 120 S. W. 512; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Gray (Tex. Civ. App.) 120 S. W. 527; Gentry v. Stephenville Oilmill (Tex. Civ. App.) 127 S. W. 879; Tuckett v. American Steam & Hand Laundry, 30 Utah, 273, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 990, 116 Am. St. Rep. 832, 84 Pac. 500; La Flam v. Missisquoi Pulp Co. 74 Vt. 125, 52 Atl. 526; Virginia Portland Cement Co. v. Luck, 103 Va. 427, 49 S. E. 577; Morton v. Moran Bros. Co. 30 Wash. 362, 70 Pac. 968; Jancko v. West Coast Mfg. & Invest. Co. 34 Wash. 556, 76 Pac. 78; King v. Griffiths-Sprague Stevedoring Co. 45 Wash. 425, 88 Pac. 759; Ball v. Peterman Mfg. Co. 47 Wash. 653, 92 Pac. 425; Johnson v. Motor Shingle Co. 50 Wash. 154, 96 Pac. 962; Hilgar v. Walla Walla, 50 Wash. 470, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 367, 97 Pac. 498; Passage v. Stimson Mill Co. 52 Wash. 661, 101 Pac. 239; Well v. Moran Bros. Co. 55 Wash. 102, 104 Pac. 172; Forsman v. Seattle Electric Co. (Wash.) 109 Pac. 121; Horn v. La Crosse Box Co. 123 Wis. 399, 101 N. W. 935; Holloway v. H. W. Johns-Manville Co. 135 Wis. 629, 116 N. W. 635; Gray v. Northern P. R. Co. 139 Wis. 419, 121 N. W. 142.

Many of these cases state generally that a servant has a right to presume, in the absence of warning or notice to the contrary, that, in conforming to the order, he will not be subjected to injury. That is unquestionably the rule, but it is also the rule where there has been no specific order given. The servant always has a right to presume that the master will not subject him to injuries in performing his work, and will warn him of any dangers of which the master is aware, and which are not obvious to the servant, so that, in reality, the effect of the specific order to do the work is very slight, except, possibly, it may relieve the servant from any duty whatsoever of investigating the conditions surrounding the work before undertaking it; but the vast majority of the cases hold that a servant is under no obligation to investigate to discover dangers, especially those due to the master's negligence.

—illustrative cases.

A few cases of this character may be set out to show generally the conditions under which a direct order of the master does not materially affect his liability.

A servant cannot be held guilty of contributory negligence where the facts and circumstances of the case render his knowledge of the danger uncertain and debatable. Portland Gold Min. Co. v. Flaherty, 49 C. C. A. 361, 111 Fed. 312, 21 Mor. Min. Rep. 555.

And in American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co. v. Hank, 129 Ill. App. 188, the court said it was not contributory negligence on the part of a servant to obey an order where he had no knowledge of the danger of so doing.

The servant may rely upon an assumption that the machine which he is directed to operate is in a reasonably safe condition, without any imputation of negligence, until such time as he shall discover, or, in the exercise of ordinary diligence, should discover, it to be to the contrary. Hobbs v. Small, 4 Ga. App. 627, 62 S. E. 91.

A servant unfamiliar with the work was not negligent in adopting the manner of hoisting heavy trusses which the superintendent ordered him to employ, where there was no apparent defect in the appliances. Swain v. O'Loughlin, 80 Conn. 200, 67 Atl. 480.

The act of an employee in letting down the weight of a building by means of jack-screws upon piers, with knowledge that the cement was yet soft, was held in Nugent v. Cudahy Packing Co. 126 Iowa, 517, 102 N. W. 422, not to be negligence, where he was a carpenter only, and the superintendent had told him to go ahead, as the cement was hard enough.

A common laborer, knowing nothing of electrical work, and unfamiliar with the perils attending it, who is sent by his employer to work on a wet and slippery roof, cannot be charged as a matter of law with contributory negligence in catching hold of a wire when he slipped, in an effort to save himself from falling. Colusa Parrot Min. & Smelting Co. v. Monahan, 89 C. C. A. 256, 162 Fed. 276.

An ignorant laborer injured by defects in a hammer which he was ordered by his boss to strike while it was being held by the boss himself, who could not see anything the matter with it, is not guilty of negligence as a matter of law in obeying the orders of the boss. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Garcia, 81 C. C. A. 322, 152 Fed. 104.

A servant's jumping onto a railroad track immediately in front of a stationary car which is suddenly set in motion by a gripman who could not be seen by him is not contributory negligence, as a matter of law, when he never knew of cars being moved without warning, and had no reason to expect that this one would be,—especially when he had been ordered to go upon the track by his superior, who presumably knew whether there was peril. Polaski v. Pittsburgh Coal Dock Co. 134 Wis. 259, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 952, 114 N. W. 437.

Where the plaintiff was instructed to clean a carding machine while in motion and to look out for the chain at the end of the shaft, and he avoided that danger, but pulled off the wool in such a manner that it became caught in the cylinder and drew his hand in, it was held in Sauvageau v. River Spinning Co. 129 Fed. 961, that it could not be said as a matter of law that the jury should have found the plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence.

A car repairer cannot be charged with contributory negligence in getting down under a car to repair it, where the injury was due solely to the negligence of the railroad company or its agents in running other cars into the one on which he was at work. Pool v. Southern P. Co. 20 Utah, 210, 58 Pac. 326.

A servant who has been in the employment but a month, and is injured while endeavoring, in obedience to an order given him by the foreman, to stop a car carrying a pile driver by inserting the beveled end of a crowbar in front of a wheel of the car, was held in Southern R. Co. v. Shields, 121 Ala. 460, 77 Am. St. Rep. 66, 25 So. 811, not to be guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, since the attempt did not, to his inexperience, involve obvious danger which a prudent man would not incur, and he had a right to rely to some extent upon the superintendent's greater knowledge and experience, and upon the assumption that the superintendent would not expose him to unnecessary peril.

Where a boy sixteen years of age went into an oat bin with which he was unfamiliar, pursuant to the orders of his superior, it was held in Meier v. Way, J. L. & Co. 136 Iowa, 302, 125 Am. St. Rep. 254, 111 N. W. 420, that the question of contributory negligence was for the jury.

Where the brakeman knows that loose cars are approaching his car, but, in obedience to an order to get his train out of the way, he takes a position upon the handholds upon the top of the car, to give signals ahead to carry out the orders he has received, he cannot be held to have assumed the risk or to be negligent, so as to preclude a recovery for injuries received because of the loose cars bumping into his train, where the immediate cause of the accident was the fact that the brakes upon the loose cars were defective, of which the brakeman was unaware. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Owens (Tex. Civ. App.) 124 S. W. 210.

The question of the contributory negligence and assumption of risk of a section hand who jumped off a car moving at the rate of 5 or 6 miles an hour, at the command of the foreman, is for the jury, where he was inexperienced in that line of work, and had seen other employees jump off the car with safety. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Sanchez (Tex. Civ. App.) 65 S. W. 893.

The question of assumption of risk in obeying an order of the master is for the jury, where the servant is not fully aware of the dangers of the situation. Smith

v. King, 74 App. Div. 1, 77 N. Y. Supp. 3.

Where the section foreman ordered the plaintiff and other members of the crew to drive a hand car with the rear end in front, and knew the peril of compliance with such an order, and the plaintiff did not know that the car was being run in an improper manner, the servant is not chargeable with either contributory negligence or assumption of risk. A. L. Clark Lumber Co. v. Northcutt (Ark.) 129 S. W. 88.

A servant whose regular work was at a machine, and who was directed by the foreman to put a belt on an overhead pulley for the first time, did not, while obeying the order, assume the risk of danger from protruding set screws, where they were not distinguishable from his place of work, and he did not know of them, and had not been warned thereof. Daubert v. Western Meat Co. 135 Cal. 144, 67 Pac. 133.

Whether a common miner, taken by the master's direction from that work in order to operate machinery about which he knew nothing and was told nothing, understood the dangers so as to assume the risk thereof, was held to be a question of fact for the jury in Montana Coal & Coke Co. v. Kovac, 99 C. C. A. 565, 176 Fed. 211.

Although the method of shifting a belt, from one pulley to another is clearly dangerous, nevertheless a servant who is inexperienced in regard to belts and pulleys will not assume the risk of such danger where he is obeying the commands of a foreman. Koren v. National Conduit & Cable Co. 82 App. Div. 527, 81 N. Y. Supp. 614, affirmed without opinion in 179 N. Y. 552, 71 N. E. 1132. W. M. G.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

JOSEPH BROWN, Plff. in Err.,
v.

WILLIAM E. LENNANE et al.

(155 Mich. 686, 118 N. W. 581.)

Master — assumption of risk — obvious danger — assurance of safety.

A servant does not, as matter of law, assume the risk of injury from working under an overhanging frozen crown in a sand pit, if he is commanded under pain of discharge to do so by his master's representative, with the assurance that the representative had tested it and found it was safe.

(Grant, Ch. J., and Hooker and Ostrander, JJ., dissent.)

(November 30, 1908.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment entered upon a directed verdict for defendants in personal injuries alleged to have been caused 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) an action brought to recover damages for by defendants' negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Washington I. Robinson for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Brennan, Donnelly, & Van De Mark, for defendants in error:

The rule of safe place does not apply to a sand pile.

Livingstone v. Saginaw Plate Glass Co. 146 Mich. 236, 109 N. W. 431; Dresser, Employers' Liability, ¶ 90; Hoar v. Merritt, 62 Mich. 380, 29 N. W. 15; Ritzema v. Valley City Brick Co. 152 Mich. 75, 115 N. W. 705; Welch v. Brainard, 108 Mich. 38, 65 N. W. 667.

An employee assumes the risk when he voluntarily enters into danger apparent to him, notwithstanding an agent of his employer tells him there is no danger.

Toomey v. Eureka Iron & Steel Works, 89 Mich. 249, 50 N. W. 850; Showalter v. Fairbanks, M. & Co. 88 Wis. 376, 60 N. W. 257; Anderson v. H. C. Akeley Lumber

Note. — Servant's right of action for injuries received in obeying direct command accompanied by assurance of safety.

As to servant's right of action for injuries received in obeying a direct command, see notes to Dallemand v. Saalfeldt, 48 L.R.A. 753, and Lowe Mfg. Co. v. Payne, ante. As to effect of an assurance of safety given by the master, see note to McKee v. Tourtellotte, 48 L.R.A. 542. This note is supplemental to the above.

As is shown in the above-cited notes, the general effect, both of a direct command and of an assurance of safety, is to modify the rules as to assumption of risk and contributory negligence, and when the two are combined, as in BROWN v. LENNANE, of course, a much stronger case is presented.

So, a servant has more reason to rely upon a command of the master where it is accompanied with an assurance of safety. Bush v. West Yellow Pine Co. 2 Ga. App. 295, 58 S. E. 529.

But in a few cases it has been held that a servant's right of recovery is not affected by the fact that the servant is injured while obeying a direct command accompanied by an assurance of safety.

Thus, an employee of a laundry assumes the risk of injury from the operation of a mangle, by having her hand drawn into the machine, although she works reluctantly under pain of dismissal for refusal, and under the assurance by the foreman that it is safe, and a guard placed on the machine proves inadequate, where she is fully aware of the risk involved in the undertaking. Burke v. Davis, 191 Mass. 20, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 971, 114 Am. St. Rep. 591, 76 N. E. 1039.

So, where the work is within the servant's regular employment, and is obviously dangerous, the mere fact that a foreman

Co. 47 Minn. 128, 49 N. W. 664; Reese v. Clark, 146 Pa. 465, 23 Atl. 246; Perschke v. Hencken, 44 N. Y. Supp. 265; Hencke v. Ellis, 110 Wis. 532, 86 N. W. 171; Linch v. Sagamore Mfg. Co. 143 Mass. 206, 9 N. E. 728; Rohrabacher v. Woodward, 124 Mich. 125, 82 N. W. 797; Kean v. Detroit Copper & Brass Rolling Mills, 66 Mich. 277, 11 Am. St. Rep. 492, 33 N. W. 395; Soderstrom v. Holland-Emery Lumber Co. 114 Mich. 83, 72 N. W. 13; Kinzel v. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. 69 L.R.A. 757, 70 C. C. A. 73, 137 Fed. 489; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Crotty, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 832, 73 C. C. A. 147, 141 Fed. 913.

preemptorily ordered him to do it, and assured him that it was not dangerous, does not take the case out of the general rule that the servant must be held to have assumed the obvious risks of the work connected with his general employment. Frangiose v. Horton, 26 R. I. 291, 53 Atl. 949.

And a servant cannot relieve himself from the burden of exercising ordinary care for his own safety, by relying upon the assurances of a foreman in a matter regarding which he knew, or ought to have known, that the foreman had no superior knowledge. McKane v. Marr, 79 Vt. 13, 63 Atl. 944.

But for the most part, the cases hold that a servant obeying a direct command accompanied by an assurance of safety is not chargeable with assumption of risk or with contributory negligence in obeying the order, or, at least, he is not so chargeable as a master of law.

Thus, a servant in obeying the direct orders of his master, with an assurance upon the latter's part that there is no danger, does not assume the risk, unless it is such that a man of ordinary prudence would not assume it, which is a question for the jury. Mergenthaler-Horton Basket Mach. Co. v. Lyon, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 471, 89 S. W. 522; Central Coal & I. Co. v. Thompson, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 276, 102 S. W. 272.

So, where a servant is apprehensive that the place in which he is required to work is dangerous and unsafe, but relies upon the assurance of the foreman that it is safe, and is directed by him to proceed, and the servant is injured without any negligence upon his own part, the master is responsible. Burkard v. A. Leschen & Sons Rope Co. 217 Mo. 466, 117 S. W. 35.

And the mere fact that in an employee's judgment an act required by the employer is unsafe does not, as matter of law, render him guilty of negligence in performing it, if the employer assures him that there is no danger. McKee v. Tourtellotte, 167 Mass. 69, 48 L.R.A. 542, 44 N. E. 1071.

So, where an order of the master to do a certain work is accompanied by an assurance of safety, the servant cannot be deemed 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Blair, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff, a man of mature years, was injured by reason of the frozen crest or crown of a sand pile falling upon him, and brought this action to recover damages therefor.

Plaintiff testified, omitting the curses with which he claims Mr. Brennan's statements were interlarded, as follows: "I had a conversation with Mr. Brennan before the accident. It might be a minute before. I don't know what it was exactly. I don't remember it all. I remember part of it. He came rushing over. I was taking the sand from the side. Mr. Brennan came guilty of contributory negligence, unless the danger is so manifest and glaring as to threaten immediate injury in case the plaintiff obeys the order. Swearingen v. Consolidated Troup Min. Co. 212 Mo. 524, 111 S. W. 545.

If the servant complains to the master that the instrumentality appears to be dangerous, and thereupon the master commands him to proceed with the work, and assures him there is no danger, the law implies a quasi new agreement whereby the master relieves the servant of his former assumption of the risk, and places responsibility for resulting injuries upon the master. Bush v. West Yellow Pine Co. supra.

Where the master, upon ordering a servant into a place of danger, assures him that he will guard him against a particular danger, and fails to do so, the master is liable for injuries resulting because of such failure. Fleming v. Tuttle, 98 App. Div. 222, 90 N. Y. Supp. 661.

Where a servant, after calling the master's attention to a possible danger, was told to go ahead, as it is all right, he is justified in assuming that there is no danger, where it could not have been discovered from any point where he was at work. Starr v. Kreuzberger, 129 Cal. 123, 79 Am. St. Rep. 92, 61 Pac. 787.

Where a servant is working under an assurance of safety and by the direction of his master, and is injured in a way not reasonably to have been anticipated by him, there can be no assumption of risk. Industrial Lumber Co. v. Bivens, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 396, 105 S. W. 831.

An order accompanied by an assurance of safety may properly be considered by the jury in connection with other evidence, in determining whether or not the employee at the time knew and appreciated the risk. Anderson v. Pitt Iron Min. Co. 103 Minn. 252, 114 N. W. 953.

Illustrative cases.

Although the danger to be incurred in going between cars was open to a brakeman's observation, and as well known to him as rushing over, and he says, '—— — it, Brown, you are scraping there like an old woman. ——, why don't you come over here, and take it where it is plentiful?' And he started shoveling the sand from under this crown, and at the same time he motioned to the other man to come over with him to the center, and the man pulled his wheelbarrow over, and I says, 'Mr. Brennan, ain't that crown liable to cave in on us fellows?' He says, 'No, —— — it, no; that is as firm as masonry. That is as strong as stone. —— — that is perfectly safe. —— — it, I was up and around there. That is perfectly safe. I want the sand over, Brown.' And I lifted the shovel and was shoveling the sand, and Mr. Brennan comes towards me, and I says; 'Mr. Brennan, did you expect two men to do five men's work?' And he says, '—— — you, Brown, I don't want any back talk. —— —, I want the sand over. I don't want any back talk at all. You will be the next one to get out of here. I will fire you.' I was working then, I was shoveling sand, and I didn't talk back any more. He was still digging in from the same place, and filling up his wheelbarrow. The other man was doing this. Brennan ordered him over. He swore at him, and told him to come over where the sand was plentiful. I started to dig there. I was digging only a few seconds after he told me about this being safe. I was shoveling the sand into the wheelbarrow. Brennan had shoveled about two thirds of the wheelbarrow full, and I shoveled probably three, four, five, or probably six shovelfuls of sand after that. My

to the conductor and superintendent, and he would have been held to have assumed the risk thereof if undertaken without express orders, yet if he acted upon the order of his superiors, coupled with an assurance of protection, or upon such orders as implied such an assurance of protection, against the danger of the car starting while he was in such a dangerous position, then he cannot, as a matter of law, be held to have assumed the risk, or to be guilty of negligence. Louisiana Extension R. Co. v. Carstens, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 190, 47 S. W. 36.

A servant is not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to look out for signals while working on the footboard between the tender of an engine and a car, when he was working directly under the orders of a superior who assured him that he would keep a lookout. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Kellerman, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 274, 87 S. W. 401.

An engineer who protested against taking out an engine with the sides of the cab boarded up does not assume the risk of injuries caused by the bursting of the water gauge while his head was held near it, as it was necessary for him to do because of the boards, in order to see the signals of the fireman, when he had been assured that the engine was all right, and that, if he did not take that one out, he would never take another one out for the company. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Patterson, 37 Ind. App. 617, 75 N. E. 857.

Although employees were undoubtedly aware of the dangerous character of the work that they were doing,—using a long iron scoop to draw the tamping from blasting holes containing a charge of dynamite that had failed to explode,—nevertheless, they were justified in relying upon the positive assurance of the defendant's superintendent that they were in no danger after the electric battery had been "pulled" on the holes, and had failed to set the charges off. Allen v. Gilman, 127 Fed. 609.

Even if a plan or system of operating a mine was so imperfect that it would not be prudent to rely upon it in its general working, still if the miner, being uncertain as to the safety of the system or plan in general, had called the attention of the mine manager to the conditions of safety or danger, and had been assured by him that the necessary investigation had been made, and that there was no danger in observing the system, and was directed by the mine manager to continue to perform the work as miner in accordance with the plan or system, then he would not be held to have assumed the risk of continuing in the performance, unless the danger was so great and imminent that no one but a reckless person would have continued at the work. Consolidated Coal Co. v. Shepherd, 220 Ill. 123, 77 N. E. 133.

A servant cannot be said to be guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, in going into a mine at the direction of the foreman, simply because he was told by a third person in the presence of the foreman that the mine was not safe, where he was immediately told by the foreman to go ahead, that everything was all right. Alabama Consol. Coal & I. Co. v. Heald (Ala.) 53 So. 162.

Where miners left a room because of the falling of something from overhead, and were ordered back by the foreman, and assured by him that there was no further danger, it was held in Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. George, 161 Ala. 421, 49 So. 681, that the jury might find that the foreman was guilty of negligence in ordering the men back to work without first ascertaining that there was no more danger.

Where a superintendent had told a laborer in a quarry that a certain hole was not loaded, when in fact it was, and the laborer was injured in attempting to drill out the hole, it was held in Lane Bros. v. Bott, 104 Va. 615, 52 S. E. 259, that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence. The court said: "The superintendent had lulled the defendant in error into a delusive sense of security by the false statement that the hole was unloaded, and he had a right to rely upon that assurance without employing precautions which ordinary prudence might otherwise have suggested."

colaborer was still digging at the sand from the same place and throwing it into his own wheelbarrow. After I got through, I turned right around like this, and I caught the handles of the wheelbarrow, and lifted it up to run away with it, and the crash came right down on me. The frozen sand came down from this overhead, hanging over. This hung over probably 3 or 4 or 5 feet." The trial judge directed a verdict for the defendants upon the ground that plaintiff assumed the risk, and plaintiff brings the record to this court for review upon writ of error.

We think that the case is distinguishable from Toomey v. Eureka Iron & Steel Works, 89 Mich. 249, 50 N. W. 850; Livingstone v. Saginaw Plate Glass Co. 146 Mich. 236, 109 N. W. 431; and other Michigan cases cited by counsel for defendants, in that, in the case at bar, defendants' vice principal vehemently and with oaths ordered plaintiff to do the work, on pain of losing his job, and at the same time informed him substantially that he had been up on top of the sand pile, and tested its safety, and that it was actually safe. This is more than the mere expression of an opinion, or than a statement apparently based upon facts equally open to plaintiff's visual observation. It was a representation that the superintendent had actually gone upon the sand pile, tested it, and found, as a matter of fact, that it was safe. We do not think it can be said, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff assumed the risk under such circumstances in obeying the orders for a reasonable time. Throughout the trial of the

Where a servant at work in a quarry refused to assume the risk of the presence of explosives in the stone, and was only induced to continue his work by positive orders coupled with authoritative assurance that his apprehension of danger was groundless, it was held in Di Stefano v. Peekskill Lighting & R. Co. 107 App. Div. 293, 95 N. Y. Supp. 179, that the plaintiff could not be logically regarded as having assumed the risk of such danger.

Where a complaint alleging that the plaintiff's intestate, a boy sixteen years of age, was sent by the defendant, his employer, to work at the foot of a vertical wall of clay about 50 feet high, which had near the top thereof an overhanging face of clay and earth which had several fissures running through it, and was in danger of falling any moment, and, upon the defendant's attention being called to the danger, the plaintiff's intestate was assured that it was safe for him to work under, and he was directed so to do, it was held in Bacelli v. New England Brick Co. 138 App. Div. 650, 122 N. Y. Supp. 856, that the complaint stated a cause of action, for it could not be said, as a matter of law, either that the servant was guilty of contributory negligence, or that he assumed the risk of the injuries.

A servant directed by his master to shovel dirt in a trench does not assume the risk of working in a confined space near a servant using a pick, where the servant had complained to the master, and been ordered to go ahead upon an assurance that the master would protect him against all injury by reason of obeying the command. Manks v. Moore, 108 Minn. 284, 122 N. W. 5.

Where the servant was injured while oiling machinery while in motion, at the command of the foreman, who assured him that there was no danger, it was held in Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Spotts, 77 Ark. 458, 92 S. W. 249, that an instruction that the servant "is chargeable with knowledge of such dangers as he might have known and comprehended by the exercise of ordinary care" was improper, because ignoring the fact that he was acting under commands in the face of a danger not incident to the service.

A seaman cannot be held to have assumed the risks of attaching a towline to the mainmast, when he has declared that he would not go if the mainmast was so used, and had been assured by the mate that a change would be made. Keating v. Pacific Steam Whaling Co. 21 Wash. 415, 58 Pac. 224.

An inexperienced lineman does not necessarily assume the risk of a pole falling, due to lack of guying, although he was apprehensive of danger if the pole was not guyed, where he had complained of the danger to the foreman, and, with an assurance of safety, was ordered to proceed with his work. Lord v. Wakefield, 185 Mass. 214, 70 N. E. 123.

An assurance by a superintendent that a dark bin in which the servant was at work was safe, and a direction to him to go into it, justifies a finding that the servant was acting with due care in going into it without examination. O'Brien v. Nute-Hallett Co. 177 Mass. 422, 59 N. E. 65.

A servant does not assume the risk of injury from the negligence of a fellow servant, where he had complained of such negligence, and been told to go to his work, as everything was all right. La Salle County Carbon Coal Co. v. Offergeld, 104 Ill. App. 494.

A servant cannot be deemed guilty of contributory negligence in failing to make certain repairs for his own safety, where, upon offering to do so, the foreman ordered him not to, as he himself would attend to that. Miller v. White Bronze Monument Co. 141 Iowa, 701, 118 N. W. 518.

A servant has the right to rely upon the safety of an appliance selected and adjusted by the master himself, accompanied with assurances as to its safety, the immediate placing and adjustment having been made while the respondent was otherwise engaged, and he being immediately thereafter called to action at that place. Sullivan v. R. D. Wood & Co. 43 Wash. 259, 117 Am. St. Rep. 1047, 86 Pac. 629.

W. M. G.

case, Mr. Brennan was apparently treated as defendants' superintendent and representative. And no claim appears to have been made that he was a fellow servant of plaintiff. The trial judge charged the jury: "That, for the purpose of this case, Mr. Brennan stood, upon that day, toward the plaintiff, in the position of the plaintiff's employer. He had the power to hire and discharge men and give directions, and was in control over them, so that whatever Mr. Brennan did upon that day may be taken to be the act of the defendants themselves." The correctness of the charge in this respect is not called in question by counsel for defendants, and in my opinion the record supports it. Plaintiff testified: "There were five of us wheeling sand, all to the same place, under the direction of Superintendent Brennan. Superintendent Brennan had charge of the cement work on the overhead crossing, the piers and abutments, and parapet walls that were put up out of concrete. . . . Mr. Brennan hired me, and he paid me. . . . Mr. Brennan had charge of the carpenters, and he directed them." Mr. Brennan testified: "I don't know that Brown claims that it was through my carelessness and negligence as superintendent of Lennane that he was injured. I don't think so. I had charge of 400 or 500 men. . . . The work was in two separate sections. I had charge of the concrete construction work, and Mr. Walker had charge of the grade work, and when I would want to borrow a few men, I would take them from his gang; and, if he wanted to borrow a few men, he would take them from my gang, and the men appear on both books. Sometimes they might appear on this for forty-five hours or on Mr. Walker's for the balance of the date, according to how we kept them, but the majority of these men were with me from the day I commenced the work till I ended it. I ended it some time in June, if I am not mistaken. I went to Des Moines, Iowa, to take charge of a construction job there. I haven't seen any of these men since I left. I hired these men, and Mr. Walker hired them. If I borrowed men from Mr. Walker, I had the men for the concreting. I had the men for the cement construction. They left it entirely to me, and sometimes they would come around and say, 'I want you to discharge a man,' and I had to go under their supervision."

Judgment reversed and new trial granted.

Montgomery, Moore, and McAlvay, JJ., concur.

Hooker, J., dissenting:

This case should be ruled by that of Liv-
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ingstone v. Saginaw Plate Glass Co., unless the fact that defendants' superintendent commanded plaintiff to go into a place of danger, and assured him of its safety, distinguished it from that case in principle. The plaintiff in the present case was a man forty-six years old, and of experience in mechanics. As was said in the Livingstone Case: "He must be held chargeable with the knowledge that a sand pile lying out of doors was frozen, and that digging into such a pile would remove the support from the frozen crust." He did know it, and objected to working under it for that reason; but the superintendent told him it was safe, and ordered him to get at work, and he did so. There is nothing to indicate that he did not know as much about the danger after as before. See Welch v. Brainard, 108 Mich. 38, 65 N. W. 667; Ritzema v. Valley City Brick Co. 152 Mich. 75, 115 N. W. 705. In such a case one assumes the risk of the dangerous employment which he undertakes. Anderson v. Akeley Lumber Co. 47 Minn. 128, 49 N. W. 664; Kean v. Detroit Copper & Brass Rolling Mills, 60 Mich. 277, 11 Am. St. Rep. 492, 33 N. W. 395; Soderstrom v. Holland-Emery Lumber Co. 114 Mich. 83, 72 N. W. 13; Rohrabacher v. Woodward, 124 Mich. 125, 82 N. W. 797. These cases hold: "One cannot continue to operate a machine which he knows is dangerous, simply upon the assurance of his employer that it is not, if he has just as much knowledge of the danger . . . as his principal has." See also Reese v. Clark, 146 Pa. 465, 23 Atl. 246; Perschke v. Hencken, 44 N. Y. Supp. 205; Linch v. Sagamore Mfg. Co. 143 Mass. 206, 9 N. E. 728; Kinzel v. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. 69 L.R.A. 757, 70 C. C. A. 73, 137 Fed. 491; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Crotty, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 832, 73 C. C. A. 147, 141 Fed. 913.

There is another reason for affirming this judgment. A right to recover was and is claimed upon the theory that Brennan was the vice principal or alter ego of the defendants. There is nothing in the case tending to show it. The testimony of plaintiff was that "there were five of us wheeling sand, all to the same place, under the direction of Superintendent Brennan. Superintendent Brennan had charge of the cement work on the overhead crossing, the piers and abutments, and parapet walls that were put up out of concrete. That was made up partially of this sand and crushed stone and cement and water. Mr. Brennan hired me, and paid me. . . . Brennan had shoveled about two thirds of the wheelbarrow full, and I shoveled probably three, four, five, or probably six shovelfuls of sand after that. . . . I don't know where Mr. Brennan was when this happened, probably on the street. I know Mr. Walker, and have known him for probably sixteen or eighteen years. He was working for Lennane Brothers, too. Taking his word for it, he was manager." Brennan testified: "I was employed by Lennane Brothers in 1903 and in 1904, building the Michigan avenue subway track elevation, where they were separating the grade of Michigan avenue and another street, Park and Lovett." Duncan testified: "I had been working for Lennane Brothers before Mr. Brown. At that job that he went down to see Mr. Walker, and he introduced him to Mr. Brennan, the superintendent, and Mr. Brennan gave us a job dumping it in the mixer, not wheeling it. . . . Mr. Walker went and got an ambulance. I did not go in the ambulance. . . . I was there when they took him out to the ambulance. I helped to fetch him, when Dr. Milligan was there. Mr. Walker sent me after Dr. Milligan. Mr. Walker was working for Lennane. When Mr. Walker came down there, when Mr. Brown was carried in, was when he told me. This was at Brown's house. He told me to go and get the physician. I went over to the drug store to see if I could find out where he was. He was not home in the office, and I came back and told Mr. Walker that I could not find him. He was out, and he was down about the middle of the block on Congress street with a horse and buggy, and we happened to strike him, and then we called him in, or Mr. Walker did. Mr. Walker knew him, and went down. Mr. Walker brought Dr. Milligan. . . . I knew Mr. Walker had sent for Dr. Milligan to come and see him, and I followed his instructions. . . . Brown was hired just about at the same time I was. Mr. Brennan told us to come to work the next morning. . . . We went up there to Lennane Brothers together to get a job. We saw Mr. Walker first. Mr. Brown had known Mr. Walker. He had worked for him. Brown is a stonecutter. I am a stonecutter. We had worked in the same stone yard. Mr. Walker introduced us to Mr. Brennan. We were glad to get anything we could. He put us on the platform. . . . Mr. Walker went in the ambulance, but I went ahead of him to notify the sister. Mr. Walker told me to go and notify his sister." The plaintiff testified further: "I worked for Walker. I have worked on two streets in this city for Walker." From the foregoing, which is all of the testimony that we have found upon the subject, it is inferable that defendants had a contract for erecting overhead crossings in Detroit, that Walker was their manager, and that Brennan was the superintendent of the construction of the cement piers. Nothing indicates that he had general charge of defendants' work, or that he was more than a construction boss, and, if so, he was a fellow servant, under the rule laid down in many cases. Guest v. Edison Illuminating Co. 150 Mich. 438, 114 N. W. 226; Younggren v. I. Stephenson Co. 150 Mich. 488, 114 N. W. 341; Corey v. Joliet Bridge & Iron Co. 151 Mich. 558, 115 N. W. 737, where the authorities are collected. If it can be said that the testimony shows that Brennan was called a superintendent, it does not follow that he was a vice principal, and the jury should not have been allowed to so find upon this record. It would, at most, have been a guess. The burden of proving that he was a vice principal was upon the plaintiff, and he failed to prove it, the evidence being equally, if not more, consistent with the claim that he was a fellow servant.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.);

The judgment should be affirmed.

Grant, Ch. J., and Ostrander, J., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT

v.

THEODORE C. GOETZ, Appt.

(83 Conn. 437, 76 Atl. 1000.)

Evidence — homicide — character of accused.

1. Upon a trial of a chauffeur for homicide in running his car at a reckless rate on a city street, and striking and killing a pedestrian, evidence is not admissible as to the reputation of accused as a skilful chauffeur and careful driver.

Homicide — negligent driving of automobile.

2. One is guilty of homicide who, with reckless disregard for the safety of others, so negligently drives an automobile in a public street as to strike and kill a pedestrian.

(July 12, 1910.)

Note. — Homicide by negligent operation of automobile.

Few cases involving criminal responsibility for homicide by the negligent operation of automobiles have been reported, but for the principles involved in such cases, see note "Negligent homicide," in 61 L.R.A. 277, covering criminal homicide resulting from some negligent act consisting of a breach of duty owed by one person to an-

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Fairfield County convicting him of manslaughter. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Nichols C. Downs and William H. Comley, Jr., for appellant:

Evidence of the defendant's good character as a careful driver of motor vehicles was admissible.

People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 26, 97 Am. Dec. 162; Saye v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 569, 99 S. W. 551; People v. Casey, 53 Cal. 360; State v. Kinley, 43 Iowa, 294; Wigmore, Ev. § 59.

The unlawful act relied upon must be malum in se, and not merely malum prohibitum.

other or to the public, not constituting a crime or misdemeanor, or, if made criminal by statute because of the serious consequences liable to flow therefrom, not inherently criminal.

And see also subject note "Homicide by misadventure," in 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1153, for cases of accidental killing of another when the slayer is doing a lawful act, unaccompanied by any careless or reckless conduct.

Upon the principles set forth in the note first above cited, it was held in State v. Campbell, 82 Conn. 671, 74 Atl. 927, as in State v. Goetz, citing that case as authority, that one is guilty of criminal homicide, who, with reckless disregard for the safety of others, so negligently drives an automobile in a public street as to strike and kill or fatally injure a pedestrian. In this case, it appeared that defendant, early in the afternoon, while driving a heavy touring car along a much-traveled business street in a city, at an excessive rate of speed, as he approached a crossing, saw deceased either on the curb or just leaving it to cross the roadway, and sounded his automobile horn. Deceased, when the horn was blown, jumped as though startled or frightened, and ran in the same direction across the street as he had been going, whereupon defendant, without attempting to stop or to diminish his speed, turned his automobile slightly to the left, so that each was apparently endeavoring to pass ahead of the other. The automobile struck deceased, and so injured him that he died the following day. Under these circumstances, it was further held that contributory negligence of the injured person, as such, is no defense in a criminal prosecution for the homicide, as it might be in a civil action. The state must clearly show that the decedent's death was the direct result of the defendant's negligence, and evidence of the injured person's conduct is material as bearing upon the question of such negligence of the accused; but if the culpable negligence of the accused was the cause of the death, the accused is responsible under the criminal law, whether deceased's failure to use due care contribut-

People v. Pearne, 118 Cal. 154, 50 Pac. 376; Com. v. Adams, 114 Mass. 323, 19 Am. Rep. 362; Estell v. State, 51 N. J. L. 182, 17 Atl. 118, 8 Am. Crim. Rep. 514.

Mr. Stiles Judson, for the State:

Evidence of the reputation of defendant as a careful driver of an automobile is not admissible in his behalf in a prosecution for manslaughter, arising from his alleged reckless driving of an automobile.

State v. Jerome, 33 Conn. 265; Morris v. East Haven, 41 Conn. 252; Budd v. Meriden Electric R. Co. 69 Conn. 286, 37 Atl. 683; Bassett v. Shares, 63 Conn. 39, 27 Atl. 421; Laufer v. Bridgeport Traction Co. 68 Conn. 475, 37 L.R.A. 533, 37 Atl. 379; McDonald v. Savoy, 110 Mass. 49; Chase v. Maine C. R. Co. 77 Me. 62, 52 Am. Rep.

ed to his injury or not. It is a question for the jury to decide upon the evidence, what the accused, under the circumstances in which he was placed, might reasonably have assumed would be the conduct of the deceased, and what inferences he might have been justified in drawing from the actions of the deceased, and the jury should judge the accused's conduct by the situation and circumstances as they appeared to him at the time.

So, in People v. Scanlon, infra, the court incidentally said, in discussing the evidence in that case, that "possibly the jerking of the horse was also an element which contributed to the accident, but that would not relieve the defendants if the defendants' negligence were the proximate and efficient cause thereof."

If the unlawful act of defendant in running his automobile at an excessive rate of speed, at and before the time when deceased placed himself in a position of danger, renders ineffectual his later best efforts to avoid collision, he is not entitled to an acquittal merely because he used such best efforts when the danger became imminent, and it was too late to avert it. State v. Campbell, supra.

One driving a large automobile along a much-traveled business street in a city has no right to assume that there will be no one else upon the highway who may be injured if he drives his automobile at an excessive speed. Ibid.

Where an automobile driver on trial for negligent homicide requests the court to state to the jury the provisions of a section of the automobile act forbidding excessive speed and stating what shall be prima facie evidence thereof as applicable to the question of what was an unlawful and dangerous rate of speed, it is not error for the court also to read a section providing that "upon approaching any person walking in the traveled portion of any highway, . . . and also in passing such person, . . . the person operating a motor vehicle shall have the same under control, and shall reduce its speed," and to explain to the jury the meaning and effect thereof

744; Elliot v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 5 Dak. 523, 3 L.R.A. 363, 41 N. W. 758; 21 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 906, note 85; 12 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 413, note 37.

The defendant was properly convicted of involuntary manslaughter.

21 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 760, 761, 765, 766; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 189, 190; People v. Pearne, 118 Cal. 154, 50 Pac. 376; Lee v. State, 1 Coldw. 63; Belk v. People, 125 Ill. 584, 17 N. E. 744, 8 Am.

Crim. Rep. 507; Estell v. State, 51 N. J. L. 182, 17 Atl. 118, 8 Am. Crim. Rep. 514; State v. Stentz, 33 Wash. 444, 74 Pac. 589; State v. Underhill, 6 Penn. (Del.) 491, 69 Atl. 880; Com. v. Couch, 62 Ky. L. Rep. 638, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 327, 106 S. W. 830; Bruner v. State, 58 Ind. 159; R. v. Murray, 5 Cox, C. C. 509; R. v. Dalloway, 2 Cox, C. C. 273; Clark, Crim. Law, pp. 173-175.

The court properly charged as to the as applicable to the same question, in case the jury should find that the accused was passing deceased when the latter was walking in the traveled portion of the highway, if further instructions are given under which the jury must, before finding a verdict of guilty, find that deceased's death was the direct result of the gross carelessness of the defendant. Ibid.

On the trial of an automobile driver for negligent homicide, questions are properly excluded which are asked of the defendant for the manifest purpose of enabling him to say in effect that he did his best to avoid the collision, as such an answer would have been merely the expression of his opinion upon a question which it was the province of the jury to determine. Ibid.

Under a statute making the killing of a human being by the act, procurement, of culpable negligence of another, under certain circumstances, manslaughter in the fourth degree, an information predicated upon the negligent use and operation of an automobile is sufficient, if it charges that defendant, being in charge and control of, and operating and managing, a certain automobile, carelessly, recklessly, and with culpable negligence operated and propelled this automobile upon and along a public street in a city, at and upon deceased, etc., inflicting wounds and bruises upon her, by reason of such carelessness, recklessness, and culpable negligence, etc., from which wounds and bruises she died. It is not essential that the information set out in detail in what such recklessness and culpable negligence consists. State v. Watson, 216 Mo. 420, 115 S. W. 1011.

In that case, deceased, a girl twelve years old, while crossing an asphalt-paved street, about 10 o'clock at night, at a street crossing where the view was unobstructed and lights were going, was struck, knocked down, and run over by an automobile driven by defendant, and being run at a careless and reckless speed. The court said: "Individuals, as well as corporations, in the use and operation of dangerous machines, should have a due regard to the preservations of the rights of the public in the use of the public streets, as well as the protection of persons using such streets, from injury, and if they fail in this, and should, in the operation of a vehicle which is always attended with more or less danger, negligently, carelessly, and recklessly destroy human life, it is but in keeping with the proper and impartial administration of justice that the penalties should be suffered for the commission of such acts." Ibid.

And it was also held, in this case, that in a prosecution for homicide by negligent operation of an automobile, the rate of speed at which the automobile was running is not matter exclusively for the testimony of experts, but witnesses who, at least, know what an automobile is, and have seen them operated, may give their opinion as to the rate of speed, and the weight to which such opinions are entitled is a matter for the jury. Ibid.

In People v. Scanlon, 132 App. Div. 528, 117 N. Y. Supp. 57, where defendants, while running an automobile on a public highway, in attempting to pass a buggy, ran into it, and caused the death of a boy riding therein, it was held that driving a motor vehicle at a rate prohibited by law is evidence of negligence, and on a trial for homicide by the negligent operation of an automobile, where there is testimony in the case that the automobile was running at the rate of 25 miles per hour, it was not error for the judge in his charge to the jury to call attention to the motor vehicle law which prohibited a person operating a motor vehicle at a greater speed than 20 miles per hour. The court said: "With a heavy machine weighing from three to four thousand pounds, going at a rate of 25 miles an hour, it is indefensible negligence to attempt to pass a buggy within a few inches."

But upon a joint indictment of the owner of an automobile and the chauffeur, for manslaughter committed by striking a buggy which they were attempting to pass upon a public highway, and thereby throwing out and causing the death of a boy riding therein, although the evidence sustains the conviction of the chauffeur, who was driving the car, the conviction of the owner, who was riding in the car at the time of the collision, but was not running the machine, and was only in general control of the chauffeur, and could not have done anything to prevent the collision, is not justified, where there is no evidence that it was the habit of the chauffeur to run dangerously close to other vehicles in passing, to the knowledge of the owner, without correction. Ibid. A. C. W.

unlawfulness of operating motor vehicles upon public highways at a dangerous rate of speed at the time in question.

Irwin v. Judge, 81 Conn. 492, 71 Atl. 572.

Hall, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The information charges the defendant with manslaughter in having wilfully and feloniously assaulted and killed one Sarah Howe, at Stamford, on the 9th day of January, 1909, by running over her with an automobile to which he pleaded not guilty.

The state claimed to have proved these facts: At about 7 o'clock in the evening of the day alleged, the deceased, her daughter, and another person were standing at a place lighted by a street lamp, upon a crosswalk, on the north side of the trolley track on Main street, which runs east and west in the city of Stamford, waiting for a westerly bound trolley car. The accused, who is a chauffeur, was upon a pleasure trip in company with another person, and was driving or coasting an automobile at a reckless and dangerous rate of speed down a hill on Main street on the north side of said street, and going in a westerly direction. He saw the deceased and the persons with her, and believed they were waiting for the westerly bound trolley car which he had just passed; and in order to pass them, he, without reducing his speed, turned his automobile southerly and upon the trolley track, when the accused and her daughter, alarmed and confused by the rapidly approaching car and its glaring headlights, endeavored to cross the tracks to the south. The accused observing this movement of the deceased and her daughter, turned his car sharply to the left, endeavoring, as he said, "to beat them out," when his car skidded along the track, and turned about and overturned, striking the deceased and her daughter, and throwing the deceased forward some 40 feet and causing her death. The accused claimed to have proved that he was running down the hill from 18 to 20 miles an hour; that he turned his car to the left when he observed the deceased and those with her, because it was apparent that there was not sufficient room between them and the gutter to enable him to pass on the right; that Mrs. Howe and her daughter suddenly ran toward the south when the automobile was within 10 feet of the crosswalk, and that he thereupon turned sharply to the south, and applied the emergency brake; that he exercised his best judgment in attempting to avoid hitting them, and that the course which he pursued was the most prudent one which he could have taken under the circumstances.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Upon the trial the defendant's counsel asked of several witnesses called by defendant, what the character and reputation of the accused was as an automobile driver, and whether he was a careful driver. These questions were excluded upon the state's objection, but these witnesses were permitted to testify to the general good character, reputation, and habits of the accused. The exclusion of these inquiries is among the reasons of appeal.

It is apparent from the language of the charge that the accused was permitted to testify to his experience and ability as a chauffeur, and that the state offered no evidence upon these subjects. But evidence of his reputation as a skilful chauffeur, or that he was considered to be a careful driver by those who had ridden with him, was inadmissible. Confessedly the accused was driving or running down the hill at some 20 miles an hour. Apparently he did not attempt to slacken his speed when he first saw the deceased upon the crosswalk on the same side of the trolley track upon which he was driving, nor until he was within 10 feet of the crosswalk, and the accused had suddenly run toward the south and upon the track. Apparently his principal claim was that it was the negligence of the deceased, and not his own, which caused the accident. Clearly, his car was going so rapidly when he was within 10 feet of the crosswalk that he could not stop it quickly enough to prevent running upon the people whom he had seen on the crosswalk when he was at a distance of about 250 feet from them. That the accused had theretofore had the reputation of being a careful driver, and had been so regarded by those who had ridden with him, did not tend to prove that he was not guilty of gross negligence in continuing to drive his car at the speed at which he did after he first saw the deceased on the crosswalk, nor excuse such action. Morris v. East Haven, 41 Conn. 252; Bassett v. Shares, 63 Conn. 39, 46, 27 Atl. 421; Laufer v. Bridgeport Traction Co. 68 Conn. 475, 37 L.R.A. 533, 37 Atl. 379; Budd v. Meriden Electric R. Co. 69 Conn. 272, 37 Atl. 683.

The accused complains of the following language of the court in its charge to the jury: "Unlawfulness is, of course, an essential element of all manslaughter. Where one assaults or attacks another without intending to kill, and causes the other's death, the killing, though unintentional, is unlawful, because of the unlawful act which produced it. The same would be true even if the act which produced the death was not consciously directed against him or her whose death resulted, if the act was in itself unlawful. So it is a general principle that one who, without intention to take life, causes the death of another by his own unlawful act, is criminally responsible for the killing. It is a sufficiently accurate statement for any purpose of yours to say that when one causes the death of another without an intention to take life, and while engaged in doing some act in itself unlawful, the killing will be manslaughter. . . . At the time in question it was unlawful for any person to operate a motor vehicle in any public highway of this state recklessly or at a rate of speed greater than was reasonable and proper having regard to the width, traffic, and use of such highway, or to operate such motor vehicle so as to endanger the life or limb of any person."

This is but a small part of the charge given. The court clearly instructed the jury that the case of the state rested upon the claim "that the defendant at the time and place in question, in the operation of a motor vehicle,—an automobile,—was guilty of criminal negligence which caused or resulted in the death of Sarah Howe." "You will observe," said the court, "the expression 'criminal negligence,' which is recklessness of conduct, gross or wanton carelessness or negligence. . . . 'Gross negligence' imports a thoughtless disregard of consequences. . . . 'Wantonness,' in respect to human conduct, is doing a thing recklessly without regard to property or the rights of others." The court further said to the jury: "Do all the circumstances establish beyond a reasonable doubt a degree of carelessness amounting in itself to a culpable disregard of the rights and safety of others? If they do, they establish criminal negligence. If they do not, the homicide with which you are dealing is one that the law excuses as a misadventure. . . . Now, your ultimate inquiry will be, Was the defendant criminally negligent, and if so, did his criminal negligence cause the death of Mrs. Sarah Howe? If you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant at the time and place in question was criminally negligent in his conduct in the management of his auto car, and also that such negligence caused the death of Mrs. Howe as charged, you should acquit him."

The accused has no occasion to complain of the charge. It clearly required the jury, in order to convict, to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused, with reckless disregard for the safety of others, so negligently drove an automobile in a public street as to cause the death of Mrs. Howe. One who does such an act is not only liable civilly in damages (Irwin v. Judge, 81 Conn. 492-501, 71 Atl. 372), but is guilty 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) of criminal homicide. State v. Campbell, 82 Conn. 671, 677, 74 Atl. 927.

There is no error.

The other Judges concur.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

J. T. FUTCH, Impleaded, etc., Plff. in Err.,
v.

J. L. BOHANNON.

(134 Ga. 313, 67 S. E. 814.)

Ferry — operation.

1. Where one employs a flatboat or other means of transporting his employees and his wagons and teams across a stream, to and from his sawmill, and does not transport any part of the public for hire or compensation, he is not engaged in operating a ferry.

Same — public — infringement — personal conveyance.

2. Where one employs a flatboat or other vessel, not for the purpose of conveying any part of the public or freight for hire, but for the purposes indicated in the preceding leadnote, he does not infringe upon or violate the rights of the owner of a public ferry, though the right of the latter to maintain and operate a ferry is exclusive, and territorially extends beyond the point at which the former keeps and maintains a flatboat or other means for the purpose of conveying his employees and teams across the stream.

(April 13, 1910.)

Headnotes by BECK, J.

Note. — What amounts to interference with ferry franchise.

The early cases upon this question will be found in the note to Sistersville Ferry Co. v. Russell, 59 L.R.A. 513, and only cases decided since the writing of that note are here covered. Cases passing merely on the question of the exclusiveness of ferry franchises are not within the scope of this note.

A statute forbidding the establishment of a ferry within a mile of an existing ferry was held to be violated where merchants, carrying on a store within a mile of a ferry, operated a skiff whereby persons were carried across the river, the skiff being run by an employee of the merchants, and it appearing that persons who purchased goods at their store were given tickets for the price of the ferrying, which tickets were delivered to the operator of the skiff, who, in turn, gave them to the merchants, and received the compensation. Hatten v. Turman, 123 Ky. 844, 97 S. W. 770. Petition for rehearing overruled in 123 Ky. 851, 98 S. W. 1000.

So, a statute providing that if any person shall keep any ferry over any navigable ERROR to the Superior Court for Wilcox County to review a judgment in plaintiffs favor as to defendant Futch in a suit to enjoin the operation of a certain alleged ferry which was alleged to infringe plaintiff's ferry rights. Modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. M. B. Cannon for plaintiff in error.

Mr. E. H. Williams for defendant in error.

Beck, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff filed his equitable petition, and sought an injunction against defendants, Futch and Hamilton, praying that they be enjoined from operating a ferry on the Ocmulgee river at a point less than 10½ stream, for which he shall charge any person any money or any other valuable thing, without obtaining a license, he shall be liable to a penalty, is violated by an arrangement whereby one agreed to ferry persons across the stream if they would assist him in repairing and launching an old ferryboat. Shemwell v. Finley, 88 Ark. 330, 114 S. W. 705.

And a merchant maintaining a store and storehouse on opposite sides of a river, at a point where a ferry is maintained by another person, infringes the latter's license by maintaining rowboats, of which he accords his customers free use in the transaction of business with him, where his customers consist of the public generally, and he receives what is a full equivalent for the ferrage in the profits of the sales, and his acts clearly diminish the profits of the ferry. Peru v. Barrett, 100 Me. 213, 70 L.R.A. 567, 109 Am. St. Rep. 494, 60 Atl. 968.

And an exclusive license for a ferry is infringed where another ferry is operated in the same territory by an unincorporated association of persons which issues tickets to members, to the amount of their shares. Dinner v. Humberstone, 26 Can. S. C. 252.

And in Re Howell, 36 Ark. 470, it was held that although the county court had power to establish free ferries where it could be done without interference with other franchises, it had no power to authorize the establishment of a free ferry within the prohibited distance of a ferry duly licensed.

So, in New York v. Longstreet, 64 How. Pr. 30, running a steamboat under a coasting license at regular intervals from 129th St., North river, to Fort Lee, New Jersey, was held an interference with a ferry already established between those points.

And a pontoon bridge, the subscription to which was open to the public, and which was operated without a license, was held in Blanchard v. Abraham, 115 La. 989, 40 So. 379, to be an infringement of the franchise of the lessee of a ferry authorized by the police jury.

In Finley v. Shemwell (Ark.) 126 S. W. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

miles from the place at which the plaintiff was operating a public ferry, in the exercise of a franchise alleged and admitted by the defendants to be exclusive as to the territory named, and to have been duly granted to petitioner by the proper authorities. There was some evidence to support the allegation that the defendants were preparing to operate a ferry, as alleged in the petition.

Futch (Hamilton having been dismissed from the case) denied that he was preparing or intended to establish or operate either a public or a private ferry, and contended that the preparations which he was making were exclusively for the purpose of transporting, for his own private use and benefit, employees, wagons, and teams employed 717, under a statute providing that persons owning land fronting on any public navigable stream should be entitled to the privilege of keeping a public ferry over such stream upon obtaining a license from the county court, and which further provided that such court should not permit any ferry to be established within 1 mile above or below any previously established ferry, except at or near cities, it was held that where one ferry, operated by a landowner, had been abandoned for a number of years, and no license had been issued to him during that time, an attempt by him after that time to operate a ferry, although under a license, was an infringement of the rights of another landowner, who had established a ferry within the mile limit after the field was opened for the opening of another ferry, through the abandonment of the one first established.

In Brigham v. R. 6 Can. Exch. 414, affirmed in 30 Can. S. C. 620, the court refused a recovery against the Crown where damages were sought for leasing land for, and licensing the building of, a bridge which was alleged to be a breach of the ferry license. But the court said, in passing, that it seemed that the petitioners would be entitled to a writ of scire facias to repeal the license and lease if their rights acquired under the ferry license were prejudiced.

But under a statute providing for a penalty if a person "shall keep a ferry over any navigable stream, for which he shall charge any person any money or any other valuable thing" without complying with the provisions of law relating to obtaining licenses, it was held in Shinn v. Cotton, 52 Ark. 90, 12 S. W. 157, that the penalty could not be recovered against one who ran a free skiff as an inducement to persons to trade at his store, where it appeared that those carried did not agree to purchase anything, and that no charge was made.

And a person may lawfully make use of his own boat within the limits of a ferry, in pursuit of his business or pleasure, without any necessity of showing the motive he

by him in moving lumber manufactured at his sawmill to a place at which the lumber was loaded for shipment, and that it was necessary for him to cross the river with his teams in taking them back and forth from the mill, and that it was nearer and more convenient for himself, his employees, and teams to cross the river at the point where he proposed transporting them than at the ferry operated by the petitioner. Defendant admitted that he did not own the land on either side of the stream. He introduced no evidence other than his sworn answer. Upon the interlocutory hearing, the court granted the injunction against Futch, as prayed for, and also adjudged that he "be further enjoined from using said attempted ferry, as prayed for by him in his answer."

Whether the petitioner, under the grant of a franchise, had the sole and exclusive privilege of maintaining and operating a ferry within the distance of 10½ miles on either side of the ferry established by him, is not presented in this record. The petitioner's exclusive right to operate a ferry charging toll within the designated distances was not challenged or questioned by the defendant, and the order of the judge, granting the interlocutory injunction, restraining the defendant from operating a public or private ferry,—that is, a ferry at which tolls are charged or any part of the public transported for hire,—is not excepted to; but the court's order is broad enough to operate as an injunction against the employment of flatboats to be used by the defendant as a means of transporting wagons and teams necessary in the operation and carrying on of his sawmill. In the defendant's answer it is distinctly alleged that he intended to run and operate "said ferry" exclusively for his own private use and benefit, and for the purpose of carrying his teams across the river, as stated above. The answer also negatives any idea of carrying or transporting the public or any part thereof, for hire or toll; and yet, in the interlocutory order, it is adjudged that the defendant "be further enjoined from using said attempted ferry, as prayed for by him in his answer."

Both in the answer and in the interlocutory injunction, the employment and use by the defendant of a means of transporting his teams across the river is spoken of as a ferry. The term "ferry" in itself imports, necessarily, the idea of charging or receiving toll for transportation. A ferry is the right of "carrying passengers across streams, or bodies of water, or arms of the sea, from one point to another, for a compensation paid by the way of toll." 2 Washb. Real Prop. 6th ed. § 1215. And this definition is substantially in accord with numerous definitions of the word found in the law dictionaries, text-books, and the decisions of courts. "A public ferry is open to all. Regular fare is established. The ferryman is a common carrier. He is bound to take over all who come, . . . and he is held to strict liability.

had for allowing others in his boat, providing the persons were not travelers and nothing was charged. Ives v. Calvin, 3 U. C. Q. B. 464.

And where an indenture gives a right to operate a ferry between two landing places, but not an exclusive right between any points on the two banks, the right conferred is not disturbed by the operation of steam launches, landing at a considerable distance from the landing places of the first ferry, the evidence showing a change of circumstances since the establishment of the latter, demanding other service. Cowes Urban Dist. Council v. Southampton, 1. W. & S. E. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. [1905] 2 K. B. 287.

So, where a ferry franchise gives the exclusive right only to carry by means of a ferry, a bridge constructed by private enterprise to connect the same highways as the ferry is not a disturbance of the ferry right. Dibden v. Skirrow [1908] 1 Ch. 41, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 252.

The dictum in R. v. Cambrian R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. 422, that recovery could be had by the proprietor of a ferry against a railway for damage sustained by reason of the construction of a railway and foot bridge, seems to be overruled in Dibden v. Skirrow, supra.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Where a statute provides that the board of supervisors of counties shall have power to authorize and establish public ferries whenever they think proper, and to license any person to keep the same, but gives the owner of the soil the preference if he complies with the requirements of the act, a holder of a license enjoys his privilege subject to the power of the board to establish other ferries as near as, in their judgment, the public convenience requires. Montjoy v. Pillow, 64 Miss. 705, 2 So. 108.

So, where a statute provided that the county court "shall not permit any ferry to be established within 1 mile above or below any ferry previously established, except at or near cities and towns where the public convenience may require it, and satisfactory proof of the same shall be first adduced," the owner of one ferry cannot maintain a bill on the ground that another ferry, established under authority from the county court, is an illegal interference with his exclusive vested rights, since the decision of the county court that it is required for the public convenience is conclusive where not appealed from. Lindsay v. Lindley, 20 Ark. 573. J. T. W.

Such a right exists, not as appurtenant to his land, but is a franchise, which needs the grant of the proper public authority." Greer v. Haugabook, 47 Ga. 282. In the same case the court said: "A private ferry is mainly for the use of the owner; and, though he may take pay for ferriage, he does not follow it as a business. His ferry is not open to the public, at its demand. He may, or may not, keep it going," etc. In both expressions, "public ferry" and "private ferry," is involved the idea of a right to take compensation for transportation of freight or passengers by way of toll.

Consequently the operation of a boat by a person merely for the purpose of conveying his own teams and employees across a stream would be neither a public nor a private ferry; and the employment of proper means for transporting himself, his employees, and his teams by the defendant in no way interfered with nor violated any rights of the petitioner in this case to the maintenance and operation of a ferry, however exclusive those rights may have been within the territory designated. And while the court's order, so far as it operates to prevent the defendant from establishing and operating a ferry, whether public or private, is permitted to stand, direction is given that the injunction be so modified as to allow the defendant to employ a flatboat or other suitable means of conveying his employees and his wagons and teams across the stream where it is contended he was preparing to operate a ferry.

Judgment affirmed, with direction.

All the Justices concur.

IDAHO SUPREME COURT.

RE G. W. HULL.

(18 Idaho, 475, 110 Pac. 250.)

Sunday — public amusement — statutory regulation — construction.

1. Section 6825 of the Revised Codes provides that "it shall be unlawful for any person or persons in this state to keep open on Sunday . . . any theater, playhouse, dance house, race track, merry-go-round, circus or show, concert saloon, billiard or pool room, bowling alley, variety hall, or any such place of public amusement. . . ."

Held that, in order to bring a public amusement not specifically enumerated by the statute (Rev. Codes, § 6825) under the general language of "any such place of public amusement," the likeness or similarity must exist in something other than the mere fact that it is a "public amusement," and must in a general way correspond to the amusements specified.

Same — "scenic railway."

2. What is designated as a "scenic railway," being a railway constructed of rails, and on which cars are run for the purposes only of amusement, where the track is elevated a considerable distance above the ground at the place of beginning, and is built on an incline, with intervening elevations, and the cars are propelled by the force of gravity, is not "such place of public amusement" as a "merry-go-round," and is not prohibited from being kept open on Sunday by the provisions of § 6825 of the Revised Codes.

Same — statute — scope.

3. An amusement that is not per se unlawful or criminal, and is not in itself immoral or dangerous, or detrimental to the public health, will not be included within the provisions of the statute prohibiting certain specified public amusements and other like and similar amusements on Sunday, unless the same is forbidden by the statute either in direct terms or by clear implication.

(August 5, 1910.)

Note. — What amusements are prohibited by Sunday laws.

Cases involving theaters or baseball are not included in this note, as they are covered respectively by notes in 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1157, and 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 23.

Moving pictures.

With the comparatively recent appearance and the rapid increase in the number and popularity of moving picture shows, numerous cases have arisen involving their legality under Sunday laws, depending upon whether or not they are included in the various forms of general expressions contained in the Sunday statutes. Some of these cases, mostly from New York, are included in the note in 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1157.

Of the later New York cases, People v. Finn, 57 Misc. 659, 110 N. Y. Supp. 22, holds that an exhibition of moving pictures on Sunday for the purpose of illustrating lectures upon the biblical story of Joseph and his brethren, and upon the lumber industry in California, is not within a statute prohibiting "all shooting, hunting, fishing, playing, horse racing, gaming, or other public sport, exercises, or shows, upon the first day of the week, and all noise disturbing the peace of the day." The court said: "The showing of moving pictures may, or may not, constitute violation of the statute in question. It all depends upon the method and the purpose of such show. Where they are given as an incident to and for the purpose of illustrating a lecture which, in itself, is permissible, their showing does not fall within the intention of the statute."

APPPLICATION for a writ of habeas corpus to secure the release of petitioner from custody to which he had been committed for alleged violation of the Sunday rest law. Petitioner discharged.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. P. E. Cavaney and Richards & Haga, for petitioner:

Penal statutes should be strictly construed.

Chandler v. Lee, 1 Idaho, 349; Greathouse v. Heed, 1 Idaho, 494; Lamkin v. Sterling, 1 Idaho, 92; 2 Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 501, p. 963; Ex parte Bailey, 39 Fla. 734, 23 So. 552; State v. Woodruff, 68 N. J. L. 89, 52 Atl. 294; United States v. Wiltberger, 5 Wheat. 76, 5 L. ed. 37; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 658.

In People v. Hemleb, 127 App. Div. 356, 111 N. Y. Supp. 690, the appellate division of the second department held that an indoor moving picture exhibition, accompanied by piano playing at intervals, is not within the prohibition of said statute, which applies only to out-of-door exhibitions.

Following People v. Hemleb, the court said in William Fox Amusement Co. v. McClellan, 62 Misc. 100, 114 N. Y. Supp. 594, that moving picture shows in a hall, for which admission is charged, are not within the prohibition of the statute, and further, that such shows are not within statutory provisions prohibiting certain theatrical exhibitions, nor are they "business" prohibited on Sunday by a statute providing that specified acts are prohibited as serious interruptions of the repose and religious liberty of the community, and specifying acts not including such shows.

And in Edwards v. McClellan, 118 N. Y. Supp. 181, it was held, on the authority of People v. Hemleb, that moving picture shows given indoors, accompanied by music, electric-light advertising, and posters, are not "public shows" within the above-mentioned statute.

Minnesota follows the New York cases, the Minnesota statute being taken from the New York Code, and State v. Chamberlain (Minn.) 127 N. W. 444, holds with the latest New York cases that, under the rule of ejusdem generis, the term "shows" in the statute refers to out-of-door amusements, and does not include a moving picture exhibition designed to illustrate moral subjects for the entertainment of the public, when conducted in an orderly and proper manner, within a building.

So, in Montana, it has been held that the operation of a moving picture show in which the pictures are all of a clean and moral character, accompanied by piano music, together with a vocal solo as a part of the performance, is not a violation of the statute prohibiting the keeping open or maintaining of a theater on Sunday, on the ground that the form of entertainment in 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

All doubt as to the construction of a penal statute should be resolved in favor of the defendant.

State v. Walsh, 43 Minn. 444, 45 N. W. 721; State v. Krueger, 134 Mo. 263, 35 S. W. 604; State v. Beck, 21 R. I. 288, 45 L.R.A. 269, 43 Atl. 366; People v. Tanner, 128 N. Y. 416, 28 N. E. 364; State v. Prather, 79 Kan. 513, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 23, 131 Am. St. Rep. 339, 100 Pac. 57.

Where general words follow particular ones in a statute, the general words will be limited in their meaning, or restricted to things of like kind and nature with those specified.

State v. Prather, supra; Ex parte Neet, 157 Mo. 527, 80 Am. St. Rep. 638, 57 S. W. 1025; State v. Williams, 35 Mo. App. 541; question does not affect the morals or good order of the community, for the preservation of which the statute was passed. State v. Penny (Mont.) — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 111 Pac. 727.

In Idaho a different result is reached,—Ex parte Bossner (Idaho) 110 Pac. 502, holding that a moving picture show or exhibition comes within the inhibition of the statute involved in RE HULL, forbidding the opening or conducting upon Sunday of "any theater, playhouse . . . circus or show . . . or any such place of public amusement."

In R. v. Ouimet, 14 Can. Crim. Cas. 136, it was held that the opening of an amusement hall on Sunday, apparently a moving picture show, though "what was actually going on inside of it, however, has not been proved," the selling of tickets to the public, and the admission of the ticket holders to some unknown attraction in the hall, constituted an offense against the Quebec Sunday observance act, as being the pursuit of a proprietor's business or calling for gain, on Sunday, in contravention thereof.

But in R. v. Charron, 15 Can. Crim. Cas. 241, a different conclusion is reached, the latter case holding that the proprietor of a moving picture show, by carrying on such show on Sunday, and charging an admission fee therefor, does not violate said act, as the corresponding words of the French version of the statute (involved also in the former case) are restricted to the sale of goods, mercantile affairs, and the manual occupations. And further, that an exhibition of moving pictures showing events in the life of Napoleon Bonaparte, without verbal explanation or musical accompaniment, is not a theatrical performance within the prohibition of the same statute.

Exhibitions.

One who operates a "penny arcade," or place where a number of machines are kept, each of which, by a mechanical arrangement, exhibits pictures to a person who

State v. Bryant, 90 Mo. 534, 2 S. W. 836; St. Louis v. Laughlin, 49 Mo. 559; Com. v. Burrell, 7 Pa. 34; People v. Hochstim, 30 Misc. 562, 73 N. Y. Supp. 634; Re Hastings, 15 Phila. 420; Com. v. Mehler, 19 Phila. 529; Keith & P. Amusement Co. v. Bingham, 108 N. Y. Supp. 205; United States v. Buffalo Park, 16 Blatchf. 189, Fed. Cas. No. 14,681; Eden Musee American Co. v. Bingham, 58 Misc. 644, 108 N. Y. Supp. 200; St. Louis Agri. & Mechanics' Asso. v. Delano, 108 Mo. 217, 18 S. W. 1101; R. v. Whitmash, 7 Barn. & C. 596.

Messrs. D. C. McDougall, Attorney General, J. H. Peterson, O. M. Van Duyn, and C. P. McCarthy, for the State:

A "scenic railway" is included in the gen-drops a penny in the slot, is held in Fichtenberg v. Atlanta, 126 Ga. 62, 54 S. E. 933, to be a "dealer" within the meaning of a municipal ordinance declaring that any "merchant, billiard table or ten-pin alley keeper, or other dealer, who shall keep open doors on the Sabbath day," shall be subject to a prescribed punishment, the word "dealer" being construed in connection with the words preceding it.

In New York, however, an exhibition of a stereopticon and pictures operated by an automatic slot machine device, together with certain other machines, which, on the insertion of money in the slot, communicated certain musical selections to the operator, audible to him alone, is not within the prohibition of the statute involved in the moving picture cases above, providing that "all shooting, hunting, fishing, playing, horse racing, gaming, or other public sports, exercises, or shows, upon the first day of the week, and all noise disturbing the peace of the day, are prohibited." People ex rel. Valensi v. Flynn, 108 N. Y. Supp. 208.

And the Sunday exhibition of paintings, statuary, wax figures, plaster groupings, and curios, unaccompanied by any musical or stage entertainment, has been held not to be a "public show" within the meaning of the same statute. Eden Musee American Co. v. Bingham, 58 Misc. 644, 108 N. Y. Supp. 200. But the injunction order there granted, restraining the police from interfering with such exhibition, was reversed in 125 App. Div. 780, 110 N. Y. Supp. 210, on the ground that equity is without jurisdiction to grant an injunction restraining the police from arresting a person for violation of the statute prohibiting shows on Sunday, on the ground that the plaintiff's exhibition of paintings, statuary, wax figures, plaster groupings, and curios is not in violation of that statute, and that the police were mistaken in their conclusion that it was.

An aquarium is a place of entertainment and amusement within a statute penalizing the keeping open of such a place on Sunday, where the building consists of a range eral words of the statute reading, "or any such place of public amusement."

2 Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 814, § 422; State v. Groves, 119 N. C. 822, 25 S. E. 819; Randolph v. State, 9 Tex. 521; Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Chicago, 199 Ill. 484, 59 L.R.A. 631, 65 N. E. 451; Misch v. Russell, 136 Ill. 22, 12 L.R.A. 125, 26 N. E. 528.

The intent of the legislature is to be found in the ordinary meaning of the words of the statute.

2 Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 832, p. 437; Willis v. Mabon (Willis v. St. Paul Sanitation Co.) 48 Minn. 140, 16 L.R.A. 281, 31 Am. St. Rep. 626, 50 N. W. 1110; State v. Holman, 3 M'Cord, L. 306; R. v.

of chambers below the level of the ground, and a terrace above, bordered with a garden, the chief part being used as an aquarium, filled with glass tanks for the exhibition of marine fish and animals, and there being also a museum, a reading room, with newspapers, and a restaurant and dining hall and conservatories, etc.; it further appearing that a band plays sacred music on Sunday evenings, and that programs are issued, stating the music to be played, and the times when the fish will be fed, and that the whole is open to the public on Sunday, on the payment of an admission fee. Terry v. Brighton Aquarium Co. L. R. 10 Q. B. 306.

In Warner v. Brighton Aquarium Co. L. R. 10 Exch. 291,—a similar action, brought a little later, against the same defendant, where the same facts and circumstances appeared, except that it was stated that the reading room was used on week days only, and there was no statement as to the playing of sacred music on Sunday evenings, or as to newspapers and illuminated microscopes being provided in the building for the amusement and entertainment of visitors,—the court held "that having regard to the decision of the court of Queen's bench in Terry v. Brighton Aquarium Co., it was clear that the aquarium was a place of amusement within the meaning of the act. The facts that the band of music had been discontinued on Sunday, and that the reading room was no longer available except on week days, might make it not so much a place of amusement as before, but did not prevent it from being a place of amusement within the meaning of the act."

Lectures.

A hall used by a society formed for the purpose of giving lectures on Sunday evenings on art, science, literature, and other subjects, which were not instituted for profit, but for which a small admission fee was charged, the subjects including "Chicago, Past and Present," with a description of "The World's Fair," illustrated by lime-light representations of the places and per-

Edmundson, 2 El. & El. 77; R. v. Double-day, 3 El. & El. 501.

The doctrine of ejusdem generis yields to the rule that an act should be construed so as to carry out the object sought to be accomplished by it, so far as that object can be collected from the language employed.

2 Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 666; Hawke v. Dunn [1897] 1 Q. B. 579; Webber v. Chicago, 148 Ill. 313, 36 N. E. 70; Doggett v. Catterns, 17 C. B. N. S. 669, 19 C. & B. N. S. 765; Woodworth v. State, 26 Ohio St. 196.

In construing a penal statute, any interpretation that will defeat its own purposes must never be adopted if the statute will admit of any other reasonable construction.

sons described; and the characteristics of the three nations, England, Ireland, and Scotland,—was held in Reid v. Wilson [1895] 1 Q. B. 315, to be a place "used for public entertainment or amusements" within the meaning of the above-mentioned statute penalizing the keeping open on Sunday of any such place.

In Baxter v. Langley, L. R. 4 C. P. 21, under the same statute the proceedings at meetings held on Sunday evenings in a hall duly registered for that purpose as a place of public worship, consisting of sacred music and an address, sometimes of a religious tendency, sometimes neutral, but never profane, general admission to the body of the hall being free, but tickets being sold and money taken for admission to reserved seats,—were held not an amusement or entertainment within the act, the object of the persons who held the meetings not being pecuniary gain, and their honest intention being to introduce religious worship, though not according to any established or usual form.

Concerts.

In R. v. Barnes, 45 U. C. Q. B. 276, it is held that the same act prohibiting amusements and entertainments on the Lord's day is in force in Ontario, and an application was therefore refused to quash a conviction thereunder for giving on Sunday evening, in the Royal Opera House, a performance called a "Grand Sacred Concert," consisting of the singing of some sacred and secular songs, to which admission was by ticket for money, open to all comers, and it appearing that some hundreds were present, and that there were applause and encores.

In Stewart v. Thayer, 168 Mass. 519, 60 Am. St. Rep. 407, 47 N. E. 420, it was held that no concert of any kind could be licensed on Sunday, except a concert of sacred music on the evening of that day, under a statute then in force, providing that "no person shall be present at any game, sport, play, or public diversion, except concerts of sacred music, upon the evening fol-

The Emily, 9 Wheat. 381, 6 L. ed. 116; 2 Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 437, p. 834; Chandler v. Lee, 1 Idaho, 349.

Allshie, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The petitioner was convicted in the justice's court of Boise precinct, Ada county, of violating § 6825 of the Revised Codes, known as the "Sunday rest law," and was sentenced to pay a fine of $50 and to be imprisoned in the county jail for a term of ten days. The specific offense charged against the petitioner was that of unlawfully keeping open a place of public amusement known and designated as a "Scenic Railway."

This case was submitted on a stipulation lowing the Lord's day . . . unless such game, sport, play, or public diversion shall have been duly licensed," etc.

Traveling.

In cases involving civil consequences, statutes against traveling on Sunday have been violated under the following circumstances:

—riding in horse car to visit a friend's friend. Stanton v. Metropolitan R. Co. 14 Allen, 485.

—riding on ferryboat for recreation and enjoyment of sea air. Carroll v. Staten Island R. Co. 58 N. Y. 126, 17 Am. Rep. 221.

—yachting for pleasure. Wallace v. Merimack River Nav. & Exp. Co. 134 Mass. 95, 45 Am. Rep. 301.

—mere use of horse to go from one place to another, under statute prohibiting all business, traveling, and recreation on Sunday. Hinckley v. Penobscot, 42 Me. 89.

—pleasure driving, under statute prohibiting unnecessary walking or riding. Wheel- den v. Lyford, 84 Me. 114, 24 Atl. 793; Parker v. Latner, 60 Me. 528, 11 Am. Rep. 210.

—walking with others to the house of a friend, for pleasure. Cratty v. Bangor, 57 Me. 423, 2 Am. Rep. 56.

—walking 12 or 14 miles, from town to town, to visit for pleasure. Duran v. Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. 63 Vt. 437, 13 L.R.A. 637, 25 Am. St. Rep. 773, 22 Atl. 530.

But in the same class of cases, the following circumstances have been held not to constitute violations of such statutes:

—riding in street car for pleasure, under statute against secular business or labor, and sport or recreation. Horton v. Norwalk Tramway Co. 66 Conn. 272, 33 Atl. 914.

—riding bicycle to attend funeral of friend, and returning by longer route for health and exercise, statute against unnecessary walking or riding. Eaton v. Atlas Acci. Ins. Co. 89 Me. 570, 36 Atl. 1048.

—riding in a carriage for exercise only, of facts, from which it appears that on July 24th, the same being Sunday, the petitioner kept open his place of amusement, and admitted such persons as applied for admission, and operated his cars and furnished rides to those who paid the fee of 10 cents. It seems that the Natatorium Park Amusement Company, Limited, is a corporation organized under the laws of this state, and that the petitioner, G. W. Hull, is its general manager, and has control and management of its property. This so-called scenic railway consists of a track several hundred feet long, on which wooden cars are run at a high rate of speed. The cars are elevated by means of a cogwheel attachment, so that the track is a considerable distance from the ground at the highest place. It is built on a general incline, with slight elevations intervening from that point to the end of the track, where it comes to the surface of the ground near the place of starting. These cars run from the highest point by force of gravity, and are operated purely as a matter of amusement to those who take the rides, and incidentally for the pecuniary benefit of the proprietors of the park. Ten cents' worth of amusement via this scenic railway lasts about two minutes, so the record says. The tourist may then purchase a new ticket or forego a further view of the scenery.

The state contends that this comes within the provisions and purview of § 6825 of the Revised Codes. That statute provides among other things as follows: "It shall be apparently held within exception, under statute against unnecessary walking or riding, but expressly excepting from its prohibition work of necessity or charity, the court saying: "And this exception may properly be said to cover everything which is morally fit and proper, under the particular circumstances of the case, to be done upon the Sabbath." Sullivan v. Maine C. R. Co. 82 Me. 196, 8 L.R.A. 427, 19 Atl. 169.

—invalid riding with companions for enjoyment of open air and benefit of her health, not "traveling." Cleveland v. Bangor, 87 Me. 259, 47 Am. St. Rep. 326, 32 Atl. 892.

—so, walking with a cousin, simply for exercise in the open air. O'Connell v. Lewiston, 65 Me. 34, 20 Am. Rep. 673.

—simply walking in the open air. Davidson v. Portland, 69 Me. 116, 31 Am. Rep. 253.

—and walking with a friend on Sunday evening, less than half a mile, with no purpose of going to or stopping at any place but one's own home, or of passing out of the city, and with no object of business or pleasure except the open air and gentle exercise. Hamilton v. Boston, 14 Allen, 475.

So, in New Hampshire, traveling on Sunday to make a social visit to one's parents is not within a statute which prohibits "any game, play, or recreation on that day." Corey v. Bath, 35 N. H. 531.

And in Ohio, pleasure driving on the public highways on Sunday is lawful, it not being "sporting" within the meaning of the statute. Nagle v. Brown, 37 Ohio St. 7.

Gaming.

Suffering persons to play cards and bet upon games at cards in his tavern on Sunday, by a licensed tavern keeper, is an offense prohibited by a statute providing "that no house keeper shall sell any strong liquor on Sunday, or suffer any drunkenness, gaming, or unlawful recreations in his or her house," the term "gaming," as there used, being synonymous with "betting on games." State v. Fearson, 2 Md. 310. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Borders v. State (Tex. Crim. Rep.) 66 S. W. 1102, it is held that under a statute imposing a fine on any person engaged in any species of gaming for money within the limits of any city on Sunday, the gaming with dice known as "shooting craps," not an offense when such statute was passed, but thereafter prohibited by a later statute, as soon as prohibited, became subject to the penalty imposed by the former statute.

And in R. v. Yaldon, 17 Ont. L. Rep. 179, a prosecution for perjury alleged to have been committed on a trial for gambling with dice on the Lord's day, it is said: "A charge of gambling with dice on the Lord's day was made against him. This was an offense which the police magistrate clearly had jurisdiction to try."

But gaming is not an act of "common labor" or a person's "usual avocation" within the meaning of a statute declaring that "if any person, etc., shall be found on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, rioting, hunting, fishing, quarreling, at common labor, or engaged in his usual avocations, works of charity and necessity excepted, etc., he shall be fined, etc." State v. Conger, 14 Ind. 396.

And playing at cards and dice on Sunday is not within the prohibition of a statute forbidding "farces or plays of any kind, or any games, tricks, juggling . . . or any such like show or exhibition," etc., on that day, as this refers to public exhibitions. Rucker v. State, 67 Miss. 328, 7 So. 223.

Dancing.

Dancing on Sunday to the accompaniment of a piano and two violins, not for the purpose of an exhibition, but for the amusement of the persons dancing, is not a violation of a statute prohibiting any theatrical or other performances, in which the only reference to dancing is in the words "negro or other dancing," which evidently refers to an exhibition or performance of dancing. Re Allen, 34 Misc. 698, 15 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 453, 70 N. Y. Supp. 1017.

unlawful for any person or persons in this state to keep open on Sunday . . . any theater, playhouse, dance house, race track, merry-go-round, circus or show, concert saloon, billiard or pool room, bowling alley, variety hall, or any such place of public amusement. . . ." It is conceded that this does not come within the list of enumerated amusements. But the state insists that it is analogous and similar to a "merry-go-round," and is consequently prohibited by the phrase "or any such place of public amusement." It is argued on behalf of the state that under the doctrine of ejusdem generis a scenic railway such as above described is prohibited on the ground that it falls within the prohibition of like, similar, and kindred amusements to the one specifically prohibited. The petitioner, on the other hand, argues equally as earnestly and eloquently that, under the doctrine of the same rule, the amusement he is conducting is not included within the prohibition of the statute. We enter upon the consideration of this statute fully conscious of the duty which rests on the court to ascertain what the law is on the subject, and to declare it as we find it, rather than as we think it ought to have been. We have no right to add to or take from the law. The task is sometimes extremely difficult to ascertain the purpose or intent of the lawmakers, but that difficulty does not relieve a court of the undertaking.

It is useless to undertake to review or analyze the authorities cited by counsel in this case, for the reason that none of them construe a statute in the language of ours, and the only benefit we derive from them is such as we have gathered from the analogy of reasoning employed. The following are the principal cases to which our attention has been called and that we have given examination: Cited by petitioner: Ex parte Neet, 157 Mo. 527, 80 Am. St. Rep. 638, 57 S. W. 1025; Keith & P. Amusement Co. v. Bingham, 108 N. Y. Supp. 205; State v. Prather, 79 Kan. 513, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 23, 131 Am. St. Rep. 339, 100 Pac. 57. By the state: State v. Groves, 119 N. C. 822, 25 S. E. 819; Randolph v. State, 9 Tex. 521; Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Chicago, 199 Ill. 484, 59 L.R.A. 631, 65 N. E. 451; Willis v. Mabon (Willis v. St. Paul Sanitation Co.) 48 Minn. 140, 16 L.R.A. 281, 31 Am. St. Rep. 626, 50 N. W. 1110; 2 Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 437; State v. Dolan, 13 Idaho, 693, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1259, 92 Pac. 995.

It is difficult to tell the exact theory on which the lawmakers drafted this section of our statute. The amusements enumerated and prohibited are not similar or kindred amusements. There is apparently nothing common to all of them except that they are all public amusements. They are not all immoral amusements, nor are they all noisy and boisterous amusements. The race track may be said to be immoral in that it is a place of betting and gambling, and so it may be said that the "concert saloon" and the "variety hall" are classes of amusement at least suggestive of immorality. On the other hand, the merry-go-round Surf bathing.

Sunday bathing in the surf, in a public manner, in the presence of church-going people, is not an offense within the vice and immorality act, prohibiting the use or practice of any kind of playing, sports, or pastimes or diversions on Sunday. Lennig v. Newkirk, 7 N. J. L. J. 87.

Hunting.

Under an act creating two offenses, first, hunting on the Sabbath with a dog or dogs; second, being found off one's premises on the Sabbath, having a shotgun, rifle, or pistol, it is held in State v. Howard, 67 N. C. 24, that a defendant should have been convicted under an indictment charging him with being "found off his premises on the Sabbath day, having with him a shotgun," etc., upon a finding "that he was carrying his gun off his premises on Sunday; but it is not proved that he was hunting."

In Gunter v. State, 1 Lea, 129, where plaintiffs had been convicted of violating the Sabbath by hunting and shooting through the woods and fields with guns and pistols, etc., it was held that a statute which prohibits hunting and fishing on Sunday, and empowers a justice of the peace to fine such offenders, does not hinder the criminal prosecution by indictment or presentment when such offenses are so committed as to amount to public nuisances.

State v. Sexton, 121 Tenn. 35, 114 S. W. 494, reversed a judgment quashing a warrant charging defendant with "having in possession in the open air implements for shooting on the first day of the week, called Sunday," holding the offense so charged and denounced by the one section of the statute to be embraced in the caption of the act providing for the protection of game in the state of Tennessee, and to regulate the shooting, etc., thereof, and to prohibit shooting on Sunday.

But hunting game is not "work of labor" within the meaning of a statute prohibiting work or labor on Sunday. State v. Carpenter, 62 Mo. 594.

Fishing.

The taking of fish from a weir after sunset on Saturday, although they entered the weir before that time, is within the prohibition of a statute forbidding all persons either to take fish or impede their passage in weirs from sunset on Saturday to sun-is not an immoral amusement. It may also be said that there is nothing especially immoral about the circus or show, the billiard hall, nor the bowling alley, and yet these are prohibited on Sunday. When we come, therefore, to ascertain the moving purpose of the lawmakers in enumerating the amusements that should be prohibited, we fail to find a reason that is common to all of the amusements enumerated or that could be applied to each of them. It is patent that the legislature did not intend to absolutely forbid and prohibit all public amusements on Sunday. If they had so intended, they would undoubtedly have said so in so many words. On the contrary, they immediately follow the specific amusements enumerated with the words "or any such place of public amusement." The word "such" has a very definite and distinct meaning. It is defined by the lexicographers as: "Of that kind; of the same or like kind; identical with or similar to something specified or implied; . . . being the same as what has been mentioned or indicated; being the same in quality; having the quality specified, etc."

Now it is evident that the legislature intended to prohibit any other public amusement not enumerated which could be distinctly classed as like or similar to those specified; but, since all are alike in that they are public amusements, the similarity must exist in something else other than the mere fact of amusement. The merry-go-round needs no description, for, on account of its popularity, it must be known and understood by all. There is a similarity between the merry-go-round and this scenic railway in that each furnishes a ride, but the character of the ride is apparently very different on the scenic railway from that of the merry-go-round. One of the distinguishing features of the merry-go-round is the inspiring and animating sacred and patriotic music which it furnishes and which tends to make it more public than it otherwise might be. This the scenic railway does not seem to have. The scenic railway is, by force of necessity, obliged to make up in scenery for the loss of horses, giraffes, zebras, elephants, and other beasts of burden that add interest and variety to the merry-go-round. Riders of animals of the same species are enabled to quietly converse together while they enjoy the music, but on the scenic railway there is nothing to be done but to hold on, exercise the muscles, and view the scenery. The merry-go-round was evidently prohibited on account of the noise it makes and the fact that it is usually located in the midst of the residence portion of the city, town, or village. So far as the record shows, this scenic railway is not attended by the noise that characterizes the merry-go-round. Again, the character of the amusement under consideration is such as to render it necessary that it have a great deal more room than the merry-go-round requires, and as a consequence it must be located outside of the principal residence portion of the community, and will therefore be farther removed from residences generally and from places of public worship. This class rise on Monday. Baker v. Wentworth, 17 Me. 347.

Fishing with seines on Sunday in the channel of the Hudson river, between the city of New York and Baker's falls, was held in Sickles v. Sharp, 13 Johns. 497, to be a violation of a statute prohibiting fishing with set nets in the Hudson river between the city of New York and Baker's falls, but tolerating the use of nets in a certain manner along the flats and shores, and making it unlawful to fish with seines in "any other part" of said river, or in the waters of the state, at or below said city, on Sunday.

Fishing on Sunday is within a statute prohibiting "all shooting, hunting, fishing, playing, horse racing, gambling, or other public sport, exercises, pastimes, or shows," on Sunday, though done on private grounds, and without creating any commotion or disorder or disturbing the peace. People v. Moses, 65 Hun, 161, 8 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 396, 20 N. Y. Supp. 9, affirmed in 140 N. Y. 214, 35 N. E. 499. In this case, defendant was convicted for fishing on Sunday in a pond belonging to a club of which he was a member. The pond was in the vicinity of a public highway and of residences, and within the view of a number of people. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A judgment of the lower court was affirmed by a vote of four to three,—three of the four judges holding that the prohibition of fishing on Sunday was absolute, irrespective of the given act being inoffensive to the sensibilities of anyone, and the fourth concurring in the result upon the ground that the evidence in the record was sufficient to support a finding by the trial court that the act complained of was committed under such circumstances as to constitute a serious interruption of the repose and religious liberty of the community.

Com. v. Rothermel, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 648, affirmed a judgment of conviction of fishing on Sunday under a statute providing that "there shall be no hunting or shooting or fishing on the first day of the week, called Sunday."

But Nelson v. Pyramid Harbor Packing Co. 4 Wash. 689, 30 Pac. 1096, held that Sunday fishing in Alaska is legal since the act of Congress relating to the protection of salmon in the waters of Alaska repealed any and all laws of Oregon upon that subject which had been extended over Alaska by previous act of Congress, and which provided that it was illegal to fish on Sunday.

A. C. W.

of legislation is upheld solely as an exercise of the police power of the state. The prohibition of public amusements on Sunday must therefore rest on the theory that it is necessary either for the protection of the public morals, the public health, or the public peace and safety. Mullen v. Moseley, 13 Idaho, 457, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 394, 121 Am. St. Rep. 277, 90 Pac. 986, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 450; State v. Dolan, 13 Idaho, 693, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1259, 92 Pac. 995.

This amusement is not per se unlawful or criminal, nor is it immoral or dangerous or detrimental to the public health. It is apparently a wholesome, innocent outdoor amusement. In order to prohibit such an amusement we ought to find the prohibition within the statute, either in positive terms or by clear implication. No such means of amusement existed in this state at the time of the passage of this act, and if this is to be prohibited under the statute, it must be by reason of it being "such a place of amusement" as some one of those specifically enumerated. We do not feel that we would be justified in extending the statute to cover this means of amusement, and thereby make its maintenance and operation a crime. If we should do so, it would only be a short step to include the automobile or street car that is operated on Sunday for the accommodation of those who desire a pleasure ride. If the legislature should see fit to close such places of amusement as this on Sunday it may do so, but until that time we think no serious harm can be done to the morals or health of the people by permitting an amusement like the one in question to keep open on Sunday. The chief objection to most of the public amusements and resorts is not to the amusement feature itself, but to the habit of the proprietors of such places adding to them immoral, corrupting, or boisterous features or attendants until the public conscience rebels against them and demands a total cessation. That will be the result with this amusement if it is not run orderly and decently.

We conclude that a "scenic railway" such as that described in the record in this case does not come within the prohibition of the statute. The petitioner should be discharged, and it is so ordered.

Sullivan, Ch. J., concurs.
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

WILLIAM M. VERMILYE

v.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH-CABLE COMPANY.

(205 Mass. 598, 91 N. E. 904.)

Telegram — notice of probable injury — right to reject.

1. The attachment to a telegram tendered for transmission, of a notice of probable damage in case of negligence in its transmission or delivery, gives the company no right to refuse to receive and transmit it.

Same — wilful refusal.

2. A refusal to receive a telegram for transmission which is both intentional and unreasonable is wilful within the meaning of a statute imposing a penalty for wilfully refusing to accept a telegram for transmission.

(May 18, 1910.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Suffolk County made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for alleged wrongful refusal to receive and transmit a telegram which resulted in a verdict for plaintiff. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. G. Phillip Wardner and Arthur Lord, for defendant:

The refusal to receive the telegraph blank on which was written the message and to which was attached a sticker giving notice of probable damage in case of negligence in transmission, and to transmit the message, was not such a "wilful refusal" as under the provisions of the statute imposed a forfeiture.

Ellis v. American Teleg. Co. 13 Allen, 235; Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. 220; Com. v. Bradford, 9 Met. 270; Com. v. McLaughlin, 105 Mass. 463; Felton v. United States, 96 U. S. 699, 24 L. ed. 875; Potter v. United States, 155 U. S. 438, 39 L. ed. 214, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 144.

Note. — The above decision seems to be one of first impression upon the question whether a telegraph company is justified in refusing a message because of the liability in which it might be involved in case of mistake or delay, as an extensive search has failed to disclose any other case in which that specific problem was presented for solution.

A telegraph company has a legal right to refuse to transmit, for the rates prescribed for the transmission of unrepeatable messages, a message of such a nature, or presented under such circumstances, as probably to impose on the company an extended liability beyond the cost of the message, in case of accident or mistake.

Ellis v. American Teleg. Co. 13 Allen, 226; Redpath v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 112 Mass. 71, 17 Am. Rep. 69; Grinnell v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 113 Mass. 299, 18 Am. Rep. 485; Clement v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 137 Mass. 463; Wheelock v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 197 Mass. 119, 83 N. E. 313, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 188.

If the defendant had accepted for transmission the plaintiff's message with the sticker on it, the defendant would, in case of failure to transmit or of delay, have been under an extended liability in excess of the amount of the tolls.

Wheelock v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. supra.

Mr. Samuel F. Batchelder, with Mr. Olcott O. Partridge, for plaintiff:

The refusal to receive the telegram for transmission was a wilful refusal within a statute imposing a penalty on telegraph companies for wilful failure to receive and transmit messages.

2 Joyce, Electric Law, 2d ed. §§ 836, 843a, 845-847, 850; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Ferguson, 157 Ind. 37, 60 N. E. 679.

Any intentional refusal without sufficient cause is wilful.

Buchanan v. Cook, 70 Vt. 168, 40 Atl. 102; Fuller v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 31 Iowa, 187; Odin Coal Co. v. Denman, 185 Ill. 413, 76 Am. St. Rep. 45, 57 N. E. 192; Leslie v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co. 110 Mo. 31, 19 S. W. 308; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Braxtan, 165 Ind. 165, 74 N. E. 985; Com. v. McLaughlin, 105 Mass. 460; People ex rel. Clingan v. Draper, 63 Hun, 389, 18 N. Y. Supp. 282; Tracy v. Com. 25 Ky. L. Rep. 669, 76 S. W. 185; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Leiner, 202 Ill. 624, 95 Am. St. Rep. 266, 67 N. E. 398.

Where there is any question whether there is sufficient ground for refusing a message, if the company refuses it, it does so at its own risk.

Smith v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 84 Ky. 664, 2 S. W. 483; 2 Joyce, Electric Law, 2d ed. 1349, § 862.

A rule of a telegraph company that messages will not be received for transmission if accompanied by a notice that the message is a business message and that loss is likely to result, or that damages will be claimed if not promptly and accurately transmitted, is unreasonable, illegal, and void.

Wheelock v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 197 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Mass. 119, 83 N. E. 313, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 188.

The telegraph company had no right to refuse messages because of the notice. The notice was not a term of the contract.

Bartlett v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 62 Me. 209, 16 Am. Rep. 437; Webbe v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 169 Ill. 610, 61 Am. St. Rep. 207, 48 N. E. 670; Croswell, Electricity, 438, 440, §§ 493, 495; 1 Sedgw. Damages, 8th ed. §§ 159, 160; 2 Sedgw. Damages, 8th ed. § 892; Daughtery v. American U. Teleg. Co. 75 Ala. 168, 51 Am. Rep. 435.

Knowlton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, having occasion to use the telegraph frequently in his business, and desiring to give notice that would entitle him to recover special damages suffered from a neglect of the defendant to transmit promptly and correctly a message which he took to its office to be sent, put upon the blank on which the message was written a gum "sticker," on which a notice was printed as follows: "Notice is hereby given that this is a business message, and that failure to deliver it promptly and correctly is likely to cause the sender financial loss. Further particulars will be furnished, if desired, on application to the sender at 116 Bedford street, Boston." This he did for his protection under the rule stated in Wheelock v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 197 Mass. 119, 83 N. E. 313, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 188, and Squire v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 98 Mass. 232, 235, 237, 93 Am. Dec. 157, that the damages to be recovered for a breach of contract in transmitting a telegraphic message are such as reasonably might have been expected to be within the contemplation of the parties, by reason of the contents of the message or the circumstances attending the transaction when the contract was made. At different times other messages, accompanied by similar notices in different forms, were offered by the plaintiff to the defendant for transmission, and refused, and one or more of this kind was sent. Seemingly, both parties were trying to do that which was thought best for the protection of their respective rights and interests in reference to the liabilities growing out of this kind of contract. The findings of the judge who tried the case without a jury have relieved the controversy of some of the questions which otherwise might arise. He found that there was an absolute refusal of the defendant to receive and transmit the message while it was accompanied by such a notice. Nothing was said by either party about having the message repeated or insured, as it might have been under the regulations of the company upon payment of an additional price. He found that this refusal was without reference to the particular form in which the notice was presented, and that the form chosen by the plaintiff for the notice on this message had no tendency to confuse the operator, and did not increase the probability of error or delay in transmitting the message. These findings were well supported by the evidence.

The first count was at common law for a refusal to receive and forward the message, and the second was under Rev. Laws, chap. 122, §§ 9, 11, for the same cause of action. The defendant was engaged in a quasi public employment, to be carried on for the accommodation of the community, with a view to the general benefit. It had no right to refuse to receive a proper message for whose transmission payment was tendered. Rev. Laws, chap. 122, § 9; Ellis v. American Teleg. Co. 13 Allen, 226, 231. The only question raised is whether the giving of the notice by the plaintiff relieved the defendant of its obligation to transmit the message. It was certainly the right of the plaintiff to inform the defendant as to the nature of the message, and its importance from a financial point of view, in order that the nature and particulars of its undertaking might be understood by the defendant, and the obligation that it incurred in reference to damages for a breach of the contract. Wheelock v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. ubi supra. Such a notice would furnish no justification for a refusal to send a message, whether it might or might not be a sufficient reason for charging something more than the lowest rate established for the transmission of messages. See Bernard v. Adams Exp. Co. 205 Mass. 254, 91 N. E. 325. It was intended to show that the damage for a failure properly to send and deliver the message would probably be substantial, and, under the statute and the rules and regulations of the company, to create a liability that might reach the sum of $100. Such a liability might exist without a special notice if the language of the message sufficiently indicated the importance of a prompt delivery of it, and the loss that would result from a failure to deliver it promptly. Whatever negotiations or proposals or limitations on the part of the defendant might have been warranted by the giving of the notice, the absolute refusal to receive and send the message was unreasonable, and justified a finding for the plaintiff under the first or second count, either under the statute or at common law.

The other count was under Rev. Laws, chap. 122, §§ 9, 10, to recover the forfeiture provided by § 10. The question under this 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

count is whether the refusal of the defendant was wilful, within the meaning of the section. It is conceded that it was intentional, and the judge found that it was unreasonable. He ruled that a refusal that was both intentional and unreasonable was wilful, within the meaning of the statute. This ruling was right.

The defendant's argument upon this branch of the case is chiefly in the nature of an assumption that the conduct of the defendant was reasonable, in reference to the different rates charged, depending upon whether the message was sent in the usual way or was repeated or insured, and in reference to the attempt to impose upon the defendant by the notice a liability that otherwise would not exist. This argument is answered by the findings of the judge that the refusal of the defendant was absolute, and without reference to the rates that might be charged in view of the different degrees of responsibility that might be assumed for a failure to transmit the message correctly and promptly.

We have already said that these findings were well warranted by the evidence.

Exceptions overruled.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

DELANVAN C. DELANO

v.

NATHAN B. SMITH et al.

(206 Mass. 305, 92 N. E. 500.)

Mortgage — right to protect property.

1. A mortgagee may maintain an action in his own name for injury to the mortgaged property.

Landlord — waste — infecting property with smallpox.

2. Infecting a building with smallpox, by a board of health which leases it from a mortgagor, may be found to be waste as against the mortgagee, if the jury finds that it is not reasonable and proper to let the building for this purpose, having reference to the probable effects upon its future, growing out of the presence of disease-producing conditions, in view of the existing

Note. — Infecting premises with contagious disease as waste.

No case bearing squarely upon this question has been found, but, in United States v. Bostwick, 94 U. S. 53, 24 L. ed. 65, it was held that no recovery could be had by the landlord for the use of premises by the tenant, for a smallpox hospital, where all the receipts for the rent stated that the property was being so occupied and no objection to such an occupancy was ever state of the art of disinfection or other means of rendering it healthful.

Damages — waste — reputation of property.

3. Injury to the reputation of an estate because of its use as a smallpox hospital is not an element of damages in an action against the lessee for waste.

(September 6, 1910.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to the direction by the Superior Court for Middlesex County of a verdict for defendants in an action brought to recover damages for alleged waste. Judgment for plaintiff on condition.

The jury was permitted to assess the damages, and defendants stipulated that if the direction of the verdict in their favor was erroneous judgment should be entered for the plaintiff.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. D. C. Delano for plaintiff.

Messrs. Nelson P. Brown and Stover & Sweetser, for defendants:

Until forfeiture the mortgagor is the owner of the legal estate.

Trowbridge, Readings on Mortgages, 8 Mass. 551; Ballard v. Carter, 5 Pick. 115, 16 Am. Dec. 377; Brigham v. Winchester, 1 Met. 390; Waltham Bank v. Waltham, 10 Met. 334.

The mortgagor is the actual, unconditional owner of mortgaged premises before possession taken.

Brigham v. Winchester and Waltham Bank v. Waltham, supra; Dolliver v. St. Joseph F. & M. Ins. Co. 128 Mass. 315, 35 Am. Rep. 378.

The board of health of a city may use premises as a contagious hospital without a warrant issued, under Pub. Stat. chap. 80, § 43, if it has the consent of the owner.

Hersey v. Chapin, 162 Mass. 176, 38 N. E. 442; Spring v. Hyde Park, 137 Mass. 554, 50 Am. Rep. 334.

If any right of action inures to the plaintiff from the execution of the lease by his mortgagor, and the use of the premises by the mortgagor's privies, it can only be upon allegation and proof that the remainder of the mortgage security, and, furthermore, the personal responsibility of the mortgagor, are insufficient to afford him complete indemnity.

Thomas, Mortg. pp. 54, 55.

Rugg, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of tort in the nature of waste. The defendants constituted the board of health in the city of Everett. The plaintiff was the mortgagee of certain real estate in that city, the buildings upon which consisted of one house of three tenements, and a store and a stable. On or about the 21st day of December, 1901, the defendants, acting as members of the board of health, leased of the mortgagor said premises "to be used as a contagious hospital." Occupation for that purpose began at once and continued until December 22, 1902, during which period forty-two persons sick with smallpox were treated, six of whom died. The plaintiff did not know of the lease, nor of such occupation, until after it had continued for several months. The defense is that the acts complained of were done under the authority of the lease given by the mortgagor.

It is to be noted that the defendants did not proceed under Pub. Stat. chap. 80, § 43, then in force (now Rev. Laws, chap. 75, § 46, as amended by Stat. 1906, chap. 365, § 2). They undertook to perform the public duty incumbent upon them of providing a proper place for the treatment of persons suffering from smallpox, by agreement with the mortgagor, and not by any exercise of the power delegated by the commonwealth. Whatever may be the law in other jurisdictions, by statute or otherwise, "it has long been settled in this commonwealth that as to all the world except the mortgagee the mortgagor is the owner of the mortgaged lands, at least till the mortgagee has entered for possession." Dolliver v. St. Joseph F. & M. Ins. Co. 128 Mass. 315, 35 Am. Rep. 378. Whether the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged premises or not, or whether his right to possession begins only with the breach of condition, and there has been no breach, nevertheless he has such an interest in the property and its preservation as enables him to maintain an action in his own name made. It would seem to be a fair inference that it was only the landlord's knowledge and acquiescence in such use of his premises that prevented him from recovering.

In Hersey v. Chapin, 162 Mass. 176, 38 N. E. 442, it was held that a tenant in possession could not, as against the rights of the owner, authorize the members of 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the municipal board of health to establish a hospital for patients afflicted with an infectious disease in the owner's house, and to maintain such hospital there to the damage of the reversion; an attempt to do that would have been a violation of the owner's right, which would have justified him in treating the tenant as a trespasser.

W. M. G.

for injury to it. Such right of action is founded not upon the right to present possession, but on title to the estate. He may maintain such an action, although he is a junior mortgagee and although the security remains ample for his protection. He has a right to his security unimpaired. The leading principles by which the rights of mortgagor and mortgagee may be worked out are clearly explained by Wells, J., in Gooding v. Shea, 103 Mass. 360, 4 Am. Rep. 563. Cases which recognize a right of action in the mortgagee to recover damages for injury to his security are numerous. See for example James v. Worcester, 141 Mass. 361, 5 N. E. 820; Wilbur v. Moulton, 127 Mass. 509; Searle v. Sawyer, 127 Mass. 491, 34 Am. Rep. 425; Byrom v. Chapin, 113 Mass. 308-311; Stewart v. Finkelstone, 206 Mass. 30, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 634, 92 N. E. 37; Ocean Acci. & G. Corp. v. Ilford Gas Co. [1905] 2 K. B. 493; Fidelity Trust Co. v. Hoboken & M. R. Co. 71 N. J. Eq. 14, 63 Atl. 273. An action for such injury lies as well against the mortgagor, although rightfully in possession. The mortgagor is liable to the mortgagee for waste. The mortgagor in this respect stands to the mortgagee as a tenant to a landlord, or a tenant for life to a reversioner. Goodman v. Kine, 8 Beav. 379; King v. Smith, 2 Hare, 239, 18 Eng. Rul. Cas. 98; Page v. Robinson, 10 Cush. 99; Hutchins v. King, 1 Wall. 53, 17 L. ed. 544. A lease made by the mortgagor after the rights of the mortgagee have become fixed cannot affect the latter in any way without his consent. Tilden v. Greenwood, 149 Mass. 567, 22 N. E. 45; Elmore v. Symonds, 183 Mass. 321, 67 N. E. 314.

The fundamental question, therefore, is whether upon the facts agreed it was permissible for the jury to find that waste had been committed. Under the conditions prevailing in this commonwealth waste is an unreasonable or improper use, abuse, mismanagement, or omission of duty touching real estate by one rightfully in possession which results in its substantial injury. It is the violation of an obligation to treat the premises in such manner that no harm be done to them, and that the estate may revert to those having an underlying interest undeteriorated by any wilful or negligent act. Pyncheon v. Stearns, 11 Met. 304, 45 Am. Dec. 207; United States v. Bostwick, 94 U. S. 53, 65, 24 L. ed. 65, 66; Townshend v. Moore, 33 N. J. L. 284; Turner v. Wright, 2 De G. F. & J. 234, 246; 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Law, 2d ed. p. 255, and cases cited. Waste does not necessarily mean a subtraction of something from the corporal substance of the estate. Perhaps it may not always include change in material condition, though it is not necessary to decide that point in this case. Its early and frequent application was in an agricultural sense, where it means a damaging use not in accordance with good husbandry. Pratt v. Brett, 2 Madd. Ch. 62; Patterson v. Central Canada Loan & Sav. Co. 29 Ont. Rep. 134-137. It generally consists in some definite physical injury. This is shown by reference to the earlier definitions, as for instance that of Blackstone, who calls it a "spoil or destruction in houses, gardens, trees, and other corporeal hereditaments." 2 Bl. Com. Sharswood's ed. 281. On principle it follows that mere injury to the reputation of real estate or the supposed diminution of its value resting on whimsical or emotional grounds, or arising from dictates of custom or taste, do not constitute waste. These considerations have nothing to do with material substance, but depend upon evanescent or intangible preferences or prejudices. It is the commonly accepted view that smallpox is a contagious disease, spread through the instrumentality of germs, which although invisible to the naked eye are perniciously active and capable of causing loathsome and often fatal sickness. In Com. v. Pear, 183 Mass. 242, 67 L.R.A. 935, 66 N. E. 719, is a statement of the judicial notice which the court will take of the horrors of smallpox. From the agreed facts the jury would have been warranted in finding that this building was filled in every nook and crevice with the microscopic germs of this dreaded disease. This might have been found to constitute an essential alteration in the qualities and condition of the house with reference to the purposes for which it was intended to be used, such as to constitute a definite injury. Inoculation with germs of glanders was held to be a "bodily injury" in H. P. Hood & Sons v. Maryland Casualty Co. 206 Mass. 223, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 92 N. E. 329. Sowing the seeds of noxious weeds was restrained as waste in Pratt v. Brett, supra. Impregnation of a building with the indiscernible but vital germs of a dangerous malady is closely analogous to the sowing of seeds of deleterious plants, and may be in its effect far more detrimental. It may be in fact even more harmful than to tear down or remove a part of the building. It is in principle the same general kind of damage as the more familiar instances of waste. The possibility of germination of the disease germs which, it might have been found, were deposited through the action of the defendants within the house in question, was or might have been found to be waste, unless it is shown that they can be removed by disinfection or otherwise without material physical change in the building, so as to make it as safe for residence as before. Whether this can be done or not depends upon evidence. Hersey v. Chapin, 162 Mass. 176, 38 N. E. 442, while not decisive of the present case, seems to go upon the ground that the use of a building as a smallpox hospital might be an injury to the reversion. See also United States v. Bostwick, 94 U. S. 53, 24 L. ed. 65.

A case like the present should be submitted to the jury under instructions which would permit the plaintiff to recover the diminution in the value of his property for every valuable use among ordinarily intelligent men, arising from the occupancy for a smallpox hospital, provided the jury were satisfied that it was not reasonable and proper to let the building for this purpose, having reference to the probable effects upon its future, growing out of the presence of disease-producing conditions, in view of the existing state of the art of disinfection or other way of rendering it healthful, and excluding all sentimental or fanciful notions affecting only its reputation.

From an examination of the record there appears to be ground for the view that the case was tried throughout upon the theory that recovery was sought and could be had for injury to the reputation of the estate, apart from any physical waste, and that the stipulation and agreement, that in the event of the ruling to the effect that the plaintiff could not recover being wrong, judgment should be entered for the plaintiff, was made and entered into under such a misapprehension as to render what has taken place a mistrial, or to make it unjust to hold the parties to it, in view of the present opinion. The declaration is broad enough to include damages of the nature which we have held may be recovered. Hence the entry should be: Judgment for the plaintiff for the sum found by the jury, unless within sixty days from the filing of the rescript the justice of the superior court before whom the trial occurred shall decide, after hearing, that under these circumstances justice requires a new trial, and enter an order to that effect.

So ordered.

30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

NEW HAMPSHIRE SUPREME COURT.

FREEMAN C. WILLIS, Admr., etc., of Frank B. Willis, Deceased,
v.

PLYMOUTH & CAMPTON TELEPHONE EXCHANGE COMPANY.

(75 N. H. 453, 75 Atl. 877.)

Master — unsafe telephone pole — duty of inspection.

1. A telephone company sending a man to straighten an angle pole which is leaning because of the strain of the wires owes him the duty of doing what an ordinary man would do under the circumstances to ascertain whether or not the pole was originally set the proper depth into the ground, or whether it had pulled out, it being unsafe to climb a leaning pole subject to the angle strain if it is not sufficiently deep in the ground.

Same — notification of danger — duty.

2. A telephone company which sends a man to straighten an angle pole, knowing that it is less than the usual depth in the ground, of which fact or of the danger of straightening such poles he is ignorant, must use ordinary care to notify him of the dangers peculiar to the service because of it.

Same — sufficiency of instruction — question of law.

3. It cannot be said as matter of law that a telephone company acting as the ordinary man should not, when sending a lineman to straighten an angle pole, which it knows had pulled out of the ground, but with nothing to indicate that fact to the employee, who might have reached the conclusion that it had merely driven its brace into the ground, give him further notice of the danger, than simply to tell him to use a guy rope if the pole leaned badly.

Same — effect of furnishing sufficient implements.

4. A master cannot escape liability for injury to his servant, because he furnished him with proper implements with which to do his work the use of which would have prevented the accident, if the master did not tell him to use them in the particular case, and he did not know, and was not in fault in not knowing, that he ought to have done so.

On Rehearing.

Same — servant's negligence — violation of orders — effect.

5. A master cannot escape liability for injury to his servant, because the servant neglects in the particular case to follow any instructions which had ever been given him, and such failure contributed in some way to the accident,—especially where some of them were habitually violated not only by the ordinary workmen, but by their superiors also.

Note. — Upon the subject, "Injury to electric lineman through defect in pole or its appurtenances," see note to Lynch v. Saginaw Valley Traction Co. 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 774.

(October 5, 1909.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Grafton County made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate which resulted in a verdict for plaintiff. Overruled.

Plaintiff's intestate, Frank B. Willis, was employed by defendant as a telephone lineman, it being his duty, among others, to straighten leaning poles. Deceased, with two assistants, was sent by defendant's superintendent to straighten an angle pole which was leaning.

The evidence tended to show that angle poles, because of the side strain of the wires, are set 4 feet in the ground and supported by a guy, or a brace, or both, but that when one is supported by a short brace only the strain tends to lift it out of the ground; and that if this happens after the pole has been set for some time an easily discernible earth stain will show on the pole, but that if a pole is pulled up shortly after having been set no such stain is apparent. The pole in question, which had been erected some ten years, was 28 feet long and supported by a 10-foot brace, and at the time of the accident was but 2½ feet in the ground, although there were no surface indications that it was not set at the usual depth.

Plaintiff's evidence also tended to show that Willis was not given any special instructions as to how the work should be done, but had general instructions to inspect the poles when doing such work, and not to climb one that leaned badly without using a guy rope; that he had never seen a pole pulled up without there being some surface indications of the displacement, and that he thought the pole had been set at the usual depth, and that if it had been it would have been safe for climbing.

Deceased climbed the pole to attach a guy wire. His added weight raised the pole free from the ground, causing a fall to his death.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. Fred C. Demond, with Messrs. Streeter & Hollis and Alvin F. Wentworth, for defendant:

The condition of the pole was not a breach of any duty owing from the defendant to the deceased. It was under no obligation to furnish him a safe pole to repair.

Gibbons v. Brush Electric Illuminating 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Co. 36 App. Div. 140, 55 N. Y. Supp. 378; Ewald v. Michigan C. R. Co. 107 Ill. App. 294; Broderick v. St. Paul City R. Co. 74 Minn. 163, 77 N. W. 28; Saxton v. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. 81 Minn. 314, 84 N. W. 109; Kellogg v. Denver City Tramway Co. 18 Colo. App. 475, 72 Pac. 609.

Having no actual knowledge of the shallow setting of the pole, the defendant was under no obligation to the deceased to take measures to discover it, even if any method of inspection short of digging up the pole would have disclosed it.

Dartmouth Spinning Co. v. Achord, 84 Ga. 14, 6 L.R.A. 190, 10 S. E. 449.

A company sending out a gang of men to repair its lines is not required to send other men before them to inspect the poles, and determine which could safely be climbed without the taking of precautions.

Sias v. Consolidated Lighting Co. 73 Vt. 35, 50 Atl. 554; McIsaac v. Northampton Electric Light Co. 172 Mass. 89, 70 Am. St. Rep. 244, 51 N. E. 524; McGorty v. Southern New England Teleph. Co. 69 Conn. 635, 61 Am. St. Rep. 62, 38 Atl. 359; Krimmel v. Edison Illuminating Co. 130 Mich. 613, 90 N. W. 336; Kanz v. Page, 168 Mass. 217, 46 N. E. 620; Kelley v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 35 Minn. 490, 29 N. W. 173; Dartmouth Spinning Co. v. Achord, supra.

On Rehearing.

Contributory negligence should be inferred, as a matter of law, whenever the injury resulted from the servant's non-compliance with a specific order given by the master or his representative; and the mere fact that the servant was not warned that the prohibited act was dangerous does not render the doing of that act any the less culpable.

1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 363; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mothershed, 110 Ala. 143, 20 So. 67; Lendberg v. Brotherton Iron Min. Co. 97 Mich. 443, 56 N. W. 846; Prather v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 80 Ga. 427, 12 Am. St. Rep. 263, 9 S. E. 530; Pilkinton v. Gulf C. & S. F. R. Co. 70 Tex. 226, 7 S. W. 805; La Croy v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 132 N. Y. 570, 30 N. E. 391; Freeman v. Glens Falls Paper Mill Co. 70 Hun, 530, 24 N. Y. Supp. 403; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wilson, 88 Tenn. 316, 12 S. W. 720; Pennsylvania Co. v. Whitcomb, 111 Ind. 212, 12 N. E. 380; Connors v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 74 Iowa, 383, 37 N. W. 966; Lockwood v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 55 Wis. 50, 12 N. W. 401; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Craig, 25 C. C. A. 585, 47 U. S. App. 647, 80 Fed. 488; Shanny v. Androscoggin Mills, 66 Me. 420.

Mr. Oliver W. Branch, for plaintiff:

Willis did not assume the extraordinary risk of an improperly set pole.

Kelly v. Erie Teleg. & Teleph. Co. 34 Minn. 321, 25 N. W. 706; McDonald v. Postal Teleg. Co. 22 R. I. 131, 46 Atl. 407; Riker v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 64 App. Div. 357, 72 N. Y. Supp. 168; Essex County Electric Co. v. Kelly, 57 N. J. L. 100, 29 Atl. 427, s. c. 60 N. J. L. 306, 37 Atl. 619.

Messrs. Oliver E. Branch and Ira A. Chase also for plaintiff.

Young, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants' contention, that their motion for a nonsuit should have been granted, is based on the proposition that a master owes the servants he employs to repair his instrumentalities no duty of inspection. Is this an accurate statement of the rule to be applied in this case to determine the rights and duties of the parties?

In this jurisdiction, in so far as instrumentalities are concerned, the only duty the law imposes on the master for the benefit of experienced servants is that of notifying them of the dangers peculiar to the service because of any abnormal or unusual condition of his instrumentalities, of which he either knows or would have known if he had used ordinary care for their safety, and of which they neither know nor are in fault for not knowing, intending by "notifying," not merely calling their attention to the peculiar physical condition of his instrumentalities, but giving them all the information necessary to enable them to appreciate fully the dangers peculiar to the service because of any abnormal or defective condition of his instrumentalities.

Since a master performs his full duty, in so far as experienced servants are concerned, when he notifies them of the extraordinary or abnormal dangers of the service, it is true that he owes servants employed to make repairs no duty to notify them of the dangers of the service which are not caused by some unusual or abnormal condition of the instrumentalities to be repaired; for risks not created in that way are the usual or ordinary dangers of the service, and as to such risks the master owes his servants no duty, no matter what they are employed to do. But when, as in this case, the dangers incident to making the repairs arise from the master's failure to maintain his instrumentalities in the usual or ordinary way, he is in fault as to servants injured while making repairs, if he did, and they did not, know of the abnormal risk caused by the unusual condition of his instrumentalities (Aldrich v. Concord & M. R. Co. 67 N. H. 380, 36 Atl. 252); for such risks are not the usual or ordinary hazards of the service, but are among the extraordinary or unusual risks, of which it is the duty of the master to notify his servants when he does, and they do not, appreciate the peculiar dangers of the service incident thereto.

Although the defendants owed the intestate no duty to notify him of the dangers ordinarily incident to straightening up poles the usual depth in the ground, still it was their duty to do whatever the ordinary man would have done for his safety. It is not intended by this that it was the defendants' duty to furnish the intestate with poles safe for him to climb, or even with poles maintained 4 feet in the ground; but it was their duty to do what the ordinary man would have done to ascertain whether their poles were originally set the proper depth in the ground, or whether they had been pulled up since they were set. It is not, therefore, an accurate statement of the master's duty to say that he owes the servants he employs to make repairs no duty of inspection. He owes such servants, as well as those whom he employs to use his instrumentalities, the duty of doing whatever the ordinary man would do to discover the abnormal or extraordinary dangers of the service, and to notify them of those dangers of which he does, and they do not, know. Since this was the defendants' duty, the test to determine whether they were in fault for the intestate's death is to inquire whether (1) they did, and (2) he did not, know that the pole in question was less than the usual depth in the ground, and fully appreciate the risk peculiar to the work of straightening it up because of this fact; if it is found that they did, and he did not, appreciate that risk (3), whether the fact the pole was in the ground but 2½ feet was an abnormal condition; and if it was (4) whether they used ordinary care to notify him of the dangers peculiar to the service because of it. Wood, Mast. & S. §§ 414, 415.

The defendants' manager thought the pole leaned because the wires had pulled it out of the ground. It can be found from the testimony in respect to the intestate's habit never to climb a pole, or to permit others to climb it, unless he thought it was safe to do so, that he did not know the pole had been pulled up, or, in any event, did not appreciate the risk incident thereto. It is conceded that the pole ought to have been at least 4 feet in the ground; consequently the only question to be considered on this branch of the case is whether it can be said that the defendants did all the ordinary man would have done to notify the intestate of the danger peculiar to his work because the pole was less than the usual depth in the ground. All they did for that purpose was to tell him to use a guy rope if the pole leaned badly. As the defendants' servants were in the habit of construing that instruction, it meant that he was to use a guy rope whenever he thought, all things considered, it was not safe to climb a pole without it. But if it is conceded that the intestate understood it was not safe to climb any pole that leaned badly without using a rope, it can still be found that the defendants did nothing to notify him of the danger they knew was peculiar to climbing this pole, for it can be found that this pole did not lean badly. In short, it can be found that they sent him out to do this work without giving him any information whatever in respect to the extraordinary danger incident thereto, although they either knew or ought to have known of it, and also knew or ought to have known that there was no ground stain or other surface indication to show that the pole was less than the usual depth in the ground, and that in that situation a man of the intestate's experience would be as likely to attribute the leaning of the pole to the fact that the brace had sunk into the soft sand as to the fact that the wires had pulled the pole out of the ground. It cannot be said that under these circumstances the ordinary man would not have done something more than the defendants did to notify the intestate of the abnormal danger incident to straightening up this pole.

2. Concede that the defendants' first request should not have been refused because it assumed that the intestate was instructed to inspect poles for himself, and not to climb one that leaned badly without using a guy rope, and it does not follow that the court erred in refusing it. As has been seen, it is not an accurate statement of the law as applied to the facts of this case to say that the defendants were under no duty to the intestate "to inspect the pole in question." It was their duty to do what the ordinary man would have done to ascertain whether this pole was originally set at the usual depth, or whether since then the wires had pulled it up; and, if they found either that it was not set at the usual depth, or that it had been pulled out of the ground, to notify the intestate of it.

3. The defendants' second request was also properly refused. It cannot be said, as a matter of law, that if the defendants furnished the intestate "with suitable tools and apparatus with which to do his work, and Willis failed to use them, and if this failure in any way contributed to the accident, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover." If it is conceded that the defendants provided the guy rope for use on this pole, and that it was a suitable rope for that purpose and would have prevented the accident, the plaintiff could still recover if they failed to tell the intestate to use it, and he did not know, and was not in fault for not knowing, that he ought to use it. In that case, the fact that the rope would have prevented the accident is simply immaterial to the issue of the plaintiff's right to recover.

4. Neither can the defendants complain because the court refused to instruct the jury that if the intestate "failed to follow the instructions which were given him, and if the accident was in any way caused by his failure to follow them, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover."

Exceptions overruled.

All concur.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, further argument in writing was invited upon the exception to the refusal to give the instruction set out in paragraph 4 above.

In response thereto, Peaslee, J., on March 1, 1910, handed down the following additional opinion:

The question concerning the refusal to give the third instruction requested by the defendant has been argued as though it referred only to one express, unequivocal order given for this particular piece of work. If the request had been so framed as to relate to this order, and this alone, there might be force in the arguments advanced. But the request is broader than that. It includes all instructions ever given Willis, and demands a verdict for the defendant if failure to follow any of these instructions in any way caused the accident.

There was evidence not only of the specific instruction for this day's work, but also of general instructions along similar lines. There was also evidence that these general instructions were habitually disregarded not only by the ordinary workmen, but also by their superior, who gave the orders to them. From this it might be found that there was no intention on the part of the master that the instructions should be followed. After he has made a rule or given an instruction, "a practical invitation to violate it may be inferred from habitual usage which is known to him." McNee v. Coburn Trolley Track Co. 170 Mass. 283, 49 N. E. 437. Fair-minded men might conclude that the general instructions were to be followed only in cases where there seemed to be occasion to do so. The jury might conclude that no special instruction was given, and that the general ones were properly interpreted as above indicated. If they so found, they might return a verdict for the plaintiff if it seemed that Willis reasonably concluded that this was one of the occasions when the instructions were not to be followed. 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. 514, 945, 961. It was the plaintiff's right to have the case considered upon this theory, as well as upon those more favorable to the defendant. The requested instruction would deprive him of this right, and was properly refused. Ordway v. Sanders, 58 N. H. 132; Chase v. Chase, 66 N. H. 592, 29 Atl. 553; Smith v. Bank of New England, 70 N. H. 187, 193, 46 Atl. 230; Smith v. Bank of New England, 72 N. H. 4, 10, 54 Atl. 385; Minot v. Boston & M. R. Co. 74 N. H. 230, 237, 66 Atl. 825.

Rehearing denied.

All concur.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SECOND CIRCUIT.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD COMPANY,
Plff. in Err.,
v.
JOHN KELLY.

(101 C. C. A. 359, 177 Fed. 189.)

Master — special policeman — assault — liability.

A railroad company is not liable for an assault committed in a public street, 50 feet from its pier, by a special policeman employed and paid by it to regulate the traffic on the pier, but commissioned by the police department, upon a truckman who, in approaching the pier to secure a load, failed promptly to obey his signal to halt.

(March 7, 1910.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for the United States for the Southern District of New York to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for an assault alleged to have been made by defendant's servant upon plaintiff. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Lacombe, Coxe, and Noyes, Circuit Judges.

Mr. Norman B. Beecher with Messrs. Robinson, Biddle, & Benedict, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Louis J. Vorhaus and Charles Goldzier, with Messrs. House, Grossman, & Vorhaus, for defendant in error.
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Coxe, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

On the morning of November 9, 1906, the plaintiff, who was a truckman and piano mover, started with a two-horse team and two helpers to the pier of the defendant at the foot of West Thirty-Seventh street, New York, to receive and move a Tiffany grand piano. When the plaintiff, who was driving, reached the foot of the street, Michael Gunn, a policeman of the city of New York, assigned to special duty on the defendant's pier, and paid by the defendant, raised his hand as a warning signal to the plaintiff to halt. This he did not do immediately, and an altercation arose which culminated in his receiving a severe blow from the policeman's club, which caused the injuries complained of.

The version of the occurrence given by Gunn is to the effect that the plaintiff was contumacious and insulting, and that the blow was struck to prevent an assault by

Note. — Liability of private person or corporation for acts of special police officer appointed by public authority.

Since the preparation of the note on this subject appended to the case of McKain v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 280, the court that decided that case has in Layne v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 66 W. Va. 607, 69 S. E. 1103, reaffirmed and restated the rules there laid down for determining the responsibility of the defendant for the acts of a special police officer, appointed by public authority. After repeating verbatim the first headnote in the former case, to the effect that prima facie the special officer is a public officer, for whose acts the company procuring his appointment and paying him for his services, directly or indirectly, is not liable, the court in the latter case declares that a public officer specially employed by a common carrier to perform certain duties and services for it is a servant of such carrier, while acting within the scope of such employment; and if such servant, in the performance of such duties, wrongfully inflict injury upon a passenger, the carrier is liable therefor, although the injurious act so done was wilful and malicious, and prompted by motives and purposes personal to the servant (officer), such as resentment of insults or punishment for other wrongs perpetrated upon himself. It should be observed that the question whether a carrier or other employer is liable for injuries inflicted by one who sustains the relation of servant, out of his personal malice, is not within the scope of these notes. That is a general question which arises only after the relation of master and servant is established. (See, on that subject, note in 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 485.) The Layne Case is in point in this note because of its bearing on the point, preliminary to that question, whether the special of-the plaintiff and his companions. It is, of course, unnecessary for us to consider the question of fact thus presented. The basic question is, Should the court have submitted the facts to the jury? and, in such circumstances, the plaintiff is entitled to the most favorable view of the testimony.

The complaint alleges that on the day in question, "the defendant had in its employ as a special officer, one Michael Gunn, whose duty it was, as such special officer, to regulate the traffic on the defendant's pier at the foot of West Thirty-Seventh street." This appointment was made pursuant to the provisions of the city's charter which provides, in substance, that when the necessity therefor is shown, the police commissioner may appoint and swear in any number of special patrolmen to do special duty at any place in the city, the applicant paying for such services in advance. Such special patrolmen shall be subject to the orders of the chief of police, shall obey the rules and regulations of the police department of the city, and conform to the general discipline and such special regulations as may be made. They shall "possess all the powers and discharge all the duties of the police force, applicable to regular patrolmen."

ficer is to be regarded as a servant of the defendant. In this connection, the court declared the general proposition that when the capacity in which a person occupying the dual position of public officer and servant of a carrier of passengers acted in a transaction in which he inflicts wrong and injury upon third persons is uncertain, and dependent upon conflicting oral testimony and inconclusive facts and circumstances, the question is one for jury determination; and held that, upon the evidence, that question was for the jury in the instant case, although it conceded that in some cases the court can say as a matter of law in which capacity such officer and servant acted.

In Rand v. Butte Electric R. Co. 40 Mont. 398, 107 Pac. 87, involving the liability of a carrier for an alleged assault committed upon a passenger by persons in its employment, and paid by it, but who had, at its request, been appointed as deputy sheriffs and peace officers, the court thus states the rule for determining the carrier's responsibility: "We understand the rule of law to be that a public officer cannot engage as such to guard the property of a private individual or corporation, and that the latter cannot claim freedom from liability for his wrongful acts while engaged as its train man or in other like capacity, on the ground that he is a public officer. If the wrong was done by the officer as such, his employer is not liable, even if he exceeds his authority; but if it is done during the course of his duty as employee, then the employer is liable, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In short, for the purposes of this controversy, it may be stated that Gunn possessed all the powers of a regular patrolman. His salary was, it is true, paid by the defendant for special services upon its pier, but any act which a regular officer could do lawfully, Gunn could do. The converse of this proposition is also true. An act unlawful for the regular was unlawful for him; he had no immunity not possessed by the ordinary officer.

The question, then, for us to determine, may be stated as follows: Is a corporation which pays for the services of a policeman to guard its property and preserve order upon its premises liable for an unprovoked and wholly unjustifiable assault committed by him upon a public street? We are constrained to answer this question in the negative.

The witnesses all agree as to location of the assault. It was not on the pier, but at the foot of West Thirty-Seventh street, at least 50 feet from the entrance to the pier. We may take judicial notice of the fact that West Thirty-Seventh street is a public highway in no way under private control, and that it is the duty of police officers to control the movement of teams and regulate traffic at the point in question.

even if it is done in excess of authority; and it is generally a question for the jury to determine, upon all the evidence, the capacity in which the wrongdoer was acting at the particular time." Upon the evidence in the case, it was held that it was a question for the jury whether the persons who committed the assault were acting as public officers, or, under the order of the general manager of the company, as employees.

In Adler v. White City Constr. Co. 147 Ill. App. 20, the proprietor of an amusement park was held not responsible for an assault, committed in ejecting a person previously employed as a waiter, by one of a number of special patrolmen, designated by the general superintendent of police of the city for special duty at the park, notwithstanding that they were paid by the defendant, and that one of them was designated by the defendant's general manager as chief of the park police force, there being no evidence that such patrolmen were employed by the defendant in any other capacity than as policemen, or that the defendant had or exercised any control over them as policemen or otherwise, or that they were charged with or had ever performed, while in the service of defendant, any duties other than those pertaining to the office of policeman, or that, in doing what they did, they were enforcing or attempting to enforce any regulation or by-law of the defendant, or any order of any officer or agent of the defendant.

G. H. P.

The testimony of the plaintiff indicates that he was doing nothing unlawful or unusual at the time in question. He says he was proceeding towards the pier when he received the signal to stop. He immediately reined in his team, but because he did not stop soon enough, Gunn drew his club, jumped upon the wagon, and dealt him a blow which rendered him unconscious.

To hold the person who pays a policeman's wages for keeping order upon his premises liable for such a malicious assault as this, committed upon a public highway, goes far beyond the doctrine of any well-considered case with which we are familiar. If the plaintiff tells the truth, there was no justification for the brutal assault made upon him, but the defendant has done no act of omission or commission which renders it liable therefor.

The judgment is reversed, with costs.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

HARPER FURNITURE COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
SOUTHERN EXPRESS COMPANY.

(148 N. C. 87, 62 S. E. 145.)

Damages — idleness of factory — profits.

1. The damages to be allowed for the enforced idleness of a mill because of a carrier's neglect to transport machinery to it will not include lost profits.

Carrier — prompt transportation — notice.

2. The carrier has notice of the likelihood of special injury in case it fails to perform its contract upon receiving for transportation by express an engine shaft to be delivered to a furniture manufacturing company.

Same — stoppage of business — damages.

3. A carrier will be liable for compensatory damages in case it stops the operation of a factory through neglect promptly to transport repairs needed by it, where it has notice that special injury will result from its neglect.

(Walker and Brown, JJ., dissent.)

(May 29, 1908.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Caldwell County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for loss alleged to have resulted from defendant's failure promptly to transport repairs needed for plaintiff's factory. Reversed.
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Statement by Hoke, J.:

There was evidence tending to show: That plaintiff was a firm engaged in the manufacture of furniture, having its mill at Lenoir, North Carolina; that on or about the 21st of October, 1905, the Erie City Iron Works, of Erie City, Pennsylvania, shipped to plaintiff, as consignee, at Lenoir, North Carolina, an engine shaft, of a given kind, weighing something like 650 pounds; that, pursuant to the order of plaintiff company, the shipment was made by express over a line of connecting carriers, between the two points, including the defendant, and the shaft was delivered at Lenoir, North Carolina, by defendant company on November 9, 1905, indicating Note. — Liability of carrier for loss of profits incident to delay in the delivery of articles intended for use, and not for sale.

The early cases are collected in the note appended to Wells v. National Life Asso. 53 L.R.A. 33, and the later cases are herein presented in further illustration of the principles deduced and enunciated in that note.

Remoteness and contingency.

The actual saving which the manufacturer of cotton-seed products would have effected by the operation of two presses instead of one is a form of loss of profits, and is too remote and speculative to be recoverable from a carrier whose failure promptly to transport materials for a second press prevented its operation. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Planters' Gin & Oil Co. 88 Ark. 77, 113 S. W. 352.

And the profits lost by the proprietor of a public cotton ginnery during its enforced idleness resulting from a carrier's delay in transporting a part of the machinery for repairs are too speculative to be recovered in an action against the carrier, where there is no basis for determining the number of bales of cotton brought to the ginnery while it was idle, and the charge for ginning a bale depended on many contingencies. Southern R. Co. v. Coleman, 153 Ala. 266, 44 So. 837.

Loss of profits which would have accrued to the plaintiffs upon the fulfillment of a collateral contract are not recoverable in an action against a carrier for damages for delay in delivering machinery, where the contract from the fulfillment of which profits would have accrued was not in the contemplation of the parties at the time the carrier received the machinery for transportation. Goodin v. Southern R. Co. 125 Ga. 630, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1054, 54 S. E. 720, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 573.

Recovery by a traveling salesman for loss of earnings during a carrier's delay in delivering his sample trunk was denied in Palmer v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 123 N. Y. Supp. 47, upon the ground that they were not such as would naturally follow from dea wrongful delay in the shipment of something like two weeks. There was further evidence tending to show that the furniture factory of plaintiff company, for which the engine shaft had been ordered, was necessarily closed down during the time of wrongful delay, and that by reason of this loss of time in operating the factory the plaintiff company suffered damages to the amount of $200 and more, arising from wages paid idle hands and other costs incident to the delay, and interest on the amount of capital invested in the mill, and unproductive during said time. The character, capacity, and amount invested in the mill were shown as data for estimating the damage suffered, and it was proved that the full product of the mill had been already sold for the period and at a profit. It was further shown that, as soon as it was disclosed that the shipment was delayed, plaintiff company immediately duplicated the order, and both shafts were delivered at the same time, November 9th. Plaintiff offered to show the amount of profit which the mill could have realized during the time of delay, but the evidence was held to be incompetent, and the plaintiff excepted. At the close of the testimony, the court intimated an opinion that on the evidence, if believed, only nominal damages could be recovered, and, in deference to this intimation, plaintiff submitted to a nonsuit and appealed.

Messrs. Jones & Whisnaut for appellant.

Mr. W. C. Newland for appellee.

Hoke, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The decisions of this state are to the effect that the current profits of a going manufacturing enterprise, which are delay in delivering a trunk, and that they were not shown to have been within the contemplation of the parties.

In order to recover special damages for a carrier's breach of contract promptly to transport freight, the plaintiff must show that, at the date of the contract, the defendant had notice of the special conditions rendering such damages the natural and probable result of such breach. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Jones (Tex. Civ. App.) 113 S. W. 952; Towles v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 83 S. C. 501, 65 S. E. 638; Moore v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 85 S. C. 19, 67 S. E. 11.

Therefore a carrier's delay in the delivery of ginning machinery that it undertook to carry without notice of the special circumstances cannot be held to render it liable for profits lost by the consignee by reason of being unable to operate his public ginnery. Kolb v. Southern R. Co. 81 S. C. 536, 62 S. E. 872.

And the "reasonable value" of a cotton gin for a period of enforced idleness cannot be recovered from a carrier as damages for its failure to deliver a part of the necessary machinery, which it undertook to carry without being informed of the necessity for prompt delivery. American Exp. Co. v. Jennings, 86 Miss. 329, 109 Am. St. Rep. 708, 38 So. 374.

So, the profits that would have been realized from the operation of a flour mill during the period of a carrier's delay in the transportation of parts of the machinery necessary to its operation cannot be recovered from the carrier, where it had no notice of the conditions, and sufficient data are not produced from which a reasonably accurate estimate of such profits can be made. Sharpe v. Southern R. Co. 130 N. C. 613, 41 S. E. 799.

And profits lost by one engaged in milling for the public, by reason of a carrier's delay in delivering a rice huller, cannot be recovered from the carrier, where it had no 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

notice that the huller was to be used for the purpose of making profit. Traywick v. Southern R. Co. 71 S. C. 82, 110 Am. St. Rep. 563, 50 S. E. 549.

And where the carrier which transported a portion of the machinery of a sawmill for repairs and return had no notice at the time of undertaking the carriage that the machinery was necessary to the operation of the mill, the loss of a customer in case of delay was not a probability in the minds of the parties, so that the carrier cannot be held liable for loss of profits on sales of lumber to such customer, in an action for damages for the delay. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mink, 126 Ky. 337, 103 S. W. 294.

Profits that would have been realized under a time contract for the boring of a well, but for a carrier's delay in delivering a part of the contractor's equipment, cannot be recovered from the carrier, where it undertook the transportation without knowledge of the circumstance requiring prompt delivery. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Johnson, 110 Tenn. 624, 94 S. W. 600.

And a carrier undertaking the transportation of a horse power without notice of such facts as would inform it of the results of delay is not liable in an action for damages for delay, for the loss of fodder and cow manure through the consignee's inability to operate a fodder shredder without the horse power. Hoffman v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 39 Pa. Super. Ct. 47.

The usable value of log wagons during the period of delay in delivery by a carrier engaged to transport them cannot be recovered from the carrier, where no notice was given to it that delay would cause special damages. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Newhouse Mill & Lumber Co. 90 Ark. 452, 119 S. W. 646.

And a carrier undertaking the transportation of fuel oil without knowledge that the continued operation of the consignee's ice plant depended upon prompt delivery cannot be held responsible for profits that pendent on the varying cost of labor and material and the fluctuations of the market value of the product, as a general rule, are too uncertain to form the basis of an award of damages in breaches of contract affecting the operation of the plant, and the better rule in such cases, when it appears that substantial damages are recoverable, is that such damages shall be ascertained on the basis of interest on the capital invested, which is unproductive for the time, with the addition, under certain circumstances, of the pay of hands idle and necessarily unemployed, and some other incidental expenses reasonably referable to the defendant's wrong, which may at times include an outlay in the reasonable effort to reduce or minimize the loss. No doubt, there are cases where the average rental value of a business building or a given machine may afford data for a correct admeasurement of damages; but, in plants of the kind indicated, this rental value is so connected with or dependent upon the fluctuation of the markets that it has been considered with us as the safer rule in enterprises of the kind stated to adopt the interest on the capital invested and unproductive for the time, with other incidental costs, as the correct method of adjustment. The judge below, therefore, made a correct ruling in rejecting the evidence offered tending to show the current profits of the plaintiff's mill. Pender Lumber Co. v. Wilmington Iron Works, 130 N. C. 584, 41 S. E. 797; Sharpe v. Southern R. Co. 130 N. C. 613, 41 S. E. 799; Rocky Mount Mills v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 119 N. C. 693, 56 Am. St. Rep. 682, 25 S. E. 854; Foard v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. 53 N. C. (8 Jones, L.) 235, 78 Am. Dec. 277; Boyle v. Reeder, 23 N. C. (1 Ired. L.) 607.

We are of opinion, however, that there the consignee would have realized under contracts for the sale of ice but for the carrier's delay, resulting in the closing down of the plant. Habertzette v. Trinity & B. Valley R. Co. 46 Tex. Civ. App. 527, 103 S. W. 219.

And the amount of decrease of the yield of land, occurring by reason of the failure of fertilizer to arrive before the planting of the crops, is not recoverable from the carrier that delayed the delivery of the fertilizer, where it did not have notice of the special use to which the fertilizer was to be applied, or that there was such a scarcity of fertilizer that the consignee would not be able to purchase more. Matheson v. Southern R. Co. 79 S. C. 155, 60 S. E. 437.

So, loss on fish to preserve which a shipment of ice was ordered is not recoverable in an action against a carrier for damages for failure to deliver the ice, in the absence of proof that the carrier knew, or, from facts and circumstances connected with the shipment, should have known, that the ice was intended for packing fish. Lewark v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 137 N. C. 383, 49 S. E. 882.

And the freezing of plaintiff's oranges on the trees is not so direct, natural, and proximate a result of the failure of a railroad company to deliver to the plaintiff within a reasonable time orange boxes accepted by it for transportation as to make the company liable therefor by reason of such delay, where the contract of carriage did not fix any specific time for the transportation and delivery of the boxes, and the company was not informed that the plaintiff would leave the oranges on the trees, exposed to the danger of the cold, until the boxes were delivered. Williams v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 56 Fla. 735, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 134, 131 Am. St. Rep. 169, 48 So. 209.

Loss that may have been sustained by reason of inability to keep racing engagements cannot be recovered from a carrier in an action for damages for delay in the transportation of the kind indicated, this rental value is so connected with or dependent upon the fluctuation of the markets that it has been considered with us as the safer rule in enterprises of the kind stated to adopt the interest on the capital invested and unproductive for the time, with other incidental costs, as the correct method of adjustment. The judge below, therefore, made a correct ruling in rejecting the evidence offered tending to show the current profits of the plaintiff's mill. Pender Lumber Co. v. Wilmington Iron Works, 130 N. C. 584, 41 S. E. 797; Sharpe v. Southern R. Co. 130 N. C. 613, 41 S. E. 799; Rocky Mount Mills v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 119 N. C. 693, 56 Am. St. Rep. 682, 25 S. E. 854; Foard v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. 53 N. C. (8 Jones, L.) 235, 78 Am. Dec. 277; Boyle v. Reeder, 23 N. C. (1 Ired. L.) 607.

portation of, or injury to, a race horse. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Gormley, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 802, 111 S. W. 289.

Cotton-seed meal and hulls are not of such a character that a carrier undertaking their transportation will be held to have contemplated that the prompt delivery thereof was necessary to avoid loss of weight in the cattle for the feeding of which the consignment was intended. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Nelson, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 114, 97 S. W. 757. Therefore, to hold the carrier responsible for such loss, notice at the time the shipment is made must be given to the carrier, as to the use for which the consignment is intended, and the circumstances which make prompt transportation necessary. Ibid.; Patterson v. Illinois C. R. Co. 30 Ky. L. Rep. 78, 97 S. W. 426.

And notice necessary to hold a carrier liable for loss of profits that would have been realized but for the idleness of an electric lighting plant during the delay in returning to the plant a repaired shaft necessary to its operation was brought home to the carrier neither by the fact that the article transported was a shaft, where its appearance did not indicate the special use that was to be made of it, nor by the fact that the electric lights in the carrier's office, which were furnished with current from the plant, were not burning while the shaft was away for repairs; and the carrier is not liable for the lost profits, where express notice of its proposed special use was not given to it at the time the contract for transporting the shaft was made. Stone v. Adams Exp. Co. (Ky.) 122 S. W. 200.

And it is fair to presume that a carrier undertaking to transport a passenger's trunk without knowledge that it contained butcher's tools did not contemplate that its loss would entail damages in the form of "usual rental or usage value" of the tools, especially where it is provided by statute that the detriment caused by a carrier's delay in the delivery of freight shall be the was error in holding that, on the facts appearing from the evidence, the plaintiff could, in any event, recover only nominal damages. The plaintiff complains of, and offers evidence tending to show, a breach of contract of carriage; and, as in other cases of breach of contract, it should ordinarily be allowed to recover the damages naturally incident to the breach, and which may be reasonably supposed to have been in the mind of the parties at the time the contract was made. Where the goods shipped have a market value, and there is nothing to indicate the specific purpose for which they were ordered, these damages are usually the difference in the market value of the goods at the time fixed for delivery and that when they were in fact delivered. We have so held in the case of Davidson Development Co. v. Southern R. Co. 147 N. C. 503, 61 S. E. 381, and Lee v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 136 N. C. 533, 48 S. E. 809, is to the same effect. When, however, the goods are ordered for a special purpose, or for present use in a given way, and these facts are known to the carrier, he is responsible for the damages fairly attributable to the delay and in reference to the purpose or the use indicated, and it is not necessary always that those facts should be mentioned in the negotiations, or in express terms made a part of the contract; but, when they are known to the carrier, under such circumstances, or they are of such a character that the parties may be fairly sup-depreciation of its intrinsic value during the delay, and also the depreciation of its market value, otherwise than by a depreciation of its intrinsic value. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Zwirtz, 13 Okla. 411, 73 Pac. 941.

Notice that a trunk belongs to an actress, who cannot keep her engagements without it, must be given to a carrier when it undertakes to transport the trunk, in order to hold it responsible for losses resulting from inability to keep the engagements. Brown v. Weir, 95 App. Div. 78, 88 N. Y. Supp. 479.

The value to a traveling salesman working on a commission basis, of the use of his trunk of samples in a certain town, cannot be determined with sufficient certainty to warrant the recovery thereof as damages for a carrier's failure promptly to transport the trunk, where it does not appear that he had any customers in the town, or that there was any reasonable probability that he would make any sales there, and the amount of his expenses, although conceded to have been paid by his employer, was not established. Conheim v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 104 Minn. 312, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1091, 124 Am. St. Rep. 623, 116 N. W. 581, 15 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 389.

And a traveling salesman whose compensation is based on the orders secured by him and accepted by his employer cannot recover from the railroad company, as damages for delay in transporting his trunks, which he had shipped over its line, the profits from orders which, tested by experience, he would have secured while deprived of his trunks, since they are too remote and speculative, and are not such as the parties contemplated as the proximate result of the breach of the contract. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Harris, 121 Ga. 707, 49 S. E. 703.

So, losses suffered by reason of the inability of a member of a mercantile firm to keep engagements with prospective customers without his samples are not recoverable from a carrier which undertook to carry his sample trunk without notice of the circumstances. Katz v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 46 Misc. 250, 91 N. Y. Supp. 720.

On the other hand, it was held in Webb 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 76 S. C. 193, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1218, 56 S. E. 954, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 834, that loss from inability to sell goods because of delay in receiving the samples must be regarded as having been within the contemplation of a carrier when it checked a salesman's samples as baggage, so as to entitle him to recover damages therefor in case of such delay.

It was held in Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Christmas, 89 Miss. 686, 42 So. 160, that the usable value of cotton-gin machinery during the period that its delivery was delayed by a carrier was recoverable in an action against the carrier.

And in Louisville & C. Packet Co. v. Bottorff, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1324, 77 S. W. 920, it was held that the measure of damages for a carrier's delay in transporting a "self-feeder" for a grain thrasher was such a sum as was the natural and proximate result of the delay; and although it did not appear that the carrier was notified of the circumstances requiring prompt delivery, the court held that, in arriving at the amount of damages, the jury could take into consideration the loss of profits on contracts made by the consignee for the threshing of wheat.

Effect of notice.

It has been held that a plaintiff can recover more than nominal damages for unreasonable delay in the transportation of a shipment when the special purpose or present use of the article is expressly made a part of the contract, or enters into the negotiations of the parties, or when the article shipped is of such a character that the parties may be fairly supposed to have had in contemplation its special use. Storey Lumber Co. v. Southern R. Co. 151 N. C. 23, 65 S. E. 460.

A railroad company inducing the proprietor of coal lands to open up the mines, and to contract to ship the coal, by its line exclusively, and incidentally supplementing its duty to supply cars by promising to furnish transportation, and knowing that fixed charges had to be met at the mine, posed to have them in contemplation in making the contract, such special facts become relevant in determining the question of damages. Moore, Carr. p. 425; Hutchinson, Carr. § 1367.

In the citation from Hutchinson, after stating the general rule to be the difference in the market value of the goods, the author says: "But there may be circumstances under which the application of this rule would be inequitable. There may be, and frequently are, cases in which, for special reasons, the shipper may desire that the transportation of his goods shall be hastened; and if, with a knowledge of these circumstances, the carrier should unreasonably delay the carriage, or if, having expressly contracted to carry them within a given time, or for a given purpose, he should negligently delay them beyond that time, or so as to defeat that purpose, the difference in the value of the goods at the time of their actual arrival and at the time when they should have been delivered may prove a very inadequate recompense to their owner."

The same principle is well stated by Bramwell, L. J., in the case of Hydraulic Engineering Co. v. McHaffie (1878-79) L. R. 4 Q. B. Div. 670, 23 Eng. Rul. Cas. 558, an action for damages for delay in constructing a machine, as follows: "The fact that a binding agreement has been arrived at does not of itself create a responsibility for all the injury flowing from a breach of it: the wrongdoer is prima facie only whether it was active or idle, and that the only practical way to handle mined coal was to place it in cars rather than to store it,—may fairly be said to have contemplated the loss of net profits as damages flowing from a breach of the contract, so that, where the business has been established, and the profits are therefore ascertainable, it may be held liable for the loss thereof. Midland Valley R. Co. v. Hoffman Coal Co. 91 Ark. 180, 120 S. W. 380.

A carrier who fails to perform promptly his contract to transport the scenery and properties of a traveling show, knowing that their absence will prevent a performance, is liable for the value of the ordinary earnings of the properties during the time the owner is deprived of their use, less the expenses which he is saved by inability to exhibit; and the fact that such damages are not provided for in the shipping articles is immaterial. Weston v. Boston & M. R. Co. 190 Mass. 298, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 569, 112 Am. St. Rep. 330, 76 N. E. 1050, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 825.

So, in estimating the losses suffered by a theatrical company through its inability to keep an engagement by reason of a carrier's failure to transport its carload of scenery, as agreed, the jury may, if the carrier was notified of the purpose of the consignment and the date of the engagement, take into consideration the nature of the plaintiff's business and his profits for a reasonable period next preceding the time when the contract was violated. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Byrne, 205 Ill. 9, 68 N. E. 720.

Where the carrier was given express notice that delay in the delivery of samples shipped to agents would cause loss of business, and it contracted to make prompt delivery and to take extra precautions to effect the same, it may be held liable for special damages resulting from delay, although it was not able to estimate their precise amount at the time. Gledhill Wall Paper Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 119 N. Y. Supp. 623.

A contractor who, due to the breaking of machinery, is forced temporarily to suspend the execution of a grading contract, may recover from a carrier which, having notice of the conditions, delays the delivery of substitute machinery, the rental value for the period of delay, not only of that part of his equipment which was leased to him, but of that part owned by him, although the latter has no market rental value, together with wages paid the crew. Elzy v. Adams Exp. Co. 141 Iowa, 407, 119 N. W. 705.

The sum representing the net earning capacity of a grading outfit whose delivery was delayed by a carrier engaged to transport it may be recovered from the carrier, where it was put upon notice at the time of accepting the shipment that such special damage would result if delivery should be delayed. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Lamb (Ark.) 128 S. W. 1030.

And a carrier which undertook the transportation of a grain thresher with notice that the consignee had made contracts for threshing wheat is liable for profits lost by him by reason of the facts that the thresher was damaged in transportation, and the consignee was delayed in performing his contract while repairing the damage. Chicago, R. I. & G. R. Co. v. Calvert, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 236, 91 S. W. 825.

Profits that would have been earned but for the enforced idleness of a mill, due to negligent delay in the carriage of a portion of its machinery, sent for repairs, may be recovered from the carrier, where it had notice at the time of its undertaking that loss would result from the impossibility of operating the mill without the machinery. Morrow v. Missouri P. R. Co. 140 Mo. App. 200, 123 S. W. 1034.

And a carrier which negligently delays the delivery of a merry-go-round accepted for transportation with notice that it was being shipped for use at picnics between certain dates cannot be held liable for profits lost beyond the reasonable time in which it could have been set up for operation after its arrival; and where, after its arrival, additional delay is caused by the failure, because of other engagements, of the drayman to perform his contract to haul liable for the natural and ordinary consequences of the breach; but where, at the time of entering into the contract, both parties know and contemplate that, if a breach of the contract is committed, some injury will accrue in addition to the natural and ordinary consequences of the breach, the person committing the breach will be liable to give compensation in damages upon the occurrence of that injury." This limitation on the general rule as to the amount of damages recoverable for wrongful delay in the shipment of goods, being itself an application of the third rule laid down in the case of Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 502; Wood's Mayne on Damages, p. 21, is frequently presented in cases involving the making and shipment of machinery. In fact, these are the cases which usually call for the application of the principle stated. Many instances of such application are afforded in the decisions in our own state; as in Boyle v. Reeder; Foard

v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co.; Rocky Mount Mills v. Wilmington & W. R. Co.; and Sharpe v. Southern R. Co.,—supra. See also Mace v. Ramsey, 74 N. C. 11; Neal v. Pender-Hyman Hardware Co. 122 N. C. 104, 65 Am. St. Rep. 697, 29 S. E. 96. And well-considered cases in other jurisdictions are to like effect. Simpson v. London & N. W. R. Co. (1875-76) L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 274; Cory v. Thames Ironworks & Ship Bldg. Co. (1867-68) L. R. 3 Q. B. 181; Gee v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. (1860) 6 Hurlst. & N. 210; Die Elbinger Actien-Gesellschaft v. Armstrong (1873-74) L. R. 9 Q. B. 473, 23 Eng. Rul. Cas. 551; Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Ragsdale, 46 Miss. 460; Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 489, 69 Am. Dec. 718; Priestly v. Northern Indiana & C. R. Co. 26 Ill. 205, 79 Am. Dec. 369; Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Pritchard, 77 Ga. 412, 4 Am. St. Rep. 92, 1 S. E. 261.

In Simpson's Case, supra, it appeared that plaintiff, a manufacturer of cattle the machine, the carrier cannot be held responsible therefor as the proximate result of its negligence, although prompt transportation might have brought the machine to its destination at a time when the drayman would not have been prevented by other engagements from immediately removing it. Texas C. R. Co. v. Shropshire (Tex. Civ. App.) 125 S. W. 369.

And a carrier who was given notice that a series of proposed shipments of cotton-seed meal and hulls were intended for feeding the consignee's cattle, and that transportation and delivery without delay was necessary, may be held liable for the proximately consequent injury to the cattle, including the loss of weight of the cattle for want of feed, and the decrease in the market price which they will bring because of their reduced weight. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Mossbarger, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 1217, 91 S. W. 1121.

It was held in Bourland v. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. 99 Tex. 407, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1111, 122 Am. St. Rep. 647, 90 S. W. 483, that notice that failure to deliver cattle food in a carrier's possession for transportation would result in injury to the cattle, to warrant a recovery of damages for such injury, was sufficient when given to the carrier after the food had reached its destination, and was not required to be given when the contract for transportation was made.

So, the carrier was held to have sufficient notice to render it liable for special damages resulting from loss of business, where it was notified by the consignee of a car of coke which had reached its destination that failure promptly to deliver it would necessitate the shutting down of the latter's plant. Texarkana & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Neches Iron Works (Tex. Civ. App.) 122 S. W. 64.

But the Texas court holds that it is not 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

sufficient to give notice of loss of earnings after the shipment has been temporarily lost in transportation. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cherry (Tex. Civ. App.) 129 S. W. 152. Here the carrier undertook to carry cooerage tools without notice that the owner had contracts for the making of barrels. Probably, if there had been additional negligent delay after the notice, recovery would have been allowed for the loss of such profits as resulted from the additional delay.

The fact that notice was given to a carrier of damages that would result from its failure promptly to transport machinery does not warrant the recovery of damages of such a speculative nature as the profits that would have resulted from the launching of a new business, which was delayed until the arrival of the machinery. McMeekin v. Southern R. Co. 82 S. C. 468, 64 S. E. 413.

And profits that would have been realized by the manufacturer of cotton-seed products from seed contracted for subsequently to the carrier's default in the delivery of the materials for a press cannot be recovered from the carrier on the theory that the possible loss of such profits must have been within the contemplation of the parties because notice was given to the carrier at the time the machinery was shipped that delay would cause deterioration in the quality of the seed, and therefore of the products, and might cause loss under time contracts for sale of products. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Planters' Gin & Oil Co. 88 Ark. 77, 113 S. W. 352.

As to time of notice to warrant recovery of special damages for failure of carrier to deliver property, see note to Bourland v. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1111.

L. A. W.

spice and other substances, was in the habit of making an exhibit of samples of his goods in the grounds of certain cattle shows going on in different sections of the country. On the trial before Cockburn, Ch. J., at Spring Assizes, 1875, it was proved: "On the 18th of July, the Bedford show being about to end, and a similar show at Newcastle being about to be held on the 22d, 23d, and 24th of July, where the plaintiff desired to exhibit his goods, the plaintiff, by his son, who was in charge of the show tent and samples, made with the defendants' agent a contract for the carriage of the samples. The evidence as to the terms of the contract was that a consignment note was filled up by the plaintiff's son, consigning the goods as 'boxes of sundries,' to 'Simpson & Company, the show ground, Newcastle-on-Tyne,' and that he indorsed the note, 'must be at Newcastle on Monday certain,' meaning the next Monday, the 20th of July. Nothing was expressly said as to the plaintiff's intention to exhibit the goods at Newcastle, or as to the goods being samples. The goods did not arrive till several days after time, and when the show was over." On the trial the undisputed damages were paid into court, with verdict for £20 additional to cover special damages, should the court be of opinion that such damages were recoverable. Rule No. 51, argued before Queen's bench division before Cockburn, Ch. J., and Mellor and Field, JJ. The reported case proceeds as follows:

"[Field, J., referred to Watson v. Amburgeat R. Co. 15 Jur. 448.]

"Gates, Q. C., and C. H. Anderson, in support of the rule: The argument for the plaintiff goes farther than any decided case. The defendants ought to have been told that the goods were samples. Woodger v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 2 C. P. 318.

"[Field, J.: Must we not infer as a matter of fact that notice of their being samples was given?]

"[Counsel:] Great Western R. Co. v. Redmayne, L. R. 1 C. P. 329, shows that distinct notice must be given.

"[Cockburn, Ch. J.: Knowledge of circumstances from which the purpose would naturally be inferred is sufficient without express notice of the purpose itself.]

"[Counsel:] As to the loss of profits, such profits as these have never been held recoverable.

"[Cockburn, Ch. J.: Can it be disputed that these profits would have been recoverable, if an express stipulation had been made that the goods should be delivered by a particular day, and the defendants had been told what the result of nondelivery would be?]

"[Counsel:] That might be disputed.

"Cockburn, Ch. J.: I am of opinion that this rule must be discharged. The law, as it is to be found in the reported cases, has fluctuated; but the principle is now settled that whenever either the object of the sender is specially brought to the notice of the carrier, or circumstances are known to the carrier from which the object ought in reason to be inferred, so that the object may be taken to have been within the contemplation of both parties, damages may be recovered for the natural consequences of the failure of that object. The plaintiff in the present case is in the habit of going about the country exhibiting his cattle spice at shows, to attract purchasers. The defendants had an agent on the ground at the Bedford agricultural show, where this contract was made, for the purpose of drawing custom to their line; and their agent must have known that the plaintiff had been exhibiting these goods, and that they were being sent to Newcastle for the same purpose. I therefore cannot doubt that there was in this case common knowledge of the object in view. As to the supposed impossibility of ascertaining the damages, I think there is no such impossibility; to some extent, no doubt, they must be matter of speculation, but that is no reason for not awarding any damages at all.

"Mellor, J.: I am of the same opinion. As a jurymen I come to the conclusion that the clerk to the defendants had notice of the object for which the goods were being sent. As to the difficulty of ascertaining the amount of profits which the plaintiff can be supposed to have lost, that is not a matter upon which we have to trouble ourselves.

"Field, J.: I am of the same opinion. I apprehend that, for a breach of contract, a plaintiff is entitled to recover for damages naturally following under circumstances known to both the parties. In this case, inasmuch as railway companies do not often bind themselves to deliver by a particular day, the defendants' attention would be attracted by the stipulation which was made to that effect. Then, where was the contract made? Upon a show ground. To what place was it the goods were to be sent? To a similar show ground. The inference from which would naturally be that the goods were being sent for the purpose of being shewn there. Further, if the defendants' agent did not so understand the matter, he might have been called to say so, but that was not done. Therefore I infer, as judge of fact, that both parties were aware of the circumstances with a view to which the plaintiff was contracting, and that they were made the basis of the contract."

In the case of Gee v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co.,—shipment of cotton for use in a mill,—special damages were disallowed; but court held that if it had appeared that defendant had knowledge of the purpose for which cotton was required, and that stopping the mill would follow from delay, the special damages could be recovered.

In Priestly's Case, supra, damages were allowed for the use of machinery during the time it was wrongfully delayed in shipment. On the trial below, only nominal damages had been allowed. On appeal, Breese, J., for the appellate court, said: "The principle announced by the court in its instruction, and which determined the case, the jury finding nominal damages only, is not the law. The proposition cannot be entertained for a moment that, under a contract to deliver in a reasonable time valuable machinery such as described in the declaration, that the difference in the market value of such machinery at the time it was in fact delivered, and when it should have been delivered, is all the damage the owner of the machinery is entitled to claim. If this was the measure, there could be no great incentive to carriers to perform promptly a contract for the delivery of such articles, as they are not liable to deteriorate in a few days or months. As to perishable articles of fluctuating value, as grain, live stock, and such like, this rule is doubtless the true one, and has been recognized by this court in the case of Sangamon & M. R. Co. v. Henry, 14 Ill. 156. Where the property to be carried and delivered is not of a perishable nature, and is not a common or ordinary object of sale in market, and subject to its fluctuations, but is designed for a special purpose in a special business, the rule is very different; but in both cases adequate indemnity should be offered the plaintiff for the loss he has sustained."

In Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Pritchard, 77 Ga. 412, 4 Am. St. Rep. 92, 1 S. E. 261, damages were allowed for injury caused by wrongful delay in shipping a still worm for a turpentine distillery. The elements of damages recovered in this case are thus stated in the opinion: "During all the time [of the delay] their machinery and hands employed in running it were idle, and the tree boxes from which the crude gum was gathered had run over, and much of it was wasted for the want of barrels in which to deposit it; and such loss would not have occurred had the worm come to hand at the proper time, and the plaintiffs been enabled to use their still. The principal loss was in the crude turpentine, estimated at eighty-six barrels, worth $4 a barrel." There was verdict for the entire amount of damages, less $10.

In Ragsdale's Case, supra, wrongful delay in shipping a boiler required for the operation of certain machinery, profits of the enterprise were disallowed as proper basis of damages, and it was held that the cost of hands necessarily kept unemployed by reason of delay, with interest on capital, unproductive for the time, was the correct rule for award of the damages.

And in the case of our own court (Neal v. Pender-Hyman Hardware Co.) damages were allowed for loss of a tobacco crop, on failure to furnish, as per contract, at the stipulated time, certain flues to use in curing tobacco. It was contended that no special damages could be recovered, inasmuch as plaintiff failed to show that defendant had knowledge that such damages would result from a failure to deliver the flues; but the court held that it was a matter of common knowledge in localities where tobacco is cultivated, that if it is not cut and cured in apt time serious loss is the necessary consequence, and such knowledge would be assumed against defendant, engaged in manufacturing the flues, and his agent, engaged in selling the same. A proper application of the doctrine declared and approved by these authorities will establish the position that, on the facts appearing in evidence, if the defendant's responsibility for this delay should be established, the plaintiff is entitled to recover compensatory damages, and the question of the amount should be referred to the jury, on the principles heretofore indicated.

The plaintiffs were a firm engaged in the manufacture and sale of furniture. Of this the title of the firm, consignee in the bill of lading, taken in connection with the character of the implement ordered and shipped, would give reasonable notice. In this day and time, certainly it is a matter of common knowledge that an engine shaft is the part by which the power of the engine is applied to the operating machinery. That it is essential and necessary for the purpose, and without it the engine itself and the machinery dependent upon it are for the time out of action. The kind and size and weight of the shaft would give notice of at least the maximum capacity of the engine. As we said on the former appeal of this cause: "We can safely assume further that express companies are agencies organized for the purpose, at a higher price, of providing greater security and despatch in the delivery of freight." And it would assuredly occur to any and every one that a shaft consisting of a piece of metal weighing not less than 650 pounds, which, under ordinary circumstances, could and would be shipped with perfect safety and at a much lower charge by railway, would not have been shipped in this unusual way and at a much higher price, unless the call was urgent, and some unusual result would follow by reason of delay. The facts, we think, were such as to give clear indication that the shaft was designed for present use in the mill, and that some injury of the kind alleged would likely follow from breach of the contract of shipment, and require that the amount of plaintiffs' damages should be considered and determined by the jury in that aspect of the matter.

It is not practicable, within the compass of this opinion, already extended to an undesirable length, to refer to the numerous authorities relied upon to sustain the defendant's position. There is no substantial difference in the general principles established by any of these decisions, and the question of ever recurring perplexity for the courts is the correct application of these principles to the varying facts of the different cases. To illustrate, in Thomas, B. & W. Mfg. Co. v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 62 Wis. 642, 51 Am. Rep. 725, 22 N. W. 827, where special damages were disallowed for delay in shipping a machine, for the reason that the machine was designed for present use and for a purpose that would afford data for allowance of such damage, there was not only no evidence indicating knowledge on the part of the carrier of the special purpose alleged to have caused the loss, but there was testimony tending to show notice of an entirely different purpose. Cole, Ch. J., in delivering the opinion disallowing the claim, said: "The defendant certainly had no notice of the business in which the plaintiff was engaged, and did not know that this machine had been procured for fitting pipe and making nipples. Should we presume—as we have no right to do—that the defendant had knowledge of plaintiff's business, surely we could not presume that this machine was ordered by it for immediate use."

As we have endeavored to show in the case before us, the style and title of the plaintiff firm, taken in connection with the nature and description of the implement ordered, together with the unusual mode by which the shipment was provided for, and the nature of defendant's business, by 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

which they undertook, for a greater wage, to give additional assurance both of safety and despatch, all give notice that damages beyond the ordinary amount might be reasonably expected in case there was delay in breach of defendant's contract. So, in case of British Columbia & V. I. Spar, Lumber & Saw-Mill Co. v. Nettleship, L. R. 3 C. P. 499, shipment of lot of machinery from Liverpool to Vancouver's island. The machinery was in different boxes, and one of these, containing a portion of machinery, was lost, preventing operations until it could be replaced by sending to England for another piece, causing a delay in operations for something like twelve months. Damages for cost of procuring another piece were allowed, including cost of additional freight, but profits during the period of delay were disallowed. This was put, in part, on the fact that the machinery was boxed, and the carrier had no knowledge of the relative importance of that contained in the box lost, nor that stopping of the mill would likely follow from such loss. Some stress was laid, too, on the fact that, owing to the length and uncertainty of a voyage of that kind, it would be unreasonable to suppose that the parties, in that mode of shipment, contemplated that the additional damages could be recovered, and the case in both of these respects suggested is clearly distinguished from the one we are considering.

We are not inadvertent to the fact that in the case of Hadley v. Baxendale, itself, the implement was the crank shaft of an engine, for lack of which the plaintiff's mill was stopped for the time. Without advertent to the distinctions that could be suggested between the two cases, it may be observed that this great case is important rather as laying down the general principles by which damages for breach of contract may be correctly ascertained, than as a decision on the facts of the particular case. In evidence of this, it may be noted that, as a matter of fact, the proof showed that defendant's clerk was notified that plaintiff's mill would be stopped while the shaft was being repaired. Just why this fact was ignored in the opinion of the judges does not appear; possibly because the notice referred to was given the day before the shaft was delivered for shipment,—which is not, it seems, a very satisfactory explanation. While this does not at all impair the value of the case as making notable declaration of the general rules applicable to such causes, it does, perhaps, weaken it to some extent as a decision on any given state of facts. In any event, we are of opinion that, on the facts presented here, the case comes within the third rule of Hadley v. Baxendale: "That where the special circumstances are known, or have been communicated, to the person who breaks the contract, and where the damage complained of flows naturally from the breach of contract under those special circumstances, then such special damage must be supposed to have been contemplated by the parties to the contract, and is recoverable." [Wood's Mayne, Damages, p. 21.]

It may be well to note that the cases of Foard v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. 53 N. C. (8 Jones. L.) 235, 78 Am. Dec. 277, and Sharpe v. Southern R. Co. 130 N. C. 613, 41 S. E. 799, go farther, perhaps, than the facts as they are made to appear in the cases on appeal would seem to justify in holding the carrier liable for unusual damages by reason of special circumstances. Certainly, they go much farther than is required to support the disposition we make of the present appeal. It is more than likely—as the question chiefly presented in those appeals was as to the correct rule for ascertaining compensatory damages as between current profits and interest on the amount of capital unemployed—that some of the evidence tending to fix the carrier with notice was omitted, as no point was made as to notice. This is certainly true in the case of Rocky Mount Mills v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 119 N. C. 693, 56 Am. St. Rep. 682, 25 S. E. 854. The writer presided at that trial, and there was evidence both direct, and, from the character and quality of machinery shipped, tending to show notice, and it was omitted in the statement of case on appeal for the reason suggested,—that no point as to notice was made on the trial.

On the former appeal of this cause (144 N. C. 639, 57 S. E. 458, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 924), we held that there was evidence to be considered by the jury on the issue as to defendant's responsibility, and in this appeal we hold that, in case such responsibility is properly and correctly established, on the testimony there is evidence which requires that the question of the amount of compensatory damages shall be referred to the jury; and there was error in the ruling that, on the facts as they now appear, only nominal damages can be recovered.

Judgment below reversed, and new trial awarded.

Walker and Brown, JJ., dissent.
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF WASHINGTON EX REL.
FRED N. HALLETT et al., Appts.,
v.
SEATTLE LIGHTING COMPANY, Respt.

(— Wash. —; 110 Pac. 799.)

Appeal — jurisdiction — termination of controversy.

1. The installation by a gas company of a single meter in an apartment house, and the connection of the building with its mains, after the dismissal of a petition for mandamus to compel it to install a meter in each apartment, is not a termination of the controversy, which will destroy the jurisdiction of the appellate court.

Same — mandamus — affidavit — pleading.

2. Relators cannot on appeal raise the objection for the first time that an affidavit of defense in a mandamus proceeding should not have been treated as a pleading, where it was in fact an answer in all but name.

Gas — rule — apartment house — reasonableness.

3. A rule of a gas company that, in all buildings where more than one meter shall be required, a separate meter room shall be provided, where all can be placed, is reasonable, where such arrangement would be more sanitary, less dangerous, more convenient for finding leaks, making repairs, and making collections from prepayment meters, than would the other, while the high pressure of the mains would be confined to the main service pipe.

Claim — enforcement — discrimination.

4. A gas company is not prevented from enforcing a rule against consumers generally, by making an exception in a few cases where buildings were erected in such manner as to make the enforcement of the rule impossible, before notice of the adoption of the rule was given.

Appeal — mandamus — reversal — technical rights.

5. A relator is not entitled to reversal of a decree refusing a mandamus, for the purpose of avoiding costs, because it did not award that portion of the relief demanded to which he was entitled, where he rejected respondent's offer to furnish such portion.

(September 10, 1910.)

Note. — Rules of gas company respecting meters.

It seems to be a well-settled rule that a gas company may make reasonable and necessary rules and regulations in connection with its business, and while there are few reported cases involving rules with respect to meters, it seems clear, as assumed in STATE EX REL. HALLETT v. SEATTLE LIGHTING Co., that such rules may be made for the convenience and security of the company and the public, provided only they

A PPEAL by relators from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County dismissing a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to connect relators' building with its gas main, and to install meters. Affirmed.

• The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Keenan & Hardinger, for appellants.

The rules and regulations of a gas company must be applicable to all customers.

20 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1163.

If plaintiff in mandamus demands more than he is entitled to, he is not thereby precluded from obtaining what he is entitled to under the evidence.

Ellsworth v. Dorwart, 95 Iowa, 108, 58 Am. St. Rep. 427, 63 N. W. 588; State ex rel. Currie v. Weld, 39 Minn. 426, 40 N. W. 561; Smith v. Lawrence, 2 S. D. 185, 49 N. W. 7; Osage Valley & S. K. R. Co. v. County Ct. 53 Mo. 156.

The gas company has no right capriciously and arbitrarily to dictate to the customer how he shall construct and use his own building.

State ex rel. Milsted v. Butte City Water Co. 18 Mont. 199, 32 L.R.A. 697, 56 Am. St. Rep. 574, 44 Pac. 966; Vanderberg v. Kansas City Missouri Gas Co. 126 Mo. App. 600, 105 S. W. 17.

Messrs. H. R. Chase and C. K. Poe for respondent.

are reasonable and just. Shepard v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. 6 Wis. 539, 70 Am. Dec. 479; Foster v. Philadelphia Gas Works, 12 Phila. 511.

A question of somewhat greater difficulty is whether any particular rule is of this character; and each case involving this question must depend largely upon the particular circumstances involved.

This is well illustrated by STATE EX REL. HALLETT v. SEATTLE LIGHTING CO.

In Ferguson v. Metropolitan Gaslight Co. 37 How. Pr. 189, holding that a gas company, under the statute involved, was not required to furnish a meter at all, the court further said that, even if this were otherwise, the company might adopt reasonable rules with reference to the introduction of gas into a building, and that a rule would be reasonable whereby a gas company required, as a condition precedent to its putting in separate meters for each floor of a house, that the owner or occupants put in separate or independent service pipes, to connect with the meters.

And in Foster v. Philadelphia Gas Works, supra, it was held that a regulation of the company that all governors should be connected with the gas pipes at least 1 foot from the meter, and upon a by-pass, was reasonable and just with regard to the 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Crow, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Fred Hallett, Delia Hallett, and Samuel A. Martin, the relators, are the owners of a three-story building in the city of Seattle, containing twenty-seven apartments, each apartment consisting of a living room, kitchen, bath room, and two closets. The building was piped for gas so that each apartment would have a separate service through a meter to be installed in a closet connecting with each bath room, thus requiring twenty-seven meters. A main service pipe was installed in the basement, from which separate supply pipes extended throughout the building. The Seattle Lighting Company is a public service corporation engaged in selling illuminating and heating gas to the citizens of Seattle. When the building was about completed, the relators demanded of the lighting company that it connect the building with its mains, that it install a separate meter in each apartment, and that it furnish gas for the use of tenants. The defendant, contending that the building was not equipped with pipes in accordance with its rules for the installation of meters, refused to make the connections. Thereupon the relators applied to the superior court of King county for a writ of mandamus to compel a compliance with their demand. An alternative writ was issued and served. Upon trial use and treatment of the company's gas meters.

On the other hand, a rule of a gas company (inter alia) which authorizes it, by its inspector, to have free access at all times to building and dwellings, to remove the meter and service pipe at its pleasure, "is too general, and cannot be upheld, or at least a party cannot be required to subscribe to it, to entitle him to be furnished with gas." Shepard v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. supra.

In Capital Gas & Electric Light Co. v. Gaines, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1464, 49 S. W. 462, it was held that, under a contract between a city and a gas company, whereby the company agreed to supply gas to private consumers at a rate not exceeding $2 per 1,000 cubic feet, the company had no right to require consumers to pay meter rent in addition thereto, although there was a usage at the time the contract was entered into, to charge meter rent,—such usage being inconsistent with the terms of the contract.

For other cases as to the right of a gas company whose rates are fixed by public authorities, to make a rule as to a minimum charge or meter rent, see Montgomery Light & P. Co. v. Watts, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1109, and note.

A. C. W.

a peremptory writ was denied, the action was dismissed, and a judgment for costs was entered in defendant's favor. The relators have appealed.

The respondent has moved to dismiss the appeal for the reason that the controversy has ceased. It is shown that since the entry of the final judgment the respondent has connected the building with its mains; that it has installed a single meter in the basement through which the entire building is served; and that the appellants and their tenants are being supplied with gas. The appellants on the trial contended that they were entitled to a separate meter in each apartment, and make the same contention in this court. The installation of a single meter does not afford them all the relief to which they claim they are entitled, and which they demand in this action. It is evident that the controversy has not ceased. The motion to dismiss is denied.

Appellants insist that, after the alternative writ was issued and served, the defendant failed to interpose any proper answer or return, which they insist it was required to do under § 1018, Rem. & Bal. Code; that, no answer having been made, the averments of their complaint and the alternative writ were admitted, and that their motion for a peremptory writ should have been sustained. The record shows that one Silas Hutchinson, respondent's manager, made and filed an affidavit in answer to the complaint, in which he admitted and denied certain of its allegations, and also pleaded an affirmative defense. This instrument, although entitled an affidavit, was in its substance and effect an answer. It was so construed and regarded by the trial judge. Appellants made no motion to strike the affidavit, but demurred to it orally, and moved for judgment. Their demurrer and motion were both denied, and the cause was tried upon the merits. The appellants now contend that the affidavit should not have been considered as a pleading, in the absence of any formal answer. In support of this contention they cite State ex rel. State Ins. Co. v. Superior Ct. 14 Wash. 203, 44 Pac. 131, in which this court said: "It seems very clear that respondent has not answered in the manner required by the statute. For that reason, we are not authorized to consider the affidavits so admitted. It follows that the writ must issue, if the facts set up in the petition are sufficient to authorize it." We have examined the record in the case cited. It shows that an original application was made to this court for a writ of prohibition, that the respondent demurred to the relator's affidavit, and that no other appearance was made. No affidavit was interposed on respondent's behalf purporting to be an answer. The affidavits mentioned in the opinion were made by third parties in support of facts not alleged and not in issue. The only issue before this court was one of law. The affidavits in the absence of any issue of fact, or any instrument purporting to be an answer, were properly ignored. The affidavit now before us is an answer in its substance and effect. Were it to be amended by striking the word "affidavit," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "answer," it would be, as we think it is now, a sufficient answer to the relators' affidavit or complaint. It was so regarded by the trial judge. The cause was tried upon the issues of fact thus raised, and there is no merit in appellants' present contention.

The affidavit which we hold to be an answer alleged that the respondent, in the conduct of its business, has adopted a rule requiring its customers, owners of apartment houses, or other buildings in which it is necessary to install more than one meter, to provide a separate meter room on each floor or in the basement, where all meters may be installed. It insists that this is a reasonable rule, and that the appellants have refused to comply with it. We find that the appellants were notified of this rule before they commenced the erection of their building; that they refused to comply with it; that they so installed their plumbing as to prohibit the use of more than one meter without its violation; and that, prior to the commencement of this action, the respondent offered to install a single meter in the basement, and supply gas to appellants and their tenants, but that they insisted upon the instalment of twenty-seven separate meters, located in the several apartments. There is a sharp conflict in the evidence, but the oral opinion of the trial judge, which is incorporated in the statement of facts, and the recitals of the judgment, show that he also found the facts as above stated. "A gas company may, in the discharge of its duties to the consumer, govern its action by reasonable rules and regulations, and, when it has done so, all persons dealing with it, as well as the company itself, must yield obedience thereto. Since, however, the business of supplying gas to consumers as generally conducted is affected with a public interest, the rules and regulations of a gas company must be applicable to all consumers alike." 20 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1162.

The controlling question on this appeal is whether the rule adopted by the respondent is a reasonable one. The trial court found that it is, and from all the evidence we conclude that the finding must be sustained. Evidence was introduced by the respondent sufficient to show that it would be a much more sanitary arrangement to locate the meters in one inclosed room, than to distribute them throughout the various apartments, as demanded by appellants; that there would be less danger of explosions in case of fire; that leaks in the various pipes located in partitions throughout the building could be more readily found; that repairs in pipes serving the separate apartments could be made without interrupting the supply of gas to any apartment other than the one where the repair might be needed, thus avoiding unnecessary inconvenience to tenants; that collections from prepayment meters could be more readily and easily made; and that the high city pressure, which would not extend beyond the meters when installed, could be confined to the main service pipes. Although the evidence on these various points was in sharp conflict, the trial judge accepted and credited that offered on behalf of the respondent, and we cannot conclude that he erred in so doing. His conclusion that the rule was a reasonable one, and should be enforced, must be sustained.

Appellants contend that the respondent has not uniformly enforced the rule in question, that it has waived compliance in a number of cases, and that it cannot enforce it against one consumer unless it does so against all. The evidence does not sustain this contention. The rule has been in existence only one or two years. Some consumers had piped their buildings for meters in separate apartments before being informed of its adoption by respondent, or having any knowledge thereof. Under these circumstances, the respondent did in a few instances waive the rule, but it has invariably refused to do so where the consumer had notice of the regulation before piping his building, as the appellants undoubtedly did in this case. The rule is being strictly enforced. Appellants now insist that, in any event, they were entitled to a writ of mandamus compelling the respondent to make a connection with its mains, to install a single meter, and to supply appellants and their tenants with gas; that the trial court erred in dismissing the action; and that a peremptory writ should have been issued affording relief to this extent, although not all the relief demanded. There is no doubt but that less relief can be awarded by writ of mandate than was originally demanded, where the relator is entitled to such partial relief. State ex rel. Maltbie v. Will, 54 Wash. 453, 103 Pac. 479, 104 Pac. 797. The record before us shows, and the trial court found, that prior to the commencement of this action, and again on its trial, the respondent offered to connect the building with its mains, to install a single meter, and to furnish gas. The appellants in effect rejected this offer by proceeding with the trial upon the theory that they were entitled to a writ compelling the installation of twenty-seven separate meters in the manner demanded. They are in no position to now insist upon a reversal for the purpose of avoiding costs. Upon the filing of the remittitur, they may, if they so desire, but without costs to respondent, have an order entered requiring a continuance of the service and supply through the single meter which is now installed.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The judgment is affirmed.

Rudkin, Ch. J., and Parker, Mount, and Dunbar, JJ., concur.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

OSCAR LOEHR, Appt.,

v.

DAVID DICKSON, Respt.

(141 Wis. 332, 124 N. W. 293.)

Tort — evasion of tender — damages.

1. Malicious evasion of a tender of money necessary to prevent a foreclosure of a land contract, by reason of which the purchaser loses the profits on a resale which he had negotiated, does not give a right of action for tort.

Judgment — contract — breach — damages.

2. One in whose favor foreclosure of a land contract is decreed, unless the purchaser pay him a specified sum of money, is guilty of breach of contract which will support an action in case he evades a tender of the money for the purpose of preventing the purchaser from acquiring the property, which results in damages to him which the parties might reasonably have contemplated as a natural consequence of the breach.

Contract — evading performance — damages.

3. One who is required by judgment to deed property upon receiving a certain sum in payment of the amount due cannot escape liability for evading tender, to the injury of the other party, on the theory that tender might have been made to the attorney of record, or the money paid into

Note. — The question whether the malicious or intentional evasion of a tender furnishes a basis of action for tort by the debtor against the creditor seems to be an altogether novel one, since an extensive search has failed to disclose any other case involving that specific point.

court, if there is nothing to show that such tender or payment would have secured a conveyance.

(Timlin and Kerwin, JJ., dissent from proposition 2.)

(January 11, 1910.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover damages alleged to have been caused by malicious evasion of a tender of money the payment of which was necessary to prevent foreclosure of a land contract given by defendant to plaintiff. Reversed.

Statement by Dodge, J.:

Appeal from order sustaining a general demurrer to plaintiff's complaint, which alleged that defendant is the owner of certain real estate in Waukesha county; that on February 23, 1906, a judgment was entered of strict foreclosure of a land contract which had previously been given by defendant to plaintiff; that such strict foreclosure was subject to the condition that plaintiff pay to defendant, on or before August 23, 1906, certain sums of money aggregating on that date approximately $60,000; that plaintiff, prior to August 23d, to wit, in the latter part of the month of July, made various attempts to pay said money to the defendant, repeatedly going to his house with money and sending him letters which he is alleged to have received, notifying him of the wish to make payment, and that on August 23d a messenger or agent of the plaintiff found defendant, and notified him of plaintiff's desire and readiness to make such payment, whereupon defendant appointed an hour on the following day at his attorney's office, at which he would be present and would receive the money; that plaintiff attended at that time with the money, and defendant did not appear; and that he has been unable to physically tender the payment to him. The plaintiff alleges that the acts of defendant in evading such tender were wilful, and with the intention of preventing plaintiff from saving his rights under the land contract, and to impose upon him the forfeiture of such rights; further, that on February 24th, plaintiff, in reliance upon said judgment, had granted to one Smith an option for the sale of the property involved for $70,000 on or before August 21, 1906, wherein time was of the essence of the contract, and failure by plaintiff to make conveyance on or before August 21st released said Smith; that on said August 21st, plaintiff sold and by warranty deed conveyed said property to said Smith, in pursuance of said option, for $70,000, subject to the condition that, if 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

plaintiff failed to secure proper releases and conveyances from the defendant or his assigns by August 30th, said deed should be void, and plaintiff must repay said $70,000; that, by reason of defendant's wilful evasion of plaintiff's tender, the latter was unable to comply, and was obliged to refund, and to lose the profit of said sale, together with certain other opportunities for sale, whereby he suffered damage in the sum of $12,068.76, and certain other amounts, for which plaintiff demands judgment.

Messrs. Harper & McMynn for appellant.

Mr. J. E. Wildish for respondent.

Dodge, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff assures us in advance that his attempt is to state a cause of action in tort. Examining the complaint in that aspect, then, it is at once obvious that none of the acts alleged against defendant is, in and of itself, prohibited by any law. At most, it is alleged that he did not stay at his home through several days during which plaintiff desired to make tender, or inferentially, that he went somewhere else; also, that he refrained from going to his attorney's office on a certain day promised. Obviously all such acts were entirely lawful in and of themselves. No law prohibited him from leaving home nor commanded his attendance at his attorney's office. If he owed any duty in those respects, it was one imposed by his own promise or contract, and not by law. The fact that inconvenience or actual pecuniary injury results to another from such lawful acts does not transform them into torts. It is but a case of damage without legal wrong,—damnum absque injuria. Whalon v. Blackburn, 14 Wis. 432. But the complaint alleges that these acts, lawful in themselves, were done maliciously,—that is, with the express purpose of causing plaintiff damage,—and therefore liability results. Very little aid is given by either counsel on this essential question whether a lawful act becomes a tort by reason of malice or intent to injure.

Upon this question there is a sharp conflict of authority throughout the courts of the country. The principle is asserted by perhaps the majority of those authorities that "malicious motives make a bad act worse, but they cannot make that wrong which, in its own essence, is lawful." Dawson v. Kemper, 32 Ohio L. J. 15; Jenkins v. Fowler, 24 Pa. 308. A copious collection of authorities on both sides will be found in the note to Letts v. Kessler, 40 L.R.A. 177. However, that subject was presented to this court in Metzger v. Hochrein, 107 Wis. 267, 50 L.R.A. 305, 81 Am. St. Rep.

841, 83 N. W. 308, under the aspect of a "spite fence" impairing plaintiff's enjoyment of his residence property. The conflicting authorities were carefully considered, and from that conflict this court allied itself with those holding that mere malice or motive to injure could not impose liability for a lawful act. That case has been treated as final authority for that proposition in Sullivan v. Collins, 107 Wis. 291, 83 N. W. 310; Marshfield Land & Lumber Co. v. John Week Lumber Co. 108 Wis. 268, 274, 84 N. W. 434; Huber v. Merkel, 117 Wis. 355, 363, 62 L.R.A. 589, 93 Am. St. Rep. 933, 94 N. W. 354. We deem the rule of Metzger v. Hochrein now settled in Wisconsin, and that malicious intent to injure cannot transmute a lawful act into a tort, and hence, that the complaint fails to state a cause of action ex delicto.

2. The conclusion reached in response to plaintiff's own construction of his complaint is, however, not conclusive. A demurrer challenges the sufficiency of the complaint to state any cause of action, and must not be sustained in face of one which does, by liberal construction, state facts from which any liability results, although not for some or all of the damages sought to be recovered. Bieri v. Fonger, 139 Wis. 150, 120 N. W. 862. From the present complaint it clearly appears that defendant was under a contractual duty to the plaintiff none the less because such duty had been declared and defined by the judgment of a court. That contract required defendant to convey to the plaintiff certain land upon payment of certain money within a defined time. It imposed upon the plaintiff a duty to the defendant to make such payment, or at least tender to him personally, for the conveyance was to be contemporaneous, and such contemporaneousness was doubtless necessary to the raising of the money to be paid. From a contract imposing such duty on the plaintiff there resulted by necessary implication the agreement on defendant's part to do no act which would render such payment or tender impossible. This upon the general principle that he who, by mutual contract, confers on another a right or imposes a duty, impliedly agrees not to defeat that right or make impossible the performance of that duty by any affirmative acts of his own. Manning v. Galland-Henning Pneumatic Maltng Drum Mfg. Co. 141 Wis. 199, 124 N. W. 291; Eliot Nat. Bank v. Beal, 141 Mass. 569, 6 N. E. 742. By this complaint it is alleged that the acts of defendant were in fact done for the express purpose of preventing the plaintiff from tendering or paying the money and acquiring his rights; that they were effective to that end; and that damages of various sorts resulted to him. These facts of themselves are sufficient to show a breach of contract and resulting damages, unless, indeed, it appears by other allegations of the complaint, either that damages did not necessarily result from the defendant's breach of his contract duty, or that they were not such as were within reasonable contemplation of the parties at the time of making the contract. Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 502; Guetzkow Bros. Co. v. A. H. Andrews & Co. 92 Wis. 219, 52 L.R.A. 209, 53 Am. St. Rep. 909, 66 N. W. 119; Lippert v. Saginaw Mill Co. 108 Wis. 512, 84 N. W. 831.

It is contended by respondent that even wilful evasion by defendant of payment or tender could not make the damages alleged unavoidable, for the reason that plaintiff might have tendered directly to the attorney of record in the suit adjudging these contract duties. It does not expressly appear that there was such an attorney accessible to plaintiff; but, apart from that consideration, it might well develop by proof to be offered in support of this complaint that the inability of the attorney to respond to such tender by the delivery of a conveyance rendered that method practically inefficient to protect plaintiff's rights, by reason of the necessity of a conveyance of the property contemporaneously with the payment, to enable security for the money needing to be borrowed in order to make legal tender. We do not in this connection decide, however, that the general authority of an attorney of record, which is held in some cases to extend to the collection of a debt, and by statute extends to the release of a mere money judgment (Stat. 1898, § 2908; Flanders v. Sherman, 18 Wis. 575, also extends to the acceptance or refusal of a tender or payment under such a judgment as this. Again, it is suggested, though not argued, that plaintiff might have paid the money into court and fixed his rights. No statute or authority is cited to support the proposition that one commanded by a judgment to pay money to his adversary can fully satisfy that command by payment to any court officer, sheriff, or clerk, in absence of some further action by the court authorizing such payment or tender upon grounds arising subsequent to the judgment, and we have found none. Further, however, the same considerations as those we have mentioned in the case of tender to the attorney might render such a privilege, if it existed, ineffective in avoidance of damages.

It is also suggested that plaintiff, instead of suffering the loss of his bargain and alleged consequent damage of some $9,000, might have applied to the court to prescribe some means of payment and tender irrespective of defendant's conduct. We have no doubt that, when defendant breached his contract, a court might, upon a showing of such fact, either on the foot of the existing judgment or in a new suit in equity, have protected plaintiff against the forfeiture, and prescribed some equivalent method for making payment of the purchase price; but the facts upon which to base such an application could not, under the circumstances of this complaint, affirmatively appear until the period for payment expired; and although the complaint alleges that plaintiff had a period of some six or seven days within which the full performance of the judgment on both sides might have saved him from the alleged loss of his bargain, it is a question of fact whether it was then possible to seek and obtain relief from a court so as to avert that loss. In any event, however, the breach of the contract, when completed, gave rise to a right of action for at least nominal damages, and it is apparent that, even if plaintiff might have avoided the larger damages by some court procedure, he could not take that court procedure without expense; so that he must suffer some actual damages in the effort to avoid still more. Of course, we do not decide as a matter of law that the loss of the profits of plaintiff's alleged resale of the land were themselves proper measure of the damages recoverable upon breach of contract. That question involves doubtful rules of law, and its answer might well depend upon facts provable under the complaint, significant of the contemplation of the parties at the time of the making of their contract. We, however, deem it clear that the complaint does state a breach of contract by the defendant, with a showing of some damages unavoidably suffered by the plaintiff as a result, which may appear by proof to have been within the reasonable contemplation of the parties at the time the respective contract duties were assumed.

Order sustaining the demurrer is reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings according to law.

Timlin, J., dissenting:

The complaint shows that on February 23, 1906, in a suit for strict foreclosure, a decree nisi was given and rendered whereby, if the plaintiff herein, defendant in the foreclosure suit, paid to the defendant herein and to defendant's wife, plaintiffs in the foreclosure suit, within six months from notice of entry of said decree, $2,000, the plaintiffs in the foreclosure suit should be required to deed a tract of land therein described to this plaintiff, but, in case this 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

plaintiff failed to pay said sum within said time, he should convey said tract to the defendant herein. This decree with reference to another piece of property "provided further that if the defendant, Dr. Oscar Loehr, pays to the plaintiffs the sum of $56,664.42 in addition to the $2,000 aforesaid, within six months from the notice of entry of judgment, together with the costs and disbursements of this action, with interest on above amounts at the rate of 5 per cent per annum to the time of payment, then and in that case all the conditions of said land contract shall be deemed fulfilled; but, in default of such payments within said time, this judgment shall be absolute." This foreclosure decree also contained a provision divesting Dr. Loehr of all right, title, and interest in and to the property affected by the above-quoted paragraphs, except as reserved in these paragraphs. The complaint in the instant case then avers that the defendant Dickson, during the latter month or more of this six-month period of redemption, absented himself from his usual place of abode, concealed himself, and kept out of plaintiff's way, so that plaintiff, although able and willing to pay, and desirous of paying the amounts fixed by such decree, was unable to do so, or to make tender thereof, whereby he lost his opportunity for redemption within the time limited, and also lost a sale of the property which he might or could have made within that time. It is averred that this conduct of Dickson was wilful and deliberate, and with the purpose and intent and design of preventing redemption by plaintiff.

The pleader intended to state a cause of action in tort, and he has stoutly contended before this court that the complaint states such cause of action. But the majority of this court holds that the complaint shows a contract obligation resting upon Dickson, and a breach thereof by the latter. I concur in the view that the complaint states no cause of action in tort, for it shows no breach by Dickson of any duty imposed upon him by law. I think the original contract stipulations which were the subject of the foreclosure suit are merged in the decree there given. No doubt a judgment is, for certain purposes, considered a contract. But this is a legal fiction, referable to certain remedies therein, or necessary to meet the requirements of statutes or constitutions which might otherwise include the contract until judgment was entered thereon, and fail to cover it thereafter. Bishop, Contr. §§ 141, 566; 1 Black, Judgm. §§ 7-11; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 763, 764, and cases cited.

If this decree creates, expressly or by implication, a contract obligation of the kind suggested, resting upon Dickson, then every decree of specific performance or similar relief creates such contract obligation, and may be the basis of an action at law. On the other hand, if we consider the original contract stipulations to be in force notwithstanding the decree, or if we consider that the decree continues the stipulations in force unmodified, there is no covenant, express or implied, in the original contract, that Dickson shall be at any particular place, or hold himself in readiness to receive this money. It is the duty of the debtor, where no place of payment is fixed, to seek out, find, and pay to his creditor. If a mortgagee leaves the state or changes his place of residence, and his whereabouts are unknown to the mortgagor for ten or fifteen years, is he liable at law upon contract for damages if a wrongful or malicious intent be found? In the case at bar I think the only effect of this absence of Dickson, whatever his motive, would be to entitle the defendant in the strict foreclosure judgment, upon application to the court, to have the time of payment extended, or to pay the money into court. The weakness of the decision, I think, is that it finds a contract obligation resting upon the defendant where none exists, either expressly or by implication, and finds a breach thereof consisting of lawful and usual acts, not by any obligation prohibited.

Kerwin, J.:

I concur in the foregoing dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Timlin.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

R. E. WHALEY, Appt.,

v.

STATE OF ALABAMA.

(— Ala. —, 52 So. 941.)

Legislature—delegation of power—making violation of street car rules an offense.

A statute making it a crime fraudulently or wilfully to violate the rules made by street car companies with respect to the issuance and use of their transfers is not unconstitutional as a delegation to such companies of the right to create or suspend the law.

(Sayre, Mayfield, and Evans, JJ., dissent.)

(December 16, 1909.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Criminal Court for Jefferson 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

County convicting him of violating a rule of a street car company. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gaston & Pettus and John F. Knight, for appellant:

The act in question created a new offense, and makes that a misdemeanor which was no violation of the common law. It is a penal statute, and must be strictly construed.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 658.

The offense sought to be created should be defined in the act itself.

United States v. Eaton, 144 U. S. 677, 36 L. ed. 591, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 764.

The law is unconstitutional.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 69; Jannin v. State, 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 361, 53 L.R.A. 352, 96 Am. St. Rep. 821, 51 S. W. 1126, 62 S. W. 419; Anderson v. Manchester F.

Note.—Constitutionality of statute making violation of transfer rules established by carrier criminal.

The case of WHALEY v. STATE seems to be the first which has considered the question of the constitutionality of statutes making a violation of transfer rules established by a carrier criminal. The question as stated by the court is a close one.

Statutes merely making it unlawful for any persons other than the authorized agents of carriers issuing tickets, to sell them, have been held not unconstitutional as an unlawful delegation of the legislative power.

Thus, it was held in Re O'Neill, 41 Wash. 174, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 558, 83 Pac. 104, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 869, that an act empowering railroad companies to appoint their ticket agents, and forbidding all other persons to sell their tickets, under penalty, did not give them power to create crimes, and say who are criminals, so as to constitute an unlawful delegation of legislative authority. The court here said: "It is also urged that the act delegates to railroad companies the power to create crimes, and to say who are criminals. It is argued that the companies may issue or withhold the certificates of authority at their own will, and that, by withholding the certificate, they are thereby empowered to make one a criminal who sells transportation without it. We do not think there is force in this argument. The statute simply says to the companies: You must appoint your own agents and certify as to their authority. This, as we have seen, is a reasonable regulation, and intended for the interest of the traveling public. It is true that the power to appoint the agents is in the railway company; but, for reasons already stated, the legislature has the undoubted power to say it shall be a misdemeanor for all others to engage in the sale of transportation. The railway companies must have agents to sell their transportation, and they cannot in reason be expected to appoint all who may Assur. Co. 59 Minn. 182, 28 L.R.A. 609, 50 Am. St. Rep. 400, 60 N. W. 1095, 63 N. W. 241; Dowling v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 92 Wis. 63, 31 L.R.A. 112, 65 N. W. 738; Mitchell v. State, 134 Ala. 411, 32 So. 687.

The legislative power cannot be delegated except to counties and municipal corporations to a limited extent.

Haley v. Clark, 26 Ala. 439; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1021; 8 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 831; Clark v. Mobile, 67 Ala. 220; Schultes v. Eberly, 82 Ala. 247, 2 So. 345; Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. 164, 165; O'Neil v. American F. Ins. Co. 166 Pa. 72, 26 L.R.A. 716, 45 Am. St. Rep. 650, 30 Atl. 945; United States v. Eaton, 144 U. S. 677, 36 L. ed. 591, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 764; Dent v. United States, 8 Ariz. 138, 71 Pac. 922; United States v. Grimaud, 170 Fed. 214; Barto v. Himrod, 8 N. Y. 483, 59 Am. Dec. 506; Rice v. Foster, 4 Harr. (Del.) 479; Ex parte Wall, 48 Cal. 279, 17 Am. Rep. 428.

Messrs. Alexander M. Garber, Attorney

apply. The mere fact that they may not appoint all applicants does not make any of the latter guilty of crime. If they become guilty, it is because, of their own volition, they persist in engaging in an act which the legislature says shall constitute a crime."

And in Samuelson v. State, 116 Tenn. 470, 115 Am. St. Rep. 805, 95 S. W. 1012, an act providing that it should be unlawful for any person other than the authorized agent of the common carrier issuing the same, to sell or otherwise deal in or offer to sell any ticket which showed that it was issued and sold below the standard schedule rate, under contract with the original purchaser entered upon the ticket and signed by the original purchaser, to the effect that such ticket was nontransferable, and void in the hands of any person other than the original purchaser; and fixing a penalty for a violation of the provisions, was held not unconstitutional as a delegation to the carrier of legislative authority to create an offense by the issuance or non-issuance of nontransferable tickets to the original purchaser below the standard rate schedule.

But in Jannin v. State, 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 631, 53 L. R. A. 349, 96 Am. St. Rep. 821, 51 S. W. 1126, 62 S. W. 419, where a statute making the sale of railroad tickets by others than agents of the company a penal offense, contained a further condition: "Provided that the provisions of this act shall not apply to any person holding a ticket upon which is not plainly printed that it is a penal offense for him or her to sell, barter, or transfer said ticket for a consideration," it was held invalid under a constitutional provision forbidding the legislature to suspend the laws, as giving the railroad company an option as to the creation of the offense; and it was held immaterial that the statute required the company

General, and Tillman, Bradley, & Morrow, for the State.

The act does not attempt to delegate to the carrier legislative power,—the power to make laws.

Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Carmichael, 90 Ala. 19, 9 L.R.A. 388, 8 So. 87; Armstrong v. Montgomery Street R. Co. 123 Ala. 233, 26 So. 349; Evans v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 56 Ala. 246, 28 Am. Rep. 771; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hine, 121 Ala. 234, 25 So. 857; Rapalje & M. Dig. of Railway Law, pp. 329-331; Shortsleeves v. Capital Traction Co. 28 App. D. C. 365, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 287; Percy v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 58 Mo. App. 79; Crowley v. Fitchburg & L. Street R. Co. 185 Mass. 280, 70 N. E. 56; Pullman Car Co. v. Krauss, 145 Ala. 395, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 103, 40 So. 398, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 218; 1 Cook, Corp. 6th ed. § 4a; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 955; Locke's Appeal, 72 Pa. 491, 13 Am. Rep. 716; 1 Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 88; Brodbine v. Revere, 182 Mass. 598, to print such a condition on the tickets, there being no penalty affixed in case the companies refused to comply with this condition. The court said: "While it is true the act in this section requires this, yet it is a sufficient answer to the proposition that it is still optional with the railroad company to make the sale of passage tickets a penal offense. It will be observed that no penalty is attached to the failure of the railroad company to print across the face of its ticket said proviso. It is merely made a duty which they may comply with or not, as they see fit. It would have been a very easy matter for the legislature to have confined the sale of all passage tickets to the agents of the railroad companies, without any requirement as to the form of the ticket. But this course was not pursued. As it is, every railroad company has the option to issue a passage ticket with this proviso or not, as it may see proper. If it issues a ticket without this proviso, it is not a penal offense, and in every such case scalpers and all others may deal in such passage tickets without any violation of the law. We accordingly hold that because the legislature left it optional with the railroad companies whether or not, in the issuance of tickets, they would create a penal offense, that the act of the legislature is without authority of law, is violative of the law, in that it does not define with certainty an offense; does not itself create an offense, but delegates its authority to another agency to make the sale of railroad tickets a violation of the law."

For notes on the constitutionality of anti-scalping statutes, see Ex parte O'Neill, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 558, and the supplemental note thereto accompanying State v. Thompson, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 480. J. T. W.

66 N. E. 607; Blue v. Beach, 155 Ind. 121, 50 L.R.A. 64, 80 Am. St. Rep. 195, 56 N. E. 89; Harber Comrs. v. Excelsior Redwood Co. 88 Cal. 491, 22 Am. St. Rep. 321, 26 Pac. 375; Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 253; Re Griner, 16 Wis. 433; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Smith, 70 Ga. 694; Morrison v. State, 116 Tenn. 534, 95 S. W. 494; Samuelson v. State, 116 Tenn. 470, 115 Am. St. Rep. 805, 95 S. W. 1012; Re Flaherty, 105 Cal. 558, 27 L.R.A. 529, 38 Pac. 981; Re O'Neill, 41 Wash. 174, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 558, 83 Pac. 104, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 809; Martin v. Witherspoon, 135 Mass. 175; Hurst v. Warner, 102 Mich. 238, 26 L.R.A. 484, 47 Am. St. Rep. 525, 60 N. W. 440; Ingram v. State, 39 Ala. 247, 84 Am. Dec. 782; Dunn v. County Revenues Ct. 85 Ala. 144, 4 So. 661; Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County, 1 Ohio St. 77; Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. p. 264.

Anderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It first appeared to this court that the act in question (Sp. Sess. Laws 1907, p. 89) was violative of the Constitution, because it delegated to officials of street railroad companies, not only the right to legislate, but to, in effect, suspend the law by a suspension or abolition of the rules. The question is still a close one, but all doubts should be resolved in favor of the constitutionality of a law, and it should be upheld when it is capable of being construed so as to harmonize with the Constitution without doing violence to the legislative intent. The right to make reasonable rules by street car companies, through its officers and servants, exists independent of the act, and the authority thereby given is not the delegation of authority to legislate, but merely reiterates the right of the officers to make reasonable rules in and about the conducting of the business of the public service utility, and, in addition thereto, prohibits under penalty, a violation of said rules. This statute makes it unlawful to fraudulently or wilfully violate said rules. A party cannot be guilty of violating this law unless he violates the rules fraudulently or wilfully and knowingly. The rules must be reasonable, and must be known to him at the time of the violation of same. The fact that the rules may be changed or suspended is no delegation of authority to make, change, or suspend the law, but merely relates to the subject upon which the law operates. The law is made by the legislature, and cannot be repealed or suspended except by said body, and the fact that the rules may be changed or suspended in no wise changes or suspends the law. It is on the statute books, and there it remains until repealed or amended by the legislature, and the abolition or suspension of the rules only removes the subject, for the time being, upon which the law operates. Whether the rules are made or not, or are repealed or suspended after being made, we still have the law remaining in force, and ready to apply to the subject whenever it comes into existence. There might be but one street car company in the state, and it might suspend operation, and there would therefore be no subject upon which the law would presently operate, but this fact would not repeal or suspend the law itself, for later we might have many street car companies, or the existing one might resume operation, and, as soon as any of them formulated reasonable rules, there would be a subject upon which this existing law can operate, notwithstanding it was not in being when the law was enacted, or may have not existed at all times after the passage of same.

The act in question being valid, and there being no reversible error disclosed by the record, the judgment of the criminal court is affirmed.

Dowdell, Ch. J., and Simpson and McClellan, JJ., concur.

Sayre, J., dissenting:

I do not doubt that the legislature may, in the proper exercise of the police power, regulate every business in the state. Nor do I doubt that the legislature may confer upon railroad companies, or individuals operating railroads, the power to provide proper regulations for the protection of their property, the property of those with whom they deal, and for the enforcement of their mutual rights. Indeed, they have that right without express legislative grant, and there are circumstances in which a failure to adopt a proper system of rules and regulations would amount to a dereliction of duty. But it has never been supposed, so far as I am informed, that rules adopted in pursuance of this general power amounted to more than rules of prudence binding only upon those who have notice of them. Here, the proposition is to punish criminally persons who may violate the rules a certain class of private business corporations may see fit to adopt from time to time, and commits the power also to their managing agents. It seems obvious to me that no peculiar merit to save the statute is to be found in the fact that the enterprises concerned are railways, or that the agents upon whom the power is conferred are managing agents. If the act is to be sustained as a valid exercise of legislative power, a similar power may be conferred on any corporation or person doing business in this state, and may as well have been conferred upon a motorman or conductor. But I do not agree that any private corporation or person can have the power to define the elements of a criminal act. The citizen can be required to look only to the common law, to legislative enactments, or to the ordinances and rules of a certain class of public corporations, and perhaps to some public officers acting under responsibility as the representatives of the people, to which quasi legislative powers are delegated for limited and most generally local purposes, to know what acts of his may be punished under the criminal laws of the state. Mr. Cooley thus speaks of the doctrine: "It has already been seen that the legislature cannot delegate its power to make laws; but, fundamental as this maxim is, it is so qualified by the customs of our race, and by other maxims which regard local government, that the right of the legislature, in the entire absence of authorization or prohibition, to create towns and other inferior municipal organizations, and to confer upon them the powers of local government, and especially of local taxation and police regulation usual with such corporations, would always pass unchallenged." Const. Lim. 264. In Dunn v. County Revenues Ct. 85 Ala. 144, 4 So. 661, speaking of a stock law, it was said: "These laws are complete within themselves, providing, as they do, in detail, for regulating the running of stock at large, and the enforcement of the rights of all parties to be affected by them in the particular locality to which they are made applicable. None of their terms or provisions are made to rest in the legislative discretion of the county authorities. As to this feature, the general assembly has not abdicated any of that constitutional and prerogative power which is peculiarly its own. The only power conferred or delegated is to determine the contingency on which the laws, or certain designated portions of them, may go into effect. It is no objection to a statute that it is conditional, or that its taking effect is to depend upon some specified subsequent event. 'Affirmative legislation may, in some cases, be adopted, of which the parties interested are at liberty to avail themselves or not at their option'—citing Cooley, Const. Lim. 117. In Brodhine v. Revere, 182 Mass. 598, 66 N. E. 607, it was held that a statute giving the board of metropolitan park commissioners authority to "make rules and regulations for the government and use of the roadways or boulevards under its care," 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

breaches whereof shall be breaches of the peace, punishable as such in any court having jurisdiction of the same," was constitutional. But observe the reasoning upon which that decision was placed. After noting that there is a well-known exception to the rule which forbids the delegation of the power to make laws, resting upon conditions which existed from ancient times in most of the older states of the Union, which the Constitutions of those states generally recognize, namely, the existence of towns or other local governmental organizations which had always been accustomed to exercise self-government in regard to local police regulations and other matters affecting peculiarly the interest of their own inhabitants, and that, on this account, the determination of matters of this character had been held to be a proper exercise of local self-government, which the legislature might commit to a city or town, the court expressed itself as follows: "How far this principle may be extended in the proper application of it is a subject on which there is much difference of opinion among judges. Whether it will justify the creation of a tribunal other than the voters or their usual representatives, where they have a representative government for the management of municipal affairs, seems not to have been much considered by the courts. It is very clear, where the people of a city or town have become so numerous that the management of their municipal affairs can be conducted conveniently only by a representative body like a city council, that municipal legislation, such as making ordinances and regulations as to local matters affecting the health, safety, and convenience of the people, may be intrusted to the people's chosen representatives in a city government. . . . In this commonwealth legislation has gone further than this. Apparently on grounds of expediency amounting almost to necessity, the making of rules and regulations for the preservation of the public health has been intrusted to boards of health, . . . and a violation of the rules established by city or town boards has long been and is now punishable by the courts." And it was said that those statutes were to be justified upon one or both of two grounds: The board of health was treated as properly representing the people in making regulations; the work of the board of health was treated as only a determination of details in the nature of administration. In my judgment the concurrence of both grounds is necessary to support legislation of that character. And penal rules made by boards of harbor and land commissioners were said to be sustained upon these grounds. On these principles, also, was based the decision in Ingram v. State, 39 Ala. 247, 84 Am. Dec. 782.

The Massachusetts case from which I have just quoted states, as well as it can be stated, the theory of penal rules and the justification for them. Chief Justice Marshall had before that used this language, which, in my judgment, points out, by inference at least, an exceedingly important limitation upon the delegated power of establishing such rules: "It will not be contended that Congress can delegate to the courts or to any other tribunals powers which are strictly and exclusively legislative. But Congress may certainly delegate to others powers which the legislature may rightfully exercise itself. . . . The difference between the departments undoubtedly is that the legislature makes, the executive executes, and the judiciary construes, the law. But the maker of the law may commit something to the discretion of the other departments, and the precise boundary of this power is a subject of delicate and difficult inquiry into which a court will not enter unnecessarily." Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 253. And he instances the power conferred upon courts to make rules, which was the subject of inquiry in that case. I am not disposed to aid in the extension of this doctrine of delegated powers to private corporations and persons, which are not any part of the scheme of government, and which are without responsibility for the manner in which the power may be exercised. Certainly this court has never gone to any such extent. Certain, also, it is that in each of the cases cited to support this statute, the legislature had conferred power to make necessary rules upon coordinate branches of the government, and not upon private persons. In the case at hand we are requested to put the citizen who may desire to conduct himself in conformity to all the laws of his country in a situation where he cannot go to the legislature nor to his local government nor even to any official bureau or public officer, but must have recourse to such information as may be vouchsafed by a private business corporation or a private person, to know what he may, and what he may not, lawfully do. The private files of a business concern are to be the sole memorials of penal rules under which every citizen of the state may suffer. Without such rules enacted by street railway companies or their agents, the statute means absolutely nothing. A more complete surrender of the legislative power, a more decided step towards a bureaucratic scheme of government, cannot be imagined. Such rules, in my judgment, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

are not called for by any necessity of government, lack legislative authority, lack that promulgation which is an essential of constitutional legislation, and are absolutely void. For these reasons, I dissent.

Mayfield and Evans, JJ., concur in these views.

Mayfield, J., dissenting:

I concur in all that is said by Justice Sayre in his dissenting opinion, and in addition thereto I feel constrained to add the following, as expressive of my views of the unconstitutionality and invalidity of the statute in question, and which is upheld by the court in the majority opinion:

If the statute in question only declared that any person who, with intent to defraud or injure another, issues transfers or otherwise disposes thereof, in wilful violation of any reasonable rules of any common carrier, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be punished by a fine of $100, and may also be sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail, etc., I concede that it would be within the power of the legislature, and might be valid if constitutionally enacted. The statute in question, however, does not do this, but in my opinion it has attempted to authorize any person or corporation operating a street railroad within this state, acting through a president or other authorized managing officer, to make any and all rules and regulations for the issue and use of transfer tickets, commonly called "transfers," which may be necessary for the protection of the person or corporation making the rules. The statute does not at all limit it to rules which are reasonable, but permits it to make any rules for the issue or use of transfers which the carrier deems necessary for its protection. If it does not mean this, what is the use or sense of the 1st section of the statute? The power and right to make all such reasonable rules as to transfers already existed. The act is certainly not merely declaratory of the common law; it was clearly not so intended.

The 2d section of the act makes it unlawful for any person not authorized by the rules (not the statute) to issue or dispose of such transfers.

The 3d section makes it unlawful for any person to use a transfer not issued in accordance with such rules, or to use one properly issued for any other purpose than that for which the rule authorizes it to be used.

Section 5 attempts to make it a crime for any conductor or other agent of the corporation to issue or dispose of such transfers in violation of any existing rules, or of any that might thereafter be adopted by the common carrier, and to fix a penalty for the violation.

Section 5 makes it a crime for any person, other than the conductor or agent of the common carrier, to issue or dispose of any transfer in violation of any rule or regulation that might be adopted by the person or corporation operating a street railroad; and also makes it a crime for any person to buy or receive, for the purpose of using, or to use or attempt to use, any such transfer as fare, on any car operated upon such street railroad, wilfully in violation of such rules, and prescribes a penalty by fine and imprisonment or hard labor.

The act, in addition to the foregoing, does make it a crime to issue, dispose of, or use such transfers in violation of the rules and with the intent to defraud. This provision I think is proper, if the act was otherwise valid. In short, the act is, in my opinion, nothing more nor less than an attempt on the part of the legislature, to authorize any and all persons in this state who operate a street railroad, or the president or managing officer of a corporation which operates such a street railroad, to make and unmake the criminal laws of the state pertaining to the issue, use, or disposition of transfers used in connection with street railroads.

The act does not attempt to authorize, regulate, or prohibit anything except the issuance, use, or disposition of these transfers. It neither makes nor attempts to make any law relating to the subject-matter. It merely attempts to authorize certain private individuals to make or unmake any law they may desire, relative to the matter, without let or hindrance, and attempts to make all persons guilty of a crime who violate such individual-made laws and prescribes a rather severe punishment of fine, imprisonment, or hard labor. If these favored persons authorized to make the laws on this subject make no rules or regulations thereon, then there can be no crime under this act. If they make rules on this subject, there will be just that many laws, and no more, under this act; if they make rules on the subject to-day, there are that many laws on the subject to-day; if they repeal or abolish all these rules to-morrow, there will be no laws on the subject, until they make some more rules and regulations. If two or more of these persons make different and inconsistent rules, no matter how inconsistent, they are all law. The criminal law on the subject of transfers may and will be one thing to-day, and another to-morrow; one thing in one town or city, and another in other towns or cities. A given act will be a crime in Montgomery, and not in Birmingham; it will be a crime on one street car in Montgomery, and not on another; it will be a crime on one car, and not on another of the same train.

The act does not attempt to provide that all street car companies shall make the same rules, but authorizes entirely different ones, and makes all the criminal law on the subject,—whether they be reasonable or unreasonable, consistent or inconsistent. That is, if this statute is valid, the criminal law on the subject of transfers for street railroads depends solely upon the ipse dixit of those individuals authorized to make the rules and regulations. In my judgment there is no escape from this conclusion. If I am right in my construction of the statute, it cannot be a valid or constitutional enactment. Such acts are clearly not within legislative competency, because attempting an unwarranted delegation of the law-making power, because authorizing private individuals to make and suspend the laws, in violation of § 21 of our Bill of Rights.

Mr. Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations (page 163), says: "One of the settled maxims in constitutional law is that the power conferred upon the legislature to make laws cannot be delegated by that department to any other body or authority. Where the sovereign power of the state has located the authority, there it must remain; and by the constitutional agency alone, the laws must be made until the Constitution itself is changed. The power to whose judgment, wisdom, and patriotism this high prerogative has been intrusted, cannot relieve itself of the responsibility by choosing other agencies upon which the power shall be devolved, nor can it substitute the judgment, wisdom, and patriotism of any other body for those to which alone the people have seen fit to confide this sovereign trust;" and he there, as well as in other places in his book, cites approvingly what Mr. Locke, in his work on Civil Government, says as follows: "These are the bounds which the trust that is put in them by the society, and the law of God and nature, have set to the legislative power of every commonwealth, in all forms of government: First. They are to govern by promulgated established laws, not to be varied in particular cases, but to have one rule for rich and poor, for the favorite at court and the countryman at plow. Secondly. These laws also ought to be designed for no other end ultimately but the good of the people. Thirdly. They must not raise taxes on the property of the people without the consent of the people, given by themselves or their deputies. And this properly concerns only such governments where the legislative is always in being, or at least where the people have not reserved any part of the legislative to deputies. to be from time to time chosen by themselves. Fourthly. The legislature neither must nor can transfer the power of making laws to anybody else, or place it anywhere but where the people have. Locke, Civil Government, § 142."

While there are certain delegations of the law-making power which have been upheld, such as are pointed out and referred to by Justice Sayre in his dissenting opinion, and there may be others, which are exceptions to or qualifications of the general rule denying the delegability of the law-making power, I do not believe that any like the one in question has ever before been upheld. The Massachusetts court held, in the recent case of Welch v. Swasey, 193 Mass. 364, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1160, 118 Am. St. Rep. 523, 79 N. E. 745, that matters of local self-government might always be intrusted to the inhabitants of the town, and that the legislature might delegate to a commission the power to fix the heights to which buildings might be erected; but that court has never held that the legislature could delegate to private individuals the power to make criminal laws, though the laws did pertain to public service corporations.

It is likewise true that the legislature, in the exercise of the police power, may regulate the issuance and transfer of railroad or street car tickets, or prevent the transfer thereof, or provide that no one but the carrier or his agent shall sell or deal in such tickets; and may make it a crime for any other person to sell such tickets. But a statute which made it a crime for any person other than the agent of a common carrier to sell tickets which contained on their face a statement that such sale is penal, but left it optional with the carrier whether or not the ticket should contain such statement, was held void, as an unwarranted delegation of the legislative authority to make or suspend a law; and also because it failed to define with certainty an offense, and not of itself creating an offense, and as giving to the carrier the option to create an offense. See Jannin v. State, 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 631, 53 L.R.A. 349, 96 Am. St. Rep. 821, 51 S. W. 1126, 62 S. W. 419.

A statute which authorized an insurance commissioner to prepare a standard policy of insurance, and prohibited the use of any other form, was held void as an unauthorized delegation of legislative power, and because the law was not complete in all its terms when it left that branch of the law-making power of the government. O'Neil v. American F. Ins. Co. 166 Pa. 72, 26 L.R.A. 715, 45 Am. St. Rep. 650, 30 Atl. 943. In speaking of the power thus delegated to the insurance commissioner, the court said: "Take out the form prepared by the insurance commissioner and to be found in some pigeonhole in his office, and the act is without meaning or effect. It is completely eviscerated. . . . By its provisions the legislature says in effect to its appointee: 'Prepare just such a policy or contract as you please; we do not care to know what it is. The governor shall have no opportunity to veto it. File it in your own office, and we will compel its adoption, whether it is right or wrong, by the punishment of every company, officer, or agent who hesitates to use it.' . . . We do not see how a case could be stated that would show a more complete and unconstitutional surrender of the legislative function to an appointee."

Is not the case at bar a more radical, if not a more complete, surrender of the legislative function? In this case the legislature does not even select or appoint the law-maker, but authorizes any and all who operate a street railroad to become such. It does not even require that the law be in writing, and allows as many laws as there may be persons operating street railroads; it does not limit each to one law,—each such person may make and unmake as many as he desires.

If this law is valid, how can this court, or any citizen desiring to observe or enforce the criminal law relating to these transfers, know or find it? Only by interrogating every person who by this act is authorized to make the law. And if you could reach all while you were interrogating one, the others might be making other laws or repealing those then existing. It is true that under our system of government, a state legislature, as a law-making power, is well-nigh omnipotent. There are no limits to its power for this purpose, except those written in or implied from the state and Federal Constitutions. The entire lawmaking function of the state sovereign is vested in the legislature, subject only to the above exceptions or restrictions. Without these, the power would be as that of the whole people from whom it is derived. But this power almost unlimited, as it is, must be exercised in the manner and mode pointed out by the Constitution. This much is necessary to the preservation of the Constitution or of the government itself; for the Constitution is the sole instrument by which this lawmaking power is created, and it defines and limits the power of the legislature, and prescribes the principles by which alone the affairs of the government are to be administered.

Justice Patterson, speaking of the important and almost sacred character of the Constitution, in the case of Vanhorne v. Dorrance, 2 Dall. 308, 1 L. ed. 393, Fed. Cas. No. 16,857, says: "It is the form of government delineated by the mighty hand of the people, in which certain first principles of fundamental laws are established. The Constitution is certain and fixed; it contains the permanent will of the people, and is the supreme law of the land; it is paramount to the power of the legislature, and can be revoked or altered only by the authority that made it. The life-giving principle and the death-doing stroke must proceed from the same hand."

Justice Bell in the case of Parker v. Com. 6 Pa. 507, 47 Am. Dec. 480, after quoting the above from Justice Patterson, adds: "Until altered or destroyed by this authority, it is obligatory on the people themselves; and legislatures, which are merely its creatures, must conform to it, or their acts will be void. Everything done in contravention of its principles is an act of usurpation, which, uncorrected, tends directly to its overthrow." And in the same opinion the learned justice adds: "As has been well remarked, the constituent is entitled not only to the industry and fidelity of his representative, but to his judgment, also, in all that relates to the business of public legislation. Among the primal axioms of jurisprudence, political and municipal, is to be found the principle that an agent, unless expressly empowered, cannot transfer his delegated authority to another, more especially when it rests in a confidence, partaking the nature of a trust, and requiring for its due discharge understanding, knowledge, and rectitude. The maxim is, Delegata potestas non potest delegari. And what shall be said to be a higher trust, based upon a broader confidence, than the possession of the legislative function? What task can be imposed on a man, as a member of society, requiring a deeper knowledge and a purer honesty? It is a duty which cannot, therefore, be transferred by the representative; no, not even to the people themselves; for they have forbidden it by the solemn expression of their will that the legislative power shall be vested in the general assembly; much less can it be relinquished to a portion of the people, who cannot even claim to be the exclusive depositories of that part of the sovereignty retained by the whole community. An attempt to do so would be not only to disregard the constitutional inhibition, but tend directly to impress upon the body of the state those social diseases that have always resulted in the death of republics, and to avoid which the scheme of a representative democracy was devised and is to be fostered."

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Mr. Justice Chase, in the case of Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. ed. 648, says: "I cannot subscribe to the omnipotence of a state legislature, or that it is absolute and without control; although its authority should not be expressly restrained by the Constitution, or fundamental law, of the state."

Chief Justice Marshall said, in the famous case of Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, 2 L. ed. 60, that "courts are not bound by mere pretenses, nor are they to be misled by mere pretenses. They are at liberty—indeed, they are under a solemn duty—to look at the substance of things whenever they enter upon the inquiry whether the legislature had transcended the limits of its authority. If, therefore, a statute purporting to have been enacted to protect the public health, the public morals, or public safety has no real or substantial relations to those objects, or is a palpable invasion of rights secured by the fundamental law, it is the duty of the court to so adjudicate, and thereby give effect to the Constitution."

The act in question is no doubt attempted to be adjudicated on the ground that it protects and promotes the public safety; but in effect it attempts to make it a public crime to violate any rule or regulation of a street car company as to transfers, whether the rule is reasonable or unreasonable, whether it would tend to promote or to destroy the public safety. It merely invokes the criminal machinery of the state to enforce the rules and regulations of street railroads.

I know that the majority of this court do not think the laws means what I construe it to mean, if they did, they would strike it down. They, of course, believe and hold that it is a proper police regulation of the issue, use, and disposition of street railroad transfers, and, if they are correct, of course, the enactment would be valid. But in my opinion the act is, in effect, an attempt to authorize those who operate street cars to make criminal laws as regards street railway transfers, and to make it a crime to violate the laws thus made by such street car operators. This, the legislature has no power to do.

My conclusion is that the act is in violation of the Constitution (1) because it is an unwarranted delegation of legislative power to individuals; (2) because it is an attempt to authorize individuals to suspend the laws at pleasure.

Petition for rehearing denied June 30, 1910.

COLORADO SUPREME COURT.

GEORGE R. WILSON et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

JUNE V. B. MITCHELL.

(— Colo. —, 111 Pac. 21.)

Parent — custody of child — divorce — death.

1. Upon the death of the parent to which a child was awarded by a decree of divorce, the other parent becomes entitled to its custody, unless, in a contest therefor, it is shown that such parent is disqualified, or the interests of the child require some other disposition of its person.

Evidence — judgment — strangers.

2. A decree for divorce is not admissible as evidence of the grounds upon which it was granted in a suit by the divorcee against a stranger, to secure the custody of her child.

Judgment — failure to defend — effect.

3. That one who has denied the charges upon which a suit for divorce was based made no effort to disprove them at the trial does not amount to an admission of their truth where she did not know the exact charges made against her, and there is evidence tending to show that the divorce decree was procured by perjured testimony.

Evidence — letter — addressee.

4. A letter written to a party to a suit is not admissible in evidence against him if it was never received by him, and has never been in his possession.

Parent — divorcee — right to child.

5. That a divorce was granted against the mother of a child for wrongdoing is not conclusive against her right to the custody of the child many years afterwards, where the father is dead, and she has remarried, has a good home and social standing, and there is not the slightest intimation or suspicion of wrongdoing subsequent to the divorce.

Same — affection for grandparents — effect.

6. That the grandparents of a child in whose custody it was placed have acquired an affection for it and it for them is not sufficient reason for refusal to return it to the custody of its mother, who surrendered possession of it merely for the benefit of its health, and always manifested her interest in and love for it, and contributed to its support.

Same — expatriation.

7. The mere fact that a mother intends, if she secures possession of her son, to take him to England for residence, is not sufficient to cause the courts to deny her the right to such possession as against the claims of its grandparents, with whom it had been placed by its father, who has since deceased.

Same — desire of child.

8. The preference of a nine-year-old boy to remain with his grandparents rather than return to his mother will not control the decision of the court, where he had always manifested affection for her until the institution of the proceedings for his custody, when he manifested an unexplained aversion to her.

(July 5, 1910.)

ERROR to the District Court for the City and County of Denver to review a judgment granting a writ of habeas corpus to secure possession of plaintiff's minor child, George Russell Wilson. Affirmed.

Statement by White, J.:

This is a habeas corpus proceeding instituted in the lower court by June V. B. Mitchell, defendant in error here, against George R. and Linda Wilson, plaintiffs in error, to obtain the custody of her infant son, George Russell Wilson. The writ was duly issued and a return thereto made. The court, upon hearing the evidence, held "that the welfare and best interests of this child demand that he be brought up in the care of his mother, and in the companionship of his sister," and accordingly ordered plaintiffs in error to deliver the child to the custody of its mother. The case is brought her for review.

In 1898 June Van Buskirk, seventeen years of age, a student of the American School of Dramatic Art, married Francis Sedgwick Wilson, aged about twenty-one years, a graduate of the same school, engaged in the theatrical profession. From this marriage, and on March 17, 1900, George Russell Wilson, the subject of this controversy, was born. George and Linda Wilson, plaintiffs in error, are the paternal grandparents of Russell. The married life of the parents of this child was not congenial. From the time the child was four weeks old the young mother alone took care of it, and for seven months it was nourished from her breast. The relations of husband and wife became more estranged as time passed, until December, 1900, at which time Francis sent June and the baby to her relatives in Indiana, neither writing her, nor contributing anything to the support of herself or child. In March, 1901, learning that Francis was in Philadelphia, June borrowed money from her relatives, and, with Russell, joined her husband, where a reconciliation took place, and they thereafter lived together until the spring of 1902. In July, 1901, Francis, taking his wife and baby, visited his brother's family in Nevada, where they remained for six weeks. Linda Wilson was also there. Francis, in the presence of his wife, suggested to Linda that the latter take Russell, and care for him, as it was inconvenient for the parents to do so, giving as his reason their theatrical work, though June at that time had never filed a theatrical engagement. Linda Wilson declined to take the child unless it should be given to her for all time, but to this condition the parents refused to give their consent, and returned to New York. In December, 1901, a second child—a girl—was born to Francis and June. When this child was about two months old, and seriously sick, Francis, in anger, took Russell, and, going out in a severe storm, remained away with him all night. The father's absence with the boy and the serious illness of the girl alarmed the mother greatly, and, leaving the baby in charge of a friend, the mother went out in the storm, searched for and found her husband and son, taking the latter home. Upon the return of Francis, he advised his wife that he had previously been in correspondence with his father, George Wilson, and had determined to place the boy with the latter; that June must support herself, as he could not and would not longer do so. Within a few days thereafter Russell was taken ill with pneumonia, and while he was convalescent the little girl died. Francis thereupon insisted that Russell be placed with the parents of the former, at least temporarily, threatening to run off with the child and so place him if the mother did not consent. The mother persistently refused to surrender her boy, but finally, upon the representation that the child's welfare, on account of the slow recovery from the pneumonia, and the heat in New York in summer, and the necessity that she support herself, consented to place the child with such grandparents temporarily, as she claims.

Note. — As to effect of death of parent to whom custody of child was awarded, upon right of surviving parent, see note to Clarke v. Lyon, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 171, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Francis S. Wilson, the father of Russell, achieved considerable success in his profession, earning even in his early career from $75 to $100 per week. He seemed, however, wholly lacking in financial judgment, or ability to conserve his resources. During the time he and June lived together, notwithstanding his salary and many hundreds of dollars from time to time advanced to him by George R. Wilson, he was never able to meet his obligations, and the environments of their home life were miserable poverty and domestic infelicity. June was frequently without food, and was under the necessity of borrowing small sums of money from her friend, Mrs. Cook, with which to buy food and medicine for Russell. In April, 1902, June borrowed money from her friends, with which she paid her expenses from New York to Sioux City, Iowa, where she took Russell, and left him with his grandmother, Linda Wilson. Nothing was said by or to her about the permanent surrender of the child, though plaintiffs in error claim that their son assured them that they should have the boy permanently. Shortly thereafter the parents of Russell ceased to live together, and the mother secured a position on the stage, and from her salary contributed regularly to the support of Russell. She also visited the child in 1902, and the following winter, at her expense, the child and its grandmother visited her in Minneapolis. In the spring of 1903 defendant in error was advised that the grandmother had deserted her intention of permanently keeping Russell. The mother thereupon induced the grandmother, at the former's expense, to take the child to Chicago, ostensibly for a visit with the mother. The latter secured possession of Russell, and fled with him to New York, thence to England, and later to the continent. The father of the child, financed by the grandfather,—one of the respondents here,—pursued, and finally at St. Gallens, Switzerland, overtook, the fleeing mother with her child. A conference was had and the mother assented—as she now claims, by reason of threats and pleas concerning the child's welfare, and the fact that she had exhausted her finances—to return to America and surrender the child to the grandfather, which she did in August, 1903. Upon this trip she was accompanied by the child's father, and, arriving in New York, was met at the pier by George R. Wilson, who took possession of the child, and thereafter told its mother that she should never again have possession of her son. Within a few days George R. Wilson conveyed Russell to Sioux City, Iowa, and delivered him to Linda Wilson, who has retained him in her custody from that time to the present. In her flight to Europe defendant in error had expended the money she had saved, that which she had borrowed from friends, and raised from pawning some of her clothing and jewelry. After Russell was taken from her, she was alone in New York, had no lawyer or anyone with whom to advise, was greatly in debt, and had no employment. She was, however, soon thereafter engaged to play in London, and left for that point October 9th. Just previous to her departure for England, her husband instituted a divorce proceeding, charging her with serious offenses against the marital obligations, committed between August, 1902, and the summer of 1903, and praying for the custody of Russell. In that suit summons were duly served, and the defendant in error employed counsel, filed an answer, denied any wrongdoing, and likewise asked for the custody of the child. Upon arrival in England, defendant in error was taken ill underwent a serious operation, and was unable to resume her theatrical engagements until May, 1904. After leaving the hospital, defendant in error was cared for by Mrs. Clemow, with whom she lived until 1906. In June, 1904, the divorce suit came on for trial, and defendant therein failing to appear other than by attorney, a decree of divorce was granted in favor of the plaintiff, with a rule that defendant show cause on or before September 23d following why the decree should not be made absolute. Though advised of the decree nisi, no further appearance was made on behalf of the defendant, and the decree was made absolute in accordance with the rule, and the custody of Russell was awarded to the father. At that time Russell was not within the jurisdiction of the court in which the decree was entered, nor has he since been. In July, 1904, Francis visited England, and there met the defendant in error, and told her that, if she did not give him or send him $500 by the first of October, he would never permit her to hear from Russell, or see him again. He stated that the money was not for himself, but for George R. Wilson, who had advanced money on the divorce case, and had expended large sums in having her followed to Europe and repossessing himself of the child. The defendant in error was desirous of seeing her son, and expressed an intention of visiting America for that purpose, but was assured by Francis that it was unnecessary, as he would bring Russell to England during the summer.

September 30th June wrote to Francis, advising him that she had been ill, unable to earn money, and could not send the $500 demanded. Previous to this time, Linda Wilson had written regularly to June, giving news of the child's health and progress, but in November she ceased writing, and, notwithstanding frequent letters and cablegrams for news of her son, June had not a word until March, 1905, except an anonymous letter, and a letter written at the request of Linda Wilson by her nephew. About the middle of March, June received a letter from Francis demanding $1,000 to pay the expenses of Linda Wilson bringing Russell to England. Frantic with the desire to see her child, June borrowed from friends, and cabled to Francis the sum of £80 sterling. About three weeks later she received a letter demanding an additional amount in order for his mother, Linda Wilson, to make the trip with the boy. Not complying with this last request, she 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) later received a cable signed by Francis, reading: "My will or none; will bring mother." April 24, 1905, June had a letter from Francis, saying that he had tried to get his mother to come with the boy to New York, so that he might take the child to England, but that his mother had taken Russell and gone to California. Two days after the receipt of this letter, Francis arrived in London, and immediately communicated with June, making an appointment, and expressing his sorrow that he had not been able to bring Russell. April 27th he called, and, in the presence of Mrs. Clemow, broke down, cried, and expressed his regret to his divorced wife for all the wrong he had done and his wish to atone therefor. After leaving, he wrote and sent to June the following letter:

Dear June:—

After leaving you I have been thinking how I could arrange the best possible plan for all concerned of solving this most regrettable muddle. Their round-trip passage must be booked, which will incur an outlay of at least $300. You can inquire—their trip from San Francisco to New York will require the best part of $150, and she should have at least $150 given her in New York for incidental and many little expenses which will arise—this totals $600—and you can give her the balance, $400, when she arrives. I feel positive that there will be no hitch, as I wrote her a very forceful letter, telling her if she did not come—if I sent for her—I should take Russell away from her on my return to America. Furthermore, I will give you this promise: that if my mother should fail to do as I ask in this instance, I will immediately on my return to America get Russell and bring him to you, leaving him in your charge to educate and in a refined atmosphere. He bids fair to be too brilliant a man to raise in a half-way manner. I am telling you just how I feel. It has been on my mind for some time. After seeing you to-day in your surroundings I feel that you are the proper one to have him in charge. Don't think me ungrateful in expressing myself this way in regard to my mother; we owe her much, and I wish to try and atone for some of the wrong I have done you; you were far from being wholly to blame—we were equally at fault. This letter you may keep. Am so sorry I am not able to advance the $200 at the present time and show my good faith, but my money is so placed that I cannot get at it, excepting were I in New York. If you care to advance £40 more, do it immediately, so I will be able to get it off on Saturday morning's boat; have it here by noon to-morrow if you can. Believe me, I am as anxious to have Russell with me as you are.

Sincerely,

Francis S. Wilson.

Thereupon June borrowed from her friend Mrs. Clemow the sum of £40 sterling, which was transmitted to, and received by, Francis. May 8th and 15th Francis wrote June, conveying the idea that he was making an effort to carry out his promise. The child was not brought, however, nor did June have further word from Francis. Soon thereafter June advised Linda Wilson of the advancement of this money to Francis and the purpose thereof, and subsequently discussed the matter with both George and Linda Wilson.

By strict economy, defendant in error discharged a portion of her indebtedness, and in the summer of 1906 made the trip from London to California, and visited for six weeks with her son at the home of Linda Wilson. Russell is very affectionate, and at that time manifested great love and affection for his mother, and has ever done so until the institution of this suit, since which he has exhibited toward her an aversion. George Wilson testified that this aversion was caused by the fact that June had caused the Wilsons to be shadowed by detectives. Russell, in physical appearance and temperament, is like his father, and has characteristics very much the same, and the grandparents are pursuing the same methods with him as they did in rearing his father. On her visit to the Wilsons in California in 1906, June said and did nothing relative to a change of Russell's custody, being, as she explains, still in debt, and without a home. During all these years the mother, almost every month, and sometimes oftener, transmitted for her boy to Linda Wilson money, packages of clothing, and presents, continuing practically until the institution of this suit. Defendant in error returned to London in the fall of 1906, and there continued her theatrical career until December, 1907, when she married Percy J. Mitchell, her present husband, and retired permanently from the stage. In June, 1908, Mr. Mitchell endeavored to induce Linda Wilson, with Russell, to visit the Mitchells during the summer in England, offering to pay all the expenses, basing this request upon the great affection Mrs. Mitchell had for her son and her longing for the boy. This request was denied by a letter from George Wilson. Before her marriage to Mr. Mitchell, June acquainted him with the divorce proceedings, the result thereof, and the whereabouts of her child, and her great desire to again possess him. Mr. Mitchell himself testified that he was advised of these matters; that his sympathies were at once enlisted; and that he held himself ready to assist his wife, financially and otherwise, to obtain the custody of the child, and so advised her, but, before arrangements could be made for mother and son to be reunited, Mrs. Mitchell became a prospective mother, and a daughter was born of her second marriage early in December, 1908. After the daughter's birth, defendant in error planned to come to America as soon as possible, and arrange for taking Russell to London, but the serious illness of her husband and the tender infancy of the little girl delayed the matter.

Francis Sedgwick Wilson died February 22, 1909, and in May Mrs. Mitchell came to this country with a determination of obtaining the custody of Russell. Linda Wilson, with Russell, was residing in Alameda county, California, and it was there Mrs. Mitchell first instituted habeas corpus proceedings to regain the custody of the child. Before the service of the writ, Linda Wilson learned that defendant in error was in this country, and, suspecting her mission, gave Russell into the custody of his uncle, and sent him to his grandfather, George R. Wilson, at Lamar, Colorado. Defendant in error, following here, instituted these proceedings June 17, 1909.

George R. Wilson is in his sixty-first year, and Linda Wilson is past sixty years of age. From 1902 to 1905 Linda Wilson lived with the child, in three different families, in three different homes in Sioux City, while her husband lived in Colorado. Being unable to live in Colorado on account of her health, Linda Wilson, with the child, went to California; George R. Wilson making his home in this state, with the exception of about one year and nine months, which he spent with his wife and Russell in California. He intends, however, as soon as he can dispose of his business interests in Colorado, to take up his abode with his family in California, and there build a permanent home. Prior to June, 1909, he had not seen either his wife or Russell for nearly two years. George R. Wilson has property of the approximate value of $75,000, and it is the desire of the plaintiffs in error to adopt Russell as their own and make him their heir equally with their only living child, a son. Plaintiffs in error are members of the Congregational Church, and have the respect and esteem of those who know them. Mr. Mitchell, the present husband of defendant in error, is an educated Englishman, a graduate of the London Technical College, an engineer by profession, at present engaged in profitable contracting, carries life insurance in the sum of $100,000, has made a substantial marriage settlement upon his wife, and allows her $5,000 per annum for household expenses and clothing, is thirty years of age, a member of the Church of England, and is anxious that his wife shall have the custody of her son Russell, promises to treat the boy as his own child, bring him up with his own daughter, sending him to the best schools in England. Reference will hereinafter be made to other evidence necessary to a proper consideration of this case.

Messrs. Northcut & McHendrie and John A. Gordon, for plaintiffs in error:

In proceedings affecting the custody of an infant child, the paramount and controlling question by which the court must be guided is the interest and welfare of the child.

Mercein v. People, 25 Wend. 103, 35 Am. Dec. 653; Schleuter v. Canatsy, 148 Ind. 384, 47 N. E. 825; Hochheimer, Custody of Infants, p. 28; United States v. Green, 3 Mason, 482, Fed. Cas. No. 15,256; Chapsky v. Wood, 26 Kan. 650, 40 Am. Rep. 321; Clark v. Bayer, 32 Ohio St. 299, 30 Am. Rep. 593; Bonnett ex rel. Newmeyer v. Bonnett, 61 Iowa, 202, 47 Am. Rep. 810, 16 N. W. 91; Pool v. Gott, 4 Month. L. Rep. 269; Hoxsie v. Potter, 16 R. I. 374, 17 Atl. 129; Re O'Neal, 3 Am. L. Rev. 578; Kelsey v. Green, 69 Conn. 291, 38 L. R. A. 471, 37 Atl. 682; United States ex rel. Schneider v. Sauvage, 91 Fed. 490; Richards v. Collins, 45 N. J. Eq. 287, 14 Am. St. Rep. 726, 17 Atl. 831; Stringfellow v. Somerville, 95 Va. 701, 40 L.R.A. 623, 29 S. E. 687; Green v. Campbell, 35 W. Va. 704, 29 Am. St. Rep. 843, 14 S. E. 214; Re Gates, 95 Cal. 461, 30 Pac. 596; Verser v. Ford, 37 Ark. 27; Bently v. Terry, 59 Ga. 555, 27 Am. Rep. 399; Re Murphy, 12 How. Pr. 513; McDonald v. Stitt, 118 Iowa, 199, 91 N. W. 1031; Fletcher v. Hickman, 50 W. Va. 244, 55 L.R.A. 896, 88 Am. St. Rep. 862, 40 S. E. 371; Berkshire v. Caley, 157 Ind. 1, 60 N. E. 696; Jones v. Darnall, 103 Ind. 574, 53 Am. Rep. 545, 2 N. E. 229; Peese v. Gellerman (Tex. Civ. App.) 110 S. W. 196; State ex rel. Lynch v. Bratton (Del.) 15 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 359; Fields v. Dening, 56 Wash. 259, 105 Pac. 466.

If there be no objection to the child's choice of a custodian, his wishes should have great weight with the court, and no age limit is or can be fixed at which such choice will be considered.

Richards v. Collins, 45 N. J. Eq. 287, 14 Am. St. Rep. 726, 17 Atl. 831; Com. v. Hammond, 10 Pick. 274; Re McDowle, 8 Johns. 328; People ex rel. Ordronaux v. Chegarey, 18 Wend. 637; State v. Scott, 30 N. H. 274.

The unauthorized separation of the wife 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

from her husband, without any apparent justifiable cause, is a strong reason why the child should not be restored to her.

Com. v. Briggs, 16 Pick. 205.

Messrs. Bickeler, Bennett, & Nye, for defendant in error:

The presumption is that the parent is a fit and suitable person to be intrusted with the care of his children; that courts must not be tempted to interfere with the natural order of family life except in special cases of extreme urgency; and that the legal right of the parent will not be disregarded, merely because the child's interest would be as well, if not better, subserved by remaining where it is, than by awarding its custody to the natural parent.

McKercher v. Green, 13 Colo. App. 270, 58 Pac. 406; State ex rel. Lehman v. Martin, 95 Minn. 121, 103 N. W. 888; Miller v. Wallace, 76 Ga. 487, 2 Am. St. Rep. 48; Com. v. Briggs, 16 Pick. 205; State ex rel. Wood v. Deaton, 93 Tex. 243, 54 S. W. 901; Cormack v. Marshall, 122 Ill. App. 208; Re Salter, 142 Cal. 415, 76 Pac. 51; Stapleton v. Poynter, 111 Ky. 264, 53 L.R.A. 784, 98 Am. St. Rep. 411, 62 S. W. 730; Gilmore v. Kitson, 165 Ind. 402, 74 N. E. 1083; People ex rel. Barbour v. Gates, 57 Barb. 297; Moore v. Christian, 56 Miss. 408, 31 Am. Rep. 375; Re Scarritt, 76 Mo. 565, 43 Am. Rep. 768.

The father being dead, the mother is entitled to the custody as of right, and she does not lose this right by a second marriage.

Armstrong v. Stone, 9 Gratt. 102.

The burden of proof of the showing of unfitness of the parents to have the custody of their children is upon those who allege it.

Giffin v. Gascoigne, 60 N. J. Eq. 256, 47 Atl. 25; State ex rel. Lehman v. Martin, supra; Looney v. Martin, 123 Ga. 209, 51 S. E. 304.

A divorce decree awarding minor children to one parent, and finding that the other parent was unfit to be given their custody, is temporary in its nature, and does not prevent the latter obtaining their custody and control after the former's death.

Re Neff, 20 Wash. 652, 56 Pac. 383; Schammel v. Schammel, 105 Cal. 258, 38 Pac. 729.

The matter of financial advantage is not a reason to be urged.

Cormack v. Marshall and Re Salter, supra.

The question of expatriation is not controlling.

Re Bullen, 28 Kan. 781.

The facts that the mother is happily married to a noble man, who is a devoted husband, and has a comfortable home and a social position, in and of themselves are sufficient to refute the charge of present unfitness.

Re Wilson (N. J. Eq.) 55 Atl. 160; Cocke v. Hannum, 39 Miss. 423.

White, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In controversies affecting the custody of an infant, the interest and welfare of the child is the primary and controlling question by which the court must be guided. This rule is based upon the theory that the state must perpetuate itself, and good citizenship is essential to that end. Though nature gives to parents the right to the custody of their own children, and such right is scarcely less sacred than the right to life and liberty, and is manifested in all animal life, yet among mankind the necessity for government has forced the recognition or the rule that the perpetuity of the state is the first consideration, and parental authority itself is subordinate to this supreme power. It is recognized that "the moment a child is born, it owes allegiance to the government of the country of its birth, and is entitled to the protection of that government. And such government is obligated, by its duty of protection, to consult the welfare, comfort, and interest of such child in regulating its custody during the period of its minority." Mercein v. People, 25 Wend. 64, 103, 35 Am. Dec. 653; McKercher v. Green, 13 Colo. App. 271, 58 Pac. 406. But as government should never interfere with the natural rights of man, except only when it is essential for the good of society, the state recognizes and enforces the right which nature gives to parents to the custody of their own children, and only supervenes with its sovereign power when the necessities of the case require it. The experience of man has demonstrated that the best development of a young life is within the sacred precincts of a home, the members of which are bound together by ties entwined through "bone of their bone and flesh of their flesh;" that it is in such homes and under such influences that the sweetest, purest, noblest, and most attractive qualities of human nature, so essential to good citizenship, are best nurtured and grow to wholesome fruition; that, when a state is based and builded upon such homes, it is strong in patriotism, courage, and all the elements of the best civilization. Accordingly these recurring facts in the experience of man resulted in a presumption establishing prima facie that parents are in every way qualified to have the care, custody, and control of their own offspring, and that their welfare and interests are best subserved under such control. Thus, by natural law, by common law, and, likewise, the statutes of this state, the natural parents are entitled to the custody of their minor children, except when they are unsuitable persons to be intrusted with their care, control, and education, or when some exceptional circumstances appear which render such custody inimicable to the best interests of the child. While the right of a parent to the custody of its infant child is therefore, in a sense, contingent, the right can never be lost or taken away so long as the parent properly nurtures, maintains, and cares for the child.

In Re Neff, 20 Wash. 652, 56 Pac. 383, 384, it is said: The father "has the natural and legal right to the custody and control of the children, unless so completely unfit for such duties that the welfare of the children themselves imperatively demanded another disposition of their custody." In Miller v. Wallace, 76 Ga. 479, 486, 2 Am. St. Rep. 48, it is said: "Prima facie, the right of custody of an infant is in the father; and when this right is resisted, upon the ground of his unfitness for the trust, or other cause, a proper regard to the sanctity of the parental relation will require that the objection be sustained by clear and satisfactory proofs. 'A clear and strong case' must be made to sustain an objection to the father's right." And in McKercher v. Green, supra, the doctrine is announced that, save in exceptional cases, where it is clear the welfare of the child demands otherwise, the parent's right to the custody is paramount, and should be recognized. In United States v. Green, 3 Mason, 482, 485, Fed. Cas. No. 15,256, the court, speaking through Justice Story, after declaring that, in a general sense, the right of the father to have the custody of his infant child is certain, continues: "But this is not on account of any absolute right of the father, but, for the benefit of the infant, the law presumes it to be for its interest to be under the nurture and care of his natural protector, both for maintenance and education." The rule announced in 29 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1603, is that "the existence of circumstances which would deprive the parent of the right to custody of the child, such as unfitness, inability to care for it, or relinquishment of the parental right of custody, will not be presumed, but must be proved by the person opposing the parent's right." It is also there announced that the place selected by a parent for the care and support of his children is presumed suitable, and a person claiming otherwise has the burden of proof.

We are firmly of the opinion that in all cases of this character the presumption is that the parents are fit and suitable persons to be intrusted with the care of their minor children, and that the interests and welfare of such children are best subserved when under such care and control; that such presumption is like unto the presumption of innocence in a criminal case,—ever present, throughout the controversy, until overcome by the most solid and substantial reasons, established by plain and certain proofs. Indeed, this presumption is essential to the maintenance of society, for without it man would be denaturalized, the ties of family broken, the instincts of humanity stifled, and one of the strongest incentives to the propagation and continuance of the human race destroyed. Unquestionably, when the power of the court is invoked to place an infant into the custody of its parents, and to withdraw such child from other persons, the court will scrutinize all the circumstances, and ascertain "if a change of custody would be disadvantageous to the infant." If so, the change will not be made, "and it matters not whether it is through the fault or the mere misfortune of the legal guardian that the infant has come to be out of his custody." Hochheimer, Custody of Infants, p. 29. But mere speculation as to the probability of benefit to the child by leaving or returning it should have but little weight, and the courts should, and will, enforce the parent's right to the custody of the child, unless it clearly appears that the welfare and interest of such child will be best subserved by denying it. The award in the decree of divorce of the custody of Russell to the father, if legally effective, at all, under the circumstances of this case, was necessarily temporary in its nature. In such proceedings the power to make orders touching the care and custody of minor children must be held to be limited to the conditions and circumstances existing at the time such orders are made. The court cannot then anticipate what may possibly thereafter happen, and provide for such future contingencies. Notwithstanding a divorce decree awarding the care and custody of minor children to one of the parents, upon the death of such parent, the other parent becomes entitled to the custody of such children, unless in a contest therefor it be shown that such parent is disqualified, or the interests of the children require some other disposition of their persons. Mills's Anno. Stat. § 2090; Schammel v. Schammel, 105 Cal. 258, 38 Pac. 729; Re Neff, supra.

Plaintiffs in error, however, contend that the evidence establishes the unfitness and disqualification of defendant in error to have charge and control of this child. They 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

assert that the decree of divorce in favor of the father, and against the mother, solemnly adjudged her guilty of acts that show her unfitted for the custody of Russell; that the testimony of one Mills, who was also a witness in the divorce suit, brought before the trial court the particular acts upon which the divorce decree was based; that Mills's testimony is corroborated by a letter written to defendant in error by one Britton just after the mother fled to Europe with Russell, and also by a letter written by defendant in error to plaintiff in error George R. Wilson from St. Gallens, Switzerland, when overtaken by her husband. The trial court held that the decree of divorce was admissible in evidence for the sole purpose of showing that the parties were, in fact, divorced, but could not be considered as proof of the truth of the grounds for the decree. In this we think the court was right. Mutuality is essential in the application of the rule of res judicata. A party will not be concluded by a former judgment unless he could have used it to his advantage and to the disadvantage of the other litigant, had the judgment been the other way. Both the litigants must be alike concluded or the proceedings cannot be set up as conclusive upon either. Greenl. Ev. § 524. Had the decree in the divorce suit been in favor of the wife, plaintiffs in error would not, and could not, have been estopped by it. Unquestionably, matters determined in a divorce suit are conclusive between the parties thereto, and, as between such parties, a decree fixing the custody of children within the jurisdiction of the court is res judicata until modified or annulled in some appropriate proceeding, but the death of Francis rendered that portion of the decree in question, fixing the custody of Russell, inoperative. Plaintiffs in error say that they do not contend that the divorce decree is conclusive of the proof of the facts upon which it was based, but that it is evidence to be considered by the court; that the circumstances under which it was rendered amount to an admission of the truth of the charges. We do not think that such significance can be deduced from the decree and the circumstances under which it was entered. The defendant in that suit therein denied the charges alleged, and while she made no effort to controvert or disprove them at the time of the trial, she was hardly in a position to do so. She testified that she never knew what the exact charges made against her in the divorce suit were until during the trial of the suit for the possession of her son. Moreover, long after the divorce decree was granted, it appears that one Woods, a witness therein, who testified in the divorce 33 suit, as did Mills, to support the charges therein, made a dying confession to the effect that, in the presence of the witness Mills, a plot was entered into to obtain a decree by perjured testimony in favor of Francis in the divorce case. We think defendant in error should have undertaken in that case an investigation of the facts in her own behalf, and, as was said by the lower court, "is to be criticized for not defending more vigorously her rights to the custody of the child in the divorce proceedings." But it is not what might have been, or what should have been, but what was and is, with which we are concerned.

The Britton letter was in no wise admissible in evidence for any purpose whatever. Witness Mills testified that he received it from Francis, but as to how it came into the possession of the latter is not disclosed. It is certain that it was never received by, nor has it ever been in the possession of, defendant in error. The letter written by June to George R. Wilson from St. Gallens is sought to be impressed with the character of a confession of the wrongdoing subsequently set forth in the divorce proceeding. We are of the opinion that the letter is capable of a far more innocent construction, and, under the circumstances of this case, such meaning cannot be justly ascribed to it. The witness Mills testified that in June, 1903, he related to George R. Wilson all of the alleged facts concerning June's wrongdoing, and George R. Wilson testified that when he talked with June in New York, after her return from Europe with Russell, and after the receipt of the letter in question, she asked him to forgive her for taking the child away, and that he did so, and nothing else was discussed between them; that the running away with the child was all that the letter written from St. Gallens referred to; and that his only purpose in preserving that letter was as a protection against further effort upon the part of the mother to take the child. Subjecting Mills's testimony to the test of probability, but few of the elements entitling it to belief remain. He admitted that he was employed by the man Britton as private secretary; that his duties consisted principally in doing his "messenger business," and acting the part of "procurer;" that he falsely assumed the role of "Charles Huntley, Private Secretary to Francis Wilson," in corresponding with Woods to secure him as a witness in the divorce suit; that he accompanied Francis Wilson to Europe, and assisted him, without compensation, in his chase after defendant in error and her child; that he in other ways busied himself in behalf of Francis Wilson in procuring the divorce, and finally came from New York, and appeared and testified in the case at bar, in answer to a newspaper advertisement, without promise of compensation, but in hope of reward, for the sole purpose of giving testimony which, if true, any man with decency, respectability, manhood, or honor would have refrained from reciting, except in obedience to the law's imperative demand. Moreover, the testimony of this witness is flatly contradicted by defendant in error, is in no wise corroborated, and is wholly insufficient, under the circumstances, to establish any wrongdoing on the part of the mother of this child. But, were we to assume the truth of the charges in the divorce proceeding, and testified to herein by witness Mills, that would not of itself constitute a present disqualification of defendant in error as the proper custodian of her child. The matters therein and thereby charged are said to have taken place in 1902 and 1903. There is not the slightest intimation or suspicion of subsequent wrongdoing. On the contrary, the evidence clearly shows that in point of respectability and morals at the present time no objections can be urged. We cannot assume that, because objections did exist or were charged against her at that remote period, they still exist, when the evidence shows that she is now happily married, is the mother of another child, has a good home, dear friends, an enviable social standing, and a reputation for charitable work that has earned, and received, the commendation and approval of those high in authority. We are fortified in this view by the voice of Francis, declaring to the mother of this child, "That after seeing you to-day, in your surroundings, I feel that you are the proper one to have him in charge. . . . I wish to try and atone for some of the wrong I have done you." Here is the father, to whose custody Russell had been given by a judicial decree, solemnly declaring the defendant in error to be the proper person to have Russell, to "educate in a refined atmosphere." Either Francis was at that time absolutely and irretrievably lost to every sense of honor, right, decency, and manhood, or he knew and felt in his own consciousness that the mother, in her then surroundings, was a fit and proper person to have the care and custody of their child, and that whatever wrongs had previously existed were not wholly hers. The evidence discloses that Francis requested his mother to take Russell to Europe; that he also testified in bankruptcy proceeding that he had fully repaid the money advanced him by June for that purpose. This evidence is not controverted. We are justified, therefore, in assuming that Francis secured the money in good faith to have Russell sent to England, and, failing in his purpose, returned the money. We are persuaded that the hearts of these plaintiffs in error will be gladdened by the mantle of charity which we thus place over the acts of their dead son, and by the memory of their love for him, acquiesce in his judgment, and ours, that Russell's mother is a fit and proper person to have his care and custody.

Counsel, however, contend that defendant in error voluntarily committed Russell to the care of plaintiffs in error, and has permitted him to so remain until his affections have become centered in them, as well as theirs in him, and that, therefore, this is one of those exceptional cases where it is clear the welfare of the child demands that its custody be not changed. The great love and affection which the grandparents have for this child, and the care they have bestowed upon it, is clearly evident and must necessarily be considered; but the sorrow that must come to them when deprived of its custody is not a sufficient reason to justify a court in denying the right which naturally belongs to a parent, much as that sorrow must appeal to every sympathetic mind; nor is it a sufficient reason that the child has learned to love another. In the heart of every child there is usually love and affection for all, and the feeling of attachment to those with whom Russell has most recently been associated will soon yield to that affection, regard, and love which none but a mother can feel and manifest toward her own offspring. In the case of Chapsky v. Wood, 26 Kan. 650, 40 Am. Rep. 321, cited by counsel for plaintiffs in error, a little girl was taken at birth by her aunt, who had thereafter always cared for the child and performed towards it the duties of a mother. The mother was too ill to care for the child, and the father was too shiftless to care for either. When the child was five and a half years of age, and the mother was dead, the father sought the court to take the child from the loving care of the aunt,—the foster mother,—and deliver her into the custody of the father, then residing in the home of his parents. This the court, and in our judgment very properly, refused to do. In that case the father, through shiftlessness and coldness of disposition, failed to manifest any affection for his offspring until it pleased him to seek its custody. He had in effect abandoned it, and the rule applied there is similar to McKercher v. Green, 13 Colo. App. 271, 58 Pac. 406, where the child was not born until after the separation of father and mother, and the parent invoking the power of the court had never seen the child until about the time he sought its custody, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

when it was almost four years old. In the case at bar the mother had the sole care of Russell for at least the first two years of his life, and only gave him up when the one whose duty it was to provide sustenance refused longer to do so, and when the health of the child required a change of climate; that she thereafter contributed to his support, and during all the time remained constant in her love. Her affection for and interest in her child was continuously manifested. Fearing that it was losing its affection for her, and that the grandmother was planning to permanently keep it, the mother abducted the child and fled to Europe. It was only surrendered when the mother was frantic with fright, when her funds were exhausted, and her health broken, and then only under pressure from her husband. In 1904 she pleaded with the father to bring the child to her. Again in 1905 she borrowed money and sent it to the father, under the promise and the hope that she might repossess her son, and in 1906, undismayed by frequent disappointments she crossed the ocean and the western continent, that she might be with and near her boy. She was constantly writing of, and sending small presents to, him, and the letters of Linda Wilson, covering a period of seven years, show that the writer believed the mother to be deeply interested in the slightest detail in the life of the child. The evidence clearly establishes that defendant in error has a strong, deep, and abiding love and affection for her child; that he has always, up to the institution of this suit, manifested a like love and affection for her. Notwithstanding plaintiffs in error are people of good character, able and willing to properly support and educate this child, intend to make him their heir equally with their own son, and have for him great love and affection, which he reciprocates, and that his preference is to stay with them, these matters are insufficient, under the evidence and circumstances of this case, to overcome the presumption that his welfare and interests would be best subserved in the care and custody of his own mother. As said in Cormack v. Marshall, 122 Ill. App. 208, 216: "The mere fact that some other person may have more money or property in any form is not one that appeals to us. The divine injunction to multiply and replenish the species was not confined to the rich, nor was it intended that the poor should beget the children and the rich should rear them."

Mr. Mitchell, the present husband of defendant in error, was present at the trial and gave his testimony, from which it appears that from hearing his wife talk of

Russell, and observing her affection for the boy, his own love for his wife had engendered in him a feeling of parental regard for Russell, and that he would welcome the boy into his own home as his own offspring. We requested Mr. Mitchell, to appear before us, and personally questioned him concerning these matters. He appears to be a man of education, refinement, and more than ordinary business ability. He not only testified, and was supported by other testimony, but also assured us, that, if the custody of Russell was given to the mother, he had the financial ability to carry out the plans and desires of both himself and the mother, would give the boy every educational advantage, start him in business of his own selection, and would treat him in all respects as his own child. Moreover, plaintiffs in error are well past middle life, are now in their declining years, have no young children in their family; whereas, defendant in error, by her second marriage, has become the mother of another child,—a girl. The refining and ennobling influence of a happy home where young children are growing together to manhood and womanhood is generally recognized and conceded. It is under such influences that traits of manly and womanly character are first manifested and best developed. Plaintiffs in error assert that, where other things are equal, this court should "choose to make of an American-born boy an American citizen rather than a British subject," and "that he be educated as an American, and not as an Englishman." Permitting him to be taken to England will not necessarily change his citizenship. He is American born, and must remain an American citizen until he reaches an age of maturity, and determines for himself that he shall make a change of his allegiance, or, at least, until such change occurs by some procedure recognized by the courts. If this child were to be taken to some country governed by a despot, or where liberty, under the law, was not an inalienable right of a citizen, or where there were no educational advantages, or where its education would be contrary to Anglo-Saxon traditions, the objections to expatriation would require grave and serious consideration and might be insurmountable. But we take judicial notice of the fact that the Kingdom of Great Britain is a government of liberty and law, and its people accustomed to receive educational and social advantages equal to those obtainable in the United States. Upon this feature of the case we will adopt the language of the late Mr. Justice Brewer of the Supreme Court of the United States, when, as a member of the Supreme Court of Kansas, he said, in Re 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Bullen, 28 Kan. 781, 786: "I cannot agree with counsel that it is never the province of the court to expatriate a citizen. In some cases I think the duty so to do is clear and absolute. As, for instance, where parents moving to a foreign country, and leaving their little child here for a while, come back to claim it, and are hindered by those who have it in possession. Nevertheless, it is a matter always to be considered. With pardonable partiality, we look upon our own land, its laws, institutions, and social life, as the best; and not lightly should a child be deprived of the benefit of them. Yet we may not ignore the fact that the mother country is a land of liberty and law, of education and social refinement, of morality and religion; and it would be wrong to make the matter of expatriation an excuse for depriving this little girl of that which would promote her welfare."

It is urged that as the trial court found that Russell's preference was to stay with his grandparents, and observed a "marked aversion to his mother, as shown by his manner in the court room," which was confirmed by a personal interview with the child, we should recognize that preference, and let the child remain where it is. There are many cases reported where the court, in the exercise of its authority, has accepted the wish of the infant as to its custody. It is certain that, if the child be of an age and capacity to form a rational judgment, its wish and choice should be consulted and given weight; but, as was well said by a distinguished judge: "It seems to be but a mockery to ask a child of nine years of age whether it should remain with the person who brought it up, or go with a stranger." In considering the aversion to his mother, it must be remembered that prior to this contest there was no aversion, but the tenderest love and affection. We concur in the opinion of the trial court that the explanation that the aversion is the result of certain measures taken by the mother to ascertain and know the whereabouts of the child is far from satisfactory, and that the bitterness aroused by this contest has been to some extent instilled in the child, and that, if plaintiffs in error retain possession of him, the estrangement will be still further increased. Under such circumstances, it is of prime importance to protect, as far as possible, the welfare and happiness of this child of tender years from the effects of the loss of respect and affection for his mother.

We recognize that in giving up Russell these grandparents will suffer keen disappointment and sorrow; but in this case, if the instincts of filial and paternal affection are of any value, or if the voice of nature, that makes the parent the natural guardian of his child, that caused Rachel to weep for her first born and refuse to be comforted, is worth anything, they furnish the only proper solution of this question. In the calm and peaceful solitude that must come to the hearts of these grandparents when Russell is gone, let them remember the love and affection they had for their own son, and realize that as they would have had it done for them, in a contest for their son, we now do for the mother of this child,—give unto her her own.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

Steele, Ch. J., and Bailey, J., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied October 11, 1910.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

SMITH, Appt.,
v.

SANBORN STATE BANK.

(— Iowa, —, 126 N. W. 779.)

Damages — mental suffering — refusal to return deposit.

1. The liability of a bank which refuses to return a fund deposited with it to defray the expenses of the sick wife of the depositor, by which treatment is delayed, does not include compensation for the mental suffering of the depositor.

Bank — special deposit — application on general account.

2. A bank which accepts a deposit of money needed by the depositor for a special purpose, under the agreement that it will pay the amount when needed for that purpose, cannot apply it upon the depositor's general indebtedness to it.

(June 14, 1910.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for O'Brien County entered upon a directed verdict for defendant in an action brought to recover the balance of a certain deposit account and damages for the alleged wrongful detention thereof. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. A. Babcock for appellant.

Weaver, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Stated as briefly as practicable, the plaintiff's petition alleges that in October, 1908, he became the owner of a certain check or bill of exchange payable to himself for the sum of $200, and took the paper to the defendant bank, and sought to obtain the money thereon. In so doing he expressly informed the officer in charge that he desired to use the money in paying a rent claim of $40 held by said bank for collection, and the remainder in defraying the expenses of immediate medical and surgical treatment of his wife, whom he expected to remove to a hospital in the city of St. Paul, in the state of Minnesota, on the following day, and that the money represented by said check was necessary to enable him to do so. Thereupon said bank officer told plaintiff that the safe in which the funds of the bank were kept had been locked for the night, but that plaintiff could leave the draft as a deposit, together with a check for $43, to cover both the rent claimed and an item of $3 which he was owing the bank, and the remainder could be drawn by him, as the money might be needed in the treatment of his sick wife. On the following day, having given checks to others to an amount which reduced the deposit to $101.50, he called at the bank to obtain the same for the purpose of taking his wife to the hospital, but defendant re-

Note. — Right of bank to apply special deposit to an indebtedness of a depositor.

All the authorities are agreed upon the rule of law declared in the above case, that a bank which accepts a deposit of money made by a depositor for a special purpose, under an agreement that it will pay the amount when needed for that purpose, cannot rightly appropriate such deposit to discharge the depositor's indebtedness to it. Re Davis, 119 Fed. 956; Bank of Commerce v. Franklin, 90 Ill. App. 91; Carter v. Martin, 22 Ind. App. 445, 53 N. E. 1066; Winfield Nat. Bank v. Railroad Loan & Sav. Asso. 71 Kan. 584, 81 Pac. 202; Murdock v. Citizens' Bank, 23 La. Ann. 113; Lynam v. Belfast Nat. Bank, 98 Me. 448, 57 Atl. 799; Judy v. Farmers' & T. Bank, 81 Mo. 404; Deal v. Mississippi County Bank, 79 Mo. App. 202; Straus v. Tradesmen's Nat. Bank, 122 N. Y. 379, 25 N. E. 372, affirming 13 N. Y. S. R. 407; Straus v. Tradesmen's Nat. Bank, 36 Hun. 451; Shawnee Nat. Bank v. Wootten (Okla.) 103 Pac. 714; Bank of United States v. Macalester, 9 Pa. 475; Parker v. Hartley, 91 Pa. 465; Wagner v. Citizens' Bank & T. Co. (Tenn.) 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 484, 122 S. W. 245.

Thus, in Wilson v. Dawson, 52 Ind. 513, it was held to be the general rule that funds deposited in a bank for a special purpose known to the bank could not be withheld from that purpose by the bank, and appropriated to pay a debt due the bank from the depositor.

And in First Nat. Bank v. Barger (Ky.) 115 S. W. 726, it was declared to be the fused to pay it over, informing him that it had applied the deposit upon a promissory note which it held against him. Upon this showing plaintiff asks to recover judgment for the sum of money so withheld, with interest. In a second count of the petition the same facts are set forth; and it is further alleged that the money represented by said check constituted the only means he had with which to secure the necessary treatment of his sick wife, and that, being poor and without property on which to secure a loan, he was delayed several days in obtaining the necessary assistance to aid him in carrying out his purpose to take his wife to the hospital, and that as a result thereof he was put to great labor and trouble and made to suffer great humiliation, anxiety, and distress of mind, for which he asks damages in the sum of $500. The defendant admits the receipt of the check for $200, alleges that it paid therefrom on plaintiff's checks the sum of $98.50, and that it applied and now asserts the right to retain the remainder in payment of a promissory note which it then held against the plaintiff. The evidence fairly tends to sustain the allegations of the petition.

At the close of plaintiff's case defendant moved for a directed verdict in its favor on the grounds: (1) That it is shown without controversy that plaintiff's deposit being on open account subject to check, the bank had the legal right and authority to apply it in payment of plaintiff's note. (2) That the law allows no recovery of damages for mental suffering occasioned by breach of contract, and that the damages which plaintiff seeks to recover are too remote, indirect, and speculative to sustain a verdict in his favor on the second count of the petition. This motion was sustained by the court, verdict returned as ordered, and judgment for costs entered against plaintiff, who appeals.

Actuated, perhaps, by the same spirit of saving which led it to violate its agreement with plaintiff to receive and hold the money for his use in the treatment of his sick wife, the appellee has employed no counsel to represent it in this court, and we are therefore deprived of the benefit of a brief in support of the judgment which it obtained below, and there is nothing in the record to equitably incline this court to seek for reasons to sustain it. We may assume, perhaps, that the appellee's view of the law governing the cause, as well as the view of the trial court thereon, is epitomized in the grounds of the motion for a directed verdict, to which we have already called attention.

Referring first to the second proposition of the motion, we are obliged to hold that the damages for which recovery is demanded in the second count of the petition are too remote, and that the trial court correctly held that no case for the jury had been made on this branch of the case. That such damages have been held recoverable in certain cases growing out of contract rights and relations must be admitted, but these are to be found almost entirely in that class of contracts upon breach of which the injured party may, if he so elect, bring an action sounding in tort. Familiar examples of this nature are found in cases upholding the recovery of such damages for negligence in the transmission and delivery of telegrams. Mentzer v. Western U. Tele. Co. 93 Iowa, 752, 28 L.R.A. 72, 57 Am. St. Rep. 294, 62 N. W. 1; Cowan v. Western U. Tele. Co. 122 Iowa, 379, 64 L.R.A. 545, 101 Am. St. Rep. 268, 98 N. W. 281. Of the same character are certain cases against common carriers. Brown v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 54 Wis. 342, 41 Am. Rep. 41, 11 N. W. 356, 911; Sloane v. Southern California R. Co. 111 Cal. 668, 32 L.R.A. 193, 44 Pac. 320. But no case has been called to our attention, nor do we think one can be found, which holds that damages are recoverable for mental anguish growing out of the violation of a contract for the payment of money. To so hold would be to open the door to a ruinous flood of litigation. Occasions will arise when it would seem that such a recovery is demanded in law that while a bank had the right to appropriate a general deposit to discharge the indebtedness of the depositor to it, it had no right to make such appropriation of a deposit which it had received with notice that it was made for the purpose of meeting certain checks drawn by the depositor, so as to defeat the holder of such checks in the collection of same. The court added that this rule applied only when the bank had notice of the previous appropriation of the sum deposited.

In Masonic Sav. Bank v. Bangs, 84 Ky. 135, 4 Am. St. Rep. 197, cited by the court in SMITH v. SANBORN STATE BANK, the 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

specific holding was that where securities were pledged to a bank for the payment of a particular debt, it had no lien on the securities for a general balance or for the payment of other claims. This question, however, it is not aimed to include within the scope of this note.

For a discussion of the question whether the fact that a bank has, by an agreement invalid as against a trustee in bankruptcy, undertaken to hold the bankrupt's deposit as a fund for creditors, prevents it from setting off the deposit against its own claim, see note to Wagner v. Citizens' Bank & T. Co. 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 484. J. A. C.

the interests of justice, but it is better that the exceptional wrong should sometimes go unrequited than to abrogate a rule which in the vast majority of cases has a salutary effect. Generally speaking, failure to pay or deliver money according to agreement gives rise to no recoverable damages beyond the sum wrongfully withheld, with interest, during the time payment is delayed. Special circumstances may sometimes justify the recovery of special damages, but these do not include compensation for mental suffering.

As to the first ground of the motion for the directed verdict, which is, in substance, that under the undisputed facts of the case the defendant bank had the right to apply the deposit to the payment of the note, we are of the opinion that it cannot be sustained, and that the trial court erred in directing a verdict against plaintiff thereon. Of the general rule that a bank to whom a depositor is owing a matured indebtedness may appropriate the general deposit of its debtor to the discharge of the obligation, there can be no doubt. Ætna Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 82, 7 Am. Rep. 314; Knapp v. Cowell, 77 Iowa, 528, 42 N. W. 434. But it is no less certain that a deposit made for a special purpose, or under a special agreement, cannot rightfully be so appropriated. Wilson v. Dawson, 52 Ind. 513; Straus v. Tradesmen's Nat. Bank, 36 Hun, 451; Straus v. Tradesmen's Nat. Bank, 122 N. Y. 379, 25 N. E. 372; Judy v. Farmers' & T. Bank, 81 Mo. 404; Bank of United States v. Macalester, 9 Pa. 475; Masonic Sav. Bank v. Bangs, 84 Ky. 135, 4 Am. St. Rep. 197. Indeed, the proposition that a bank enjoys no exemption from the general rule by which every party to a business transaction or agreement is legally bound to respect the obligation of his contract is one which ought to require neither argument nor citation of authority. The evidence shows without dispute that the check for $200 was placed with the defendant upon the express agreement and understanding that, after paying certain specifically named debts, the remainder would be repaid to the plaintiff on the following day, or whenever called for, to enable him to take his wife to the hospital for needed treatment. Upon money so received, no lien attached in favor of the bank, and its attempt to appropriate the same was wholly without right or authority. Upon such a record plaintiff was clearly entitled to recover.

It follows that the direction of a verdict in defendant's favor upon the first count of the petition cannot be sustained, and the judgment of the trial court is therefore reversed.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

H. KATZMAN, Appt.,

v.

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY.

(— Ky. —, 130 S. W. 990.)

Statute — sale of poisons — definiteness.

1. A statute forbidding druggists to sell poisons at retail except under certain conditions, one of which is that they shall satisfy themselves that they are to be used for legitimate purposes, is not invalid for not defining the meaning of the words "retail" and "legitimate purposes."

Trial — jury question — care of druggists.

2. Whether or not a druggist, in selling opium without a prescription, used reasonable care to satisfy himself that it was obtained for a legitimate purpose, as required by statute, is a question for the jury.

Evidence — expert — purpose of sale.

3. Upon a prosecution for selling opium to an habitual user, under a statute requiring persons selling it at retail to satisfy themselves that it is desired for legitimate

Note. — Constitutionality, construction, and effect of statute prohibiting or regulating the sale of poisons.

Constitutionality.

The constitutionality of statutes of this nature has generally been unquestioned, and it seems to be clearly within the police power of the states to regulate or to prohibit, under proper circumstances, the sale of poisons, for the protection of the lives and health of the public.

Thus, a statute prohibiting the sale of opium, its compounds and preparations, except upon prescription, was upheld in Re Hallawell, 8 Cal. App. 563, 97 Pac. 320, affirmed in 155 Cal. 112, 99 Pac. 490, as a legitimate exercise of the police power.

And in State v. Ah Chew, 16 Nev. 60, 40 Am. Rep. 488, a similar statute with reference to opium was upheld against objections that it interfered with existing rights of property, impaired the obligation of contracts, and was special legislation in the interest of a designated class; and in Ex parte Yung Jon, 28 Fed. 308, against an objection that, as applied to opium in the hands of persons within the state at the date of the passage of the act, it deprived them of property without compensation or due process of law. In the latter case, the court said: "The use of the article is not thereby restrained, so as to destroy its value as a medicine or remedial agent, the only use of which is generally considered and accepted as a proper one in this country."

So, the constitutional power to make possession of opium without a license there-purposes, physicians and druggists may testify that, in their opinion, such sale is not for a legitimate purpose.

Same — interpretation of statute.

4. When it is shown by evidence that words used in a penal statute are susceptible of two meanings, depending on the state of facts to which they are alleged to be applicable, the court may instruct the jury in the words of the statute, and leave to it the determination of the question whether or not the statute has been violated.

Constitutional law — discrimination — wholesale and retail dealers.

5. No unconstitutional discrimination against retail druggists is made by a statute requiring them, when selling poisons without a physician's prescription, to satisfy themselves that they are to be used for a legitimate purpose, although the same requirement is not imposed upon wholesalers.

Same — due process of law — purpose of purchase.

6. A druggist is not deprived of his liberty or property without due process of law by a statute requiring him, when selling poisons at retail, without a physician's prescription, to satisfy himself that they are to be used for a legitimate purpose.

(October 6, 1910.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Criminal Division of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County, convicting him of selling opium in violation of law. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

for, or without having obtained it on prescription of a physician or pharmacist, for medical purposes, a criminal offense, is upheld in Ex parte Mon Luck, 29 Or. 421, 32 L.R.A. 738, 54 Am. St. Rep. 804, 44 Pac. 693.

Nor is such an act invalid on the ground of unreasonableness because it in terms prohibits merely the sale, and not the giving away, of poisons. Re Hallawell, supra.

The prohibition by the body of the act, of the sale of opium except upon a physician's certificate, is sufficiently covered by the title, "An Act to Regulate the Sale of Poisons in the State of California, and Providing a Penalty for the Violation Thereof." Ibid.

And such a provision is sufficiently comprehended by the title, "An Act to Regulate the Sale of Opium, and Suppress Opium Dens." Ex parte Yung Jon, supra.

Construction—what are "poisons."

The definition of "poisons" by § 2 of the English pharmacy act as the several articles named in a certain schedule, which includes, inter alia, opium and all preparations of opium, is not confined to poisons in their simple state, or the preparations of such poisons, but includes preparations containing a scheduled poison as one of their ingredients; and accordingly "ehlorodyne," a medicine containing 1 grain of morphine to the half-ounce bottle, is a poison within the meaning of the act, and therefore within the prohibition against keeping open shop for the retailing of poisons by unlicensed persons. Pharmaceutical Soc. v. Piper [1893] 1 Q. B. 686.

To the same effect is Pharmaceutical Soc. v. Arnson [1894] 2 Q. B. 720, where the preparation involved was an article called, "Powell's Balsam of Aniseed," which contained, among other ingredients, only one tenth of a grain of morphine to the ounce bottle.

But in Pharmaceutical Soc. v. Delve [1894] 1 Q. B. 71, it was held that the sale of a compound containing only a minute quantity of poison was not a violation of the pharmacy act, the preparation in question being "licoricine," as to which the analyst, called as a witness, said: "It was not a trace; it was more; I was not instructed to take quantity; it might be that the quantity is one fiftieth of a grain per ounce."

And in Wise v. Morgan, 101 Tenn. 273, 44 L.R.A. 548, 48 S. W. 971, it was held that a statute requiring druggists to label all poisonous substances as "poison" does not apply to medicines compounded by druggists upon the prescription of physicians, though they contain poisons.

In Brown v. Leggett [1906] 1 K. B. 330, under an act prohibiting the sale to unknown persons of any poisons included in the first part of schedule A, or added thereto under a section providing that any article declared by the Pharmaceutical Society to be a poison shall be deemed such, it was held that a vermin killer labeled "poison," and containing 1 per cent of "veratrine," a poisonous alkaloid within part 1, was in effect taken out of that part, and placed in part 2, by a resolution of the society, declaring that every compound containing poison, sold for the destruction of vermin, ought to be deemed a poison, but at the same time declaring that certain other articles ought to be deemed poisons in the first part of schedule A.

—patent medicines.

The exception in § 16 of the English pharmacy act, in favor of patent medicines, was held, in Pharmaceutical Soc. v. Piper, supra, to extend only to medicines which were the subject of letters patent, and not to proprietary medicines.

But the sale of patent or proprietary medicines by anyone has been held not within the prohibition of the Kentucky pharmacy act, prohibiting the sale of poisons by one not a registered pharmacist, and requiring an owner of a drug store, not a registered pharmacist, to keep a registered pharmacist in charge, but permitting such owner to himself sell patent and proprietary medicines, and providing that the act shall not interfere with the sale of such medicines by country stores. Kentucky Bd.

Mr. Alfred C. Krieger, for appellant:

The statute is indefinite, uncertain, and ambiguous, in that no complete offense or crime is defined or fixed by its terms, and no crime or offense is or can be charged in the information, which purports to be based upon the statute.

Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. p. 964; Todd v. United States, 158 U. S. 282, 39 L. ed. 982, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 889; United States v. Sheldon, 2 Wheat. 119, 4 L. ed. 109; Ex parte McNulty, 77 Cal. 164, 11 Am. St. Rep. 257, 19 Pac. 237; State v. Woodruff, 68 N. J. L. 89, 52 Atl. 294; State v. Walsh, 43 Minn. 444, 45 N. W. 721; State v. Krueger, 134 Mo. 262, 35 S. W. 604; United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 176 Fed. 942; Renfroe v. Colquitt, 74 Ga.

619; McMasters v. Burnett, 92 Ky. 358, 17 S. W. 1021; Com. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 112 Ky. 787, 66 S. W. 753; Jacob v. Clark, 115 Ky. 250, 72 S. W. 1095; Com. v. Trent, 117 Ky. 44, 77 S. W. 390, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 209.

The statute is discriminatory and lacks uniformity in that it excludes manufacturing chemists and druggists selling by wholesale from its provisions.

Com. v. Payne Medicine Co. 138 Ky. 164, 127 S. W. 760; Standard Oil Co. v. Com. 119 Ky. 1, 82 S. W. 970, 83 S. W. 557; Com. v. Fowler, 96 Ky. 167, 33 L.R.A. 839, 28 S. W. 786.

The effect of the statute is and will be to deprive the defendant of his liberty and property without due process of law.

of Pharmacy v. Cassidy, 115 Ky. 690, 74 S. W. 730.

Where, however, a statute regulating the sale of drugs and medicines excepted from its provisions patent or proprietary medicines, but an amendatory act prohibited the sale or giving away of cocaine or any salts or compounds thereof, it is no defense to a prosecution for violation of the latter act that the compound of cocaine sold was a patent or proprietary preparation. People v. Zito, 237 Ill. 434, 86 N. E. 1041.

—who are "sellers."

The owner of a department store, not a duly qualified and registered chemist, who opens a drug department, from which poisons are sold in his name, "keeps an open shop for retailing, dispensing, and compounding poisons," in violation of the English pharmacy act, though such department is under the sole control of a duly qualified and registered chemist. R. ex rel. Warner v. Simpson, 27 Ont. Rep. 603.

But one who merely acts as agent to receive at his shop orders for a preparation containing a poison, the orders to be transmitted to the manufacturer, and the preparation to be sent by the latter to the purchaser direct, is not a "seller" within the meaning of the act, although he receives the price on account of the manufacturer, giving a receipt on a bill headed with the manufacturer's name. Pharmaceutical Soc. v. White [1901] 1 K. B. 601.

A sale of cocaine without a prescription, as required by statute, by a clerk employed by the proprietors of a drug store, and who was authorized generally to sell anything in the store, constitutes a sale by the proprietors themselves, although they did not in express words authorize the clerk to sell cocaine. Zito v. People, 140 Ill. App. 611, affirmed in 237 Ill. 434, 86 N. E. 1041.

A druggist does not "sell and deliver" a poison without a label, in violation of the law, when he is induced to deliver to a person a package containing a poison, by representations of such person that it is his, and without knowing its character. Hackett v. Pratt, 52 Ill. App. 346.

And a conviction of a statutory offense of having in possession cocaine "with intent to sell, give away, or otherwise dispense the same," cannot be sustained in Virginia when it appears that the cocaine was never ordered to be sent to that state, and only came into her borders as the result of a mistake made by the consignors; that the defendant positively refused to receive the same, and never for a moment had any such possession of it as would have enabled him to do any one of the acts forbidden by the statute; and that he had no intention of selling, giving away, or otherwise dispensing the cocaine in that state. Taylor v. Com. 109 Va. 825, 63 S. E. 1079.

—allegations and proofs.

In a prosecution for the unlawful sale of cocaine, it is not necessary to allege the name of the person to whom the sale was made, or that the name is unknown. People v. Zito, 237 Ill. 434, 86 N. E. 1041.

In Holmes v. State, 7 Ga. App. 570, 67 S. E. 693, it is held that on a prosecution for unlawfully selling or furnishing cocaine, "the state may prove as many separate sales as it can, provided such sale or furnishing occurred within two years before the filing of the accusation."

Under a statute prohibiting the sale or giving away of certain drugs, except on prescription, and requiring that "physicians or pharmacists who prescribe opium, or any of the drugs above named, shall keep a record," etc., it is no defense to the prosecution of a regularly qualified and practicing physician for unlawfully giving away and selling morphine without a prescription, that he orally prescribed the drug in question to his patient in his regular practice at the time of the sale, unless he further proves that he made and kept the record required by the statute. State v. Jones, 18 Or. 256, 22 Pac. 840.

Effect.

Where a pharmacist has been convicted

McGehee, Due Process of Law, p. 311; Harding v. People, 160 Ill. 459, 32 L.R.A. 445, 52 Am. St. Rep. 344, 43 N. E. 624; Frorer v. People, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L.R.A. 492, 31 N. E. 395; Millett v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 57 Am. Rep. 869, 7 N. E. 631; Ramsey v. People, 142 Ill. 380, 17 L.R.A. 853, 32 N. E. 364; State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L.R.A. 621, 25 Am. St. Rep. 863, 10 S. E. 285; Kentucky Bd. of Pharmacy v. Cassidy, 115 Ky. 690, 74 S. W. 730; Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L. ed. 257.

Mr. Edward Bloomfield, with Messrs. James Breathitt, Attorney General, Tom B. McGregor, and Loraine Mix, for appellee:

The court has judicial knowledge that opium is per se a poison and dangerous habit-forming drug.

Ex parte Mon Luck, 29 Or. 421, 32 L.R.A. 738, 54 Am. St. Rep. 804, 44 Pac. 693.

The Kentucky pharmacy act is constitutional.

Wilson v. Com. 119 Ky. 769, 82 S. W. 427; Kentucky Bd. of Pharmacy v. Cassidy, 115 Ky. 690, 74 S. W. 730; Com. v. Ward, 136 Ky. 146, 123 S. W. 673; Com. v. Payne Medicine Co. 138 Ky. 164, 127 S. W. 761.

The statute is neither discriminatory nor does it lack uniformity because it excludes manufacturing chemists and druggists selling by wholesale from its provisions.

Com. v. Payne Medicine Co. supra; State v. Forcier, 65 N. H. 42, 17 Atl. 577; Standard Oil Co. v. Com. 119 Ky. 1, 82 S. W. 970, 83 S. W. 557; Com. v. Fowler, 96 Ky. 167, 33 L.R.A. 839, 28 S. W. 786; Stickrod v. Com. 86 Ky. 293, 5 S. W. 580; Com. ex rel. Barth, v. McCann, 123 Ky. 247, 94 S. W. 645; Hagar v. Com. 128 Ky. 1, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 195, 129 Am. St. Rep. 238, 107 S. W. 254; Com. v. Ward, supra.

The statute does not deprive or attempt to deprive defendant of his liberty or property without due process of law, in violation of the 14th Amendment.

Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Austin v. Tennessee, 179 U. S. 343, 45 L. ed. 224, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132; Sanders v. Com. 117 Ky. 1, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 932, 111 Am. St. Rep. 219, 77 S. W. 358.

Carroll, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The information filed by the commonwealth against the appellant, who is a druggist, charged that he unlawfully sold at retail, not on a physician's prescription, to Will Frazier, a certain quantity of poison, under a statute prohibiting the sale of cocaine except upon prescription, and providing that the license of a pharmacist convicted of the unlawful sale of cocaine shall be revoked, the board of pharmacy is not authorized to renew a license which has been thus revoked, and a mandamus will not lie to compel them to do so. Thomas v. Board of Pharmacy, 152 N. C. 373, 67 S. E. 925.

—violations as civil negligence.

In Burk v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co. 126 Iowa, 730, 106 Am. St. Rep. 377, 102 N. W. 793, it was held that it was negligence per se to fail to comply with the statute making it a misdemeanor to deliver or sell to another any poisonous liquor or substance without having the receptacles labeled "poison." The court said: "Violation of such statutes is universally held to be negligence."

So, in Sutton v. Wood, 120 Ky. 23, 85 S. W. 201, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 844, under the statute involved and quoted from in KATZMAN v. COM., it was held that a druggist's failure to observe the statutory precautions in selling poison is per se a neglect of duty from which, when special damage flows, there exists prima facie a case of actionable negligence. The court said: "As the legislation was to enhance the public's protection, the duties imposed on the druggists were intended as statutory tests of care, in so far as the statutes went. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Their nonobservance is per se neglect of duty, as well as neglect of care."

In Davis v. Guarnieri, 45 Ohio St. 470, 4 Am. St. Rep. 548, 15 N. E. 350, where it was alleged that defendant carelessly sold and delivered to plaintiff a deadly poison instead of the harmless medicine he called for, it was held that the omission to label the drug sold "poison," as required by statute, was evidence of negligence in the sale and delivery thereof. The court said: "Such omission was certainly none the less a negligent act because it is denounced as a crime by the statute." And it was further held proper for the trial court, in such a case, to call the jury's attention to such statute.

And in Campbell v. Brown, 81 Kan. 480, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1142, 106 Pac. 37, an action for damages for alleged negligence of the defendant in selling and delivering wood alcohol, instead of grain alcohol, the article called for, and in failing to label the bottle to indicate its poisonous contents, it was said, incidentally to the holding of the case, that the neglect of the statutory requirement that a druggist, in selling a poisonous substance, must properly label the bottle containing it, was within the issues presented, and that "the statute does not except from its operations sales of poisons to be used externally, whether upon animal or man."

For other cases as to the right of private party to maintain action for violation of statute regulating sales of poisons,—see note in 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 382. A. C. W.

to wit, opium, without satisfying himself that such poison was to be used for legitimate purposes, and with the knowledge that it was intended for smoking purposes or for habitual use. It was returned under § 2630 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's Stat. § 5057), reading in part: "No person shall sell at retail any poisons except as herein provided, without affixing to the bottle, box, vessel, or package containing same, a label printed or plainly written, containing the name of the article, the word 'poison,' and the name and place of the business of the seller, with the common name of two or more readily accessible antidotes; nor shall he deliver poison to any person without satisfying himself that such poison is to be used for legitimate purposes. A poison, in the meaning of this act, shall be any drug, chemical, or preparation which, according to standard works on medicine or materia medica, is liable to be destructive to adult human life, in quantities of 60 grains or less. It shall be the further duty of anyone selling or dispensing poisons which are known to be destructive to adult human life in quantities of 5 grains or less, before delivering them, to enter in a book kept for that purpose the name of the seller, the name and residence of the buyer, the name of the article, the quantity sold or disposed of, and the purpose for which it is said to be intended. . . . The provisions of this section shall not apply to the dispensing of poisons in not unusual quantities or doses, on physicians' prescriptions, nor to the sale to agriculturists or horticulturists of such articles as are commonly used by them as insecticides. . . ."

It is agreed that the appellant is a retail druggist; that he sold the opium charged in the information to the purchaser for the purpose of allowing the purchaser to smoke the same; that he knew before making the sale that the purchaser was addicted to the use of opium; that it was not sold on a physician's prescription; that it is a poison, destructive to adult human life in quantities of 5 grains or less. It is further agreed that there was affixed to the bottle or package containing the opium a printed label, giving the name of the article, the word "poison," and the name and place of the seller, with the common name of two readily accessible antidotes, and that, before delivering the poison, appellant entered in a book kept for that purpose, as required by the statute, the name of the seller, the name and residence of the buyer, the name of the article, the quantity sold, and the purpose for which it was said to be intended. It will thus be observed that the offending charged against the appellant consisted in selling the drug by retail without a prescription, to a person addicted to the use of it; and this being so, the sale was not made for a legitimate purpose. The law and facts were submitted to the court without the intervention of a jury, and the appellant was found guilty of violating the statute.

A reversal is asked upon the ground that the statute is invalid upon the ground of uncertainty, because it does not define with sufficient precision the words "retail" and "legitimate purposes," and because it makes an arbitrary and unreasonable discrimination in excluding from its provisions manufacturing chemists and druggists selling by wholesale, and has the effect of depriving the appellant of his liberty and property without due process of law. That it is competent for the legislature to impose reasonable restrictions upon the sale of drugs and poisons there is no room to doubt. It has been so often held that laws controlling and regulating the sale of these articles come within the police power of the state that we do not deem it necessary to do more than cite the case of the Kentucky Bd. of Pharmacy v. Cassidy, 115 Ky. 690, 74 S. W. 730, and call attention to the numerous authorities therein cited. Indeed, counsel for the appellant does not attack the statute upon the ground that it was not within the power of the legislature to enact a law regulating the sale of opium or other drugs or poisons, but upon the theory that this power was not properly exercised. If this statute is so uncertain and indefinite in describing what will constitute the offense denounced by the statute that persons of ordinary understanding cannot comprehend its meaning or determine when they have violated its provisions, then it is open to the objection urged against it. The law is well settled that a penal statute creating an offense must be sufficiently plain and exact to enable persons of ordinary intelligence to understand its provisions. As said by Justice Brewer in Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dey (C. C.) 1 L.R.A. 744, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 325, 35 Fed. 866: "No penal law can be sustained unless its mandates are so clearly expressed that any ordinary person can determine in advance what he may and what he may not do under it." And this principle, which was fully approved by this court in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com. 99 Ky. 132, 33 L.R.A. 209, 59 Am. St. Rep. 457, 35 S. W. 129, we have no disposition to modify or depart from.

In the argument in support of the objection mentioned, it is said that the legislature should have defined the meaning of the words "retail" and "legitimate purposes," so that a druggist might know what quantity would constitute a sale by retail and what would or would not be considered a sale for legitimate purposes; and so that there could not be two opinions as to what these words mean when different courts or juries came to pass upon questions involving a violation of the statute. It may be admitted that, although the meaning of the words "retail" and "legitimate purposes," as used in the statute, are reasonably well understood, it is nevertheless possible that there might be difference of opinion as to whether in a given state of case the sale of a drug was by retail or for a legitimate purpose, and it is possible that, in administering this statute, it may occasionally happen that a druggist will be accused who claims not to know what constitutes a sale by retail or what is a legitimate use of opium; and it is also possible that different trial courts and juries may not always be harmonious in the conclusions reached upon this point. But the fact that there may be occasional doubt or want of agreement on this question cannot be allowed to invalidate the statute. If this rule obtained, many penal statutes that have stood unquestioned for years and have been often enforced would be held invalid. There are numerous statutes in existence, creating and describing offenses, the enforcement of which often brings into prominent notice a question concerning the meaning of words in the law about which different persons might reach a different conclusion. In the trial of many criminal cases there are, of necessity, submitted to the jury issues involving the meaning of certain words upon which depends the guilt or innocence of the accused; and with the court or jury, as the case may be, is left the decision whether or not the law under which the prosecution is pending has been violated. It would, of course, be extremely desirable if every penal statute could be made so plain as not to leave any doubt as to its meaning, and so intelligible as that every person could by reading it at once decide what he might with safety do under it. But this ideal condition is not attainable. It would not be at all practicable to define in every statute the meaning of controlling words in it that there may be difference of opinion concerning, when it is attempted to apply them to a given state of facts. To do this would extend to unreasonable length almost every statute that creates and describes an offense, and would also complicate and confuse the administration of the criminal law, as the definitions would often be as uncertain as the thing defined. Every penal statute should be given a reasonable construction,—one that will effectuate the legislative intent in its enactment,—and, if it describes the offense in language that can be understood by persons of ordinary intelligence, it will not be declared invalid on the ground of uncertainty. The established rules of construction do not require that the sufficiency of penal statutes should be measured by a technical standard that would impair their efficiency and make their enforcement difficult, if not impossible. A little common sense, as well as legal learning, must be used in the practical administration of the law; and it is not essential that a statute shall be so elaborate in its detail as to attempt to meet every possible state of fact that may arise under it. As said in Com. v. Trent, 117 Ky. 34, 77 S. W. 390: "Penal enactments must be construed as other statutes, with the view to carry out the intention of the legislature. . . . The intention of the legislature is to be collected from the words employed; but in construing a statute . . . the court will look to the whole act, and the purpose of its makers in its enactment. The court cannot depart from the plain meaning of the words in a penal act, and adjudge that punishable under the statute which its language does not fairly cover. . . . But, in determining what may be punished under the words of a statute, the court must apply the rule that every statute shall be construed liberally, with a view to carry out the intention of the legislature and promote its objects, taking all ordinary words and phrases according to the common and approved use of language." The purpose of the statute, in so far as it refers to opium and kindred drugs, was to prevent, without a physician's prescription, their sale in small quantities to persons who intended to use them, not for medical or legitimate purposes, but to satisfy a depraved habit; and its purpose ought not to be weakened by an interpretation that would impair, if not destroy, its usefulness.

The word "retail" is defined by Webster to be "the sale of commodities in small quantities or parcels." This is the definition given by Bouvier in his law dictionary, and the one recognized as correct by law writers generally. 24 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1684; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 876. There are few persons of ordinary intelligence who do not understand the meaning of the word "retail," or who would not be able to decide with reasonable certainty whether the sale of a given article or commodity was a sale by retail or wholesale. In the common everyday affairs of life, people are constantly buying and selling things by wholesale and retail, and it would be absurd to say that a person who had intelligence enough to conduct a drug store did not know when he was selling a drug by retail, or did not know that the purchase of a small quantity of opium was a retail transaction; and there ought not to be any difficulty in the mind of a druggist in understanding the meaning of the words "legitimate purpose," as used in the statute. It is provided that the druggist who sells by retail, without a prescription, the poisons mentioned, must first satisfy himself that it is for a legitimate purpose; and it is to be presumed that the druggist knows the legitimate purposes for which these poisons may be used; but, if he does not know, or has doubt about it, then he must in good faith exercise reasonable care to find out the purpose for which the drug or poison is bought. The statute does not impose any harsh or unreasonable duty on druggists, because, if the person desiring to purchase has not a prescription, the druggist can save himself from violating its provisions by in good faith exercising reasonable care to satisfy himself that it is intended for a legitimate purpose. But if he makes a sale by retail in the absence of a prescription, without first in good faith exercising reasonable care to satisfy himself that the purchaser intends to use the drug for a legitimate purpose, and it appears in the prosecution against him that the purchase was not made for a legitimate purpose, he subjects himself to the penalty denounced by the statute. In other words, whenever a druggist sells by retail the poisons mentioned, without being protected by the prescription of a physician, he takes the risk of violating the law, unless, before making the sale, he in good faith uses reasonable care to satisfy himself that it is intended for legitimate purposes. And whether or not this degree of care is used is a question of fact, to be determined, if put in issue, from the evidence.

On the trial of this case, a number of physicians were introduced for the commonwealth, for the purpose of showing that the sale of opium for smoking purposes, or to an habitual user of the drug, was not a sale for legitimate purposes. These physicians graphically described the ruinous effects of opium, physically, mentally, and morally, when used habitually in any manner, and declared in emphatic terms the habit to be the most degrading and destructive that any person can acquire. Their testimony was objected to, but we think that, in a prosecution under the statute, if the accused should make the defense that the sale of opium to a person for smoking purposes, or who was an habitual user of the drug, was legitimate, it would be competent to introduce as witnesses upon this point physicians or druggists to give an opinion whether or not the sale, under the described circumstances and conditions, was for a 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) legitimate purpose. The statute was intended to regulate sales by druggists, and, when it is sought to apply the words "legitimate purposes" to a sale of drugs or poisons by druggists, they have a technical meaning that may not be clearly known or understood by courts or jurors, and so it is permissible to allow experts to give evidence as to what is regarded by qualified druggists and physicians legitimate purposes for which sales may be made, so that the trial court and jury may be informed as to what is recognized as a legitimate purpose for which these drugs may be sold by those intrusted with their sale, and to whom, in a measure, is confined the knowledge as to what constitutes a sale for legitimate purposes. When words are used in a penal statute that have both a popular and a trade or technical meaning, and, as used in the statute, they have reference to a trade or profession, these words, in construing the statute, should be given their meaning as understood by the trade or profession to which they apply. 2 Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. §§ 389-396. This is the rule given for the construction of statutes in § 460 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's Stat. § 4174), providing in part that "all words and phrases shall be construed and understood according to the common and approved usage of language; but technical words and phrases, and such others as may have acquired a peculiar and appropriate meaning in the law, shall be construed and understood according to such meaning."

The question is further suggested that the construction of words and phrases in a statute is usually for the court. Generally this is true. But, if it is shown by evidence that words and phrases are susceptible of two meanings, depending on the state of facts it is attempted to apply them to, the court may instruct the jury in the words of the statute, and leave them to find from the evidence whether it has been violated. To illustrate, if there should be difference of opinion on the part of witnesses as to whether or not the sale being inquired into was made for a legitimate purpose, the court should leave it to the jury to find the fact and make their verdict accordingly.

In reference to the criticism that the statute makes an arbitrary and unreasonable discrimination against retail dealers in drugs, and in favor of wholesalers, it is sufficient to say that it was the evil of selling by retail that the legislature intended to prohibit. If a wholesaler should sell by retail in violation of the statute, he would, of course, be liable to the same extent as would the retail dealer. But there is a reasonable and well-defined distinction between the sale of goods by wholesale and by retail, and it was entirely competent for the legislature, in the exercise of the police power, and to accomplish the purpose intended, to make it a penalty to sell the prohibited article by retail without mentioning its sale in wholesale quantities. The legislature did not deem it necessary, in an effort to correct the evil following the illegitimate use of opium and other drugs, to extend the law so as to embrace wholesale dealers. It is a well-known fact that persons who purchase opium for illegitimate purposes, as a rule, obtain it in small quantities; and to place restrictions around its sale in the quantities in which it is usually obtained was the motive in the mind of the legislature. It was dealing with a condition that existed. This legislation was not intended to reach or touch all persons or conditions, but only those that the lawmakers, in the exercise of their wisdom and discretion, deemed it necessary to regulate for the safety and protection of the unfortunate class who have acquired the drug habit. If hereafter it becomes necessary to do so, the legislature may place such restrictions as are reasonably necessary around the sale of this or other drugs by wholesale; but the failure to do so in the act we are considering does not leave it open to the objection that it is discriminatory, arbitrary, or unreasonable.

The classification made by the statute is a reasonable and natural one, and all persons within its scope are treated exactly alike. An offense is created and defined in appropriate words, capable of being understood and applied with reasonable certainty; and, viewed from any standpoint, the penalty imposed upon the appellant did not deprive him of his liberty or property without due process of law. The statute does not violate either the state or Federal Constitution, and, as under the evidence and agreed facts there can be no question as to appellant's guilt, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

INHABITANTS OF MILFORD

v.

BANGOR RAILWAY & ELECTRIC COMPANY.

(106 Me. 316, 76 Atl. 696.)

Water company — contract to furnish supply — construction.

1. A provision in a contract by a water company to furnish service as efficient as that furnished to another city is modified 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

by the act of the municipality in installing smaller mains which make the rendering of the service of equal efficiency impossible, and the company's duty is to use reasonable care to furnish a service as nearly efficient as that of the other municipality, as the difference in size of mains will permit.

Same — liability for fire loss.

2. A water company which, in consideration of the payment of a hydrant rental, undertakes to furnish water to a municipality, is not liable for loss of municipal property through its failure to maintain a sufficient pressure to extinguish fires, where its contract does not require it to furnish any particular water pressure, or place it under any obligation with respect to the extinguishment of fires.

(December 20, 1909.)

Note. — Liability of water company for destruction of property of municipality by fire in consequence of failure to maintain sufficient pressure.

While there are many decisions as to the liability of water companies to individuals for losses sustained by fire owing to the inadequacy of the water supply, the liability of such companies for losses sustained by municipalities from that source has been touched upon in but few cases.

The liability in such cases must depend largely upon the nature of the contract entered into between the municipality and the company undertaking to furnish a water supply.

Where the undertaking on the part of the water company is merely to establish a plant and supply water, without any stipulation to afford protection from fire, it would seem that such companies should not be held liable for losses sustained by municipalities through the destruction of their property by fire.

In Farnham on Waters, p. 848, the author, in dealing with the liability of water companies to citizens whose property has been destroyed by fire because of the failure of the water companies to fulfil their contracts, says: "The nonliability of the water company depends not on the inability of the taxpayer to maintain the action, but on the failure of the water company's contract to cover the liability sued for. As said in Wainwright v. Queens County Water Co. 78 Hun, 146, 28 N. Y. Supp. 987, the company does not agree to extinguish fires. Its agreement is to furnish water. In most cases it would be impossible to say that failure to furnish water was the cause of the loss. Fires occur constantly in which not only buildings and their contents, but whole sections of cities, are consumed, although all the water that can be used is at hand and turned upon the flames. With all the uncertainty which exists as to what is the particular cause responsible for a fire loss, a water company cannot be held liable for the loss, unless it is held

MOTION by defendant for a new trial after verdict for plaintiffs on a trial before the Supreme Judicial Court for Penobscot County of an action brought to recover damages for the loss of certain property by fire alleged to have been the result of defendant's negligent failure to maintain a certain water pressure. Sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. C. Ryder, for defendant:

An action cannot be maintained against a water company for loss of property by fire, unless it has failed to do certain specific things by way of protection which it agreed to assume the responsibility of an insurer. Mere breach of a contract to furnish water for the extinguishment of a fire cannot be said to be the cause of the loss, because such cause may have been the negligence of the owner, the criminal act of a stranger, the atmospheric conditions, or any one of numerous other things which might be mentioned. Unless the loss can be said to be the result of the breach of the water company's contract (which could never be said, because the influence of other unknown quantities could not be determined), it is not liable for the loss caused by the fire. Keeping in mind the fact that the contract of the water company is to furnish water, and not to extinguish the fire, the rule with respect to damages precludes holding the company liable. Damages must be such as were within the contemplation of the parties; and it certainly cannot be claimed that, for the meager remuneration received, a water company undertakes to make good the loss which would result from the destruction of a modern city by fire. And the principle applies equally to the destruction of any part of it. For there is no place to draw a line short of absolute nonliability, if liability for loss of the entire city is denied. The great weight of authority agrees with this conclusion although the decisions are not placed on this ground."

It is always open to the parties to expressly enter into contracts whereby water companies may be held liable for damage resulting to municipal property by fire because of the failure of the water company to furnish a sufficient supply of water, and where such a contract exists, and it is clear that the lack of water caused the loss, there can be no doubt of the municipality's right to recover.

This was recognized upon the first appeal in MILFORD v. BANGOR R. & ELECTRIC Co. ante, 526, where a demurrer was overruled to a declaration alleging that the water company had expressly engaged to furnish water of sufficient pressure and volume to extinguish fires, "and especially and particularly fires originating in, or communicated to, the plaintiffs' said building and property."

The case of Ukiah City v. Ukiah Water & Improv. Co. relied upon by the court upon the last appeal in MILFORD v. BANGOR 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to do, or unless there has been a breach of an express covenant in the contract to do so.

Farnham, Waters, pp. 848, 849; Wainwright v. Queen's County Water Co. 78 Hun, 149, 28 N. Y. Supp. 987; Foster v. Lookout Water Co. 3 Lea, 46; Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 502.

In making a contract with a water company for the protection of property against fire, the town acts for the general public good, and not for the purpose of protecting any particular property.

R. & ELECTRIC Co. and sufficiently set out in the foregoing opinion was distinguished on the ground that the Ukiah Case contained no express contract respecting the quantity of water to be furnished, or the manner or means of furnishing it.

And in Galena v. Galena Water Co. 132 Ill. App. 332, where an action on the case was brought against a water company by the city and board of school directors to recover damages for the loss of a public school building which was destroyed by fire owing to insufficient pressure of water, and the contract between the city and the water company provided that a standpipe should be erected at a sufficient elevation to give reliable pressure for the use of the water in extinguishing fires in buildings on hills, the court said: "If, as alleged in the declaration, the water company failed to perform these provisions of the contract, and if that failure caused a loss by fire to property owned by the city, we see no good reason why the water company should not be responsible to the city, one of the parties to the contract, for the proximate results of such breach of contract." The declaration did not allege any connection between the city and the school board, and no basis for a recovery by such board was shown by the declaration, and a demurrer was sustained because of a misjoinder of parties, and this ruling was affirmed in 229 Ill. 128, 82 N. E. 421.

In Houck v. Cape Girardeau Waterworks & Electric Light Co. (Mo. App.) 114 S. W. 1099, which was an action by a property owner, it was held under an ordinance granting the right to furnish water to a city and its inhabitants at a pressure adequate for fire protection without the use of fire engines, that the palpable meaning was that sufficient pressure should be maintained to afford reasonable protection to all buildings, whether owned by the city itself or its inhabitants.

The question of the right of a property owner to maintain an action against a water company for failure to supply sufficient water for fire purposes, as required by its contract with the municipality, is covered in the note to Howsmon v. Trenton Water Co. 23 L.R.A. 146, and the supplemental note to Hone v. Presque Isle Water Co. 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1021. J. T. W.

Ukiah City v. Ukiah Water & Improv. Co. 142 Cal. 176; 64 L.R.A. 231, 100 Am. St. Rep. 107, 75 Pac. 773.

No action either ex contractu or ex delicto can be maintained by these plaintiffs to recover the value of the municipal property destroyed. The action cannot be maintained by giving it the form of an action ex delicto.

Farnham, Waters, pp. 849, 850; Fowler v. Athens City Waterworks Co. 83 Ga. 219, 20 Am. St. Rep. 313, 9 S. E. 673; House v. Houston Waterworks Co. 88 Tex. 233, 28 L.R.A. 532, 31 S. W. 179.

Messrs. Louis C. Stearns, Louis C. Stearns, Jr., and Taber D. Bailey for plaintiffs.

Whitehouse, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on the case brought by the inhabitants of the town of Milford against the defendant corporation to recover the value of the town hall and certain sidewalks and hose, which were the property of the municipality and were destroyed by fire in April, 1905. It is alleged that this loss was caused by the negligence of the defendant in failing to perform its contract to supply through its pipes water of sufficient current, pressure, and volume to extinguish fires within the range of its hydrants.

A general demurrer to the declaration was filed by the defendant; and it was stipulated by the parties that the cause should be heard by the law court on the amended declaration, demurrer, and joinder; that if the demurrer was overruled the defendant should have the right to plead anew, and if sustained the plaintiff should be nonsuited.

The count in the declaration especially relied upon by the plaintiffs was the "amended count," which is as follows:

"In a plea of the case, for that on the 28th day of April, A. D. 1905, the said inhabitants of Milford were the owners of a certain public building called a 'town hall,' of the value of $5,000, and certain planks and timbers constituting a sidewalk of the value of $250, and certain fire hose of the value of $250; and the plaintiffs aver that on the said 28th day of April, 1905, the defendant had engaged and was bound and obliged to furnish through its mains, conduits, pipes, and hydrants, the same being laid and placed in the streets of said plaintiffs' town, water of sufficient current, pressure, and volume to extinguish fire within range of said hydrants, and especially and particularly fires originating in or communicated to plaintiffs' said building or property, in consideration of the sum of $800 per annum paid to it by said plaintiffs—now the plaintiffs say that on said 28th day of April a fire started in a board pile at a considerable distance, to wit, a quarter of a mile, from the plaintiffs' said buildings and property, which said fire might easily have been extinguished and put out had there been any pressure and volume of water in said mains and hydrants, but, the defendant, unmindful of the duty and obligations in this behalf, wrongfully, carelessly, and negligently suffered and allowed said mains, pipes, and hydrants to be destitute of any current of water of sufficient pressure, force, and volume to be of any value or utility in extinguishing said fire or any fire, so that the plaintiffs were unable by the use of the greatest diligence and the strongest efforts to quench the fire in said pile of boards, although they were in the use of due care in this behalf. And the plaintiffs aver that said fire in said board pile was communicated to the said buildings and property of plaintiffs by sparks, firebrands, or cinders, so that the same were utterly burned and consumed, although hydrants were at hand and in close proximity to said buildings and property, and competent and capable men were at hand with suitable hose and appliances ready to extinguish the fires started by said cinders and firebrands upon plaintiffs' said building and property, and were prevented from doing so solely by the lack and want of water in said hydrants, which it was the duty and obligation of said defendant to furnish. And the plaintiffs aver that the sole cause of the said loss and damage was the wrongful neglect of duty of said defendant, to the damage of said plaintiffs (as they say) the sum of $6,000."
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It has been seen that the declaration, as amended in the new count relied upon, alleged that "the defendant had engaged and was bound and obliged to furnish through its mains, conduits, pipes, and hydrants, the same being laid and placed in the streets of said plaintiff town, water of sufficient pressure and volume to extinguish fires within the range of said hydrants, and especially and particularly fires originating in or communicated to plaintiffs' said building and property." Upon the strength of these allegations, admitted by the demurrer to be true, the sufficiency of the declaration was determined, and the demurrer overruled. The opinion of the court is reported in Milford v. Bangor R. & Electric Co. 104 Me. 233, 71 Atl. 759. To the doctrine of that opinion founded upon the definite and specific allegations of the plaintiffs' amended declaration, the court still adheres.

The cause came on for trial before the jury at the January term, 1909, upon the defendant's plea of the general issue, and it was then discovered that the written contract between the parties, introduced in support of the declaration, did not contain the peculiar stipulations above quoted upon which the opinion of the court was based in overruling the demurrer. But the cause was submitted to the jury under instructions, to which no exceptions were taken, and a verdict was returned in favor of the plaintiffs for $4,101. The case now comes to this court upon the defendant's motion to set aside the verdict as against the law and the evidence.

By the terms of the contract introduced in evidence and actually made by the parties, the defendant agrees that it will provide said town with sixteen post hydrants and water for the same; that these hydrants shall be so placed that they will afford proper protection against fire; that each hydrant shall have two nozzles and be supplied by pipes at least 4 inches in diameter; that the "waterworks to be established under the contract shall be supplied by a pump or pumps of a capacity of not less than 1,000,000 gallons per day; that they may be operated by direct pressure or by reservoirs or by standard system; that the main pipe as far as the first branches shall be not less than 6 inches in diameter . . . and shall be equal in all respects and afford as effective service as that furnished to the city of Old Town."

There is no specific averment, either in the original declaration or the amended count, that these special stipulations in the contract were not performed, and the uncontradicted evidence at the trial shows that all of them, with the possible exception of that last named, were unquestionably fully performed by the defendant. With respect to the last stipulation, that the main pipe shall afford as effective service as that furnished to the city of Old Town, it appears that the plaintiffs were advised to have the main pipe 8 inches in diameter, but they were unwilling to incur the additional expense, and, in consideration that the annual rental should be reduced to $800, agreed that the main pipe should be 6 inches in diameter. The presiding justice therefore properly instructed the jury upon this branch of the case as follows:

"The defendant company was only bound to use reasonable care, reasonable diligence to furnish a fire service as near the efficiency of the Old Town service as the 6-inch plant named in the contract would enable them to do; that they were not bound to furnish the same efficiency as the Old Town plant furnished, but only such efficiency as could be reasonably obtained with the plant put in at Milford."

The defendant, accordingly, insists that the contract actually made between the parties was in effect only such as is ordinarily made by a water company to establish a plant and supply water, without any stipulation to do any specific thing or to afford protection to any particular property.

In support of the motion, the defendant earnestly contends that, in making this contract with the water company for the protection of property against fire, the town acted for the general public good; that, in the absence of an express covenant to do a particular thing, the contract does not protect any particular property, but is for the benefit of all and that the town as a property owner derives the same benefit that every other property owner does, and no other or different advantage or protection; that, since there is no express covenant in the contract, the security afforded to the plaintiff's property was only the same security which, in the exercise of its governmental functions, the plaintiff had obtained for the whole town; that the defendant simply agreed to furnish a water system and supply it with water, and did not agree to extinguish fires or to insure property against loss by fire; and that, consequently, in the absence of any special agreement to furnish a certain pressure, or a certain amount of water, or specifically to protect the plaintiffs' property, no action can be maintained to recover for the loss of property by fire. It is confidently claimed that, since the reasoning adopted and the authorities adduced in support of the conclusion reached in the former opinion on the demurrer had reference solely to the averment of the specific stipulations which it was discovered at the trial were not contained in the contract, that opinion is not authority upon the questions raised under the pending motion now before the court.

In Home v. Presque Isle Water Co. 104 Me. 217, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1021, 71 Atl. 769, it was held that where a public service water company makes such a contract with a municipality to furnish a supply of water for general fire purposes, without a specification of any particular thing to be done to that end, and without any stipulation respecting liability for losses by fire, or where the duty of such a water company to furnish water arises solely from an accepted service for general fire purposes, individual owners of property destroyed by fire cannot maintain an action on the case against a water company for a loss resulting from the negligent failure of the company to furnish a sufficient supply of water. In that case the court said in the opinion: "But the proposition advanced by the plaintiffs would require water companies to assume, to some extent, the responsibility of insurers, and it does not satisfactorily appear that such a doctrine would be more in harmony with considerations of public policy, or more consonant with reason and justice, than the established rule. Ample opportunities are already afforded for all property owners to obtain insurance against losses by fire, and the assumption of such risks by water companies, even in a modified degree, would result in double insurance and largely increased water rates. Furthermore, capital would not readily seek investments in enterprises involving a public service exposed to incalculable hazards and constant litigation. In the practical administration of the law the established rule has not been found the cause of extraordinary hardships or the occasion for exceptional complaints."

It is contended in behalf of the defendant that these general observations are equally pertinent in the case at bar. As before intimated, the question now raised upon the defendant's motion has never before been presented to this court, and no case has been cited by the learned counsel which can be deemed a direct authority for the plaintiffs' contention. The only case to which the attention of the court has been called, tending directly to support the defendant's contention, is that of Ukiah City v. Ukiah Water & Improv. Co. 142 Cal. 173, 64 L.R.A. 231, 100 Am. St. Rep. 107, 75 Pac. 773. In that case it was held that "where a municipal corporation enters into a contract with a company to supply water for the extinguishment of fires through hydrants, connected with its mains, such contract being entered into for general purposes and for the benefit of all its inhabitants, no protection to any specified property being contemplated, the relation of the water company is not different as to the property of the municipality from the relation of any of its citizens to such company, and it cannot recover for the loss of its property from the failure of the water company to furnish an adequate supply of water as provided for in such contract."

In the opinion the court, adopting the language of the trial judge, said: "It is true that no written contract covering the time of the fire is shown; but no particular form is prescribed by the statute for such contracts, and the evidence forces the conclusion that, at the time of the fire, the same relations existed between the town and the defendant as to the furnishing of water for general fire purposes, as ordinarily exist between the private consumer and the water company, as to water for domestic purposes. . . .

"No formal written contract seems to be required by our statute to establish this relationship between the municipality and the company. . . .
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"The evidence clearly shows that whatever the relationship between plaintiff and defendant was, so far as the furnishing of water for fire purposes is concerned, it was entered into by the town in the execution of the power conferred upon it to provide protection against fire for the benefit of all the inhabitants, and there is nothing to indicate that the protection of any specific property was contemplated.

"In providing for a water supply for general fire purposes, a municipality exercises the same character of functions that it does when it provides fire engines and other apparatus for the extinguishment of fires, or when it employs policemen or watchmen for the protection of its inhabitants against crime.

"Where, in the exercise of this power, it establishes or acquires its own system of waterworks, and undertakes to itself provide an adequate supply, it is settled beyond controversy that the city is not liable to its citizens whose property is destroyed by fire for failure to provide an adequate supply; the power vested in the city being in its nature legislative and governmental, requiring the exercise of judgment and discretion. . . .

"Where, instead of acquiring its own system and attempting to itself provide the water for such purpose, it contracts with water company to furnish such service, thus making such company practically the agent or employee of the city, the many decisions of the appellate courts of other states are practically unanimous in holding, upon apparently the soundest reasoning, that the water company is not liable at the suit of a third person whose property was destroyed by fire, by reason of its failure to supply sufficient water to the town for such purpose. . . .

"Doubtless a water company may so bind itself by contract with a person to furnish him water for the extinguishment of fires, as to render itself liable for the value of property of such person destroyed by fire, by reason of its failure to furnish him a sufficient supply of water. . . .

"It may be assumed here that it is within the power of a municipality, as a property owner, to enter into such a contract with a water company for the protection of the property which it owns as a legal individual; but it certainly needs something more than evidence showing an accepted service for general fire purposes to establish such a contract, and the evidence here shows nothing more. . . .

"In providing protection against fire to its inhabitants, the municipality exercises a power conferred solely for the general public good, and from the exercise of which the municipality, as a property owner, derives the same incidental benefit that every other property owner does,—no more, no less.

"Yet in each there is a contractual relation.

"The bar to such a recovery in each case is that the contract was not for the protection of any particular property or person, but was for general benefit of all the property and persons within the municipal limits, and was entered into by the town as a public agency, solely for that purpose, and in the exercise of its power to furnish such general protection.

"I cannot escape the conclusion that the relations between plaintiff and defendant, as shown by the evidence, are susceptible of no other construction; that the defendant assumed no obligation regarding plaintiff's property different from that assumed by it regarding all of the other property within the town; and that the plaintiff, as a property owner, is without right of action."

The opinion proceeds to show that Paducah Lumber Co. v. Paducah Water Supply Co. 89 Ky. 340, 7 L.R.A. 77, 25 Am. St. Rep. 536, 12 S. W. 554, 13 S. W. 249, and Gorrell v. Greensboro Water Supply Co. 124 N. C. 328, 46 L.R.A. 513, 70 Am. St. Rep. 598, 32 S. E. 720, in which the opposite conclusion was reached, are to be distinguished from the California case against the Ukiah Water Company by reason of the fact that in the case of the Paducah Lumber Company and in the Gorrell Case there was an express contract to do certain specific things, which appear to have been equivalent to the stipulations alleged in the plaintiffs' declaration in the case at bar. The court then further say: "In each of these cases it will be observed that the court was dealing with contracts whereby the water companies, for valuable concessions and exclusive privileges, had agreed to do and to maintain certain specific things by way of protection from fire, and the gravamen of the charge against each and all of the companies was that they had violated their contract in failing to do the particular things for the doing of which they had expressly contracted. The broad distinction between those cases and the one at bar is, as pointed out in the opinion of the trial judge, that there is no express covenant in the contract between this plaintiff and this defendant, and the security to plaintiff's property was only the same security which in the exercise of its governmental functions, the plaintiff had obtained for the whole town."

In the leading case of Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 353, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 502, so often cited as authority in this country, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the familiar rule was enunciated, that the damages which a party ought to recover as a result of a breach of contract "should be either such as may fairly and substantially be considered as arising naturally, i. e., according to the usual course of things, from such breach of contract itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it. See also Farnham, Waters, 848. It certainly cannot be reasonably claimed that, for the moderate consideration received by a water company under such a contract as the one actually made in the case at bar, it was within the contemplation of both parties that the water company had undertaken to make good the loss which would result from the destruction of the plaintiffs' property by fire.

It is the opinion of the court that the legal effect of the contract in this case cannot be distinguished in any essential particular from that considered in Ukiah City v. Ukiah Water & Improv. Co. supra, and that the verdict of the jury in this case, being against the law, cannot be sustained.

Motion sustained.

Verdict set aside.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

INHABITANTS OF MILFORD

v.

BANGOR RAILWAY & ELECTRIC COMPANY.

(104 Me. 233, 71 Atl. 759.)

Water company — negligence — liability.

1. To avoid liability in tort for loss of municipal property through fire because of its neglect to comply with its contract, a water company which has undertaken to furnish a pressure sufficient to extinguish fires must show that it used ordinary care to comply with the contract according to the exigencies of the situation, having due regard to the nature and importance of the contract, the rights and interests of those to be affected by it, and the manifest consequences of a failure to perform it.

Same — damages.

2. A water company which has contracted with a municipal corporation to furnish sufficient pressure through its hydrants to extinguish fire within reach of them cannot, in case it negligently fails to maintain the necessary pressure, escape liability for the value of municipal property destroyed through such negligence, on the theory that it did not agree to extinguish fire, or to insure property against loss by fire, or that such damages were not in contemplation when the contract was made.

Note.—See note, ante, 526, appended to report of this case on appeal after a trial following the overruling of the demurrer to the declaration.

Same — remedy.

3. A municipal corporation which has contracted with a water company for a supply of water for the extinguishment of fire may sue in tort to recover damages for negligent breach of the contract, which results in the destruction of property of the municipality.

(June 11, 1908.)

REPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court for Penobscot County for the opinion of the full bench after demurrer to the declaration of an action brought to recover damages for the loss of certain property by fire alleged to have been the result of defendant's negligent failure to maintain a certain water pressure. Demurrer overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Taber D. Bailey for plaintiff:

The town can sue for breach of the contract.

Bienville Water Suply Co. v. Mobile, 112 Ala. 260, 33 L.R.A. 59, 57 Am. St. Rep. 28, 20 So. 742.

Mr. Louis C. Stearns also for plaintiff.

Mr. E. C. Ryder for defendant.

Whitehouse, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on the case, brought by the inhabitants of the town of Milford against the defendant corporation, to recover the value of the town hall and certain sidewalks and hose, which were the property of the municipality, and were destroyed by fire in April, 1905. It is alleged that this loss was caused by the negligence of the defendant in failing to perform its contract to supply through its pipes water of sufficient current, pressure, and volume to extinguish fires within the range of its hydrants.

A general demurrer to the declaration was filed by the defendant, and it was stipulated by the parties that the cause should be heard by the law court on the amended declaration, demurrer, and joinder; that if the demurrer was overruled, the defendant should have the right to plead anew, and, if sustained, the plaintiff should be nonsuited.

The two counts especially relied upon by the plaintiffs are the second count in the original declaration and the "amended count." The second count is as follows:

"Also, for that there was on the 23d day of July, A. D. 1891, a corporation called the Penobscot Water & Power Company, organized under the laws of Maine, among other things, for the purpose of supplying towns and communities with water for domestic use and the extinguishment of fires, and said corporation then and there entered into a contract with the plaintiffs, whereby, for the sum of $800 per year, it agreed, among other things, to supply the plaintiff with sixteen post hydrants, and water for the same, before the 1st day of August, 1892. It was also agreed that said hydrants would have two nozzles, and should be supplied with pipes at least 4 inches in diameter, and that said hydrants should be so placed that proper protection against fire should be secured. It was also agreed that the waterworks to be established under the contract should be supplied by a pump or pumps of a capacity of not less than 1,000,000 gallons per day, and the plaintiffs say that said hydrants were erected according to contract, and that they ever paid the sum of $800 per annum to the said Penobscot Water & Power Company; and the plaintiffs say that said Penobscot Water & Power Company assigned said contract, by its deed in writing, with all its property and franchises, to a corporation called Public Works Company, organized under the laws of Maine, and having its principal place of business in Bangor in said county, whereupon the Public Works Company maintained said hydrants and supplied them with water, and the plaintiffs paid them by and after the same rate of $800 per year for the use of the same, until the 7th day of April, 1905. On said 7th day of April, the Public Works Company, by its deed in writing duly executed, assigned and delivered to a corporation called Bangor Railway & Electric Company, the defendant, all its property and franchises, including said contract, whereupon the said Bangor Railway & Electric Company undertook to maintain said mains and hydrants, and assume control thereof, and to supply the same with water, and the plaintiffs say that they paid the said company up to and beyond the 28th day of April, 1905, for the use of said hydrants by and after the rate of $800 per year, in accordance with the terms of their contract with the Penobscot Water & Power Company; and now the plaintiffs say that, by reason of the premises and the matters hereinbefore stated, the defendant was bound and obliged and owed the duty to maintain said hydrants with a supply of water therein for extinguishment of fires in the town of Milford, and particularly for the extinguishment of fires communicated to the property of the inhabitants of said town as a corporation; and the plaintiffs further say that on said 28th day of April they were the owners of a certain public building called a town hall, of the value of $5,000, and of a certain large number of planks constituting a sidewalk of the value of $250, and a hose pipe of the value of $250. Now, on said 28th day of April, the defendant did not fulfill its duty and obligation to furnish water in said hydrants; but, on the contrary, wrongfully and negligently failed to supply said hydrants with water capable of use for the extinguishment of fires, and left the same empty and useless, and on said 28th day of April said building of the plaintiffs took fire, and, although the defendant's hydrants were in easy reach of said building, they supplied no water, and albeit the plaintiffs used their utmost endeavor to extinguish said fire, they failed because of the lack of water, and pressure of water, in said hydrants, and the building and the sidewalk and the hose aforesaid were utterly consumed,—all which results were entirely due to the wrongful conduct of the defendant in not supplying water in said hydrants according to its obligation and duty."

The amended count is as follows:

"In a plea of the case, for that, on the 28th day of April, A. D. 1905, the said inhabitants of Milford were the owners of a certain public building called a town hall, of the value of $5,000, and certain planks and timbers constituting a sidewalk of the value of $250, and certain fire hose of the value of $250; and the plaintiffs aver that on said 28th day of April, 1905, the defendant had engaged, and was bound and obliged, to furnish through its mains, conduits, pipes, and hydrants, the same being laid and placed in the streets of said plaintiffs' town, water of sufficient current, pressure, and volume to extinguish fire within range of said hydrants, and especially and particularly fires originating in, or communicated to, plaintiffs' said building and property, in consideration of the sum of $800 per annum paid to it by said plaintiffs. Now the plaintiffs say that on said 28th day of April a fire started in a board pile at a considerable distance, to wit, a quarter of a mile, from plaintiffs' said building and property, which said fire might easily have been extinguished and put out, had there been any pressure and volume of water in said mains and hydrants; but the defendant, unmindful of the duty and obligations in this behalf, wrongfully, carelessly, and negligently suffered and allowed said mains, pipes, and hydrants to be destitute of any current of water of sufficient pressure, force, and volume to be of any value or utility in extinguishing said fire, or any fire, so that the plaintiffs were unable, by the use of the greatest diligence and the strongest efforts, to quench the fire in said pile of boards, although they were in the use of due care in this behalf; and the plaintiffs aver that said fire in said board pile was communicated to the said buildings and property of plaintiffs by sparks, firebrands, or cinders, so that the same were utterly burned and consumed, although hydrants were at hand and in close proximity to said buildings and property, and competent and capable men were at hand with suitable hose and appliances, ready to extinguish the fires started by said cinders and firebrands upon plaintiffs' said building and property, and were prevented from doing so solely by the lack and want of water in said hydrants, which it was the duty and obligation of said defendant to furnish; and the plaintiffs aver that the sole cause of the said loss and damage was the wrongful neglect of duty of said defendant, to the damage of said plaintiffs (as they say) the sum of $6,000."
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In support of the demurrer, the following statement of the defendant's claims was presented as the basis of the argument in its behalf, viz.:

"(1) The company does not agree to extinguish fires, or to insure property against loss by fire. Its agreement is simply to furnish a water system and supply it with water. It is impossible to say that failure to furnish water was the proximate cause of the loss, and consequently no action can be maintained to recover for the loss of property by fire. The cause of the loss is too remote, and the damages too uncertain, to allow of a recovery.

"(2) Damages must be such as were in contemplation at the time the contract was made. It cannot be claimed that it was the intention of the company to make good loss by fire for the small compensation which it received for installing its plant.

"(3) In making a contract with the water company for the protection of property against fire, the town acts for the general public good. The town as a property owner derives the same benefit that every other property owner does. The contract does not protect any particular property, but is for the benefit of all.

"(4) If an action can be maintained, it must be an action of assumpsit. There is no statute or common-law duty imposed upon the defendant to furnish water to the municipality. The duty imposed grows out of the contract itself. Recovery, if any there be, must be by virtue of the contract, and not on account of any legal duty independent of the contract."

The important question thus raised by the pleadings and contentions of the parties has never before been presented to this court, nor, so far as appears, has the precise question ever been directly involved and expressly determined in any jurisdiction, state or Federal, in this country; the only analogous case cited by counsel being distinguishable from this in essential particulars. There is no prevailing American doctrine upon the question, and no precedent in this state, that can in any way embarrass this court in its efforts to reach a solution of the problem that shall appear to be warranted by the well-established and fundamental law of contracts, consonant with the principles of justice and sound reason, and in harmony with the considerations of public policy involved in the inquiry.

The plaintiffs are a municipal corporation, and, by § 76, chap. 4, of the Revised Statutes, such corporations are empowered to "contract for a supply of water, gas, and electric light for municipal uses, . . . upon such terms as may be mutually agreed, . . . and may raise money therefor." The plaintiff town of Milford was also specially authorized by chapter 331, p. 484, of the Private and Special Laws of 1891, "to contract with the Penobscot Water & Power Company for a supply of water for municipal and sanitary purposes and for the extinguishment of fires," and it appears from the averments in the plaintiffs' declaration that the defendant corporation acquired all the powers, privileges, and franchises, and assumed all of the obligations, of the Penobscot Water & Power Company.

It is provided by chapter 46, p. 53, of the Private and Special Laws of 1905, that the defendant corporation "shall have, possess, and enjoy all of the powers of a corporation formed under the provisions of chapter 47 of the Revised Statutes" of Maine, and it thus appears to have been invested with full power to make contracts and to sue and be sued.

It is not in controversy, therefore, that both of the parties to this suit were competent to enter into the contract set out in the plaintiffs' declaration. According to the allegations therein contained, the defendant entered into a contract with the plaintiffs, whereby, for the sum of $800 per year, it agreed to supply the plaintiffs with sixteen post hydrants, and water for the same, before the 1st day of August, 1892. It also agreed that said hydrants should have two nozzles, and should be supplied with pipes at least 4 inches in diameter, and that said hydrants should be so placed that proper protection against fire should be secured. It was also agreed that the waterworks should be supplied by a pump or pumps of a capacity of not less than 1,000,000 gallons per day. The defendant also engaged, and became bound and obliged, to furnish through its pipes and hydrants, water of sufficient current, pressure, and volume to extinguish fire within range of such hydrants, and especially and particularly fires originating in, or communicated to, the plaintiffs' said building and property. The hydrants were duly erected, and the plaintiffs paid to the defendant corporation the sum of $800 per annum, in accordance with the terms of the contract, up to and beyond the time of the fire in which the plaintiffs' property was destroyed.

Here, then, is a formal written contract, entered into by parties competent to make it. It is not in controversy that it was complete, definite, and certain; that it was free from misapprehension, fraud, or mistake, and entirely fair and reasonable in all its parts. It was not characterized by any lack of mutuality, either in the terms of the contract when made, or in the remedies available to both parties. The plaintiffs had fully performed the contract on their part, and it contains no clause or phrase that would afford the defendant any reasonable ground for claiming exemption, either from the legal obligation or the moral duty of performing on its part a contract so manifestly indispensable to the protection of the plaintiffs' property, and so vitally important to the welfare of the people. With respect to the issue presented in this action for negligence, the defendant was required to use ordinary care to maintain the pipes and hydrants, and furnish water of the current, pressure, and volume as stipulated in its written contract. It was only required to exercise such prudence, vigilance, and precaution as would meet the requirement of ordinary care, according to the exigencies of the situation, having due regard to the nature and importance of the contract, the rights and interests of those to be affected by it, and the manifest consequences of a failure to perform it. There is nothing in the contract to indicate, and nothing in the situation of the parties to suggest, that the performance of its duty would have been attended with any oppression or hardship on the defendant.

But the demurrer admits the truth of the plaintiffs' allegations that the defendant "wrongfully, carelessly, and negligently suffered and allowed the mains, pipes, and hydrants to be destitute of any current of water of sufficient pressure, force, and volume to be of any value or utility in extinguishing said fire, or any fire." And the plaintiffs aver that the "sole cause of the said loss and damage was the wrongful neglect of duty of said defendant."

But it is suggested, in behalf of the defendant, that the corporation does not agree to extinguish fires, or to insure property against loss by fire; that its agreement is simply to furnish a water system; that it is impossible to say that failure to furnish water was the proximate cause of the loss; and that damages can only be such as were in contemplation at the time the contract was made.

That the defendant did not agree to extinguish fires or to insure property against fire is unquestioned. The statement is true, but the argument is fallacious. The conclusion which is evidently sought to be deduced, that the defendant is not liable for the damages resulting solely from a breach of its contract to furnish water to extinguish fires, does not necessarily follow. A corresponding statement directing attention to the particular thing which the defendant agreed to do, or not do, could with equal propriety be made respecting every cause of indirect damages. This method of reasoning obviously excludes from consideration the distinctive character of consequential damages for the breach of a contract, and hence affords no aid in determining the question of liability. In the leading English case of Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 353, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 502, so often cited as authority in this country, the plaintiffs gave the broken shaft of their mill to the defendant carrier to be forwarded immediately to an engineer, to serve as a model for a new one. The delivery was delayed, and the mill remained idle for want of the new shaft. The plaintiffs claimed damages for loss of profits while the mill was idle. The carrier only undertook to deliver the broken shaft immediately. He did not contract to provide a new shaft, or to furnish business for the mill. But the familiar rule was then enunciated that when "two parties have made a contract which one of them has broken, the damages which the other party ought to receive in respect of such breach of contract should be such as may fairly and reasonably be considered either arising naturally—i. e., according to the usual course of things—from such breach of contract itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it." So, in what has been termed "the leading American case" of Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 489, 69 Am. Dec. 718, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for the loss of the ordinary rental of his mill, resulting from the breach of the defendants' contract to deliver a steam engine built for the purpose of running the mill. But the defendant did not contract to run the mill, or to supply business for it. He only agreed to deliver a steam engine to furnish power for it. The statement of the rule of damages is substantially identical with that in the English case of Hadley v. Baxendale, supra.

Equally pertinent illustrations are readily found in our own state. In Grindle v. Eastern Exp. Co. 67 Me. 317, 24 Am. Rep. 31, the plaintiff's intestate delivered $24.90 to the defendant express company, at Castine, to be sent to Belfast to pay a premium on his life policy, which by its terms would lapse in eight days if the premium was not paid. It was held that, for failure to deliver the money according to its undertaking, the defendant was liable for the net value of the policy on the day it lapsed, on the ground that both parties must be presumed to have contemplated such damages from a knowledge of the circumstances. But the defendant's only undertaking was to carry a package of money. See also Frye v. Maine C. R. Co. 67 Me. 414, and McPheters v. Moose River Log Driving Co. 78 Me. 329, 5 Atl. 270.

Further apposite illustrations are found in numerous cases involving facts more closely analogous to those at bar. In Watson v. Needham, 161 Mass. 404, 24 L.R.A. 287, 37 N. E. 204, the defendant town, acting through its water commissioners, undertook to furnish the plaintiff with water for use in a boiler to generate steam to heat his greenhouse, but omitted to use proper diligence to discover a leak in the main pipe, and the plaintiff failed to receive a sufficient supply of water, whereby his plants were damaged by freezing to the extent of $400. Here, the defendant had not contracted to heat the plaintiff's greenhouse, or to insure his plants against freezing. It had only contracted to furnish water to make steam. But the court held that, subject to the right to shut off the water when necessary to make extensions and repairs, which had been expressly reserved, "the town was bound to use reasonable care and diligence to have ready for delivery a sufficient supply of water for the plaintiff's use, so long as the contract remained in force." The plaintiff was accordingly allowed to recover the full amount of his damage by freezing.

In Stock v. Boston, 149 Mass. 410, 14 Am. St. Rep. 430, 21 N. E. 871, a similar contract existed between the parties, and the plaintiff sustained damage by the freezing of his plants, caused by the neglect of the defendant to furnish water according to the contract. It was contended in behalf of the defendant that the damage was too remote, but the court said that the defendant was "liable not only for those injuries which are caused directly and immediately by his act, but also for such consequential injuries as, according to the common experience of men, are likely to result from his act. . . . The true inquiry is whether the injury sustained was such as, according to common experience and the usual course of events, might reasonably be anticipated." See also Metallic Compression Casting Co. v. Fitchburg R. Co. 109 Mass. 277, 12 Am. Rep. 689; Hand v. Brookline, 126 Mass. 324.

The same doctrine is exemplified in the circuit court of appeals in New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Meridian Waterworks Co. 18 C. C. A. 519, 30 U. S. App. 749, 72 Fed. 227. This case is precisely analogous to the case at bar, being distinguishable only by the fact that the plaintiff in this case is a railroad company instead of a municipal corporation. In the Federal case, the water company, in consideration of $1,200 per year, contracted to furnish the tanks and shops of the railroad company with a full and sufficient supply of water, "not less than 60 pounds pressure, for all purposes for which water may be needed or used at said shops," and, as a part of this agreement, the defendant water company laid its pipes to the plaintiff's premises, and attached hydrants thereto, to enable the plaintiff to run the water as a protection against fire, knowing that the railroad company had no other available source of water supply, and no other means of extinguishing fires on its premises; but it was alleged in the declaration that the plaintiff's shops and tanks were destroyed by fire in consequence of the defendant's failure to furnish water at 60 pounds pressure. It was held upon these facts the plaintiff was entitled to recover. In the opinion the court say: "The breach of contract 'occurred when the defendant failed to furnish the plaintiff's servants with an adequate supply of water at not less than 60 pounds pressure. . . . [The] plaintiff's declaration alleges that the proximate cause of its damages was not the fire, but was in the fact of defendant's failure to furnish water at 60 pounds pressure. If such be the case plaintiff's damages were not remote or too consequential to be sustained by the law applicable to the facts,'"—quoting in extenso the rule in Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 502.

In Middlesex Water Co. v. Knappmann Whiting Co. 64 N. J. L. 240, 49 L.R.A. 572, 81 Am. St. Rep. 467, 45 Atl. 692, the supreme court of New Jersey, on a claim for recoupment set up in an action of contract, rigidly enforced the obligations of the plaintiff's contract. In that case the water company, in consideration of $600 per year, agreed to furnish the defendant company with water "suitable for use in steam boilers, and with a pressure sufficient for fire purposes," but, by reason of a leak in the water main, and the consequent failure of the company to furnish water according to the contract, the defendant's factory was destroyed by fire, causing damage to the extent of $20,000. In an action of contract by the water company, to recover the amount due for water supplied, the plaintiff in error presented its claim for recoupment, based on the failure of the water company to perform its agreement to supply water of sufficient pressure for fire purposes, and it was held that, under such a clear and unqualified contract, the water company was liable for the damages sustained by the consumer from fire, in consequence of a failure in the water pressure, though the failure was due to a break in its pipes without the water company's fault. In the opinion the court say, inter alia: "The principle underlying all these cases is that where the contract is express, as it is in this case, to furnish water with a pressure sufficient for fire purposes, to do a thing not unlawful, the contractor must perform it; and if, by some unforeseen accident, the performance is prevented, he must pay damages for not doing it. No distinction is made between accidents that could be foreseen when the contract was entered into, and those that could not have been foreseen. Where, from the result of such an accident, one of two innocent persons must sustain a loss, the law . . . casts it upon him who has agreed to sustain it, or rather leaves it where the agreement of the parties has put it, and will not insert, for the benefit of one of the parties, by construction, an exception which the parties have, either by design or neglect, omitted to insert in their agreement."

It will be perceived that in this action of contract the exercise of reasonable care and diligence by the water company was not made the criterion of its liability.

In Skowhegan Water Co. v. Skowhegan Village Corp. 102 Me. 323, 66 Atl. 714, the competency of the parties to make a contract for a constant and ample supply of water "under sufficient pressure for the extinguishment of fires," and the obligation of the defendant to perform its contract, were distinctly recognized. The water company brought suit to recover the rental stipulated in the contract, but the defendant contended that the plaintiff had failed to furnish water of sufficient pressure for the extinguishment of fires, and was therefore not entitled to recover the rental specified. The court sustained a verdict in favor of the defendant, saying in the opinion: The plaintiff was entitled to recover the fair value of the service, having regard to the contract price, and considering how much less the service was worth to the corporation by reason of the plaintiff's breach of the contract. "The question of recoupment, properly so termed, is not involved. But if the plaintiff's breach of the contract be such as to subject the defendant to consequential damage, that may be the foundation for a legitimate claim in recoupment, with respect to which the burden of proof would be upon the defendant."

The case of Ukiah City v. Ukiah Water & Improv. Co. 142 Cal. 173, 64 L.R.A. 231, 100 Am. St. Rep. 107, 75 Pac. 773, is cited by counsel for the defendant as a "case on all fours" with the principal case, and as a direct authority against the plaintiffs' contention. But, as already suggested, that case differs materially from this, and is legally distinguishable from it. In that case there was no express contract, written or oral, between the defendant water company and the plaintiff town, respecting the quantity of water to be furnished, or the manner and means of furnishing it. As stated by the court in the opinion: "The same relations existed between the town and the defendant, as to the furnishing of water for general purposes, as ordinarily exist between the private consumer and the water company as to water for domestic purposes." The water company had not agreed to supply the town with any definite number of hydrants, or specified the number of nozzles for the hydrants, the diameter of the pipes with which they should be supplied, or the manner in which the hydrants should be placed to afford protection against fire. It had not agreed that its works should be supplied by pumps of any stated capacity, or become bound to furnish through its pipes and hydrants water of "sufficient current, pressure, and volume to extinguish fire within the range of such hydrants," or made any special reference to "fires originating in, or communicated to," property of the municipality. It was principally for want of a contract on the part of the defendant water company to do any specific thing that judgment was given for the defendant. After enumerating the many cases in different jurisdictions in which it has been held that a water company is not liable to individual owners of property destroyed by fire, by reason of its failure to perform its contract to supply the town with sufficient water to extinguish fires, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the opinion proceeds to show that Paducah Lumber Co. v. Paducah Water Supply Co. 89 Ky. 340, 7 L.R.A. 77, 25 Am. St. Rep. 536, 12 S. W. 554, 13 S. W. 249, and Gorrell v. Greensboro Water Supply Co. 124 N. C. 328, 46 L.R.A. 513, 70 Am. St. Rep. 598, 32 S. E. 720, in which the opposite conclusion was reached, are to be distinguished from the California case against the Ukiah Water Company, by reason of the fact that in the case of the Paducah Lumber Company and in the Gorrell Case, there was an express contract to do certain specific things, which appears to have been equivalent to the stipulations in the plaintiffs' contract in the case at bar. The court further say: "In each of these cases it will be observed that the court was dealing with contracts whereby the water companies, for valuable concessions and exclusive privileges, had agreed to do and to maintain certain specific things by way of protection from fire, and the gravamen of the charge against each and all of the companies was that they had violated their contract in failing to do the particular things for the doing of which they had expressly contracted. The broad distinction between those cases and the one at bar is, as pointed out in the opinion of the trial judge, that there is no express covenant in the contract between this plaintiff and this defendant, and the security to plaintiff's property was only the same security which, in the exercise of its governmental functions, the plaintiff had obtained for the whole town."

"Doubtless a water company may so bind itself by contract with a person to furnish him water for the extinguishment of fires as to render itself liable for the value of property of such person destroyed by fire, by reason of its failure to furnish him a sufficient supply of water. . . . It may be assumed here that it is within the power of a municipality, as a property owner, to enter into such a contract with a water company, for the protection of the property which it owns, as a legal individual; but it certainly needs something more than evidence showing an accepted service for general fire purposes to establish such a contract, and the evidence here shows nothing more."

It has been seen that in the written contract as set out in the plaintiffs' declaration in the case at bar, the defendant water company, in consideration of $300 per annum, did expressly agree to furnish water for sixteen post hydrants which should have two nozzles each, and be supplied with pipes 4 inches in diameter, and that its works should be supplied with pumps of a capacity of 1,000,000 gallons a day. It also expressly "engaged" to furnish, through its pipes and hydrants, water of sufficient pressure and volume to extinguish fire within range of its hydrants, "and especially and particularly fires originating in, or communicated to, the plaintiffs' said building and property." But instead of the pressure and volume specified, the plaintiffs allege that, by reason of the defendant's negligence, these pipes and hydrants had become destitute of any current of water of sufficient pressure and volume to be of any utility in extinguishing fires, and that this negligence on the part of the defendant was the sole cause of the plaintiffs' loss and damage.

The defendant corporation proceeded to construct and operate its plant, and entered upon its public service and the performance of its contract. It well knew that the plaintiff town, relying upon its express contract with the defendant, would omit to make any other arrangements for the supply of water, or provide any other means for the extinguishment of fires. The defendant's servants did not need to be informed that the elaborate provisions of the contract respecting the supply of water through its hydrants were for the purpose of affording protection against the destruction of property by fire. They well knew the disastrous results likely to flow from any neglect on their part to perform the contract to furnish water of sufficient volume and pressure to extinguish fires. Under such circumstances damages from loss of property by fire are not only the natural consequences of the defendant's wrongful neglect, but "such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of the parties at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it." The injuries sustained are manifestly such as, according to common experience and the usual course of events, might reasonably be anticipated. Indeed, it is impossible to conceive of any class of contracts, or of contracts relating to any subject-matter, with respect to which the consequences of a breach are more palpably natural or more readily anticipated.

Under the stipulation in the report, the defendant is entitled to plead anew in the event that the demurrer is overruled. All of the other objections interposed by the defendant to the maintenance of the action involve a question of fact to be heard upon the trial of the cause. Whether the defendant's breach of duty in connection with the performance of its contract was culpable negligence, and, if so, whether such breach of duty on its part, or "the negligence of the plaintiffs themselves, or the criminal act of a stranger, or an atmospheric condition," was the proximate cause of the plaintiffs' loss, are questions not raised by the demurrer, but are determinable by the trial court. The solution of them may often be attended with difficulty, but there is no reasonable ground for apprehending that such difficulty will be essentially different from that experienced in numerous other cases of a similar character.

When, therefore, the established principles of law are applied to this case as to all others, and the contract between these parties is held to possess the binding force and efficacy of all other analogous contracts, the conclusion is irresistible that, upon proof of the facts stated in the declaration, the defendant would be liable to the plaintiffs, in an appropriate action, for the damages caused by its negligence, in failing to perform a duty arising from its contractual relations with the plaintiffs.

2. But the defendant further contends that the plaintiffs have misconceived their remedy, and that, if any action can be maintained, it must be an action of assumpsit, and not of tort.

It is the opinion of the court that this contention is not sustainable, either upon reason or authority. As observed by the court in Ashley v. Root, 4 Allen, 504: "This is one of the numerous classes of cases where a party may elect to sue either in contract or tort. At common law he might sue in assumpsit for breach of contract, or in case for breach of duty." In that action a principal was allowed to recover in an action of tort against his agent for all the damage caused by a breach of duty by the agent, including his neglect to pay over on demand money which he had collected as agent. Either case or assumpsit may also be supported for a false warranty in the sale of goods. Mahurin v. Harding, 28 N. H. 128, 59 Am. Dec. 401. In the opinion the court say: "The warranty is none the less a contract because it is the means by which a fraud is accomplished, and the fraud is in no way diminished because the seller has at the same time bound himself by a warranty."

In 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 625, it is said: "Case will also lie for violation of the duty which the contractual relations between the parties involve, in many cases where assumpsit is a concurrent remedy. . . . Although assumpsit will also usually lie for breach of the contract, action on the case for the breach of the common-law duty is often the better remedy. . . . It will also lie concurrently with assumpsit for a breach of duty arising out of an express or implied contract." Burnett v. Lynch, 5 Barn. & C. 589, is cited in support of the last statement. In that case the defendant had taken an assignment of a lease subject, not only to the payment of rent, but to the performance of the covenants, and had thereby made it his duty to pay the rent and perform the covenants. It was held by Abbott, Ch. J., that either assumpsit or case was maintainable for a breach of that duty, citing Kinlyside v. Thornton, 2 W. Bl. 1111. In the opinion of Bayley, J., it is said: "It is unnecessary to go through the cases in which it has been decided that, although there be an express contract, a party is not bound to resort to that contract as the gist of the action, but he may declare on the tort, and say that the party has neglected to perform his duty. In Dickson v. Clifton, 2 Wils. 319, . . . there can be no doubt that an action of assumpsit might have been maintained against the captain for not receiving and carrying the corn or for not taking care of the cargo; but there the plaintiff described the contract in specific terms, and brought case against the defendant for negligence in the performance of his duty. That could only be because the express contract between the parties created a duty, for the breach of which an action of tort might be maintained." See also 1 Chitty, Pl. 16th ed. p. 162, with the observations of Lord Ellenborough on Govett v. Radnidge, 3 East, 70, there cited, and Broom, Legal Maxims, 201, 202, and cases cited.

In the case at bar an action on the case is brought to recover damages for the consequential injuries resulting from the negligent manner in which the defendant company performed a duty created by an express contract between the parties. It is not, properly speaking, an action based on the nonfeasance of the defendant. It is not brought to recover damages for the refusal of the defendant to perform the contract. It sufficiently appears that the defendant laid the pipes, erected the hydrants, and fully established its plant, and for a time operated it to the satisfaction of the plaintiffs. The action is based on the defendant's negligence in the operation and management of the plant, negligence which would be exemplified by a want of vigilance and attention in discovering a leak or adjusting a shut off. An action ex contractu might have been maintainable, as in Midlesex Water Co. v. Knappmann Whiting Co. 64 N. J. L. 240, 49 L.R.A. 572, 81 Am. St. Rep. 467, 45 Atl. 692, where the obligation of the contract was enforced, and the water company held liable for a loss by fire resulting from a failure in the water pressure which was not due to any negligence of the company. But here the plaintiffs elected to bring case, as they were legally entitled to do, a form of action obviously more favorable to the defendant, since it imposes upon the plaintiffs the burden of proving negligence on the part of the defendant respecting the duty which it engaged to perform.

According to the stipulations in the report, the entry must therefore be Demurrer overruled.

Defendant to plead anew.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

JOHN LEISEN, Resp't.,

v.

ST. PAUL FIRE & MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY, App't.

(— N. D. —, 127 N. W. 837.)

Insurance — invalidity at inception — estoppel.

1. Plaintiff, whose sole interest in the property insured was that of a holder of a sheriff's certificate under a mortgage foreclosure sale, applied for, and there was issued to him, a fire insurance policy, the premium for which was paid to and retained by defendant company. The policy was the standard form adopted in this state, containing the following stipulations: "This entire policy shall be void if the insured has concealed or misrepresented, in writing or otherwise, any material fact or circumstance concerning the insurance or the subject thereof; or if the interest of the insured in the property be not truly stated herein. . . . This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void . . . if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership. . . . This policy is made and accepted subject to the foregoing stipulations and conditions, together with such other provisions, agreements, or conditions as may be indorsed hereon or added hereto, and no officer, agent, or other representa-

Headnotes by FISK, J.

Note. — As to effect of nonwaiver agreement on conditions existing at inception of insurance policy, see note to Gish v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 826.

As to power of agents to bind insurer by oral waiver or estoppel in pais as to forfeiture occurring after issuance of policy and before loss, under policies requiring consent or waiver to be in writing, see note to Industrial Mut. Indemnity Co. v. Thompson, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1064.

As to parol-evidence rule as to varying or contradicting written contracts, as affected by the doctrine of waiver or estoppel, as applied to policies of insurance, see note to Haapa v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1165.

tive of this company shall have power to waive any provision or condition of this policy except such as, by the terms of this policy, may be the subject of agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto; and as to such provisions and conditions, no officer, agent, or representative shall have such power or be deemed or held to have waived such provisions or conditions unless such waiver, if any, shall be written upon or attached hereto; nor shall any privilege or permission affecting the insurance under this policy exist or be claimed by the insured unless so written or attached."

In applying for such insurance, plaintiff acquainted defendant and its agent with the true facts regarding his interest in the property, but, notwithstanding such information, the defendant's agent carelessly and negligently omitted to state in the policy the nature of plaintiff's said interest. About three weeks after the policy was issued, a loss occurred. In an action to recover on the policy, defendant seeks to escape liability upon the ground that such policy, by its terms, is and was void at its inception, on account of the above facts.

Held, for reasons fully stated in the opinion, that defendant is estopped to urge such defense.

Same — waiver.

2. Where a fire insurance company, with full knowledge of facts which, under the stipulations contained in the application or policy, render such policy void at its inception, issues and delivers the same, and collects and retains the premium therefor, it will be deemed in law to have impliedly waived such forfeiture, and will not be permitted to urge the invalidity of the policy in an action to recover for a loss thereunder. Certain language contained in the opinions in Johnson v. Dakota F. & M. Ins. Co. 1 N. D. 167, 45 N. W. 799, and J. P. Lamb & Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Mut. F. Ins. Co. (N. D.) 119 N. W. 1048, approving the Federal rule to the contrary, is disapproved.

Same — acceptance of premium — effect.

3. Where a policy of insurance has been delivered and the premium collected with full knowledge of all the facts, it would operate as a fraud upon the insured if the insurance company were permitted to avoid the policy after a loss by urging the invalidity thereof at its inception, on account of stipulations contained therein.

Same — restrictions on agent's rights — effect.

4. Restrictions in a policy, limiting the power of agents to waive conditions except in a certain manner, cannot be held to apply to those conditions which relate to the inception of the contract, where the agent, with full knowledge of the facts, issues the policy and collects the premium, and the insured has acted in good faith.

(Spalding, J., dissents.)

(May 28, 1910.)

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Cass County, overruling a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George A. Bange, for appellant:

One who signs an instrument is, in the absence of fraud or deception, conclusively presumed to know its contents, and is bound thereby.

9 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 388; Southern R. Co. v. White, 108 Ga. 201, 33 S. E. 952; Johnstone v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 39 S. C. 55, 17 S. E. 512; Kellerman v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 136 Mo. 177, 34 S. W. 41, affirmed in 136 Mo. 194, 37 S. W. 828; Hutchinson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 37 Minn. 524, 35 N. W. 433; Boylan v. Hot Springs R. Co. 132 U. S. 147, 33 L. ed. 291, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Weakly, 50 Ark. 397, 7 Am. St. Rep. 104, 8 S. W. 134; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Carew, 15 Mich. 524; Grinnell v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 113 Mass. 299, 18 Am. Rep. 485; Redpath v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 112 Mass. 71, 17 Am. Rep. 69.

The acceptance and retention of the paper known or suspected to contain the terms of the contract binds the party, and he cannot be heard to contradict the same.

9 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 260, 391; 6 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 404; Steers v. Liverpool, N. Y. & P. S. S. Co. 57 N. Y. 1, 15 Am. Rep. 453; Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 72 N. Y. 90, 28 Am. Rep. 113; Hill v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 73 N. Y. 351, 29 Am. Rep. 163; Grace v. Adams, 100 Mass. 505, 97 Am. Dec. 117, 1 Am. Rep. 131; Quimby v. Boston & M. R. Co. 150 Mass. 365, 5 L.R.A. 846, 23 N. E. 205; Fonseca v. Cunard S. S. Co. 153 Mass. 553, 12 L.R.A. 340, 25 Am. St. Rep. 600, 27 N. E. 665; McMillan v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Co. 16 Mich. 79, 93 Am. Dec. 208; Drummond v. Southern P. Co. 7 Utah, 118, 25 Pac. 733; Watson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 104 Tenn. 194, 49 L.R.A. 454, 56 S. W. 1025.

The law applicable to contracts in general is equally applicable to insurance policies.

9 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 391; Clement, Fire Ins. p. 452, rule 5; Morrison v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 69 Tex. 353, 5 Am. St. Rep. 63, 6 S. W. 605; Johnson v. Dakota F. & M. Ins. Co. 1 N. D. 167, 45 N. W. 799; Wilcox v. Continental Ins. Co. 85 Wis. 193, 55 N. W. 188; Fuller v. Madison Mut. Ins. Co. 36 Wis. 599; Holmes v. Charlestown Mut. F. Ins. Co. 10 Met. 211, 43 Am. Dec. 428; Goddard v. East Texas F. Ins. Co.

67 Tex. 69, 60 Am. Rep. 1, 1 S. W. 906; Quinlan v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 133 N. Y. 356, 28 Am. St. Rep. 645, 31 N. E. 31; American Ins. Co. v. Neiberger, 74 Mo. 167; Bostwick v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 116 Wis. 392, 67 L.R.A. 705, 89 N. W. 538, 92 N. W. 246; Cleaver v. Traders' Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 527, 8 Am. St. Rep. 908, 32 N. W. 660, 71 Mich. 414, 15 Am. St. Rep. 275, 39 N. W. 571; McMaster v. New York L. Ins. Co. 40 C. C. A. 119, 99 Fed. 856; New York L. Ins. Co. v. McMaster, 30 C. C. A. 532, 57 U. S. App. 638, 87 Fed. 63.

Where an insurance policy is delivered to the applicant, he is presumed to know its contents, and cannot evade a forfeiture for a violation of its provisions on the ground that he never read it.

Wood, Ins. § 503; Smith v. Continental Ins. Co. 6 Dak. 433, 43 N. W. 810; Cleaver v. Traders' Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 527, 8 Am. St. Rep. 908, 32 N. W. 660; Hankins v. Rockford Ins. Co. 70 Wis. 1, 35 N. W. 34; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 934, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837; American Ins. Co. v. Neiberger, supra; Richardson v. Maine Ins. Co. 46 Me. 394, 74 Am. Dec. 459.

The legislative standard policy is a statute, and should be interpreted as such; the insurance company has no choice in the language employed or its provisions; it should receive a reasonable construction.

Kerr, Ins. pp. 142, 143, 712, 713; Temple v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 109 Wis. 372, 85 N. W. 361.

The requirement that the policy of insurance must specify the interest of the insured in the property insured, if he is not the absolute owner thereof, is contrary to the common law.

White v. Hudson River Ins. Co. 7 How. Pr. 341; Crowley v. Cohen, 3 Barn. & Ad. 478, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 314; 2 Parsons, Maritime Law, 202; 2 Duer, Ins. 463; Tyler v. Aetna F. Ins. Co. 12 Wend. 507, 16 Wend. 385; Niblo v. North American F. Ins. Co. 1 Sandf. 551; Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 U. S. 457, 36 L. ed. 226, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511; Binns v. United States, 194 U. S. 480, 48 L. ed. 1087, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 816; Johnson v. Southern P. Co. 196 U. S. 1, 49 L. ed. 363, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158; State ex rel. Coleman v. Kelly, 71 Kan. 811, 70 L.R.A. 450, 81 Pac. 450, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 298; Wisconsin Industrial School v. Clark County, 103 Wis. 651, 79 N. W. 422; Dane County v. Reindahl, 104 Wis. 302, 80 N. W. 438; Mosle v. Bidwell, 65 C. C. A. 533, 130 Fed. 334.

If the limitations upon the agent's authority to act are known to the person with whom he is dealing, or if the transaction is such as to charge him with the duty of inquiring into the extent of the agent's authority to do the particular act, the principal will be protected if the act be unauthorized, or in clear excess of the agent's powers, and if the principal be an innocent actor in the transaction.

Cullinan v. Bowker, 180 N. Y. 93, 72 N. E. 911.

The provisions of the policy are binding and the plaintiff cannot recover.

Rohrbach v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. 47, 20 Am. Rep. 451; Marvin v. Universal L. Ins. Co. 85 N. Y. 278, 39 Am. Rep. 657; Quinlan v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. supra; Allen v. German American Ins. Co. 123 N. Y. 6, 25 N. E. 309; Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Asso. 183 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 213, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133; J. P. Lamb & Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Mut. F. Ins. Co. (N. D.) 119 N. W. 1048; Syndicate Ins. Co. v. Bohn, 27 L.R.A. 614, 12 C. C. A. 531, 27 U. S. App. 564, 65 Fed. 165; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Small, 14 C. C. A. 33, 30 U. S. App. 127, 66 Fed. 490; Pennsylvania Casualty Co. v. Bacon, 67 C. C. A. 497, 133 Fed. 907; Kentucky Vermillion Min. & Concentrating Co. v. Norwich Union F. Ins. Soc. 77 C. C. A. 121, 146 Fed. 695; Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. v. National Bank, 102 U. S. 14, 26 L. ed. 61; Dunham v. Peterson, 5 N. D. 414, 36 L.R.A. 232, 57 Am. St. Rep. 550, 67 N. W. 293; Clevenger v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 2 Dak. 114, 3 N. W. 313; Collins v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 32 Mont. 343, 108 Am. St. Rep. 578, 80 Pac. 609, 1092; Reaper City Ins. Co. v. Brenna, 58 Ill. 158, 11 Am. Rep. 54; Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. v. T. M. Richardson Lumber Co. 11 Okla. 585, 69 Pac. 938; Deming Invest. Co. v. Shawnee F. Ins. Co. 16 Okla. 17, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 607, 83 Pac. 918; Cator v. American L. Ins. & T. Co. 33 N. J. L. 487; Bennett v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 55 N. J. L. 377, 27 Atl. 641; Dimick v. Metropolitan Mut. L. Ins. Co. 69 N. J. L. 399, 62 L.R.A. 774, 55 Atl. 201; Lippman v. Aetna Ins. Co. 108 Ga. 391, 75 Am. St. Rep. 62, 33 S. E. 897; O'Leary v. Merchants' & B. Mut. Ins. Co. 100 Iowa, 173, 62 Am. St. Rep. 555, 66 N. W. 175, 69 N. W. 420; Shuggart v. Lycoming F. Ins. Co. 55 Cal. 408; Hinman v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 36 Wis. 159; Wilcox v. Continental Ins. Co. 85 Wis. 193, 55 N. W. 188; Hankins v. Rockford Ins. Co. supra; Franklin L. Ins. Co. v. Sefton, 53 Ind. 380; Sisk v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 16 Ind. App. 565, 45 N. E. 804; Weidert v. State Ins. Co. 19 Or. 261, 20 Am. St. Rep. 814, 24 Pac. 242; Birmingham F. Ins. Co. v. Kroegher, 83 Pa. 64, 24 Am. Rep. 147; German Ins. Co. v. Heiduk, 30 Neb. 288, 27 Am. St. Rep. 402, 1

N. W. 481; New York Cent. Ins. Co. v. Watson, 23 Mich. 486; Cleaver v. Traders' Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 527, 8 Am. St. Rep. 908, 32 N. W. 660; Cook v. Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. 84 Mich. 12, 47 N. W. 568; Mallory v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 97 Mich. 416, 56 N. W. 773; Improved-Match Co. v. Michigan Mut. F. Ins. Co. 122 Mich. 256, 80 N. W. 1088; Collins v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 44 Minn. 440, 46 N. W. 906; Wilbur v. Bowditch Mut. F. Ins. Co. 10 Cush. 446; Pendar v. American Mut. Ins. Co. 12 Cush. 469; Conway Tool Co. v. Hudson River Ins. Co. 12 Cush. 144, 59 Am. Dec. 172; Fitchburg Sav. Bank v. Amazon Ins. Co. 125 Mass. 431; McCoy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 133 Mass. 82; Batchelder v. Queen Ins. Co. 135 Mass. 449; Fox v. Queen Ins. Co. 124 Ga. 948, 53 S. E. 271; Wyandotte Brewing Co. v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 144 Mich. 440, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 852, 115 Am. St. Rep. 458, 108 N. W. 393; Chismore v. Anchor F. Ins. Co. 131 Iowa, 180, 108 N. W. 230; Maupin v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. 53 W. Va. 571, 45 S. E. 1003, overruled in Medley v. German Alliance Ins. Co. 55 W. Va. 351, 47 S. E. 101, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 99.

Mr. V. R. Lovell, for respondent:

The limitation upon the agent's authority, contained in the policy of insurance, does not prevent knowledge by the agent, acquired while acting within the scope of his employment, of facts then existing which constitute a breach of warranty of the policy of insurance, as subsequently made and issued, from being imputed to the principal, so as to estop the insurer from asserting a forfeiture because of such breach of warranty.

Ostrander, Fire Ins. § 265; Vance, Ins. 304, 305; Johnson v. Dakota F. & M. Ins. Co. 1 N. D. 169, 45 N. W. 799; Michigan Shingle Co. v. State Invest. & Ins. Co. 94 Mich. 389, 22 L.R.A. 319, 53 N. W. 945; Sternaman v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 170 N. Y. 13, 57 L.R.A. 318, 88 Am. St. Rep. 625, 62 N. E. 763; German-American Ins. Co. v. Yeagley, 163 Ind. 651, 71 N. E. 897, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 275; People's F. Ins. Asso. v. Goyne, 79 Ark. 315, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1180, 96 S. W. 365, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 373; Miller v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 31 Iowa, 216, 7 Am. Rep. 122; Boetcher v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 47 Iowa, 253; Vesey v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. 18 S. D. 632, 101 N. W. 1074; Home Ins. Co. v. Hancock, 106 Tenn. 513, 52 L.R.A. 665, 62 S. W. 145; Taylor v. Anchor Mut. F. Ins. Co. 116 Iowa, 625, 57 L.R.A. 328, 93 Am. St. Rep. 261, 88 N. W. 807; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 949; Aetna Live Stock, Fire & Tornado Ins. Co. v. Olmstead, 21 Mich. 246, 4 Am. Rep. 483; 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Williamson v. New Orleans Ins. Asso. 84 Ala. 106, 4 So. 36; Creed v. Sun Fire Office, 101 Ala. 522, 23 L.R.A. 177, 46 Am. St. Rep. 134, 14 So. 323; Syndicate Ins. Co. v. Catchings, 104 Ala. 176, 16 So. 46; Triple Link Mut. Indemnity Asso. v. Williams, 121 Ala. 138, 77 Am. St. Rep. 34, 26 So. 19; Southern Ins. Co. v. Hastings, 64 Ark. 253, 41 S. W. 1093; Menk v. Home Ins. Co. 76 Cal. 51, 9 Am. St. Rep. 158, 14 Pac. 837, 18 Pac. 117; Parrish v. Rosebud Min. & Mill. Co. 140 Cal. 635, 74 Pac. 312; Mackintosh v. Agricultural F. Ins. Co. 150 Cal. 440, 119 Am. St. Rep. 234, 89 Pac. 102; Wich v. Equitable F. & M. Ins. Co. 2 Colo. App. 484, 31 Pac. 389; State Ins. Co. v. Du Bois, 7 Colo. App. 214, 44 Pac. 756; State Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 14 Colo. 499, 20 Am. St. Rep. 281, 24 Pac. 333; National Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Duncan, 44 Colo. 472, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 340, 98 Pac. 634; Johnson v. Aetna Ins. Co. 123 Ga. 404, 107 Am. St. Rep. 92, 51 S. E. 339; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Spankneble, 52 Ill. 53, 4 Am. Rep. 582; Lycoming F. Ins. Co. v. Jackson, 83 Ill. 303, 25 Am. Rep. 386; Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Hick, 125 Ill. 361, 8 Am. St. Rep. 384, 17 N. E. 792; Security Trust Co. v. Tarpey, 182 Ill. 52, 54 N. E. 1041; Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Cannon, 103 Ill. App. 543; Orient Ins. Co. v. McKnight, 197 Ill. 190, 64 N. E. 339; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Stark, 120 Ind. 444, 22 N. E. 413; Rogers v. Phenix Ins. Co. 121 Ind. 570, 23 N. E. 498; Indiana Ins. Co. v. Hartwell, 123 Ind. 177, 24 N. E. 100; Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Vogel, 166 Ind. 239, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 966, 117 Am. St. Rep. 382, 76 N. E. 977, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 91; Young v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 45 Iowa, 377, 24 Am. Rep. 784; Donnelly v. Cedar Rapids Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 693, 28 N. W. 607; Jamison v. State Ins. Co. 85 Iowa, 229, 52 N. W. 185; Fitchner v. Fidelity Mut. Fire Asso. 103 Iowa, 276, 72 N. W. 530; Lutz v. Anchor F. Ins. Co. 120 Iowa, 136, 98 Am. St. Rep. 349, 94 N. W. 276; Glasscock v. Des Moines Ins. Co. 125 Iowa, 170, 100 N. W. 503; Gurnett v. Atlas Mut. Ins. Co. 124 Iowa, 547, 100 N. W. 542; Sullivan v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 34 Kan. 170, 8 Pac. 112; National Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Barnes, 41 Kan. 161, 21 Pac. 165; State Ins. Co. v. Gray, 44 Kan. 731, 25 Pac. 197; Kansas Farmers' F. Ins. Co. v. Saindon, 52 Kan. 486, 39 Am. St. Rep. 350, 35 Pac. 15; Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 59 Kan. 521, 53 Pac. 856; Queen Ins. Co. v. Straughan, 70 Kan. 186, 109 Am. St. Rep. 421, 78 Pac. 447; Hartford Ins. Co. v. Haas, 87 Ky. 531, 2 L.R.A. 64, 9 S. W. 720; Continental Ins. Co. v. Thomason, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 158, 84 S. W. 546; Marston v. Kennebec Mut. L. Ins. Co.

89 Me. 266, 56 Am. St. Rep. 412, 36 Atl. 389; Steele v. German Ins. Co. 93 Mich. 81, 18 L.R.A. 85, 53 N. W. 514; Temmink v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 72 Mich. 388, 40 N. W. 469; Crouse v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 79 Mich. 249, 44 N. W. 496; Gristock v. Royal Ins. Co. 87 Mich. 428, 49 N. W. 634; Beebe v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. 93 Mich. 514, 18 L.R.A. 481, 32 Am. St. Rep. 519, 53 N. W. 818; Anderson v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co. 59 Minn. 182, 28 L.R.A. 609, 50 Am. St. Rep. 400, 60 N. W. 1095, 63 N. W. 241; Otte v. Hartford L. Ins. Co. 88 Minn. 423, 97 Am. St. Rep. 532, 93 N. W. 608; Planters' Ins. Co. v. Myers, 55 Miss. 479, 30 Am. Rep. 521; Combs v. Hannibal Sav. & Ins. Co. 43 Mo. 148, 97 Am. Dec. 383; Nute v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 109 Mo. App. 585, 83 S. W. 83; German Ins. Co. v. Frederick, 57 Neb. 538, 77 N. W. 1106; Fidelity Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Lowe, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 159, 93 N. W. 749; Grand View Bldg. Asso. v. Northern Assur. Co. 73 Neb. 149, 102 N. W. 246; Spalding v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. 71 N. H. 441, 52 Atl. 858; Wood v. American F. Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. 385, 52 Am. St. Rep. 733, 44 N. E. 80; Patten v. Merchants' & F. Mut. F. Ins. Co. 40 N. H. 375; Fishblate v. Fidelity & C. Co. 140 N. C. 539, 53 S. E. 354; Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Williams, 39 Ohio St. 584, 48 Am. Rep. 474; Eilenberger v. Protective Mut. F. Ins. Co. 89 Pa. 464; Kister v. Lebanon Mut. Ins. Co. 128 Pa. 553, 5 L.R.A. 646, 15 Am. St. Rep. 696, 18 Atl. 447; Dowling v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 168 Pa. 234, 31 Atl. 1087; Highlands v. Lurgan Mut. F. Ins. Co. 177 Pa. 566, 55 Am. St. Rep. 739, 35 Atl. 728; Graham v. American F. Ins. Co. 48 S. C. 195, 59 Am. St. Rep. 707, 26 S. E. 323; Pearlstine v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 74 S. C. 246, 54 S. E. 373; Continental F. Ins. Co. v. Whitaker, 112 Tenn. 151, 64 L.R.A. 451, 105 Am. St. Rep. 916, 79 S. W. 119; Mutual F. Ins. Co. v. Ward, 95 Va. 231, 28 S. E. 209; Mullin v. Vermont Mut. F. Ins. Co. 58 Vt. 113, 4 Atl. 817; Foster v. Pioneer Mut. Ins. Asso. 37 Wash. 288, 79 Pac. 798; May v. Buckeye Mut. Ins. Co. 25 Wis. 291, 3 Am. Rep. 76; Gans v. St. Paul, F. & M. Ins. Co. 43 Wis. 108, 28 Am. Rep. 535; Dunbar v. Phenix Ins. Co. 72 Wis. 492, 40 N. W. 386; Matthews v. Capital F. Ins. Co. 115 Wis. 272, 91 N. W. 675.

The fact of the acceptance and retention of the policy of insurance by the insured, under the circumstances of this case, did not bind him to the terms of the contract as actually written.

McMaster v. New York L. Ins. Co. 40 C. C. A. 119, 99 Fed. 856, 183 U. S. 25, 46 L. ed. 64, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; Otte v. Hartford L. Ins. Co. supra; Bidwell v. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Astor Mut. Ins. Co. 16 N. Y. 266; Albany City Sav. Inst. v. Burdick, 87 N. Y. 40; Bennett v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 106 N. Y. 243, 12 N. E. 609; Gristock v. Royal Ins. Co. 87 Mich. 428, 49 N. W. 634; Kister v. Lebanon Mut. Ins. Co. supra; McElroy v. British America Assur. Co. 36 C. C. A. 615, 94 Fed. 990; Fitchner v. Fidelity Mut. Fire Asso. supra.

Flisk, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to recover on an insurance policy. The complaint is in the usual form, alleging: That in consideration of $51 paid by the plaintiff to defendant, the latter issued its policy of insurance, a copy of which is annexed to and made a part of the complaint, whereby defendant insured the plaintiff against loss or damage by fire in the sum of $1,000 on a certain frame building situated on lots 9 and 10, block 21 of the village of Leonard, Cass county, for the term of one year from January 6, 1906. That plaintiff duly performed all of the terms of said contract of insurance on his part to be performed, and that on January 29, 1906, said building was totally destroyed by fire, which fire did not occur by reason of any of the causes enumerated in said policy exempting the insurance company from liability in case of fire or loss, and that plaintiff's loss by reason of such fire exceeded the sum of $1,500. That the destruction by fire as aforesaid was complete and the loss total, and that there was no disagreement between the plaintiff and defendant as to the amount of said loss, but that shortly after defendant was notified of the loss, it denied any liability under the policy, on the ground that plaintiff's title to the property insured was not truly stated in the policy or the application therefor. Plaintiff, in his complaint, anticipates the defense that the policy never attached or became effective by reason of the fact that plaintiff's title to the property insured was not that of unconditional and sole ownership, etc., and in this respect alleges the following facts: "That at and during the said month of January, 1906, plaintiff was and still is the owner and holder of a certain sheriff's certificate of mortgage foreclosure sale of and upon the said frame building and the lot or parcel of land on which the same was situated, and at the time of the destruction of such building by fire, hereinafter referred to, there was due and unpaid on the said certificate of mortgage foreclosure sale an amount exceeding the total amount of such insurance, and that at the time of the plaintiff's application for the insurance aforesaid, and at the time of the execution and delivery of the policy aforesaid, the plaintiff notified and informed the defendant company and its agent of the nature and character of plaintiff's insurable interest in the frame building aforesaid, and that plaintiff was the owner and holder of a sheriff's certificate of mortgage foreclosure sale, as aforesaid, but the defendant and its said agent, though it then and there knew, as aforesaid, the character and extent of plaintiff's insurable interest in the frame building and premises aforesaid, carelessly and negligently stated and caused to be stated in the said policy of insurance and application therefor that plaintiff was the owner in fee simple of said premises and the whole thereof, and thereby waived the conditions of said policy of insurance, exempting the defendant company from liability in case the plaintiff's interest in the premises insured be not truly stated in such policy or in the application therefor."

The policy is the standard form adopted in this state, and contains, among others, the following stipulations: "This entire policy shall be void if the insured has concealed or misrepresented, in writing or otherwise, any material fact or circumstance concerning this insurance or the subject thereof; or if the interest of the insured in the property be not truly stated herein. . . . This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void . . . if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership; or if the subject of insurance be a building on ground not owned by the insured in fee simple. . . . This policy is made and accepted subject to the foregoing stipulations and conditions, together with such other provisions, agreements, or conditions as may be indorsed hereon or added hereto, and no officer, agent, or other representative of this company shall have power to waive any provision or condition of this policy except such as, by the terms of this policy, may be the subject of agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, and as to such provisions and conditions no officer, agent, or representative shall have such power or be deemed or held to have waived such provisions or conditions unless such waiver, if any, shall be written upon or attached hereto; nor shall any privilege or permission affecting the insurance under this policy exist or be claimed by the insured unless so written or attached."

A demurrer was interposed to the complaint upon the ground that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Such demurrer was overruled, and the appeal is from the order overruling the same.
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In brief, appellant's contention on this appeal is that, under the facts alleged in the complaint, the policy is and was void at its inception for the reason that the interest of the insured was not that of "unconditional and sole ownership," and the nature and extent of his interest in the property was not stated in nor indorsed upon the policy. In other words, notwithstanding the fact that plaintiff, in applying for the insurance, and at the time of the execution and delivery of the policy, expressly notified and informed defendant and its agent of the nature and character of his interest in the property, and that defendant, with such notice and knowledge, executed and delivered to plaintiff such policy and collected the premium thereunder, that defendant may, nevertheless, urge that such policy was void at its inception and no liability ever attached thereunder; that the doctrine of implied waiver and estoppel cannot be successfully invoked because the parties, by their contract, have otherwise stipulated, and the legislature, by statute, in effect, otherwise declared.

If appellant's contention be sound, the result would be most harsh and inequitable. We cannot countenance such a doctrine unless imperatively required so to do by plainly established principles of law. We are entirely clear that we are confronted with no such situation. On the contrary, we are entirely clear that appellant's contention is without support on principle or reason, and is contrary to the overwhelming weight of authority in this country. In support of this broad assertion, we proceed to give our reasons, but in the main shall adopt the reasoning of other courts upon the questions involved.

We will first notice the present status of the adjudications of this court and its predecessor, the territorial court, so far as material to the question here involved. In Lyon v. Insurance Co. 6 Dak. 67, 50 N. W. 483, the court unanimously held that defendant's agents had the power to waive the matter of encumbrances which were known to them at the time of negotiating and accepting the risk. In that case, as in the case at bar, it was contended that the policy was never in force, on account of the omission of the insured to comply with a condition requiring him to inform the company of encumbrances on the property. Such condition was as follows: "If the property hereby insured, either real or personal, or any part thereof, be or shall become encumbered by mortgage, judgment, or otherwise, and it be not so stated in the written application, or indorsed in writing on the policy, this policy and every part thereof shall be void." The proof showed that the property was encumbered by mortgage at the time the application for insurance was made and at the time the loss occurred, but that the agents of the insurance company knew such fact, but nevertheless issued the policy and collected the premium. Plaintiff contended there, as here, that the stipulation in the policy above quoted had been waived, and such contention was sustained.

Again, in the case of Waterbury v. Dakota F. & M. Ins. Co. 6 Dak. 468, 43 N. W. 697, the territorial court, in speaking on this point, said: "It is too well settled to be now questioned that the company, or its agent, acting within the scope of his authority, may waive any of the conditions of the policy, and if, at the time of issuing the policy, the company or such agent knows the falsity of a representation made by the applicant in procuring the insurance, the company is estopped from asserting its falsity in order to avoid liability,"—citing numerous cases.

During the early history of this court, and over twenty years ago, it was called upon to consider a similar question in the case of Johnson v. Dakota F. & M. Ins. Co. 1 N. D. 167, 45 N. W. 799. In speaking upon the question of estoppel, the court, among other things, there said: "But it is further contended by respondent's counsel that defendant is estopped from claiming a forfeiture of the policy on account of the false answers as to encumbrances, contained in the application, for the reason that such answers were wholly unauthorized by the plaintiff, and were falsely written into the application by E. E. Strong, the soliciting agent, despite the fact that he (Strong) was fully and truthfully informed by the plaintiff as to the encumbrances. The fact of deception practised by the agent is not questioned; but who shall shoulder the consequences of such deceptions?—is a question much mooted in the adjudicated cases, and one which has given this court no little difficulty. For whom was Strong acting, and who was he representing when soliciting and taking plaintiff's application for the insurance? The earlier cases held quite uniformly that, where the insured signed a written application as a basis for the contract of insurance, he adopted all of its contents and was bound by it, and that if, by his request or permission, the solicitor of the insurance acted for him in filling out the application, such solicitor was so far forth the agent of the insured, and not the agent of the company. Some courts still adhere to this holding, but the decided weight of authorities is to the contrary." The court here cites numerous cases, among which is Kausal v. Minnesota Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Asso. 31 Minn. 17, 47 Am. Rep. 776, 16 N. W. 430, from which it quotes approvingly the following very accurate statement of the rule: "Agents for an insurance company, authorized to procure applications for insurance, and to forward them to the company for acceptance, must be deemed the agents of the insurers in all that they do in preparing the application, or in any representations they may make as to the character or effect of the statements therein contained. Hence, when such agent, either by his direction or direct act, makes out an application incorrectly, notwithstanding all the facts are stated to him by the applicant, the error is chargeable to the insurer, and not to the insured. This is the rule in case of 'mutual' as well as 'stock' or 'proprietary' companies. The rule is not affected or changed by a stipulation inserted in the policy subsequently issued, that the acts of such agent in making out the application shall be deemed the acts of the insured, and not of the insurer. Such stipulation does not convert acts done for the insurer into the acts of the insured. The admission of the verbal testimony to show that the application was filled up by the agent of the company, and that the facts were correctly stated to him, but that he, without the knowledge of the insured, misstated them in the application, is not in violation of the rule that verbal testimony is not admissible to vary a written contract. It proceeds upon the ground that the contents of the paper was not the statement of the applicant, and that the insurance company, by the acts of their agent, is estopped to set up that it is the representation of the insured." This court thereafter further said: "The defendant sent its policy direct to the plaintiff, and the latter had possession of it some months prior to the loss. A copy of the application containing the false answers as written by the agent was indorsed upon the back of the policy, but such indorsement was not referred to in the body of the policy. The trial court found that the plaintiff did not at any time object to the answers as stated in the application, or request the defendant to correct the same. The evidence, however, is conclusive that the plaintiff did not in fact know that a copy of the application was indorsed upon his policy, nor discover the errors in the application respecting the encumbrances until the day preceding the trial. Under these circumstances, the question arises whether the plaintiff, despite the contrary fact, is not conclusively presumed to have read and become acquainted with the contents of the policy, including the copy of his application for insurance, indorsed on the policy. If such is the presumption of law, then the further question arises whether the plaintiff is guilty of such laches in not seeking a correction or reformation of the contract as will defeat his recovery upon the policy. It is well settled that, where an insurance policy is delivered to the applicant, he is presumed to know its contents, and cannot evade a forfeiture for a violation of its provisions on the ground that he never read it." Here the court cites Smith v. Continental Ins. Co. 6 Dak. 433, 43 N. W. 810; Hankins v. Rockford Ins. Co. 70 Wis. 1, 35 N. W. 34; Cleaver v. Traders' Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 527, 8 Am. St. Rep. 908, 32 N. W. 660, and other authorities.

We do not question the soundness of these authorities, but, in citing them, the court evidently overlooked the very important fact that they do not involve forfeitures for breaches of conditions existing at the inception of the contract, the facts creating such breaches being fully known to the agent, and hence to the insurance company, at the time the policy was delivered and the premium paid. In the case of Smith v. Continental Ins. Co. supra, Judge Templeton wrote the opinion. He very clearly differentiates that case from a case like the one at bar. He says: "This is a very different case from that where a soliciting agent purposely or erroneously inserts false answers to questions in an application; the applicant stating the facts truthfully and being innocent of fraud. In such a case the subagent is acting within the scope of his powers and duties,—taking applications is his business,—and notice to him is notice to the principal, under well-settled rules of law. If Angell had been a general agent,—that is, if he had been authorized by the company to make contracts of insurance and issue policies,—he doubtless would have had implied authority to waive the effect of conditions in the policy inconsistent with existing facts."

The court in the Johnson Case thereafter quotes approvingly from the Federal rule as announced in New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 934, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837, and thereafter, among other things, says: "The application was made a part of the policy in express terms, and a copy thereof was indorsed upon the policy. . . . Upon receiving the policy with copy indorsed thereon, the plaintiff is legally chargeable with notice and knowledge of the entire terms of the insurance contract, and he is estopped from denying 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

such knowledge. It was the plaintiff's duty to have taken steps at once, upon receiving the policy, to have the same corrected or rescinded. He did not do so, and by his silence when required to speak he became constructively a participant in the original fraud of the agent, and thereby forfeited his right under the policy; and unless defendant has waived such forfeiture, the plaintiff must fail to recover." The court thereafter held that such forfeiture had been waived.

As we shall hereafter see, the above rule is no doubt sound when properly applied; but as there applied it is clearly against the great weight of modern authority as well as reason, and we feel obliged to modify the rule thus announced, so that it will apply only to forfeitures for breaches of conditions subsequent, except in cases where the assured has actual knowledge at the inception of the contract of facts and conditions creating a forfeiture or annulling the policy.

This court, in the case of Thompson v. Travelers' Ins. Co. reported in 11 N. D. 274, 91 N. W. 75, and 13 N. D. 444, 101 N. W. 900, again recognized the doctrine of implied waiver and estoppel in clear and explicit language. The present chief justice, in differentiating that case from certain cases cited and relied on by respondent in support of a waiver of the forfeiture, said: "Not one of the numerous cases cited by respondent is in point on the facts of the case at bar. These cases are cases where premiums were paid, accepted, and retained with knowledge of the facts constituting the forfeiture, and of course it was held that the companies were thereafter estopped to plead the forfeiture claimed. With that doctrine this court fully concurs." On the second appeal, Chief Justice Young, in voicing the opinion of the court, clearly recognized the right of plaintiff to prove an estoppel by showing that when the policy was delivered and the premium collected by defendant's agent, he had knowledge of the fact which the insurance company claimed avoided the policy; the entire opinion being devoted to the question of the insufficiency of the proof offered for such purpose. We quote from the syllabus as follows: "(1) The life insurance policy upon which this action is brought contained this condition: 'This policy shall not take effect unless the first premium is actually paid while the assured is in good health.' Held that, in the absence of an estoppel, the liability of the insurer depends upon the actual, and not mere apparent, good health of the assured when the first premium was paid. (2) In order that the acceptance or retention of the premium may estop an insurer from relying upon a breach of condition in the policy, it must appear that it had knowledge of the facts constituting the breach."

Thus it will be seen that this court was, until the decision in J. P. Lamb & Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Mut. F. Ins. Co. (N. D.) 119 N. W. 1048, firmly committed to the doctrine that the insurer, by knowledge on the part of its agent, which knowledge is imputed to the company, of facts existing at the inception of the policy, which, under its terms, would avoid it, will be estopped to urge such invalidity. In denying a rehearing in the Lamb Case, Judge Spalding used certain language which might be construed as approving a contrary rule, and appellant's counsel in the case at bar quotes therefrom the following: "One point was, however, not referred to which we deem it advisable to mention at this time. The policy contained a provision reading as follows: 'No officer, agent, or other representative of this company shall have power to waive any provision or condition of this policy except such as, by the terms of this policy, may be indorsed hereon or added hereto, and as to such provisions and conditions, no officer, agent, or representative shall have such power, or be deemed or held to have waived such provisions or conditions, unless such waiver, if any, shall be written upon or attached hereto; nor shall any privilege or permission affecting the insurance under this policy exist or be claimed by the insured, unless so written or attached.' The authorities on similar provisions are in hopeless conflict, but the Supreme Court of the United States in 1901 had this identical provision under consideration in Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Asso. 183 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 213, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133, and, after an exhaustive review of the conflicting authorities, sustained the provision in question as against the contention that it could be waived in some manner other than in writing indorsed on the policy. The opinion in that case is most instructive, as is also that in Modern Woodmen v. Tevis, 54 C. C. A. 293, 117 Fed. 369, in which the opinion of the circuit court of appeals of the eighth circuit was delivered by Judge Sanborn."

As we shall hereafter see, the rule of the Federal court as announced in Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Asso. supra, is opposed to the decisions of nearly every state in the Union which has had occasion to pass upon the question, and to the extent that the opinion in J. P. Lamb & Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Mut. F. Ins. Co. approves the rule thus announced by the 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Federal court, the same is hereby disproved.

We deem the correct rule to be as stated in the leading case of Wood v. American F. Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. 382, 52 Am. St. Rep. 733, 44 N. E. 80, as follows: "The restrictions inserted in the contract upon the power of the agent to waive any condition unless done in a particular manner cannot be deemed to apply to those conditions which relate to the inception of the contract, when it appears that the agent has delivered it and received the premiums with full knowledge of the actual situation. To take the benefit of a contract with full knowledge of all the facts, and attempt afterwards to defeat it, when called upon to perform, by asserting conditions relating to those facts, would be to claim that no contract was made, and thus operate as a fraud upon the other party." That court, in a later case, also said: "The agent of a fire insurance company may, by issuing a policy with knowledge of the facts, waive a condition that the policy shall be void if the property insured be encumbered, and a note of the encumbrance be not indorsed upon the policy, notwithstanding a provision in the policy that no agent of the company shall have power to waive any such condition, except by written indorsement." Skinner v. Norman, 165 N. Y. 565, 80 Am. St. Rep. 776, 59 N. E. 309. That the rule of the New York cases is supported by the overwhelming weight of authority must be conceded. We cite the following cases supporting the above rule: Welch v. Fire Asso. of Philadelphia, 120 Wis. 456, 98 N. W. 227; Home Ins. Co. v. Stone River Nat. Bank, 88 Tenn. 369, 12 S. W. 915; German-American Ins. Co. v. Yeagley, 163 Ind. 651, 71 N. E. 897, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 275; King v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. 72 Iowa, 310, 33 N. W. 690; McGonigle v. Susquehanna Mut. F. Ins. Co. 168 Pa. 1, 31 Atl. 868; Continental Fire Asso. v. Norris, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 299, 70 S. W. 769; Continental F. Ins. Co. v. Brooks, 131 Ala. 614, 30 So. 876; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Fleming, 65 Ark. 54, 39 L.R.A. 789, 67 Am. St. Rep. 900, 44 S. W. 464; Rhode Island Underwriters' Asso. v. Monarch, 98 Ky. 305, 32 S. W. 959; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Keating, 86 Md. 130, 63 Am. St. Rep. 499, 38 Atl. 29; Improved-Match Co. v. Michigan Mut. F. Ins. Co. 122 Mich. 256, 80 N. W. 1088; Home Ins. Co. v. Gibson, 72 Miss. 58, 17 So. 13; Flournoy v. Traders' Ins. Co. 80 Mo. App. 655; Parsons v. Knoxville F. Ins. Co. 132 Mo. 583, 31 S. W. 117, affirmed in banc 132 Mo. 600, 34 S. W. 476; Benjamin v. Palatine Ins. Co. 80 App. Div. 260, 80 N. Y. Supp. 256, affirmed in 177 N. Y. 588, 70 N. E. 1095; Grabbs v. Farm- ers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 125 N. C. 389, 34 S. E. 503; Gould v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 134 Pa. 570, 19 Am. St. Rep. 717, 19 Atl. 793; Gandy v. Orient Ins. Co. 52 S. C. 224, 29 S. E. 655; Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Richmond Mica Co. 102 Va. 429, 102 Am. St. Rep. 846, 46 S. E. 463; Wagner v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 92 Tex. 549, 50 S. W. 569; Bartlett v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. 77 Iowa, 155, 41 N. W. 601; Medley v. German Alliance Ins. Co. 55 W. Va. 342, 47 S. E. 101, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 99; Orient Ins. Co. v. McKnight, 197 Ill. 190, 64 N. E. 339; German Ins. Co. v. Shader, 68 Neb. 1, 60 L.R.A. 918, 93 N. W. 972; Grand View Bldg. Asso. v. Northern Assur. Co. 73 Neb. 149, 102 N. W. 246.

Many of the foregoing cases were decided since the Supreme Court of the United States handed down the Northern Assurance Company decision, and they expressly disapprove the same. In Welch v. Fire Asso. of Philadelphia, supra, Marshall, J., said: "It is well understood that the judicial rule here discussed is peculiar to insurance contracts, and significantly exceptional, in that it ignores the familiar principle applied to written obligations generally, that he who becomes a party to such an obligation is presumed to have knowledge of its contents and is bound thereby, unless by some artifice resorted to by the other party thereto, reasonably calculated to prevent or deter him from obtaining such knowledge, he is so prevented or deterred. Bostwick v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 116 Wis. 392, 67 L.R.A. 705, 89 N. W. 538, 92 N. W. 246. As an original proposition, it would be difficult to justify that special favor to policy holders in actions to recover losses sustained. The long line of decisions in this state supporting it, however, precludes any change thereof other than by legislative enactment. The authorities elsewhere are not all in harmony with it. A very few condemn it. Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Asso. 183 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 213, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133, is a significant instance thereof. In that case the departure from general principles is most vigorously condemned in this language: 'It is manifest that the theory that such parol evidence, though it may not be competent to change the written contract, may be received for the purpose of raising an estoppel in pais, is a mere invasion of the rule excluding parol testimony when offered to alter a written contract. A party suing on a contract in an action at law must be conclusively presumed to be aware of what the contract contains, and the legal effect of his agreement is that its terms shall be complied with.' The court said further, in effect, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) the only exception to that is where, by fraud, a person is induced to accept a contract different from the one agreed upon, in excusable ignorance of the variance. The exception thus condemned has the sanction of some forty years of our judicial history and of the general run of authorities. Under the circumstances, we do not feel warranted in overturning it or seriously questioning the wisdom of it. The conclusion to which we have arrived is supported by the courts generally where a policy law exists. That is amply shown by citations in the brief of counsel for respondent, and the absence of authorities to the contrary in that of appellant, and our own inability to discover any. In the supporting authorities it appears that there was no judicial hesitation in holding that a policy like ours does not, in letter or in spirit, affect the established rule that an insurance company, barring fraud upon it, participated in by the assured and its agent (Koerts v. Grand Lodge, O. H. S. 119 Wis. 520, 97 N. W. 163), cannot avoid the effect of the law charging it with knowledge which its agent has at the time of delivering its policy of insurance, respecting the condition of the subject thereof. In all cases, or most of them, waiver is sharply distinguished from estoppel,"—citing numerous cases.

In addition to the foregoing authorities, we cite the following very recent cases, holding to the same effect: Fosmark v. Equitable Fire Asso. 23 S. D. 102, 120 N. W. 777; O'Neill v. Northern Assur. Co. 155 Mich. 564, 119 N. W. 911; Sharp v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. 136 Cal. 542, 69 Pac. 253, 615; Allen v. Home Ins. Co. 133 Cal. 29, 65 Pac. 138; Loring v. Dutchess Ins. Co. 1 Cal. App. 186, 81 Pac. 1025; Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Price (1909) 132 Ga. 687, 64 S. E. 1074; Wisotzkey v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 112 App. Div. 599, 98 N. Y. Supp. 760; Plunkett v. Piedmont Mut. Ins. Co. 80 S. C. 407, 61 S. E. 893; Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Ocean View Pleasure Pier Co. 106 Va. 633, 56 S. E. 584; Glens Falls Ins. Co. v. Michael, 167 Ind. 659, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 708, 74 N. E. 964, 79 N. E. 905; People's F. Ins. Asso. v. Goyne, 79 Ark. 315, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1180, 96 S. W. 365, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 373; House v. Security F. Ins. Co. (Iowa) 121 N. W. 509; Capital F. Ins. Co. v. Montgomery, 81 Ark. 508, 99 S. W. 687; Parsons v. Lane (Re Miller's & Mfrs. Ins. Co.) 97 Minn. 98, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 231, 106 N. W. 485, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1144; 19 Cyc. Law. & Proc. pp. 812-814, and cases cited; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. 2d ed. p. 949; 3 Cooley, Briefs on Insurance, 2650-2655; Clement, Fire Ins. 418; Ostrander, Fire Ins. § 265; Vance, Ins. pp. 304, 305.

In speaking on the question of waiver or estoppel under facts here involved, Mr. Vance says: "Issue and delivery of a policy with knowledge by the company or its agent of existing facts which, by its terms or conditions, would render it void, operates as a waiver or estoppel preventing the company from claiming a forfeiture by reason of such facts. By the weight of authority this is true, although the policy contains the usual limitation upon the agent's authority." Ostrander says [§ 353]: "When a person is employed to solicit risks and take applications to be forwarded to the company for approval, but has no authority to make a complete or binding contract of insurance, and has never been held out by his principal as having such power, he cannot waive any condition or requirement of the policy. It has, however, been often held that the soliciting agent is competent to do certain things in respect to his distinctive duties that will create estoppel. Any knowledge communicated to him in regard to the risk he solicits at the time of such solicitation will be imputed to the company. If the facts imparted to the solicitor are of such a character as, under the terms of the policy, will cause an avoidance unless disclosed, such as other insurance, defective title, encumbrances, etc., and such facts are by him withheld from the company, the latter will be estopped from insisting on the failure of the insured to give the required notice as a defense to an action on the policy." Vance says [p. 304]: "Again, a second incident of the relation of principal and agent is that any information material to the transaction, either possessed by the agent at the time of the transaction, or acquired by him before its completion, is deemed to be the knowledge of the principal, at least, so far as that transaction is concerned, even though in fact the knowledge is not communicated to the principal at all. It is here to be observed, and the importance of the principle is so great that it cannot be too strongly emphasized, that these incidents of agency are created by law, and not by the parties. The insurer is charged with the knowledge acquired by his agent in making or negotiating a contract of insurance, not because he has consented to be so charged, nor because he has authorized his agent so to bind him, but because, as a legal consequence of the relation he sustains to the agent, the latter's knowledge is imputed to him. It therefore follows that this incident, created by the law, in response to the demand of public policy, irrespective of agreement, cannot be destroyed or altered by the agreement of the parties. The parties cannot, by their contract, contravene the policy of the law in this instance, any more than the husband, by contract, can escape his duty to support the wife, or the carrier can, by contract, exempt himself from liability for his negligent failure to carry safely his passenger. Those cases which ignore this principle, and regard these legal incidents as powers conferred, and subject to limitation, are much to be deplored."

By the issuance and delivery of the policy and the acceptance of the premium with knowledge of the existing facts relative to plaintiff's interest in the property, the company, in effect, said to the plaintiff that, "notwithstanding the stipulations and conditions in the policy to the contrary, we will treat the same as a valid and binding contract of indemnity." In other words, "We agree not to urge such conditions or stipulations to defeat such policy in the event plaintiff shall assert any rights thereunder." The company thereby, in effect, said to plaintiff: "The policy is a valid policy of insurance." It would seem, therefore, on the plainest principles of equity and good conscience, that the company should be estopped by such conduct to assert the contrary. As said thirty-two years ago by Justice Walker of the Illinois supreme court: "This information given to the agent operated as notice to the company, and, it having accepted the premium and assumed the risk, it must be held that the company has waived the condition; or, if not, it is estopped from urging its breach as a defense. To permit such a defense would be highly unjust and iniquitous. It would shock the sense of right and fair dealing to permit money to be obtained under such assurances, and to permit the company to say: 'We are not bound, and did not intend, on our part, to be bound, for any loss that might occur. We misled and deceived you into paying the premium, and although we did not intend to be bound, and knew we were not, still we will keep the premium, and you must suffer the loss.' This is the substance of the defense, and such a defense cannot be allowed to prevail." St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Wells, 89 Ill. 82.

Appellant's counsel lays stress upon the fact that this is a standard policy prescribed by statute, and that the courts are therefore bound to give it effect. Such argument has repeatedly been made and as often repudiated by the courts as unsound. It is firmly established that a form of policy of fire insurance, although prescribed by law, is, when issued by the insurance company, none the less a contract, and to be construed as such by the courts; and that, while it may affect a question of pure waiver, it does not abrogate the doctrine of estoppel. In addition to the foregoing authorities, see Clement on Fire Insurance, pp. 409, 451, and cases cited. Moreover, such rule is crystallized by statute in this state. Section 6058, Rev. Codes 1905, provides: "Policies of insurance in the form prescribed by the last section shall be in all respects subject to the same rules of construction as to their effect or the waiver of any of their provisions as if the form thereof had not been prescribed."

It is urged that by receiving and retaining the policy, plaintiff is conclusively deemed to have acquiesced in and agreed to its terms. Such contention has the support of many authorities and no doubt is sound when properly applied. Aside from the case of Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Asso. 183 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 213, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133, and the few other authorities adhering to the rule there announced, it is firmly settled that restrictions in a policy on the power of agents with respect to waiver have no application to those conditions relating to the inception of the contract. 3 Cooley, Briefs on Insurance, pp. 2510, 2511. Mr. Cooley states the reason for this doctrine to be that "the insured is not bound by restrictions and stipulations of which he has no knowledge. As an insured cannot be charged with constructive notice of the stipulations in a policy until he has accepted it, therefore a limitation in a policy on an agent's authority will not bind the insured with reference to matters occurring prior thereto. Until an insured has either actual or constructive notice of the limitations on an agent's authority, he may assume that the agent has the authority indicated by the apparent scope of his employment." At page 2619 the same author says: "Unquestionably, the weight of authority supports the doctrine that an insured cannot rely on waivers by parol prior to the issuing of a policy. But this rule does not apply to implied waiver by the issuance of a policy, and receipt of the premiums thereon, with knowledge of matters vitiating the policy at its inception; for a large majority of the cases, especially the more recent ones, support the rule that an insurance company will not be permitted to defeat a recovery upon a policy issued by it by proving the existence of facts which would render it void, where it had full knowledge of it when the policy was issued." As said by the Georgia court in City F. Ins. Co. v. Carrugi, 41 Ga. 660: "It would be a fraud to take a man's money, with a full knowledge of the facts, and then set up that a particular mode of proving the fact, agreed upon by the parties, but not required by law, had not been resorted to. The receipt of the money and the issuing of the policy is a waiver of the indorsement, even if it be admitted that parties may, by their contract, agree as to how any particular fact shall be proven." And in Dwelling House Ins. Co. v. Brodie, 52 Ark. 11, 4 L.R.A. 458, 11 S. W. 1016, the court said: "The issue of a policy by an insurance company with a full knowledge or notice of all the facts affecting its validity is tantamount to an assertion that the policy is valid at the time of its delivery, 'and is a waiver of the known ground of invalidity.'" See also 3 Cooley, Briefs on Insurance, pp. 2632, 2652, and authorities cited.

Of course, in order to successfully invoke the doctrine of estoppel against the insurer, as above stated, the insured must be devoid of any taint of fraud on his part. If there is any collusion between him and the insurance company's agent, he cannot invoke the doctrine of implied waiver or estoppel. If, however, the insured in good faith informs the agent of the actual facts regarding the property insured, and makes truthful answers to the questions asked him by such agent, we know of no sound reason why the insurance company should be permitted, in a court of law, to urge in avoidance of the policy that answers or representations inserted in the application or policy by the agent, either through mistake, carelessness, or fraud, avoid such policy, and exonerate the company from all liability thereunder. The few courts holding to the contrary base their decisions upon the untenable ground that to permit plaintiff to prove facts contrary to the written statements in the application and policy would violate the rule against the admission of parol testimony tending to vary the written contract. But, as will be seen by the foregoing authorities, the courts, with but a few exceptions, hold "that to apply the doctrine as to parol testimony with the strictness demanded by the insurer would be to make a rule of evidence adopted as a protection against fraud an instrument of the very fraud it was intended to prevent." 3 Cooley, Briefs on Insurance, 2565, 2566, and cases cited.

For a correct statement of the rule regarding the subjects of waiver and estoppel as applied to the standard form of policy such as the one in the case at bar, see Clement on Fire Insurance, pp. 405, 448, and cases cited. At pages 415 and 416 the rule is stated as follows: "The stipulation in a policy that no agent or other representative shall have power to waive any condition may be effective as against an alleged waiver by agreement or contract with an agent or representative, but has no application when the law declares a waiver by estoppel because of the acts of the company through its agent or representative. Such estoppels do not rest upon the power or lack of power of the agent to change the provisions of the policy or waive any of its agreements, but arise in law because of the acts of the company, through its agent, acting in the scope of his apparent power as its representative. . . . Restrictions in the policy upon power of agents to waive its conditions, unless done in a particular manner, do not apply to those conditions which relate to the inception of the contract, when it appears that company's agent delivered it and received the premium with full knowledge of the actual situation."

The above rule is supported by the great weight of authority. We shall not attempt here to cite the many cases. They are collated in the opinion of Mr. Justice Corson in the recent case from South Dakota, —Fosmark v. Equitable Fire Asso. 23 S. D. 102, 120 N. W. 777. Particular attention is called to the case of People's F. Ins. Asso. v. Goynes, 79 Ark. 315, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1180, 96 S. W. 365, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 373, from which we quote the following: "A fire insurance company may be estopped by the conduct of its agent, acting within the apparent scope of his authority, from availing itself of a false answer to a material question, or of a breach of warranty, or of a violation of the provisions of the application or policy, notwithstanding clauses in the application or policy to the effect that the company shall not be bound by any such conduct or representation of its agent; and such estoppel or waiver may be proved by parol evidence, though the policy or application contains clauses to the effect that no waiver shall be effective unless indorsed in writing on the policy, at the home office of the company."

Appellant's counsel strenuously contends, in effect, that, by force of certain statutory provisions in this state, the rule of implied waiver or estoppel cannot be invoked. The particular sections of the statute relied on are §§ 5952 to 5956 and 5960 and 5961, Rev. Codes, 1905. These sections merely deal with the subject of warranties in relation to insurance contracts, and the effect of a breach thereof. It is a sufficient answer to such contention to say that in our opinion it was not the legislative intent, by the enactment thereof, to do away with the well-settled and most equitable rule of implied waiver and estoppel in pais. It is inconceivable that it could have been the legislative intent to enable insurance companies, in effect, to take advantage of their own mistakes, carelessness, or fraud, or that of their agents; in other words, to repudiate all liability on account of a state of facts involving misrepresentations for which the company or its agent is alone to blame. Although like statutory provisions exist in California and South Dakota, the decisions in those states do not support counsel's contention. On the contrary, the courts of both states most emphatically recognize and enforce the doctrine of implied waiver and estoppel as announced so generally by nearly all courts in this country.

Counsel's criticism of certain of the New York cases shows that he apparently fails to distinguish between a waiver and an estoppel, and also fails to distinguish between conditions or warranties which are precedent and those which are subsequent to the formation of the contract.

Our conclusion leads to an affirmance of the order appealed from.

All concur, except Spalding, J., dissenting.

Spalding, J., dissenting.

The rule on the question involved in this case was established in Johnson v. Dakota F. & M. Ins. Co. 1 N. D. 167, 45 N. W. 799, in 1890. The Supreme Court of the United States, in 1902, in Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Asso. 183 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 213, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133, reviewed the authorities with great care, and settled the question for the Federal courts in harmony with the views of this court, expressed in the Johnson Case. The case of New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 934, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837, also covers the same ground. I see no reason of sufficient weight to warrant this court in overruling the Johnson Case and disregarding the Federal authorities, and thereby establishing two rules in this jurisdiction. It results in this: That foreign insurance companies who write large risks in this state and suffer losses in cases where this principle is in question are not liable, while foreign companies which write risks in this state of less than $2,000, and all domestic companies, are liable. In Dunham v. Peterson, 5 N. D. 414, 36 L.R.A. 232, 57 Am. St. Rep. 558, 67 N. W. 293, this court said: "What, in the absence of any statute on the subject, would be decisive with us, even if we were in that state of mind on this question described by the phrase 'halting between two opinions,' is the fact that in the Federal courts this more universally accepted rule has become the law by reason of the decision of the Federal Supreme Court. . . . There should be only one rule in this state, whether the litigant resort to the Federal court or the state tribunals."

While the weight of authority seems to be in harmony with the majority opinion, yet, on close examination, many of the authorities which at first reading appear to be so are distinguishable. This is shown by the opinion in Russell v. Prudential Ins. Co. 176 N. Y. 178, 98 Am. St. Rep. 656, 68 N. E. 252. The policy under consideration in that case contained provisions similar to those in question in the case at bar, and the court held that the insurer was not liable where the waiver had not been indorsed on the policy, and distinguished Stewart v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 155 N. Y. 257, 42 L.R.A. 147, 49 N. E. 876, and prior decisions which appeared to be in conflict with the Russell Case, on the ground that, in the former decisions, it was clear, by inevitable inference, that they had been based upon the fact that the policy had never been delivered to the insured, and that, consequently, he could not be charged with knowledge of its contents, and the court says: "Is this contract to be enforced as clearly written, or is it to be ignored for the reason that men enter into contracts without reading them and assume that a vague and unproven custom exists permitting a local agent to give life and validity to the policy without reference to the terms of the contract of insurance? The question may be put in another form. Can an insurance company enter into a contract with a person applying for insurance which can so fix the precise conditions under which the policy shall issue that the agent, in the absence of express authority, cannot abrogate it? It would seem that the statement of the foregoing questions would compel an answer in favor of the company without argument."

Mr. Freeman, in an exhaustive note on this subject, contained in 107 Am. St. Rep., on page 123 states that the weight of more recent adjudications is in favor of the power of the insurer to limit the authority of an agent, and that when brought to the actual knowledge of the insured, or when made a part of the terms of the contract of insurance, the insured is bound thereby. The conflict of authority on the subject arises by reason of some courts emphasizing one and other courts another of several conflicting legal principles. As I read the opinion in the Johnson Case, it in effect lays down the rule that the insured is charged with knowledge of the contents and conditions of the policy when he has had it in his possession for a sufficient length of time to enable him to acquaint himself with its contents and conditions. Now this length of time may be variable, depending upon circumstances and conditions. The complaint in the case at bar does not disclose whether the insured had any opportunity to read the policy or not, and I think, in the absence of allegations regarding this subject, unless it must be presumed that he did have, which I doubt, evidence on this question is necessary. Any attempt to review the authorities at any length would be useless. Their number is legion, and I rest my decision on the ground that the rule has been established and followed in this state for twenty years, that it is supported by a large number of state authorities and by the Supreme Court of the United States, and that two rules in the same state should be avoided, unless there are reasons for establishing the second rule far more convincing and necessary than those presented in this instance.

Petition for rehearing denied September 10, 1910.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, THIRD CIRCUIT.

FOURTH STREET NATIONAL BANK, Petitioner,
v.

A. MERRITT TAYLOR et al., Trustees in Bankruptcy of Millbourne Mills Company.

RE MILLBOURNE MILLS COMPANY,
Bankrupt.

(96 C. C. A. 629, 172 Fed. 177.)

Bankruptcy — rights of trustee.

1. In determining the validity of liens on the property of a bankrupt as against the Note. — Issuance and delivery by private warehouseman of receipt for his own property as a constructive transfer of possession essential to a valid pledge.

For a treatment of this subject so far as relates to public warehousemen, see note to State use of Hart-Parr Co. v. Robb-Lawrence Co. 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 227. This note is confined to private warehousemen.

Private warehouseman issuing receipts directly on his own property.

The issuance and delivery by one not a public warehouseman, of a receipt on his own property in his own warehouse, in the form of a warehouse receipt, is not such a change of possession as is essential to a valid pledge as against his other creditors or subsequent purchasers in good faith.

claims of the trustee, the latter has, under the bankruptcy act, the rights of creditors of the bankrupt, and is not limited to those of the bankrupt himself.

Pledge — warehouse certificates.

2. No pledge valid as against creditors can be effected by the issuance and delivery of certificates similar to those issued by warehousemen, which purport to cover property retained in possession of the pledgeor, with nothing outside of the certificates to indicate the rights of the certificate holders to it.

Same — intent — effect.

3. A pledge of property which is not sufficient to effect a lien because of non-delivery cannot be charged with an equitable lien as against creditors of the pledgeor, by the fact that there was an intent to pledge, and that a certificate in the form of a warehouse certificate was given covering the property.

(Buffington, Circuit Judge, dissents.)

(August 10, 1909.)

PETITION by the Fourth Street National Bank to review an order of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania confirming the referee's report disallowing its claim to a lien on the proceeds of certain goods of the Millbourne Mills Company, bankrupt, and awarding the fund to the trustees for the benefit of the estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Adams v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 9 Biss. 390, 2 Fed. 174; Thurber v. Oliver, 26 Fed. 224; American Can Co. v. Erie Preserving Co. 171 Fed. 540; Franklin Nat. Bank v. Whitehead, 149 Ind. 560, 39 L.R.A. 725, 63 Am. St. Rep. 302, 49 N. E. 592; Mechanics' Trust Co. v. Dandridge, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 625, 37 S. W. 288; Bell & C. Co. v. Kentucky Glass Works Co. 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1080, 48 S. W. 440, rehearing 106 Ky. 7, 50 S. W. 2, 1092, 51 S. W. 180; Geddes v. Bennett, 6 La. Ann. 516; Fishback v. Van Dusen, 33 Minn. 111, 22 N. W. 244 (rule above limited in National Exch. Bank v. Wilder, 34 Minn. 149, 24 S. W. 699, to persons who are not public warehousemen); Valley Nat. Bank v. Frank, 12 Mo. App. 460; Conrad v. Fisher, 37 Mo. App. 352, 8 L.R.A. 147; Grand Ave. Bank v. St. Louis Union Trust Co. 135 Mo. App. 366, 115 S. W. 1071; Yenni v. McNamee, 45 N. Y. 614; Farmers & M. Nat. Bank v. Lang, 87 N. Y. 209 (arguendo); Thorne v. First Nat. Bank, 37 Ohio St. 254; Tradesmen's Nat. Bank v. Thomas Kent Mfg. Co. 186 Pa. 556, 65 Am. St. Rep. 876, 40 Atl. 1018; Moors v. Jagode, 195 Pa. 163, 45 Atl. 723; Geilfuss v. Carrigan, 95 Wis. 651, 37 L.R.A. 166, 60 Am. St. Rep. 143, 70 N. W. 306.

This is true even though the delivery of the receipt is helped out by the delivery of samples of goods stored. Adams v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, supra.

The bona fides of the pledgee does not validate the attempted pledge. Tradesmen's Nat. Bank v. Thomas Kent Mfg. Co.; Moors v. Jagode; and Geilfuss v. Carrigan,—supra.

But it was held in Grand Ave. Bank v. St. Louis Union Trust Co. supra, that when a piano dealer obtains a loan from a bank on a pledge of pianos in his storage room situated at some distance from his sales room, and not having his name thereon, and delivers to the cashier a storage receipt therefor, and the bank places in charge a piano repairer who is an employee of the dealer, but is not known by the cashier to be so, there is sufficient delivery of possession to enable the bank to hold as against 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) a trustee under a deed of general assignment given by the dealer.

Where receipts are issued ostensibly by another claimed to be really acting for pledgeor.

The indorsement to a third person, as security for loans, of a receipt issued by a warehouse company for goods kept under lock and key in a place on the premises of the owner of the goods, leased from such owner, but walled off from the rest of his premises, and placarded with the name of the warehouse company, which receipt recites that the company received the property on storage, "to be delivered only upon surrender of this receipt, properly indorsed, and payment of all charges thereon," is a sufficient delivery as against attaching creditors of the owner to validate the transaction as a pledge, whether the receipt is to be deemed a public warehouse receipt, under a statute defining public warehouses, or not. Union Trust Co. v. Wilson, 198 U. S. 530, 49 L. ed. 1154, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 766.

But no such a change of possession results from the issuance of so-called warehouse receipts acknowledging the receipt of goods on premises really occupied by the owner, though in form leased to the warehousing company, as renders valid a pledge of such receipts, where actual possession of the goods was exercised by and existed with the owner substantially the same after issuance of the receipts as before, and there were no signs to indicate that a change of possession had taken place. Security Warehousing Co. v. Hand, 206 U. S. 415, 51 L. ed. 1117, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 720, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 789.

The Supreme Court in the above case said that "the alleged change [of possession] was a mere pretense, a sham," and adopted the following language of the circuit court of appeals: "So far from the security company's maintaining an open, exclusive, unequivocal possession during the two years this arrangement was carried on, it seems to us that the security company Argued before Gray and Buffington, Circuit Judges, and Archbald, District Judge.

Messrs. Henry S. Drinker, Jr., and Samuel Dickson, for petitioner:

The trustee in bankruptcy takes the property of the bankrupt subject to all of the equities impressed upon it in the hands of the bankrupt, and stands simply in the shoes of the bankrupt, acquiring no higher rights than the bankrupt itself had, and being subject to all liens, equitable or otherwise, which could have been enforced against the bankrupt.

might as well have been eliminated, and the knitting company have employed its own stock keepers and shipping clerks as custodians for intending lenders, directly, instead of indirectly through the security company. In that view this becomes one of the cases "in which the exclusive power of the so-called bailee (Union Trust Co. v. Wilson, 198 U. S. 530, 537, 49 L. ed. 1154, 1156, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 766) tapers away to nothingness. Drury v. Moors, 171 Mass. 252, 50 N. E. 618; Tradesmen's Nat. Bank v. Thomas Kent Mfg. Co. supra."

A jobbing and manufacturing firm which takes out a warehouse license in the name of a son of one of the firm, for the sole purpose of issuing warehouse receipts on its own property for its own convenience in raising money by pledging its own property, does not keep a public warehouse of class "B," within the meaning of an Indiana statute defining class "B" as embracing warehouses where property of any class is stored for a consideration, and making their receipts negotiable when they do not state on their face the brand or distinguishing mark of the property stored, as required by law. Adams v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, supra.

In Re Rogers, 60 C. C. A. 567, 125 Fed. 109, a seed dealer leased without consideration a portion of his private warehouse to a storage company which stored therein only the dealers' property, and issued warehouse receipts thereon which the dealer pledged as security for loans. No signs were put up on the outside, and there were only a few inconspicuous signs inside, to indicate possession by the storage company, which kept no key, but left the premises in the control of the dealer, who substituted at will other seeds for those pledged, though it does not appear that this was known to the storage company. It was held that this transaction did not constitute a warehousing of property, and that pledgees of the receipts could not hold against a trustee in bankruptcy of the dealer. This case was reversed in First Nat. Bank v. Chicago Title & T. Co. 198 U. S. 280, 49 L. ed. 1051, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 693, on a point of practice, without considering the merits.

Where a railroad car manufacturing company leased a part of its premises to a warehouseman, on which was to be stored 30 L.B.A. (N.S.)

York Mfg. Co. v. Cassell, 201 U. S. 344, 50 L. ed. 782, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 481; Hurley v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 213 U. S. 126, 53 L. ed. 729, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 466; Hewitt v. Berlin Mach. Works, 194 U. S. 296, 48 L. ed. 986, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 690; Thompson v. Fairbanks, 196 U. S. 516, 49 L. ed. 577, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306; First Nat. Bank v. Staake, 202 U. S. 141, 50 L. ed. 967, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 580; Security Warehousing Co. v. Hand, 206 U. S. 415, 51 L. ed. 1117, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 720, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 789; Re Burnham, 140 Fed. 926; Re Cavagnaro, 143 Fed. 668; Re Platteville Foundry & Mach.

only its own goods, on which it was to receive warehouse receipts, and the latter took possession of so much of the premises as was needed for the purpose, put in charge a custodian agreed on by both parties, put signs or tags on property for which he had given receipts, there was sufficient change of possession so that persons to whom the manufacturing company had pledged the receipts would have a claim to the goods prior to that of a trustee in bankruptcy of the manufacturing company, even though stored material had from time to time been used up and replaced, and the premises leased were also used, so far as necessary, by the manufacturing company in the operation of its business. Bush v. Export Storage Co. 136 Fed. 918.

In American Can Co. v. Erie Preserving Co. supra, a preserving company leased for its own convenience, to a warehousing company, the warehouses at its factories, and the superintendent of the preserving company was made custodian, who, though he received a salary, always turned it over to the preserving company. On the requisition of the superintendent, warehouse receipts were issued which were pledged by the preserving company. The warehouses were not marked in any way to indicate possession by the warehousing company, except by recording the leases, which were not required to be recorded, nor were the goods covered by receipts separated from the others or marked. It was held that there was no such visible possession by the warehouse company as to make its receipt good as against a receiver of the preserving company.

A Kentucky statute regulating warehousemen provided that "hereafter in this state all and every person or persons, firms, . . . companies, . . . who shall receive . . . in store, or undertakes to receive, or take care of, property, shall be deemed and held to be a warehouseman." Warehousemen were also prohibited from issuing receipt for goods, unless the same shall have been bona fide received into possession and stored by such warehousemen. Discussing the statute the court, in Mechanics' Trust Co. v. Dandridge, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 625, 37 S. W. 288, said: "The statute supra evidently refers to only such persons as in fact keep a warehouse to store goods in, and are engaged in that business. It cannot be

Co. 147 Fed. 828; Re Blake, 80 C. C. A. 167, 150 Fed. 283; Re Muncie Pulp Co. 81 C. C. A. 116, 161 Fed. 732; Re E. W. Newton & Co. 83 C. C. A. 23, 153 Fed. 841; Goodnough Mercantile & Stock Co. v. Gallo-way, 156 Fed. 504; Davis v. Crompton, 85 C. C. A. 633, 158 Fed. 735; Re Atlanta News Pub. Co. 160 Fed. 519; Pridmore v. Puffer Mfg. Co. 90 C. C. A. 42, 163 Fed. 496; Re Fish Bros. Wagon Co. 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 433, 90 C. C. A. 427, 164 Fed. 553; Re Franklin, 94 C. C. A. 269, 168 Fed. 857; Walter A. Wood Co. v. Eubanks, 95 C. C. A. 273, 169 Fed. 929.

Mr. H. Gordon McCouch also for petitioner.

Mr. John G. Johnson for trustee.

Archbald, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The question involved in this case is the validity, as against the trustee, of certain pledges or attempted pledges of grain and flour on store at the mills of the bankrupt company. The company issued certificates, after the manner of a warehouse, of the quantity of these commodities on hand, on the strength of which, as collateral, loans that it was the intention of the legislature to provide that any and all persons might become legal warehousemen by simply receiving one particular piece of property in store, and issuing a receipt therefor." They accordingly held that a receipt issued by the secretary and manager of a railroad company to the company itself, for a part of its rolling stock, with an indorsement reciting that the property was pledged to pay a note given by the company to a third person, did not have the effect of a warehouse receipt, and, there being no visible change of possession of the property, that the note holder had no lien thereon superior to that of other creditors of the company.

In Kentucky Furnace Co. v. City Nat. Bank, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 28, 75 S. W. 848, a furnace company leased to another a portion of its premises, which was marked off and separated from the rest of the premises, piled thereon a quantity of pig iron, and received what purported to be a warehouse receipt therefor, which it pledged to a bank. The iron was then chalk marked with the initials of the name of the bank. It was held that, regardless of the question whether the lessee was a warehouseman within the meaning of the Kentucky statute, there was sufficient delivery to constitute a valid pledge.

In Porter v. Shotwell, 105 Mo. App. 177, 79 S. W. 723, a miller leased one of his private warehouses to another as a warehouse, and placed grain therein on which he received what purported to be a warehouse receipt. This grain he pledged by delivery of the receipt to secure money borrowed. The lessee put up his signs on the building and bins therein, but allowed the miller access at will to the building to care for his grain therein, though it does not appear that this was known to the pledgee. It was held that, whether the lessee could be called a "warehouseman" or not, he had possession of the grain, and was at lease a bailee, so that an order for the property and notice to the bailee was sufficient to transfer possession as against creditors of the pledgor.

In Yenni v. McNamee, 45 N. Y. 614, it was held that where the owner of petroleum took from his superintendent a receipt therefor in the form of a warehouse receipt, and transferred the receipt by indorsement to a bank as collateral for a loan, but the petroleum remained all the time unmoved in the owner's factory, the instrument was not a warehouse receipt, within the meaning of a statute making warehouse receipts transferable by indorsement, and providing that the indorsee shall be deemed to be the owner of the goods, but was in the nature of a chattel mortgage, and void as against creditors because not recorded.

In Tradesmen's Nat. Bank v. Thomas Kent Mfg. Co. 186 Pa. 556, 65 Am. St. Rep. 876, 40 Atl. 1018, it appeared that a clerk of a corporation leased a building in his own name, and called it a warehouse, but that the rent was paid by the corporation, which was the only depositor in the warehouse, and paid no compensation to the clerk for storage; that rents from subtenants were paid over by the clerk to the corporation; that no signs were on the building which indicated the clerk's proprietorship, that no books were kept by him except a book of blank receipts, that he had no office or desk in the warehouse, was seldom there, did not keep the key in his possession, and that servants of the corporation deposited and removed goods at will. It was held that there was no real warehouse, that the clerk was a mere employee or man of straw used by the corporation to cover its operations with its own goods, that a holder even in good faith, of a warehouse receipt issued by the clerk, could not hold the goods called for as against one who has actual possession of the goods on which he had made advances in the regular course of business.

A case very similar in its facts to the above is that of Moors v. Jagode, 195 Pa. 163, 45 Atl. 723, though it appeared that sometimes goods of others were stored. It was held that, whatever might be the character of the goods stored by third persons, so far as goods deposited by the real owner are concerned, it is not a warehouse at all, within the meaning of the warehouse act, and that a holder of a receipt issued by the assumed warehouse, for goods of its real proprietor stored therein, cannot hold as against a person who received actual possession of the goods for a valuable consideration, without knowledge of the claim of the real owner.

R. A. E.

were secured from time to time: the property, however, remaining in the possession and under control of the company, and there being nothing outside of the certificates to indicate the rights of the certificate holders to it. By agreement the property was sold by the trustee, and the money brought into court for distribution, where the pledges were held to be invalid for want of possession taken; the money being awarded to the trustee for the benefit of the estate. And thereupon this petition was prosecuted.

By the express provisions of the bankruptcy act, § 70 a, the trustee is vested with the title of the bankrupt by operation of law as of the date of the adjudication, to all (5) property which, prior to the filing of the petition, might have been levied upon and sold under judicial process against him; and is authorized (§ 70 e) to "avoid any transfer by the bankrupt of his property which any creditor of said bankrupt might have avoided." It is also provided (§ 67a) that "claims which, for want of record or for other reasons," would not be "valid liens, as against the claims of creditors of the bankrupt, shall not be liens against his estate;" and (b) "whenever a creditor is prevented from enforcing his rights as against a lien created or attempted to be created by his debtor, who afterwards becomes bankrupt, the trustee of the estate of such bankrupt shall be subrogated to and may enforce such rights of said creditor for the benefit of the estate."

It follows as a necessary consequence from these enactments, unless the plain terms of the statute are to be disregarded, that, if creditors in any given case would have the right to call in question the transaction, the trustee as their representative is entitled to do so also. Indeed, unless the rights of creditors are preserved and protected in some such way, bankruptcy, instead of being in their interest, as supposed, is an actual disadvantage, taking from them that which they otherwise would have. Nor is this representation confined to creditors who have liens on the property of the bankrupt, but applies equally to those by simple contract only, whose rights are no different except that, until judgment and execution, they are simply not in a position to assert them. Skilton v. Codington, 185 N. Y. 80, 113 Am. St. Rep. 885, 77 N. E. 790. It may be, as said in Thompson v. Fairbanks, 196 U. S. 516, 49 L. ed. 577, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306, that "the trustee takes the property in cases unaffected by fraud in the same plight and condition that the bankrupt himself held it;" or, as it is put in York Mfg. Co. v. Cassell, 201 U. S. 344, 50 L. ed. 782, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 481, that he "stands simply in the shoes of the bankrupt." But it is also true, as declared by the same high authority in First Nat. Bank v. Staake, 202 U. S. 141, 50 L. ed. 967, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 580, that "the rule that the trustee takes the estate of the bankrupt in the same plight as the bankrupt held it is not applicable to liens, which, although valid as to the bankrupt, are invalid as to creditors,"—a qualification which it is of the utmost importance to bear in mind here.

There is no analogy to the position of an assignee for the benefit of creditors under the state law, and the decisions relied on with that idea (Vandyke v. Christ, 7 Watts & S. 373; Wright v. Wigton, 84 Pa. 163; and Smith v. Equitable Trust Co. 215 Pa. 418, 64 Atl. 594) are misleading, and do not apply. An assignment is the voluntary act of the debtor, who can confer no authority which he does not himself have, and whose assignee is therefore limited to the same extent that he is; while a trustee in bankruptcy, as we have seen, takes title by operation of law, entirely independent of the bankrupt, and is expressly invested with the rights of creditors, which he is authorized to enforce. The position of a trustee in insolvency, on the other hand, is squarely in point, taking title by operation of law as he also does, and being similarly authorized to avoid the fraudulent acts of the insolvent in the interest of creditors. Tams v. Bullitt, 35 Pa. 308; Ruff v. Ruff, 85 Pa. 333, 336. "A voluntary assignee for the benefit of creditors," says Chief Justice Mitchell, in Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Clipper Pub. Co. 213 Pa. 207, 62 Atl. 841, "is a mere representative of the debtor, and is bound where he will be bound. Wright v. Wighton, 84 Pa. 163. But Tams v. Bullitt establishes the distinction that when the assignee, trustee, or whatever he may be called, derives his authority, not from the mere voluntary act of the assignor, but from the mandate of the law, even when enforced, by the language of that case, through a 'compulsory assignment' from the debtor, in the interest of the creditors, he represents the latter, and is vested with their powers."

It was accordingly held, in Bank of Alexandria v. Herbert, 8 Cranch, 36, 3 L. ed. 479, that the trustee of an insolvent, representing creditors, was entitled to take advantage of a defect in the recording of a mortgage, although the insolvent himself could not. "In reason," says Chief Justice Marshall, "there can be no difference between this suit, which asserts the right of the creditors in the mode prescribed by law, and an assertion of that right in their own names." And in line with this, in Moors v. Reading, 167 Mass. 322, 57 Am.

St. Rep. 460, 45 N. E. 760, and Drury v. Moors, 171 Mass. 252, 50 N. E. 618, a trustee in insolvency, as the representative of creditors, was allowed to recover personal property which had been inadequately pledged.

The same principle applies also to a receiver, appointed by court, upon a creditor's bill, who derives authority, as it is said, not at all from the debtor, but from the court, acting in the interest of creditors, and for the enforcement of their rights (Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Clipper Pub. Co. supra), a view to which this court is committed by the decision in H. K. Porter Co. v. Boyd, 96 C. C. A. 197, 171 Fed. 305, in which it was enforced in favor of the receiver of an insolvent corporation as against chattels held under a conditional sale. And so does it to the receiver of a national bank, who, in Casey v. Cavaroc, 96 U. S. 467, 24 L. ed. 779, was held entitled to maintain a bill to recover securities which had been agreed to be pledged, but failed of being so for want of delivery; the authority for this being most significantly drawn by analogy from that of an assignee (now trustee) in bankruptcy, a receiver to wind up a bank being regarded as occupying an equivalent position. "That an assignee in bankruptcy has this power," as is there said, "cannot well be doubted." And in Security Warehousing Co. v. Hand, 206 U. S. 415, 51 L. ed. 1117, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 720, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 789, a trustee in bankruptcy was allowed to avoid a pledge of personal property, invalid for want of delivery, on the ground that this could have been done by creditors, the very case which we have here.

"By § 70a," says Mr. Justice Peckham, "the trustee in bankruptcy is vested by operation of law with the title of the bankrupt to all property transferred by him in fraud of his creditors, and to all property which, prior to the filing of the petition, might have been levied upon and sold by judicial process against him; and by subdivision (e) of the same section, the trustee in bankruptcy may avoid any transfer by the bankrupt of his property, which any creditor of the bankrupt might avoid, and may recover the property so transferred or its value. Here are special provisions placing the title to the property transferred by fraud or otherwise, as mentioned, in the trustee in bankruptcy, and giving him the power to avoid the same."

And again: "The title to this property was in the knitting company. There had been no valid pledge of it, because the possession had been at all times in the knitting company, and it could have been levied upon and sold under judicial process against the knitting company at the time of the adjudication in bankruptcy. The security company had, of course, full knowledge that the knitting company, in fact at least, shared in the possession of the property. It was itself an actor, or it acquiesced in the arrangement under which it had, at most, but a partial possession, and even that was subject to the control of the knitting company."

Distinguishing the case of York Mfg. Co. v. Cassell and others of like character, preceding it, it is further said: "The case at bar bears no resemblance in its facts to the cases just cited. There was no valid disposition of the property in the case before us, or any valid lien. The so-called 'warehouse receipts' issued by the warehousing company to the knitting company, upon the facts of this case, gave no lien under the law in Wisconsin, in which state they were issued. In such case this court follows the state court."

The present case arises out of an attempt by the bankrupt, a milling company, to pledge its property for money advanced, while still retaining possession and dominion over it. The form adopted was the issuing of so-called "certificates," for so much grain or flour in store at the mills,—these certificates being issued to different parties, as collateral to loans, somewhat like ordinary warehouse receipts. The grain in question was contained in tanks adjoining the mills, from which it was run to the mills to be made into flour, by means of a conveyer, by simply unlocking a slide. It was drawn upon freely in this way; no definite quantity being kept on hand, and there being no special arrangement with the holders of certificates with regard to it, except that it was not to be reduced beyond the amount called for thereby. The fact is that it was a shifting quantity, sometimes running far below this, although sometimes possibly above it; there being certificates outstanding at the time of bankruptcy for 138,000 bushels, while there were but 83,000 bushels on hand. The difference is ascribed to the depredation of insects, by which the grain became heated and lost weight; but it is difficult to see how 55,000 bushels could have disappeared in that way. Nor is it material, the fact being, from whatever cause, that it was not there.

The arrangement with regard to the flour was somewhat similar. It was stored in barrels in the basement of the company's warehouse, under the charge of the superintendent, in three sections, two of 200 barrels each, and one of 800 barrels, divided off from each other by upright posts, and all bearing a certain common brand. There was also a sign that it was not to be touched by an employee; but, aside from what this might vaguely imply, there was nothing to indicate that there was any control or ownership over it other than that of the bankrupt company in whose possession it was. Differing from the grain, there was no change in the quantity of the flour from the start, and certificates for the whole 1,200 barrels were issued to the one bank.

It is clear, upon this showing, that the certificate holders have no case. The certificates, admittedly, cannot be sustained as warehouse receipts, however, they may bear that form. A man cannot make a warehouse of himself as to his own goods. Tradesmen's Nat. Bank v. Thomas Kent Mfg. Co. 186 Pa. 556, 65 Am. St. Rep. 876, 40 Atl. 1018; Security Warehousing Co. v. Hand, supra. Neither, there having been no delivery of the property, was there a valid pledge. The lien of a pledge, undoubtedly, is preserved in bankruptcy. Hiscock v. Varick Bank, 206 U. S. 28, 51 L. ed. 945, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681. But to have this so, the essentials of a pledge must appear, to which possession is indispensable; there being no lien, as there is no pledge, without it. "The requirement of possession," says Mr. Justice Bradley, in Casey v. Cavaroc, 96 U. S. 467, 490, 24 L. ed. 779, 788, "is an inexorable rule of law, adopted to prevent fraud and deception, for, if the debtor remains in possession, the law presumes that those who deal with him do so on the faith of his being the unqualified owner of the goods."

It is true that a symbolical or constructive delivery is recognized in favor of articles of great bulk or difficulty of handling; but the policy of the law is against the relaxation of the rule. Sholes v. Western Asphalt Block & Tile Co. 183 Pa. 528, 38 Atl. 1029. And even as to these there must be a surrender of dominion, and a setting apart of the property with such distinctive marks as will serve to indicate that, while in the apparent possession of the owner, it is not in fact his. Philadelphia Warehouse Co. v. Winchester (C. C.) 156 Fed. 600. As is well said by Judge Bradford in that case, there must be enough to negative ostensible ownership,—nothing of which is to be found here. The grain in question was a shifting quantity, sometimes more and sometimes less; the number of bushels called for by the several certificates being also simply an undivided portion of the general mass. No specific part was set aside to any particular holder, and much less was there anything to distinguish that it was his. It was his on paper; that is all. And he had to take his chances, whether it would be all there when he wanted it, as in the end, from whatever cause, it was not. Most significant, however, of all, it was open at all times to be drawn upon, as it freely was, to be manufactured into flour; and it was thus not only retained in the immediate and undistinguished possession, but in the complete and unrestricted dominion and control of the owners, who, to meet the needs of their business, converted and sold it at one end faster than it was replaced at the other. This never has been and never will be regarded, by the most liberal construction, as meeting the requirement of delivery, so as to create a valid pledge.

Nor is the case of the flour practically any better, although in some respects not quite so bad. It is true that it was set apart by itself in the basement of the company's warehouse, and that the original 1,200 barrels were not broken in upon or disturbed. It was also marked not to be touched by the employees, and was under the special charge of the superintendent, although not as the agent of the certificate holders, so far as appears,—whatever advantage, under the circumstances, that might be. Drury v. Moors, 171 Mass. 252, 50 N. E. 618. But the vital thing lacking, the same as in the case of the grain, was that there was nothing to negative the apparent ownership of the bankrupt company, in whose possession and under whose control, to all intents and purposes, it was. Without this, it was presumptively, as it was actually, theirs, subject only to such rights as against the company, as the certificate holders might be entitled to assert before the rights of creditors had attached, with which, at this time, we are not concerned. To preserve the rights of such holders as against creditors, either by way of equitable lien or pledge, it had to be openly and clearly indicated that the flour was theirs, without which the mere storing of it, by itself, in the basement, which in effect was all that was done, was of no avail. Sholes v. Western Asphalt Block & Tile Co. supra; Barlow v. Fox, 203 Pa. 114, 52 Atl. 57; Moors v. Reading, 167 Mass. 322, 57 Am. St. Rep. 460, 45 N. E. 760; Drury v. Moors, supra; Casey v. Cavaroc, 96 U. S. 467, 24 L. ed. 779; Security Warehousing Co. v. Hand, supra; Adams v. Merchants' Nat. Bank (C. C.) 9 Biss. 396, 2 Fed. 174; Thurber v. Oliver (C. C.) 26 Fed. 227; Re Gebbie & Co. (D. C.) 167 Fed. 609.

In Sholes v. Western Asphalt Block & Tile Co. supra, there was an attempted pledge of asphalt blocks as collateral security for a note, the blocks being stored in the company's yard. Neither at the time of making the note, nor afterwards, as it is stated in the opinion, was anything done by either of the parties to carry the pledge into effect. The pledgeor did not deliver the goods, nor did the pledgees remove or take possession of them, either actually or constructively. The goods were not even separated, marked, or in any way distinguished from the unpledged assets of the company, and it was held, as against a receiver under a creditor's bill, that the pledge could not be sustained. "The rule," says Fell, J., "is that delivery is essential to the contract of pledge. It is true that the rule has been relaxed in cases where, because of the nature of the thing pledged or for other reasons, the requirement of delivery would be such a hardship as to defeat the purpose of the contract; but the policy of the law is against such relaxation, and it has been mainly confined to cases in which the goods have remained in the possession of the pledgeor as agent of the pledgee, under an express agreement to that effect. Even in such cases the want of constructive or symbolical delivery, or of some act whereby the goods pledged may be distinguished and set apart from the other goods in the possession of the pledgeor, has not been excused. Here we have no evidence of such an agreement, or of anything in the nature of a constructive delivery; and to relax the rule for any other reason, sufficiently to include such a case as this, would be to abrogate it entirely."

This case is of especial importance, not only as determining the necessity, even as to bulky articles, for, at least, a constructive delivery, in order to create a valid pledge, and what is requisite to make that out, but also as emphasizing the fact that, under the local law, the rights of general creditors, although having no lien, and only represented by a receiver, are superior, and must prevail over those of a pledgee who has never had possession; it being to these rights, as we have seen, that a trustee in bankruptcy, representing creditors, succeeds.

So, in Barlow v. Fox, supra, there was an attempted pledge, by bill of sale, of the personal property in a hotel; but there was no delivery of the goods, and the pledgeors having become bankrupt, the trustee took possession and made a sale, and the title of the purchaser was sustained, as against the pledgee. This case is squarely in point; the pledge being held invalid as against the trustee in bankruptcy, representing creditors, there having been no delivery, constructive or otherwise, of the goods pledged, —showing how the question is regarded by the state courts, which, according to Security Warehousing Co. v. Hand, supra, is controlling here.

In Girard L. Ins. Annuity & T. Co. v. Mellor, 156 Pa. 579, 27 Atl. 662, Barker 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Brothers & Company, bankers, of Philadelphia, desiring to secure those whose money they had taken for subscriptions to the stock of a company which was being formed abroad, inclosed in an envelope certain notes and bonds which, with a list of the persons intended to be protected, they placed in a tin box which they confided to the custody of a safe deposit company; the package being indorsed as containing securities held as collateral against the subscription deposits made. Having shortly afterwards failed and made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, it was held that, as against such assignment, the attempted declaration of trust was of no avail. "As a general rule in this state," says Chief Justice Sterrett, "a debtor cannot, as against his creditors, assign personal property as security, etc., and at the same time retain the possession thereof as theretofore. Possession must accompany the transfer as an essential part thereof. If the property is permitted to remain in the exclusive possession and control of the assignor, the transaction, while good as against himself, is a constructive or legal fraud upon his creditors, and may be so treated by them. To hold that exclusive possession may be retained by the debtor provided he agrees to hold as trustee, until the same is demanded by his creditors, or until default is made, would be to permit that to be done secretly and by indirection which the law condemns when done directly and openly. This principle is so firmly grounded in our jurisprudence that no court of equity should lend its aid in the enforcement of a transaction which is not in harmony with the settled law on that subject. We think the transaction in question clearly belongs to that class."

This case is particularly significant in that creditors were represented by an assignee by deed of voluntary assignment, who is supposed to stand squarely in the shoes of the assignor, but as against whom the attempted pledge was nevertheless declared void.

It is said, however, that in First Nat. Bank v. Pennsylvania Trust Co. 60 C. C. A. 100, 124 Fed. 968, a pledge of steel billets was sustained by this court, as against a trustee in bankruptcy, under circumstances similar to those of the case in hand; but, while the billets there remained on the premises of the pledgeor, they were marked by signs posted on the several piles, giving notice of the claim of the bank, which clearly distinguishes it from anything which we have here. "To complete its title or lien as against creditors and strangers," says Judge Kirkpatrick, "the bank was not obliged to take the billets into actual possession; it was sufficient to give notice of their lien or change of ownership. This they did by posting on the billets, which were in distinct and separate piles, the signs to which reference has been made." There was thus in that case an assertion of lien in favor of the pledgee, and a denial of ownership in the pledgeor, which entirely satisfied the law, and made the pledge good,—nothing of which is to be found here.

The case of Davis v. Crompton, 85 C. C. A. 633, 158 Fed. 735, is also relied on, but is not in point. The transaction which was there sustained was a conditional sale in which, by express agreement, the title never passed, being retained by the vendor until payment in full was made. That this is a valid stipulation in many jurisdictions is shown by Harkness v. Russell, 118 U. S. 663, 30 L. ed. 285, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 51, where the subject is fully discussed; and the property having been accepted upon these terms, it was held that the trustee, the same as the bankrupt, was bound thereby. But that is very different from anything which we have here, where not only the possession, but the title, was in the bankrupt company; there being nothing but the agreement that the property should stand pledged in their hands,—a secret lien which the law does not permit.

It is, however, contended that, there being an intent to pledge, an equitable lien was at least created, which entitles the certificate holders to the fund. It is difficult to see how a transaction which, for want of delivery, is ineffective as a pledge, can be pieced out so as to make it hold as something else. There would be little left to the established doctrine with regard to pledges, if that was the case; and it is somewhat singular that, in all the litigation where pledges of personal property have been upset for want of a delivery, no one should have discovered this easy way out. This is not to say that an equitable lien under some circumstances may not exist; but only that there is nothing to support it here. It never arises or is enforced except against property in the hands of a party to the original transaction out of which it is claimed to grow, or his voluntary representatives, or one who has notice of it and is affected with it as a superior right,—within which all the cases cited in support of it will be found to fall. 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 36. It is not good as against a trustee in bankruptcy, taking title in the interest of creditors, by operation of law, as is the case here. Re Olzendam Co. (C. C.) 117 Fed. 179; Re Liberty Silk Co. (D. C.) 152 Fed. 844; Casey v. Cavaroc, 96 U. S. 407, 491, 24 L. ed. 779, 789; Duplex Printing Press Co. v. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Clipper Pub. Co. 213 Pa. 207, 62 Atl. 841.

There is nothing to the contrary of this in Hurley v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 213 U. S. 126, 53 L. ed. 729, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 466. True, an equitable right or lien was there recognized as against a trustee in bankruptcy, but upon materially different facts. The railroad there, in whose favor it was held to exist, was a party to the tripartite agreement by which the bankrupt acquired the right to mine the coal against which it was enforced, which he agreed to mine and deliver to the railroad at a certain price; the railroad, on failure to comply, having the right to enter and avoid the lease. It was with these relations to the property that the railroad, anticipating its payments, advanced money to the bankrupt for coal not yet mined, in order to enable the company to go on with its mining business; and it was in return for this that the delivery of a certain amount of coal was claimed and allowed. The transaction, as it was said, was not one of ordinary borrowing and lending on credit or security, but constituted, from an equitable standpoint, a pledge or hypothecation of the unmined coal to the extent of the advancements made, with which, in view of the reciprocal rights and relations of the parties, the trustee, equally with the bankrupt, was bound to comply. It is manifest that this has nothing in common with the case in hand.

The question of equitable lien is met and effectively disposed of by the court of appeals of the seventh circuit, in Security Warehousing Co. v. Hand, 74 C. C. A. 186, 143 Fed. 32, affirmed in 206 U. S. 415, 51 L. ed. 1117, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 720, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 789, which cannot be distinguished from the present case. "The appellant lenders [certificate holders here] finally assert," says Baker, J., "that, if they have neither the negotiable receipts of a public warehouseman, nor a pledge through an unequivocal possession by their agent, the security company, nevertheless they have 'equitable liens' which entitle them to the possession of the property as against the trustees. The trustee succeeds, as of the date of the adjudication, not only to the bankrupt's title and possessory right to the property, but also to the right of the bankrupt's creditors to assert that the title and possessory right as to them is in the bankrupt. Sections 70a (4) and (5), § 70e. . . . Liens that remain undisturbed are those that were good against both the bankrupt and his creditors immediately preceding the adjudication. . . . The conclusion results not merely from a consideration of the nature of the trustee's succession, but as well from the inhibitions of the act. Section 67a (30 Stat. at L. 564, chap. 541, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3449) vitiates as liens 'all claims which, for want of record or for other reasons,' the bankrupt's creditors might have avoided as liens; that is, no secret liens or equities shall prevail against the trustee that were not good against the general unsecured creditors represented by the trustee. Section 67d protects 'liens given or accepted in good faith . . . and for a present consideration, which have been recorded according to law, if record thereof was necessary in order to impart notice.' The liens thus saved are liens, not promises to give liens, not equitable claims that what ought to have been done shall be considered done, but liens perfected according to law. 'Notice' as well as 'a present consideration' is necessary. If a chattel mortgage be given in good faith and for a present consideration, recording is not obligatory; but the imparting of notice is. Recording is one way; another is actual and continued change of possession. If a pledge be similarly given, recording is not 'necessary in order to impart notice,' because no provision has been made that a record of the fact shall be notice of the fact; but what is 'necessary' in order to impart notice' is the delivery of exclusive and unequivocal possession. We think that § 67d does not change § 67a into the meaning that 'claims which, for want of record or for other reasons,' are not good liens as against creditors, are good liens as against the estate, if the lender advanced his money without any actual intent to defraud unsecured creditors. He is chargeable with the constructive intent which is attributed to secrecy."

This case was affirmed, it is to be noted, and while this particular feature of it was not alluded to, except in passing, it was not disturbed. Much less did anyone undertake to urge before the Supreme Court that what was not good as a pledge for want of delivery might be sustained as an equitable lien. It leaves no place, in our judgment, for the idea which is now advanced, that any such claim can be asserted as to personal property ineffectually pledged, to the detriment of general creditors acting through a trustee in bankruptcy or other representative taking title in their interest by operation of law.

The decision under review is made to rest upon this case, by which, as we view it, it is fully sustained and should therefore be affirmed.

Buffington, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

In the court below the Fourth Street National Bank of Philadelphia asserted a lien on the proceeds of certain wheat in bulk and on 1,200 barrels of flour of the Millbourne Mills Company, the bankrupt, which lien it claimed to have as security for loans made by the bank to said company. That court denied such lien, and awarded the fund in question to the trustee in bankruptcy. Thereupon the bank filed this petition to review. The facts of the case are that more than four months prior to its bankruptcy, the Millbourne Mills Company obtained loans from the bank on notes, and at the same time gave as security therefor its indorsed certificates, which, in the case of the flour, were as follows:

Flour Certificate
Millbourne Mills Company.
Philadelphia, March 8, 1907.

No. 1.

This is to certify that Millbourne Mills Company has stored in its warehouse, basement floor, section A, . . . 200 barrels of flour, branded U, . . . which will be subject to its order, and only deliverable upon the indorsement and surrender of this certificate.

George B. Hicks, Jr.,

Supt. of Warehouse.

Countersigned: R. S. Dewees, President.
Flour Certificate.

This flour was branded "U" on the barrels which were stored in a basement warehouse of the mill. The flour was divided into marked-off sections by upright posts, in each of which a certain number of barrels were stored. These were described by marks, and were further identified by the exact number of barrels in the separate certificates which were issued for each lot. By agreement of the parties, the flour remained in the mills company's warehouse and in the special custody of Hicks, its superintendent. After the certificates were issued, a notice was posted, "None of this flour to be touched by any employee," and, pursuant to the agreement, no flour was used; but it remained intact until after bankruptcy, when, on assertion of a lien thereon by the bank, it was, by agreement of the parties, sold by the trustee, and the proceeds, which were less than the bank's notes, substituted for the flour.

Two questions arise in this case: First, as between the mills company and the bank, did the latter, under the law of Pennsylvania, at the time of bankruptcy, have an equitable lien on this flour? Secondly, if so, did the trustee take the flour subject to such lien? The first question is to be settled by the Pennsylvania state decisions. "The questions of the extent and validity of the pledge were local questions, and the decisions of the court of New York are to be followed by this court." Hiscock v. Varick Bank, 206 U. S. 28, 51 L. ed. 945, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681, and cases cited. The second question depends on the bankrupt law and Federal decisions.

In taking up the first question, it should be noted in limine that the case before us is one of entire good faith. It was a business transaction of unquestioned integrity and supposed efficacy. It was not the sort of transaction involved in Security Warehousing Co. v. Hand, 206 U. S. 415, 51 L. ed. 1117, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 720, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 789, where not only was the attempted pledge void under the laws of Wisconsin, but was one the Supreme Court designated as "a mere pretense, a sham," which the circuit court of appeals, in Security Warehousing Co. v. Hand, 74 C. C. A. 186, 143 Fed. 32, said, "with regard to Wisconsin law, was a fraud in fact," and which this court, in Davis v. Crompton, 85 C. C. A. 633, 158 Fed. 742, stated was "a fraud in fact."

Before turning to the Pennsylvania decisions, we note that equitable liens are a generally recognized means of security, and their nature is thus defined in 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1235: "The doctrine may be stated, in its most general form, that every express executory agreement in writing, whereby the contracting party sufficiently indicates an intention to make some particular property, real or personal, or fund, therein described or identified, a security for a debt or other obligation, . . . creates an equitable lien upon the property so indicated, which is enforceable. . . . In order, however, that a lien may arise in pursuance of this doctrine, the agreement must deal with some particular property, either by identifying it, or by so describing it that it can be identified, and must indicate with sufficient clearness and intent that the property so described or rendered capable of identification is to be held, given, or transferred as security for the obligation."

This statement, cited and approved in Walker v. Brown, 165 U. S. 654, 41 L. ed. 865, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 453, is in accord with numerous Federal decisions. Ketchum v. St. Louis, 101 U. S. 306, 25 L. ed. 999; Fourth Street Nat. Bank v. Yardley, 165 U. S. 635, 41 L. ed. 855, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 439; Burdon Cent. Sugar Ref. Co. v. Payne, 167 U. S. 127, 42 L. ed. 105, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 754; Philadelphia Warehouse Co. v. Winchester (C. C.) 156 Fed. 600; Bridgeport Electric & Ice Co. v. Maeder, 18 C. C. A. 451, 30 U. S. App. 580, 72 Fed. 115; Clark v. Sigua Iron Co. 26 C. C. A. 423, 39 U. S. App. 753, 81 Fed. 312; Sheffield 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Furnace Co. v. Witherow, 149 U. S. 578, 37 L. ed. 835, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 936.

The characteristics of an equitable lien thus generally recognized obtain also in Pennsylvania; but the decisions of that state go farther, and hold that where the property pledged is sufficiently designated, retention of the property by the pledgeor by mutual consent does not, as between pledgeor and pledgee, affect the validity of such lien. The case of Vandyke v. Christ, 7 Watts & S. 373, in which Chief Justice Gibson held that retention of property in a contract of sale, while fraudulent as to creditors by Stat. 13 Eliz., and as to purchasers by Stat. 27 Eliz., was not fraudulent between the parties at common law, is the law of that state to-day, and is followed in Wright v. Wigton, 84 Pa. 163; Smith v. Equitable Trust Co. 215 Pa. 420, 64 Atl. 594, and other cases. And that retention of the pledge by the pledgeor, where this is by the agreement of the parties, will not, as between pledgeor and pledgee, defeat an equitable lien, is held in Collins's Appeal, 107 Pa. 605, 52 Am. Rep. 479, followed in Wallace's Appeal, 104 Pa. 564, where the court, referring to the necessity of a change of possession, said: "There is, however, a class of cases in which it is disregarded. They are cases in which the possession of the pledge is, by agreement of the parties, to remain with the pledgeor. It is held that, as the pledgeor is bound notwithstanding this provision of the contract, so are all bound who claim under him, except purchasers for value and without notice."

After a discussion of numerous cases where equitable liens were enforced, although possession was retained by the owner, the court summed its conclusions by saying: "The foregoing cases all relate to liens upon specific chattels, as to which it is almost universally necessary that possession should accompany the pledge in the hands of the pledgee, to validate the lien; but we have seen that this requirement may be dispensed with, if such is the agreement of the parties, and the lien of the pledgee may be enforced by virtue of the contract."

And in Sholes v. Western Asphalt Block & Tile Co. 183 Pa. 528, 38 Atl. 1029, where there was no separation or identification of the pledge, and it was held there was no lien, yet the exception was recognized where "the goods have remained in possession of the pledgeor as agent of the pledgee, under an express agreement to that effect."

From this it will be seen that, under the Pennsylvania decisions, the bank had an equitable lien on this flour, and had had it for more than four months prior to bankruptcy, and had the mills company prior to bankruptcy sought to dispose of the flour, the bank could have by bill enjoined it from so doing, and on maturity of the note have enforced its lien. Indeed, the validity of the lien under the Pennsylvania decisions was conceded in the opinion of the court below, saying: "The pledge is, no doubt, good as between the pledgor and pledgee in Pennsylvania, as against creditors who have never levied."

The first question must therefore, in accordance with the state decisions, be answered in the affirmative. Such being the case, we then have the status, not of a preference or lien within four months of bankruptcy, but of a lien valid under the state law prior to the bankruptcy, existing for more than four months, and which no provision of the bankrupt law invalidates.

The second question, viz., If so, did the trustee take the flour subject to such lien? must, under the Federal decisions (York Mfg. Co. v. Cassell, 201 U. S. 344, 50 L. ed. 782, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 481; First Nat. Bank v. Pennsylvania Trust Co. 60 C. C. A. 100, 124 Fed. 968; Davis v. Crompton, 85 C. C. A. 633, 158 Fed. 735, be also answered in the affirmative, for it is clear that the trustee in bankruptcy simply succeeded to the rights of the bankrupt, and, as conceded in the petitioner's brief, took the property "subject to all of the equities impressed upon it in the hands of the bankrupt."

It is contended, however, that the force of these decisions is qualified by the late case of First Nat. Bank v. Staake, 202 U. S. 149, 50 L. ed. 970, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 580, where it was said: "The rule that the trustee takes the estate of the bankrupt in the same plight as the bankrupt held it is not applicable to liens which, although valid as to the bankrupt, are invalid as to creditors."

But this language, which the court quoted from the opinion of the circuit court of appeals (60 C. C. A. 547, 133 Fed. 717), must be read in connection with the subject-matter of that case. That subject was an attachment, a "lien created by or obtained in or pursuant to any suit or proceeding at law or in equity," which § 67, clause c, makes void. Under that statute, it was sought to subrogate the trustee to the right of the attaching creditor. It was of such a lien, one obtained by legal process, and which, be it observed, the statute itself declared void, that it was in effect said that the rule laid down in Hewitt v. Berlin Mach. Works, 194 U. S. 296, 48 L. ed. 986, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 690, and York Mfg. Co. v. Cassell, supra, that the trustee takes the estate in the same plight that the bankrupt held it, had no application, because the lien before them was by the act itself declared invalid. It will thus be seen 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that the decisions noted are not affected by what was said in First Nat. Bank v. Staake, supra.

It remains to discuss the wheat. The mills company was engaged in manufacturing flour, and to do so it was forced to carry large amounts of wheat in bulk and in bins. In order to prevent this wheat from overheating, it had to be shifted occasionally from bin to bin. At times it was necessary to withdraw parts of the wheat for grinding. To enable it to purchase and carry this wheat in reserve, the mills company borrowed from the bank on notes, and at the same time delivered to it indorsed wheat certificates in the following form:

Grain Certificate.

Millbourne Mills Company.

No. 2700. Philadelphia, 1906.

This is to certify that Millbourne Mills Company has stored in its fireproof grain storage tanks 1,000 bushels No. 2 Penna. winter wheat, unloaded from cars No. —, which will be subject to its order, and only deliverable upon the indorsement and surrender of this certificate.

Benj. P. Hoopes, Supt. of Elevators.

Countersigned: R. S. Dewees, President.

These certificates, as originally issued, covered grain in particular tanks for each certificate. The tanks adjoined the mill property and were connected with it by a slide or conveyer. This slide was locked, and by agreement of the parties was kept under lock and key by an employee of the mills company. It was agreed between the parties that the mills company could not withdraw any of this wheat without first paying enough of the loan to effect a release, or furnishing other wheat to take its place. This was always done. Later it was found necessary to shift the grain from tank to tank, as the inconvenience to all parties of holding the wheat in individual tanks for individual certificates was found impracticable. To meet this practical necessity, and in good faith, the agreement was therefore modified, so that all the certificates were to cover all the grain in all the tanks of the storage system. As none but the certificates here in question were issued, and as these, owing to loss and depreciation, were, at the date of bankruptcy, more than sufficient to cover all the grain in the bins, no question of identity arose. Indeed, nothing further remained to be done by the lienor at any time, so far as the identity of the pledge was concerned. The agreement as above was kept, the grain remained under lock and key, and as withdrawals were made corresponding reductions were made on the certificates.

To me these propositions are clear:

First. It was the intent of both parties in good faith that the bank should have a lien on these goods, and the bank parted with its money on the strength of that intent.

Second. That, under the decisions of the supreme court of Pennsylvania, an equitable lien on identified personalty is good between pledgeor and pledgee where, by agreement of the parties, possession is retained by the former.

Third. That the trustee in bankruptcy took no higher rights than the pledgeor had, but simply succeeded to them.

Fourth. That there is no provision in the bankrupt act which invalidates this equitable lien, which was acquired more than four months before bankruptcy.

Because the effect of this decision is to make the rights of a trustee rise higher than the bankrupt's, by thus striking down a lien which was valid in Pennsylvania, and which is not invalidated by any provision of the bankrupt act, I am constrained to record my dissent.

Petition for writ of certiorari abandoned.

SOUTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

HENRY HOFFMAN, Appt.,

v.

ELLEN MARIE HOFFMAN.

(— S. D. —, 127 N. W. 478.)

Contempt — finding of facts — necessity.

A finding of facts showing that accused was guilty of contempt as matter of law is necessary to support a judgment adjudging one guilty of contempt for failure to pay alimony and attorney's fees in a divorce proceeding.

(June 27, 1910.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Minnehaha County adjudging him guilty of contempt of court in a divorce proceeding. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Null & Royhl, for appellant:

Imprisonment does not follow in civil contempt unless it is found by the court that the party has the ability to comply with the order of the court.

Steller v. Steller, 25 Mich. 159; Lewis v. Lewis, 80 Ga. 706, 12 Am. St. Rep. 281, 6 S. E. 918; Carlton v. Carlton, 44 Ga. 216; Pain v. Pain, 80 N. C. 322; Blake v. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

People, 80 Ill. 11; Ex parte Cottrell, 59 Cal. 417; Ex parte Todd, 119 Cal. 57, 50 Pac. 1071; Newhouse v. Newhouse, 14 Or. 290, 12 Pac. 422; Galland v. Galland, 44 Cal. 475, 13 Am. Rep. 167; O'Callaghan v. O'Callaghan, 69 Ill. 552; Peel v. Peel, 50 Iowa, 521; Allen v. Allen, 72 Iowa, 502, 34 N. W. 303; Re Wilson, 75 Cal. 580, 17 Pac. 698; Hurd v. Hurd, 63 Minn. 443, 65 N. W. 728.

It was error to commit without finding appellant able to comply.

Wright v. Wright, 74 Wis. 439, 43 N. W. 145; Re Bissell, 40 Mich. 63; Ex parte Silvia, 123 Cal. 293, 96 Am. St. Rep. 58, 55 Pac. 988.

Messrs. Muller & Conway, for respondent:

An award of temporary alimony to a wife in a suit for divorce in an interlocutory order collateral to the divorce proceedings, which the court has jurisdiction to enforce by contempt proceedings on the husband's refusal to comply therewith.

Schuele v. Schuele, 57 Ill. App. 189; O'Callaghan v. O'Callaghan, 69 Ill. 554.

Imprisonment to compel compliance with the order of the court is authorized.

State v. Knight, 3 S. D. 509, 44 Am. St. Rep. 809, 54 N. W. 412, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 221.

Whiting, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from the judgment of the circuit court adjudging the appellant guilty of contempt of said court, and which judgment provided for his punishment by

Note. — Necessity of finding facts before adjudging one guilty of contempt.

This question seems to resolve itself always into the question whether or not the judgment finding the defendant guilty of contempt or the order committing him for the offense should contain a statement of the facts upon which he was adjudged guilty. This has been settled in most jurisdictions by statutes requiring one or both orders to contain such statement of facts, and therefore only those cases in which it does not appear in the opinions that there was any statute governing the question will be included in this note. It may also be stated here that the note does not aim to include the question as to what facts should be set out.

In Shore v. People, 26 Colo. 516, 59 Pac. 49, it was held that under the statute regulating the procedure in cases of contempt, it was only in contempts committed in the immediate view and presence of the court or judge in chambers, that is, in direct contempts, that it was necessary for the judgment to recite the facts constituting the contempt, and that where the contempt imprisonment. The action out of which this matter arose was one brought for divorce, in which said action the appellant was plaintiff. In said action the court, upon proper notice, had entered an order requiring this appellant to pay certain sums by way of temporary alimony, suit money, and attorneys' fees, and the appellant, having neglected to make the payments as ordered, was brought to the court upon an order to show cause, requiring him to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt owing to his failure to obey said order of such court directing him to pay alimony and suit moneys. Upon the return of such order to show cause, the appellant submitted his own and another affidavit to substantiate the claim of appellant that he was financially unable to obey the said order requiring such money payments. Upon such hearing on said order to show cause, the court rendered a judgment, as hereinbefore noted, finding the appellant in contempt and punishing him by imprisonment. There appears to have been no separate findings of fact made by the court; and the judgment itself, after setting forth the jurisdiction matters, so far as it purported to find facts showing the appellant guilty of contempt, was in words as follows: "And the court having read the affidavits of the plaintiff in reply to said order to show cause as aforesaid, and heard arguments of counsel in behalf of the plaintiff and in behalf of the defendant, and being fully advised in the matter and having was not committed in the immediate view and presence of the court in chambers, in other words, in cases of constructive contempt, it was not necessary that their judgments should recite the facts, since in such cases an affidavit must be presented setting forth the facts constituting the contempt. The court said: "The only object of requiring these facts to be shown somewhere in the record is to enable the reviewing court to see whether or not they amount to a contempt, and thus to determine from them the jurisdiction of the trial court. And if the procedure prescribed requires an affidavit first to be presented to the trial court, containing these facts as the foundation of the proceeding, the court of review can, and does, look to the statement in the affidavit for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the court below had jurisdiction, and it is not necessary to repeat the statement in the judgment."

And in Rawson v. Rawson, 35 Ill. App. 505, in which the contempt was a direct one, it was held that where the only record that was in fact made, or that the law required to be made, was the order of commitment, and where judgments in contempt were subject to review on error, the reasonable and just rule was that the order of commitment should state the facts or conduct constituting the contempt, and that a failure to make such statement would work the reversal of the judgment.

And in Ex parte Wright, 65 Ind. 504, it was held that in rendering a judgment adjudging a party guilty of a direct contempt and in making up the record the causes of the contempt should be stated, but whether or not this should be done in cases of indirect contempt the court failed to state.

And in Ogden v. State, 3 Neb. (Unof.) 886, 93 N. W. 203, it was held to be essential in proceedings to punish one for contempt committed in the presence of the court, that it should affirmatively appear on the face of the record, "with all the certainty of an indictment or information, that an offense had been committed." Accordingly, where the accused was found guilty of using insulting and menacing language to the court during the trial of a case, and the record, while so stating, failed to set out the language used by the defendant, it was held to be insufficient to sustain a judgment of conviction.

And in Re Odum, 133 N. C. 250, 45 S. E. 569, 14 Am. Crim. Rep. 296, an order adjudging one guilty of contempt was reversed, which, though it recited as a basis of the accusation certain acts of the defendant, failed to find certain other facts necessary to bring it within a statute defining contempts.

And in State v. Galloway, 5 Coldw. 326, 98 Am. Dec. 404, while it was declared that at common law a general judgment of contempt, that is, a judgment not specifying the particular cause upon which the contempt was founded, was valid, the court thought it proper to depart from this rule to the extent of requiring the judgment for an indirect contempt to state upon its face the cause of contempt alleged, as the ground of jurisdiction on which the judgment must rest for its validity.

So, in Re McCarty, 154 Cal. 534, 98 Pac. 540, in which the contempt was an indirect one, it was held that the record of the court upon which the party was adjudged guilty of contempt should show upon its face the facts upon which the judicial action was based and upon which its jurisdiction depended. It may be said, in passing, that California now has a statute requiring an order adjudging one guilty of a direct contempt to state the facts upon which it is based.

And in the following cases, it was held that an order adjudging a person guilty of contempt should set forth the facts upon which the adjudication was made: People ex rel. Field v. Turner, 1 Cal. 152; Ex parte Henshaw, 73 Cal. 486, 15 Pac. 110; Crites v. State, 74 Neb. 687, 105 N. W. 469; Albany City Bank v. Schermerhorn, 9 Paige, 372, 38 Am. Dec. 551; Roncoroni v. Gross, 92 App. Div. 366, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1113; Bergin v. Deering, 70 Hun, 381, 24 N. Y. Supp. 35; Re Deaton, 105 N. C. 59, 11 S. E. 244; Ex parte Robertson, 27 Tex. App. 634, 11 Am. St. Rep. 207, 11 S. W. 609; Ex duly considered the same, and it further appearing that the plaintiff has refused to comply with the conditions of said order of February 1, 1910, and that he is now in contempt of court and guilty of disobedience of said order." Appellant upon this appeal assigns as error the omission of the court to make any finding as to the ability of appellant to comply with the court's order requiring the said money payments; also, the adjudging of the appellant to be guilty of contempt without a finding that appellant was financially able to comply with the court's order. Certain other assignments are saved in the record; but, in the view which we take of this case, it is unnecessary for the same to be considered.

The sole question for our consideration herein is whether the court has the right to adjudge a party to be in contempt of court without in any manner making findings of fact showing as a matter of law that the party accused was in fact guilty of contempt. A similar question arose in the case of Re Deaton, 105 N. C. 59, 11 S. E. 244, wherein a party had been adjudged guilty of contempt for acts not committed in the presence of the court; and in relation to the point before us the court said: "It is the duty of the court in passing sentence for contempt when committed in the presence of the court, though no appeal lies, to spread its findings of fact upon the record. Code, § 650. The reasons therefor are given in State v. Mott, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 449, and cases cited above. For a stronger reason, . . . [they] should be set out in this class of contempts in which the party is entitled to have the matter reviewed by an appeal. The judgment of the mayor, as set out in the record, is fatally defective as to the allegation of publishing grossly inaccurate accounts of judicial proceedings, in that it does not set out and recite in what the publication consisted. It is true that in the notice to show cause a certain article is charged and set out as published by the respondents. But in the judgment, there is no specific finding that such article" was published by the defendant, nor, if a part, what was proven. "It can only be inferred. This is not sufficient. The article must be set out in the judgment, and its publication, and the intent with which it was published, must be found as facts by the court." In North Carolina there is no statute requiring findings in contempt proceedings where the contempt charged was not committed in the presence of the court, and in our own state we have no such provision, but in this state we have, in reference to con-parte Kearby, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 531, 34 S. W. 635.

But in the following cases the rule was relaxed so as to allow a judgment of contempt to stand, though it failed to set out the facts on which it was based, where other parts of the record sufficiently showed such facts:

Thus, in Fischer v. Hayes, 19 Blatchf. 13, 6 Fed. 63, in which the contempt was an indirect one, it was held that where the contempt alleged was set forth with sufficient particularity in the affidavits on which the motion of contempt was founded and in the report of the referee, and all the proceedings and the various orders were sufficiently connected by reference and recital to identify the contempt alleged, the order adjudging the defendant guilty need not recite the offense.

And in Clay v. Waters, 101 C. C. A. 645, 178 Fed. 385, in which the contempt was also an indirect one, it was held not to be a fatal objection to the judgment, that it did not recite the facts which constituted the contempt, where the petition alleged and the answer admitted them, and the judgment recited that the defendant was adjudged to stand in contempt as alleged in the petition.

And in Ex parte Smith, 40 Tex. Crim. Rep. 179, 49 S. W. 396, in which the alleged contempt consisted in an attempt to influence a juror, it was held that the order adjudging the contempt need not recite the offense, where the motion to punish for contempt recited the nature of the contempt, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) and the order following the motion showed that the defendant pleaded guilty to the charge contained therein.

And the case last reviewed was cited in Ex parte Cash, 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 623, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 304, 123 Am. St. Rep. 865, 99 S. W. 1118, to support the conclusion that in a contempt proceeding originating in a civil suit (an indirect contempt) the moving papers could be looked to, to determine the particular contempt, when it did not appear in the judgment.

And in Poertner v. Russel, 33 Wis. 103, which was a proceeding to punish the defendant for violation of an injunction and in which the order adjudging the defendant guilty of the contempt was attacked upon the ground that it did not specify the particulars wherein the injunction had been violated, the court declared that the record showed fully the particulars in which the injunction had been violated, and "no good reason" was perceived why that was not sufficient.

The following cases would seem to go far towards establishing the rule that, while it is the better practice to have the order adjudging the accused guilty of contempt set forth the facts upon which it is based, it is not absolutely necessary, and the judgment will not be reversed for that reason alone:

In Ex parte Summers, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 149, the court refused to hold void a judgment of guilty of contempt, because the contempt was not set out by a statement of particular facts and the finding of the tempt proceedings in justice court, a provision of our statute very similar to the North Carolina statute (Code, § 650, supra); our section being § 89 of the Revised Justice Code, and reading as follows: "When a contempt is committed in the immediate view and presence of the justice, it may be punished summarily; to that end an order must be made, reciting the facts as they occurred, and adjudging that the person proceeded against is thereby guilty of contempt, and that he be punished as herein prescribed." And we may well say that, in conformity with the spirit of this statute and in view of the unusual nature of contempt proceedings, and, further, in order to carefully guard the rights of our citizens, no court should render any judgment punishing one for contempt of such court without, either by separate findings of fact or by incorporating findings in the judgment itself, clearly and specifically finding the facts upon which the judgment of the court is based.

In the case of People ex rel. Field v. Turner, 1 Cal. 152, the supreme court of that state, after considering this question quite fully and showing the reasons why such findings should be made, said: "We think it follows from the distinctions above considered that the final order of the court by which a party is adjudged to have been guilty of a contempt should always show upon its face the facts upon which the exercise of the power is based, and the adjudication made. This is certainly the general, if not the uniform, practice." It is true in that case that there was absolutely no findings in the judgment, but we think that, even if there were some findings, unless such findings were sufficient to warrant the conclusion of the court, the judgment could not stand; and it must be conceded that in the case at bar, where there were no findings, either to the effect that appellant was financially able to obey the order of the court, or that he had wilfully and intentionally rendered himself unable to obey such order, there was insufficient to warrant the judgment. It is true that in a later California case—Ex parte Henshaw, 73 Cal. 486, 15 Pac. 110—the court found that no findings of the court were necessary, and distinguished the Turner Case; but an examination of said case shows that as a matter of fact the court virtually made complete findings, in that in the judgment the court referred to the charges presented against the party found guilty of contempt, and specifically declared that the court found each and every one of such allegations to be true.

contempt by the court upon those facts. Chief Justice Ruffin, however, used the following language: "It befits every court which has a proper tenderness for the rights of the citizen and a due respect to its own character, to state the facts explicitly, not suppressing those on which the person might be entitled to be discharged, more than it would insert others which did not exist, for the sake of justifying the commitment. A court which knows its duty, and is not conscious of violating it, will ever be desirous of putting upon the record, or in its process, the truth of the case, especially as thereby a higher court may be able to enlarge a citizen illegally committed or fined. But if the commitment or fine be in a general form for a contempt, all other courts are bound by it, and the party can only free himself by urging the contempt before the court that has adjudged it."

The case just reviewed was cited in Easton v. State, 39 Ala. 551, 87 Am. Dec. 49, in which the court declared it to be well settled that a judgment or sentence of contempt was valid without any recital of the conduct or facts which constituted the contempt, though it added that it considered the practice of inserting such facts in the judgment far more satisfactory.

In Ex parte Chastian (Ark.) 127 S. W. 973, it was held that, while the court below should have stated, in its judgment that the defendant was guilty of a direct contempt, the facts constituting the offense, the absence of such statement did not render the judgment void, citing Ex parte Summers, supra, and Ex parte Davies, 73 Ark. 358, 84 S. W. 633, in the latter of which, though the court declined to discuss the question whether the absence of a finding of facts upon which the judgment of contempt was based would render it void, since in the case before it the court below did make such finding, it was declared to be highly proper that the judgment should contain such finding.

And in Ex parte Adams, 25 Miss. 883, 59 Am. Dec. 234, in which the contempt alleged consisted in the refusal to answer questions to the grand jury, the court said that it was properly held that a judgment of contempt which did not set out the particular cause upon which it was founded was a nullity, but that the more recent cases had laid down the rule that the specific cause need not be set out in the judgment, and that the judgment would be sufficient if it expressed on its face that it was for contempt generally.

In Coleman v. State, 121 Tenn. 1, 113 S. W. 1045, in which the contempt charged was an indirect one, the judgment rendered was thought by the appellate court to be "too meager" in not setting out fully the grounds upon which the accused was found guilty, but a correction of it was permitted so as to set out the facts sufficiently.

Whether or not there should be a judgment that the party was in contempt before he could be lawfully committed is not within the scope of this note. J. A. C.

For all that may appear from the records herein, the trial court punished this defendant without finding that he was acting wilfully or contumaciously in not obeying the court's order.

The judgment of the Circuit Court punishing the appellant for contempt is reversed.

SOUTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

ARLINGTON B. MELODY, Resp.,
v.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(— S. D. —, 127 N. W. 543.)

Interstate commerce — tariffs — effect on shipper.

1. Persons dealing with interstate carriers are as effectually bound by the interstate commerce act and the orders of the Commission as to both freight and passenger tariffs as is the carrier himself.

Same — attempted use of erroneous ticket.

2. A passenger who accepts from a carrier's agent a ticket for interstate passage at a through rate which, under the rules of the Commission, does not allow stop-over privileges, cannot hold the carrier liable in damages for his expulsion from the train in case he attempts to exercise such privileges, although the marks necessary to show the limited character of the ticket are not placed upon it.

(June 15, 1910.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Circuit Court for Minnehaha County sustaining a demurrer to the answer in an action brought to recover damages for an assault alleged to have been made by defendant's servants upon plaintiff. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — Search has failed to disclose any other case discussing the question of the right of a railroad passenger to ride upon a ticket issued in violation of the interstate commerce act or of the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The question was suggested by one of the assignments of error in Mexican C. R. Co. v. Goodman (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 580, but the court disposed of the point by saying that the evidence was such as not to require a new trial on that ground.

As to the effect of provisions of the interstate commerce act against rebates upon contracts for the carriage of goods prescribing rates less than those established in accordance with the act, see note to Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 400.
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. W. R. Regg and C. H. Winsor, for appellant:

The schedule tariff rates absolutely govern.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hefley, 158 U. S. 98, 39 L. ed. 910, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 802; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Mugg, 202 U. S. 242, 50 L. ed. 1011, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628; Southern R. Co. v. Harrison, 119 Ala. 539, 43 L.R.A. 385, 72 Am. St. Rep. 936, 24 So. 552.

Mr. Ransom L. Gibbs for respondent.

Departure from tariff in the sale of a ticket constitutes no defense to an action for ejecting a passenger.

Mexican C. R. Co. v. Goodman (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 582.

The ticket presented by plaintiff had not expired, and entitled him to the transportation refused by defendant.

6 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 557, 570, 571, 573; Hufford v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 53 Mich. 118, 18 N. W. 592; Ward v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 56 Hun, 268, 30 N. Y. S. R. 604, 9 N. Y. Supp. 377.

The plaintiff was wrongfully ejected from the defendant's train and is entitled to the damages resulting therefrom.

Guy v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 30 Hun, 399; Rown v. Christopher & T. Street R. Co. 34 Hun, 471; Kleven v. Great Northern R. Co. 70 Minn. 79, 72 N. W. 828; Krueger v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 68 Minn. 445, 64 Am. St. Rep. 487, 71 N. W. 684; Chamberlain v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 122 Mich. 477, 81 N. W. 339.

Smith, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from an order of the circuit court of Minnehaha county, sustaining a demurrer to the defendant's answer. The complaint sets forth a cause of action for the recovery of damages for an assault claimed to have been committed upon the plaintiff by the conductor and train men of the defendant railway corporation on the 7th of March, 1908. It is alleged that on the 6th day of March, 1908, the plaintiff purchased a railway ticket at the town of Lester, in the state of Iowa, for transportation to Sioux Falls, South Dakota, by way of Garretson, and paid therefor the sum of 75 cents; that on said day the plaintiff traveled on defendant's train on said ticket from Lester, Iowa, to Garretson, South Dakota; that on the 7th day of March, 1908, the defendant received the plaintiff as a passenger upon its train at Garretson, South Dakota, to be carried to Sioux Falls, South Dakota, and that he presented the ticket above mentioned to the defendant's conductor in charge of said train, who refused to accept the same, and demand fare from this plaintiff from Garretson to Sioux Falls; that the said plaintiff refused to pay said fare, whereupon the conductor and the employees of the defendant wilfully, maliciously, and violently ejected the plaintiff from the train, whereby the said plaintiff was greatly injured, wounded, and suffered exposure and grievous mental suffering, alleging damages.

The defendant in its answer admits the foregoing allegations of the complaint, except as to injury, and sets forth the terms and conditions of the ticket in part as follows: "Great Northern Railway Line. Good for one first-class passage from Lester to Sioux Falls. This ticket is not transferable and will not be honored for passage if presented by another than the original purchaser, whose signature appears hereon. Any alteration or erasure on this ticket makes it void, and it will be taken up by conductor or exchanger. It will not be honored for passage after date punched in margin. If closely limited no stop-over will be allowed, if limited to thirty days from date of issue, stop-overs will be allowed under usual rules, upon application to conductor." The defendant alleges that this ticket was not limited to thirty days from date of issue; that the conductor in charge of the train refused to accept the ticket, and demanded fare from Garretson to Sioux Falls, South Dakota, which demand plaintiff refused, whereupon the conductor ejected him from the train at the station of Corson, using no more force than was reasonably necessary; that the defendant in receiving said ticket for transportation between Lester and Garretson on the 6th day of March, 1908, accepted it as and for part of a continuous passage from Lester to Sioux Falls, and not otherwise; that it was necessary for the plaintiff to change cars at Garretson; that the plaintiff arrived at Garretson on the 6th day of March, and that the defendant's regular train left Garretson for Sioux Falls on said day, after the arrival of the train on which plaintiff traveled from Lester to Garretson, and plaintiff could have continued his passage from Garretson to Sioux Falls on the same day; that the distance from Lester to Garretson over the defendant's railway line is 23.5 miles, and from Garretson to Sioux Falls is 18.2 miles; that the ticket for continuous passage between Lester and Sioux Falls was sold under and in accordance with Local Passenger Tariff No. 192, which tariff was duly posted and published in the stations and depots of defendant and duly filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and went into effect on August 1, 1907, by authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission Order No. 2184; that by said tariff schedule the fare from Lester to Sioux Falls for continuous passage, and not otherwise, over the defendant's railway, is 75 cents; that said tariff schedule provides as follows: "Tickets will be limited to continuous passage. Journeys to commence on the day of sale. Stop-overs will not be allowed. Exception: One-way tickets between points 300 miles or over apart may be limited to thirty days from date of sale and, when so limited, stop-overs will be allowed at all points within limits;" that said passenger tariff fixes the local fare between Lester and Garretson at 60 cents, and the local fare between Garretson and Sioux Falls at 55 cents. Defendant further alleges that the plaintiff was not a passenger in continuous passage from Lester to Sioux Falls, he having stopped over at Garretson, but was a passenger from Garretson to Sioux Falls as a complete trip, and that the plaintiff refused to comply with the passenger tariff schedule as above set forth, by refusing to pay his fare according thereto, from Garretson to Sioux Falls. The original ticket is made a part of these pleadings, and discloses the fact that the ticket agent of defendant at Lester neglected to punch the ticket as required by the recitals on its face, so as to indicate the limitation to a continuous trip required by the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission permitting the lower charge for the transportation. On the face of the ticket appears the following: "I agree to the above conditions ———, Purchaser;" but this agreement was not signed by the purchaser. The plaintiff demurred to the answer on the ground that the facts stated do not constitute a defense, which demurrer was sustained by the trial court, and the appellant assigns this ruling as error.

The record discloses that the agent of defendant at Lester, Iowa, either intentionally or inadvertently sold the plaintiff an unlimited ticket or contract for transportation from Lester, Iowa, to Sioux Falls, South Dakota, for the sum of 75 cents. This transaction, whether entered into by the agent and purchaser intentionally or inadvertently, was a violation of the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is admitted by the record that the order of the Commission contained the requirement that tickets sold at this special rate must be for continuous passage, and that stop-overs could not be allowed, and that the order had been regularly filed, and posted in the station of defendant at Lester, Iowa. There can be no doubt, we think, under the construction given the interstate commerce act (act Feb. 4, 1897, chap. 104, 24 Stat. at L. 379, U. S. Comp.

Stat. 1901, p. 3154) by the Federal courts, that every person dealing with an interstate carrier is as effectually bound by the law and the orders of the Commission, as to both freight and passenger tariffs, as is the carrier himself. To hold that either party under any conditions may be estopped from asserting the illegality and invalidity of a contract made in violation of the interstate law and the orders of the Commission would afford an easy means for its evasion, and might result in its practical annulment.

Plaintiff can recover damages only for a refusal of defendant's conductor to comply with a valid contract to transport him from Lester, Iowa, to Sioux Falls, South Dakota. Section 545 of the Civil Code provides: "If any passenger shall refuse to pay his fare it shall be lawful for the conductor of the train and the servants of the corporation to put him and his baggage out of the cars in the manner prescribed in § 1593." In the absence of any special regulations legal payment of fare may be made either to the conductor personally, or to the agent of the company. Upon payment of the fare to either, a contract arises creating a duty toward the passenger; and his ejection thereafter becomes a wrongful trespass, and entitles him to compensation for the injury. Upon payment of the necessary fare to the agent of the company, the passenger received a ticket which, to the conductor, is the only evidence of the contract; which contract is required to be made in strict conformity with the order of the Commission, under heavy penalties. To say that a conductor is bound to accept a ticket issued in violation of the order of the Commission would seem to be an anomaly, and to permit the passenger who was a party to the same violation of law, to insist upon a right to ride upon a void and unlawful ticket, or to recover damages for a wrongful ejection, would be a still greater one.

The ticket was for interstate passage between points less than 300 miles apart, was wholly unlimited, and therefore in plain violation of the filed and posted schedules and the order of the Commission. Suppose, instead of a ticket, the defendant, in violation of the statute, had furnished plaintiff a pass, and the conductor, knowing it to be unlawful, had refused to honor it, and, on plaintiff's insisting on his right to ride and refusal to pay fare, had ejected him from the train, would it be possible for him to recover damages for such an ejection? We think not. The issuance of an unlawful pass is no different in principle from the issuance of an unlawful ticket. Nor do we see any reason why the 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

terms and conditions and rates upon which a passenger may contract for his own transportation under the order of the Commission duly filed and posted are not binding upon him as upon the shipper of freight. The same law requires the posting and filing of both the passenger and freight schedules, and in the same manner. Such schedules are intended for the inspection, information, and advantage of the public. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hefley, 158 U. S. 101, 39 L. ed. 911, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 802. And the Commission have authority to determine and prescribe the form in which schedules required to be kept open for public inspection shall be prepared and arranged. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 167 U. S. 479, 42 L. ed. 243, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 896. It is held by the Federal courts that a shipper is presumed to know the schedule rates and the necessity of compliance therewith, regardless of the terms of the contract, and the same presumption must, we think, necessarily apply to passenger tariff rates. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hefley, 158 U. S. 98, 39 L. ed. 910, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 802; Southern R. Co. v. Harrison, 119 Ala. 539, 43 L.R.A. 385, 72 Am. St. Rep. 936, 24 So. 552; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Dismukes, 94 Ala. 131, 17 L.R.A. 113, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 200, 10 So. 289; Gerber v. Wabash R. Co. 63 Mo. App. 145; Church v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 14 S. D. 443, 85 N. W. 1001. The unlawful act of the carrier in fixing a lower rate by contract will not prevent recovery of the higher schedule rate. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Trinity County Lumber Co. 1 Tex. Civ. App. 553, 21 S. W. 290. It is also held that a contract for less than schedule rates, induced by mistake, is unlawful and cannot be enforced. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Dumas (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 609.

It must be borne in mind that plaintiff is here insisting that as to him this contract is binding and effective, notwithstanding it is by its terms unlimited as to both time and stop-over privileges; and is in clear violation of the order of the Commission. He plants his action squarely upon the very language and terms of the contract. He insists that the carrier, whether intentionally or inadvertently, has furnished him a contract which, though in terms in violation of the order of the Commission, entitled him to be transported according to the very terms of the contract itself. Such a contention could be only maintained upon the theory that the carrier may be estopped by the act of its agent from repudiating the unlawful contract to plaintiff's detriment. But the act of the agent upon which plaintiff must found his right was in itself illegal and void, and no doctrine of the law is more firmly established than that an estoppel cannot be founded upon an illegal act. Uhlig v. Garrison, 2 Dak. 71, 2 N. W. 253.

In Mayer v. Cherokee Strip Live Stock Asso. 58 Kan. 712, 51 Pac. 215, the court citing with approval Uhlig v. Garrison, supra, says: "The controversy arises here directly between the parties to the illegal contract, and the plaintiff seeks a recovery through and under that contract. The parties voluntarily entered into the contract, and they must be held to have had knowledge that in doing so they were violating the law."

"The estoppel claimed by complainant in this case, if the facts were proved as claimed, could not have the effect sought to be attributed in this case. Public policy will not allow the doctrine of estoppel to come in and aid in validating an unexecuted contract which it holds to be void." Robinson v. Patterson, 71 Mich. 141, 39 N. W. 21.

"But it is insisted such a contract may be relied on as an estoppel, and a recovery therefor had. We do not believe this is correct, and are unwilling to hold that a contract void as being against public policy has any vitality whatever. It matters not how it may be pleaded, a substantial right cannot be enforced thereunder. That which cannot be recovered in an action on the contract should not be permitted to be done by indirection." Langan v. Sankey, 55 Iowa, 52, 7 N. W. 393.

"Courts will not aid a person whose cause of action, either upon his own showing or otherwise, appears to arise ex turpi causa, or from the transgression of positive law. They do not adopt this policy for the purpose of protecting a defendant, but from a determination not to assist such a plaintiff." Den ex dem. Wooden v. Shotwell, 24 N. J. L. 789.

Consequently, the doctrine of estoppel cannot be applied to give validity to what would be an illegal act, or to prevent the company from setting up, in answer to a claim to such stock, that the same is void, as being issued in excess of the capital. . . . By this I mean that no one can be estopped from refusing to do an illegal act; but that an estoppel can only operate in favor of a party injured, where there is no provision of law forbidding the party against whom the estoppel is to operate from doing the act which is sought to be carried out through its operation." New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 38 Barb. 537.

We have considered only the theory upon 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

which plaintiff appears to have founded his action. By stipulation the original ticket was made a part of the answer, and on its face discloses that it is wholly unlimited either as to time or stop-over privileges. Apparently the answer originally intended to treat the ticket as though it were one properly limited by punching, for continuous passage without stop-over privilege, in accordance with the order of the Commission. The answer does not allege that the ticket was issued by mistake or inadvertence of defendant's agent. In this state of the pleadings the only question before us for determination is the single proposition whether the specific contract disclosed by the ticket itself, concededly in violation of the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission duly filed and published, must be accepted by the conductor of a train as a valid and legal contract or ticket. There is no allegation in the complaint that the plaintiff was in any way deceived or misled by the defendant's agent, or was not aware of the illegality of the contract or the orders of the Commission, though we do not mean to infer that such facts might be material if pleaded. We refer to them only to make clear what appears to us to be plaintiff's only contention, viz., that he had an absolute right to be carried as a passenger upon a ticket issued to him by the carrier in violation of the terms and conditions contained in the orders of the Commission. We do not believe such a contention can be sustained.

The order sustaining the demurrer to the answer is reversed.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND, & PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

IOLA THURLOW.

(102 C. C. A. 128, 178 Fed. 894.)

Carrier — shipper — right to sleep in car.

An immigrant required to accompany his stock and household goods for the purpose of caring for them is not entitled to the rights of a passenger, where, after his car reaches destination, and his stock has

Note. — Right of drover or stockman who uses car after destination is reached.

In CHICAGO, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. THURLOW, not only had plaintiff's car reached its destination, but his stock had been unloaded; and while no other case has been found involving the rights of a drover or been unloaded, he attempts to use the car for sleeping purposes until his goods can be removed from it, where the goods can be fully protected in the car, and there are hotel accommodations near by.

(April 27, 1910.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kansas to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's husband, which was alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Sanborn, Circuit Judge, and Riner and Wm. H. Munger, District Judges.

Mr. M. A. Low, with Mr. Paul E. Walker, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. J. T. Lafferty, with Mr. W. P. Hackney, for defendant in error.

Riner, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action brought by the defendant in error, hereafter called the plaintiff, against the plaintiff in error, hereafter called the defendant, to recover damages for the death of her husband, stockman in a car after his stock has been unloaded, the decision in this case seems to be in accord with the general principles as to the termination of a passenger's relation as such upon reaching his destination, for which see notes in 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 873, and 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1019.

In Orcutt v. Northern P. R. Co., 45 Minn. 368, 47 N. W. 1068, a car containing plaintiff's horse and some furniture and other property had been transported by the defendant under a contract requiring plaintiff to attend and care for the stock, and arrived at its destination about 2 A. M., whereupon plaintiff left it for a few minutes, and after it had been placed on a side track, returned to it and lay down, and was later injured by a freight engine running into it. In this case it was assumed that, on the arrival of the car at its destination, and after a reasonable opportunity to leave it, and the plaintiff having left it, the relation of carrier and passenger had ceased. "But the duty of care did not necessarily depend on the continuance of that relation, although the degree of care might be modified by a change in the relation. The duty of care, and the liability for injury caused by want of it, depended on plaintiff being rightfully in the car, and not on the relation in which he was there, though a higher degree of care was due if he was a passenger than if he was not." And it was held that it was a question for the jury whether, in view of the liability of horses, when in cars, to be frightened, and when frightened, to break their fastenings, and injure themselves, it was prudent attention to return and remain in the car; and that, if prudent attention rendered it proper for plaintiff to be there, he was rightfully there, and the defendant owed him a duty of care to avoid injuring him.

In Hardin v. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co., 33 Tex. Civ. App. 448, 77 S. W. 431, where plaintiff was required by his contract with defendant for the shipment of certain household goods and stock, to ride in the car and look after and care for the property, and the car reached the station of its destination too late in the afternoon to be unloaded, and was left on a side track until the following morning, when it was to be taken to a place where it could be unloaded, plaintiff left the car and slept on the depot platform until daylight, when it began to rain, and he went into the car, and later, while yet in the car, "fixing to feed" the stock, was injured by reason of a violent coupling made by the train crew with that car. Here the court said: "Naturally there are risks assumed by the passenger when he accepts passage on a freight train that would not be incident to travel upon a passenger train, but this does not lessen the degree of care to be exercised by the carrier in the operation of such freight train. It follows from what we have said that we are of opinion the evidence was not such as to authorize the trial court to assume in his charge that the appellant had ceased to be a passenger, and that he should at least have submitted that question to the jury, as requested." And further: "We think it was in the minds of the parties to the contract that appellant should remain in and about the car until it was delivered at the usual stopping place in Henrietta, and a reasonable time for unloading allowed."

On a second trial, the court, in his charge, treated plaintiff as a passenger, and the appellate court held, in 41 Tex. Civ. App. 19, 90 S. W. 679, that, under the facts shown, this was not error. But the judgment was again reversed "because the charge was on the weight of the evidence," in that, as plaintiff was only a qualified passenger, being on a freight train, and carried along for the purpose of caring for his stock, it was a question of fact which should have been submitted to the jury "whether very cautious and prudent persons, operating a train under the circumstances attending the injury in question, would have used the utmost care to discover the presence of Hardin in the car, at the time of the coupling," either "fixing to feed" the stock at that particular time, when the return of the engine should have been expected, and he had obligated himself not to be in the car while switching was being done at stations, or for the purpose of riding to the end of the journey with the stock at a time when, obviously, the car could not be moved for want of an engine.

A. C. W.

which she alleges in her petition was caused by the negligence of the defendant. The record discloses the following facts:

On February 28, 1908, W. C. Thurlow, the husband of the plaintiff, loaded a car at Oxford, Kansas, with household goods, farming implements, wearing apparel, bedding, four horses, and a wagon, for the purpose of shipping them to Calhan, Colorado, near which place he had taken up a homestead. The car was hauled from Oxford to Wellington, Kansas, by the Atchison, Topeka, & Santa Fé Railway Company, and there delivered to the defendant for transportation to Calhan.

The defendant had two rates in force between Wellington and Calhan for shipments of this character. When the higher of the two rates was paid, the railway company took full charge of the car, and became responsible for its safe and prompt delivery. The lesser of the two rates limited the liability of the defendant, and if accepted by the shipper, he was required to sign a contract whereby he was permitted to ride in the caboose attached to the train in which his car was being transported, for the purpose of caring for his stock. By the contract he also released the defendant from the duty of caring for the stock, and from liability for damages or injury resulting from certain causes therein specified, unless shown to be directly caused by the negligence of the defendant. The contract also contained a release, which the shipper, if he desired to accompany his stock, was required to sign, exempting the defendant from liability for injury to himself while he was accompanying the shipment. These two rates were shown in the tariffs filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and were open to inspection by the public at the station at Wellington.

It was entirely optional with Thurlow as to which rate he would accept. He chose the lower of the two rates, signed the contract and release, and rode from Wellington, Kansas, to Calhan, Colorado, on the same train in which his car was transported. The train of which Thurlow's car was a part reached Calhan on the evening of March 3d about 7 o'clock, and his car was placed on what is designated in the record as the "passing track," where the unloading chute for the purpose of unloading live stock was located. After this was done, he paid the freight to the agent at Calhan, and the car was delivered into his possession. Later in the evening another emigrant car was placed on the passing track, the two were coupled together, and Thurlow's car was placed opposite the unloading chute. Assisted by Munyan, the man in charge of the other car, Thurlow's horses were unloaded and placed in the stock yards and cared for for the night. After that had been done, Munyan, and Thurlow released the brakes on Thurlow's car, ran it down the track for a distance of about 200 feet from the unloading chute to a highway crossing, where Thurlow stopped it by setting the brakes. Thereafter, and about 10 o'clock, the night operator, at Munyan's request, assisted in releasing the brakes on Munyan's car and pushing the car to the chute, where his live stock was also unloaded.

After the horses had been unloaded, Munyan and Thurlow built a fire, and prepared and ate their supper. About 12:30 on the morning of the 4th, Thurlow went to his car for the purpose of going to bed. Munyan requested Thurlow to go with him to the hotel, where he (Munyan) offered to procure rooms for them. Thurlow refused to do so, although the door of his car was protected by a padlock. The fact that Thurlow intended to, or did, sleep in his car, was not known to the agent or any person connected with the defendant. In some manner during the night, though for what reason or how the record does not disclose, Thurlow's car escaped and ran out on the main line, where it collided with a train, and Thurlow was killed.

The petition charges that the defendant was negligent in failing to set the brakes on the car when it was left at Calhan, and failing to place the derail provided for that purpose, so that the car could not escape onto the main line, and in failing to capture the car after it had escaped from the passing track, and before it collided with the train. The passing track at Calhan, from near the point where Thurlow's car was located, descends rapidly towards the east, and a derail switch was installed for the purpose of protecting trains on the main line, and was so located that, if a car got beyond control while on the passing track, the derail, if in position, would wreck it and turn it down an embankment. The derail switch consisted of a movable bar, which was laid on the top of the rail, and placed in position to derail cars. The bar was fastened by means of hinges to three pedestals, which were spiked to the ties between the rails.

At the trial of the case, the court withdrew from the consideration of the jury all allegations of negligence, except the allegation respecting the position of the derail switch. The evidence tended to show that when the section crew quit work on the evening of March 3d, the derail was in proper condition in every respect, and that when it was last used by anyone connected with the defendant, it was placed in position so that it would derail cars. Upon examination the morning following the accident, it was found that the derail had been turned over and laid between the rails in such a position that the passing track could be used without hindrance. The west pedestal of the derail switch had been broken; but the evidence shows that, notwithstanding that fact, it could be used. The only evidence offered by the plaintiff in respect to the derail switch was a telegram sent by Dickey, the conductor of the train which brought the Munyan car to Calhan, which read as follows:

Calhan, 3-3, 2-97. Run over derail east end Calhan passing track. Derail is broken, but can be used. Dickey

The brakeman, one of the members of the crew of this train, testified that after his train left the passing track at Calhan, he placed the derail in proper position to derail any car that might become unmanageable. The night operator testified that he cautioned both Munyan and Thurlow to be very careful with their cars while on the passing track, and called their especial attention to the heavy grade and the danger of attempting to move the cars. At the conclusion of the evidence, the defendant requested the court to direct a verdict in its favor, which request was overruled, and an exception taken.

The court by its instructions took away from the jury the question whether the deceased was a licensee, on the ground that there was no evidence in the case which tended to show that he was such licensee, or on which recovery could be had if he was a licensee, but instructed that if the jury believed the deceased did not intend to terminate his relation of passenger with the defendant, and defendant did nothing to terminate the contract, and if a reasonably prudent man would have remained in the car during the night, a recovery might be had, unless the deceased did some act which contributed to his death.

The petition did not allege that, at the time of the accident, the deceased was a passenger. The allegation is that, pursuant to a custom and verbal agreement with the defendant, the defendant allowed the deceased "to ride in and live in such cars with such property, and look after and care for the same, until such cars arrived at their destination and were emptied of their freight at the terminal of such car's destination, which the said W. C. Thurlow did;" and after alleging the arrival of the car at its destination, and that deceased had unloaded his horses, it is further alleged:

"And in pursuance of said verbal agreement, and according to defendant's said custom of allowing care takers in charge of such cars, theretofore and then in evidence, and customary, as aforesaid, the said W. C. Thurlow remained in said car, intending to stay in said car and care for said property until the same should be placed on the said defendant's side track adjoining its depot the next day."

There was no evidence tending to show a verbal agreement or custom permitting the deceased to remain in the car during its transportation, or after it had reached its destination. No attempt was made to prove a verbal agreement, and the only evidence of a custom was to the effect that, prior to that time, some of the persons in charge of emigrant cars remained in them overnight. There was no evidence tending to show that they did so with the permission of the defendant, or that it ever at any time recognized in any way their right to do so.

It is well settled by repeated decisions that a person must be expressly or impliedly received as a passenger before a carrier becomes under obligation to exercise towards such person that high degree of care and caution for his safety which is due from a carrier to a passenger. The relation between carrier and passenger is contractual, and is created only by a contract, express or implied. In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Lee, 34 C. C. A. 305, 92 Fed. 318, Judge Sanborn said: "The presumption, in the absence of countervailing evidence, is that one who rides in a baggage car, an express car, a stock car, or on a freight train, is not a passenger on it, and, even if he is, since he is riding out of the place provided by the company for passengers, that he has assumed the increased risk resulting from riding there, and is therefore guilty of contributory negligence. Bryant v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 4 C. C. A. 146, 12 U. S. App. 115, 53 Fed. 997; Player v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 62 Iowa, 727, 16 N. W. 347; Jenkins v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 41 Wis. 112; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Miles, 40 Ark. 298, 48 Am. Rep. 10; Gardner v. New Haven & N. Co. 51 Conn. 143, 50 Am. Rep. 12; Powers v. Boston & M. R. Co. 153 Mass. 188, 26 N. E. 446; Eaton v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 57 N. Y. 382, 15 Am. Rep. 513; Files v. Boston & A. R. Co. 149 Mass. 204, 14 Am. St. Rep. 411, 21 N. E. 311; Hoar v. Maine C. R. Co. 70 Me. 65, 35 Am. Rep. 299."

Although it is not alleged in the petition that the deceased was a passenger, yet the case was tried by the plaintiff on the theory that he was a passenger, and that at the time of the accident the relation of carrier and passenger had not been terminated. Assuming, for the purposes of the case, that the relation of passenger and carrier did exist by virtue of the contract entered into between the deceased and the defendant for his transportation from Wellington to Calhan, and that the defendant had undertaken, as to him, all the duties and obligations of a carrier of passengers, manifestly that relation terminated upon his arrival with his car at his destination, and after a reasonable time had elapsed for him to alight and leave the premises of the defendant. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Wood, 44 C. C. A. 118, 104 Fed. 663; Archer v. Union P. R. Co. 110 Mo. App. 349, 85 S. W. 934; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Jennings, 190 Ill. 478, 54 L.R.A. 827, 60 N. E. 818; Allerton v. Boston & M. R. Co. 146 Mass. 241, 15 N. E. 621, 34 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 563; Legge v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 197 Mass. 88, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 633, 83 N. E. 367; Bowen v. Illinois C. R. Co. 70 L.R.A. 915, 69 C. C. A. 444, 136 Fed. 306; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Frazer, 55 Kan. 586, 40 Pac. 923; Payne v. Illinois C. R. Co. 83 C. C. A. 589, 155 Fed. 73; Orcutt v. Northern P. R. Co. 45 Minn. 368, 47 N. W. 1068.

This was certainly true after his horses had been removed from the car and placed in the stock yards for the night. His contract provided for his transportation upon the train for the sole purpose of caring for the live stock; and after the train reached its destination and the live stock had been unloaded, his car being provided with a padlock, whereby it could be securely locked, there was no occasion for him to return to the car. The car had been safely transported to its destination, he had paid the freight, and his live stock had been unloaded and placed in the stock yards. After that time he stood in no closer relation to the defendant than an ordinary consignee, who has a car load of freight on a side track at a station. He would have the right to go into the car for the purpose of unloading his freight, and while there for that purpose the defendant would owe him the duty of using reasonable care to see that he was not injured by its negligence or the negligence of its employees. The contract provided that he should remain seated in the caboose attached to the train while the train was in motion, and that he was permitted to go on the train and in his car only for the purpose of carrying for the live stock. The removal of the stock from the car took from the deceased his right to protection while in the car; at least, until he commenced to remove his freight.

There is no evidence tending to show that 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

he used this car as a place to sleep, or that he rode therein, during the transportation of the car from Wellington to Calhan. The contract provided that he should ride in the caboose, and the only authority he had for being upon the car at any time was for the purpose of taking care of the live stock. It is not claimed that there was any omission of duty towards the deceased until after he reached his destination, and even if it be conceded that the relation of passenger and carrier continued up to the time his horses were unloaded in the stock yards and cared for for the night, which was between 9 and 10 o'clock, it certainly terminated after that had been done and a reasonable time had elapsed to enable him to leave the defendant's premises. That he had sufficient time to do so is clearly established by the record. The testimony shows that he did not attempt to go to bed on the car until half past 12 on the morning of the 4th; that when he did go into his car to sleep, he did so without the knowledge or consent of the defendant or its employees; and in the absence of such knowledge, it was but reasonable for the defendant's employees to suppose, after the stock had been cared for, there being a hotel within 300 feet of the station, that he would go to the hotel for the night.

If he remained upon the car without the knowledge of the defendant or its employees, we cannot understand upon what theory it can be held guilty of negligence. If he was a mere trespasser, as we think he was, the defendant owed him no duty except that it should not, through wanton or wilful negligence, injure him; and such negligence cannot be attributed to the defendant unless it or some of its employees knew of his presence upon the car. As we have already suggested, there was no occasion for him to be in or about the car after his horses had been unloaded and cared for for the night. He had been provided with a padlock, and his car could have been securely locked, and his goods fully protected without his presence in the car; nor does his contract of shipment presuppose a necessity for doing so, and therefore confer upon him a corresponding right.

The court instructed the jury as follows: "Now, gentlemen, if the plaintiff in this case has proven to you by the greater weight of all the credible testimony in the case that after this train arrived at the town of Calhan, taking into consideration the time at which the car arrived there, the time in which it would take a reasonably prudent person to care for the stock in his car, which he was obliged to care for under the contract, properly, and taking all the facts and circumstances in evidence in the case, if you believe the deceased did not intend to terminate his relation of passenger with the defendant company, and defendant did nothing to terminate the contract, and that on account of the manner in which the car was there left, and the obligation imposed upon the deceased to look after and care for his live stock, if a reasonably prudent man would have there remained all the night, as he did, then in that case the relation of the deceased to the railway company as passenger had not been terminated either by himself or defendant. The plaintiff may, if the relation of passenger continued at the time of the accident, recover in this action, unless he did some act that contributed to his death. There is evidence here that he, with others, moved this car, that the brakes were unset, and that the brakes were again set. If in any act he did there, unloosening these brakes or in resetting them,—not setting them tight, as they should have been,—if anything he did there on that night directly contributed toward that car escaping down that track, and colliding with the westbound train, which resulted in his death, then you cannot find for the plaintiff in this case. And you cannot find for the plaintiff in this case unless you find at the time that this car escaped he occupied the relation of passenger to the railway company. If the railway company carried deceased to the town of Calhan, and the deceased then intended to abandon his relation with the company, the plaintiff cannot recover in this suit. If, under all the facts and circumstances, taking into consideration the time of arriving there, the place at which the car was left, as to whether it was day or night,—taking into consideration all the facts and circumstances in the case, if the deceased did not have a reasonable time after arriving there to leave the train and premises of defendant, and thus sever his relation as passenger with the company, then plaintiff may recover in this action for such injury and damages as she has sustained by reason of his death."

This instruction made the right to recover depend upon whether the relation of passenger and carrier existed at the time of the accident, leaving the question to the jury to be determined as a question of fact. We think, under the plaintiff's evidence, if it stood alone, that the court should have declared as a matter of law that the relation of carrier and passenger had ceased, and that the defendant's request for an instructed verdict in its favor should have been sustained.

In the view we have taken of this case, it becomes unnecessary to discuss other 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

questions urged at the argument and in the briefs of counsel.

The judgment of the Circuit Court must be reversed, with instructions to grant a new trial.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

JOHN P. SQUIRE & COMPANY

v.

CITY OF PORTLAND.

(106 Me. 234, 76 Atl. 679.)

Tax — nonresident corporation — duty to furnish list.

1. A nonresident corporation doing business within the state is not within the provisions of statutes requiring inhabitants to bring in a list of their property for taxation and barring resident owners of the right to make application for abatement in case of failure to bring in the list.

Same — tenant — betterments.

2. A tenant is not taxable for a cold-storage plant erected by him in the leased building, extending from basement to the fifth story above, involving substitution of floors, and constructed so as to form part of the building, if there is no provision in the lease giving him the right to remove it, and it cannot be removed without causing injury to the estate and destruction of the plant itself as such.

(December 13, 1909.)

Note. — Cold-storage plant as a fixture.

It was held in Re New York, 101 App. Div. 527, 92 N. Y. Supp. 8, affirmed in 182 N. Y. 281, 74 N. E. 840, in determining whether landlord or tenant was entitled to an award in condemnation proceedings, that a cold-storage plant installed by tenants, comprising false walls, partitions, calked and asphalted floors, and refrigerating machinery, are such installations as are built into the premises and become a part of the realty. The court said that even though they might be removed without materially injuring the building, the very method by which they were annexed to the building made them part of it, rendering them valueless except for a use connected with the building. The same conclusion was reached as to an ice chest, installed by a tenant which would be mere lumber when removed, and impossible of restoration.

A large cold-storage room erected by a lessee of a building for use in his meat-market business was held removable as a trade fixture in Ward v. Earl, 86 Ill. App. 635, though so attached to the walls as to tear off considerable plaster when removed, such damage not being material. It appeared that the premises were rented for use as a meat market to the knowledge of REPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court for Cumberland County for the opinion of the full bench after dismissing an appeal by plaintiff from the decision of the assessors for the city of Portland refusing to abate certain taxes assessed to him. Appeal sustained, and cause remanded.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Chase Eastman, for plaintiff:

A nonresident need not bring in a list of his taxable property within a specified time as a preliminary to making application for an abatement of taxes.

Hopkins v. Reading, 170 Mass. 568, 49 N. E. 923.

A foreign corporation is a nonresident, and is neither an inhabitant nor a resident owner, under the statute, in any place by reason of having an office or place of business there.

Hammond Beef & Provision Co. v. Best, 91 Me. 431, 42 L.R.A. 528, 40 Atl. 338; Northern Invest. Co. v. Boston, 158 Mass. 461, 33 N. E. 580.

The cold-storage plant is not taxable under the provisions of Rev. Stat. chap. 9, § 13, as "machinery employed in any branch of manufacture."

25 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1661; 26 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 520; Dudley v. Jamaica Pond

Aqueduct Corp. 100 Mass. 183; People ex rel. New England Dressed Meat & Wool Co. v. Roberts, 155 N. Y. 408, 41 L.R.A. 228, 50 N. E. 53; Com. v. Cover, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 409.

It is taxable as real estate.

Foxcroft v. Straw, 86 Me. 76, 29 Atl. 950; Paris v. Norway Water Co. 85 Me. 330, 21 L.R.A. 525, 35 Am. St. Rep. 371, 27 Atl. 143; Ashby v. Ashby, 59 N. J. Eq. 536, 40 Atl. 528; Collamore v. Gillis, 149 Mass. 578, 5 L.R.A. 150, 14 Am. St. Rep. 460, 22 N. E. 46.

It is not even a trade fixture removable by the tenant during the term.

19 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1066.

Even if it should be considered a trade fixture removable by the tenant during the term, it is still a part of the realty until severed.

19 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1035; Green v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 8 Kan. App. 611, 56 Pac. 136; Sampson v. Camperdown Cotton Mills, 64 Fed. 939; Lee v. Risdon, 2 Marsh. 495; Bliss v. Whitney, 9 Allen, 114, 85 Am. Dec. 745; Tyler, Fixtures, 108; Stockwell v. Marks, 17 Me. 455, 35 Am. Dec. 266; Davis v. Buffum, 51 Me. 160.

Mr. Emery G. Willson, for defendant:

Unless plaintiff could satisfy the assess-the lessors, that the lessors knew of the manner of putting in the cold-storage room, and that for the general purpose of renting the building the room in question would have been undesirable. It was also held that the fact that it was necessary to remove the cold-storage room in sections would not affect its character as a fixture.

In Park v. Baker, 7 Allen, 78, 83 Am. Dec. 668, a large and heavy wooden ice chest in no way connected with or affixed to the building in which it stood was held removable as personal property although it was intended for use in the tavern where it was originally constructed, and could not be removed without taking it in pieces.

As to certain refrigerators placed in an apartment house, it was said in Cosgrove v. Troesch, 62 App. Div. 123, 70 N. Y. Supp. 764, that it was quite likely that they were removables as matter of law, but the insufficiency of the evidence as to whether the refrigerators were specially constructed and finished to be placed in the alcoves where they stood did not enable the court to definitely declare their character.

A parallel case is found in Williams v. London, 61 Misc. 494, 115 N. Y. Supp. 547, where ice boxes or refrigerators specially constructed for an apartment house and connected with drains to carry off the water were held to have become part of the realty.

See also in connection with this question Union Bank & T. Co. v. Fred W. Wolf Co. 114 Tenn. 255, 108 Am. St. Rep. 903, 86 S. W. 310, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1070, where certain machinery of an ice plant bolted to brick foundations, and so connected with other parts of the plant as to form a complete and homogeneous system, and thus appear to be prima facie a part of the realty, was held to have lost its character as personalty as between the conditional vendor of the machinery in question and a subsequent mortgagee without notice.

But in Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. George, 77 Minn. 319, 79 N. W. 1028, 1064, a refrigerating plant which could be removed from a building without material injury to the building or to the apparatus was held personal property as between a mortgagee and mortgagor, the latter having installed the plant on the basis of a conditional sale subsequent to the giving of the mortgage.

A few cases have been found which have to do with somewhat similar articles, and these are included for what they are worth. The following have been held removable as personal property: brewery cooler (Wolford v. Baxter, 33 Minn. 12, 53 Am. Rep. 1, 21 N. W. 744); ice box unattached (Bush v. Havird, 12 Idaho, 352, 86 Pac. 529, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 107); ice box, trade fixture (Webber v. Franklin Brewing Co. 123 App. Div. 465, 108 N. Y. Supp. 251); ice box in meat market (Griffin v. Jansen, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 19, 39 S. W. 43). But a cooler in a brewery has been held a part of the realty (Scheifele v. Schmitz, 42 N. J. Eq. 700, 11 Atl. 257); likewise pipes for cooling beer (Dehring v. Beck, 146 Mich. 706, 110 N. W. 56); and a refrigerating plant in a building constructed for that purpose (Wade v. Donau Brewing Co. 10 Wash. 284, 38 Pac. 1009).

W. A. S.

ors that it was unable to file its list seasonably, it cannot have an abatement of its tax even though it may have been assessed for property which it did not own or possess.

Orland v. County Comrs. 76 Me. 466; Edwards Mfg. Co. v. Farrington, 102 Me. 143, 66 Atl. 309.

The corporation, although legally a non-resident of the city of Portland, was a resident for taxing purposes, and was bound by the assessors' notice.

Edwards Mfg. Co. v. Farrington, 102 Me. 140, 66 Atl. 309.

Cornish, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from the decision of the assessors of the city of Portland refusing to abate a tax levied upon the appellant for the year 1908. Under the agreed statement of facts two questions are involved: First, whether the appellant can maintain this appeal not having furnished to the assessors a list of its taxable property; second, whether the property in question was taxable to the appellant on April 1, 1908, as personal property.

1. The appeal is clearly maintainable. Rev. Stat. chap. 9, § 73, provides that "before making an assessment, the assessors shall give seasonable notice in writing to the inhabitants," etc., to make and bring in true and perfect lists of their polls and all their estates, real and personal, not by law exempt from taxation. Under Rev. Stat. chap. 1, § 6, ¶ 7, "the word 'inhabitants' means a person having an established residence in a place." Rev. Stat. chap. 9, § 74, provides that "if any resident owner after such notice does not bring in such list," he is barred of his right to make application for abatement, unless he offers such list with his application and satisfies the assessors that he was unable to offer it at the time appointed. The only persons barred from making the application for abatement are "resident owners." Prior to 1895 this last section read, "If any person," etc., but in § 3 of chapter 122 of the Public Laws of 1895 it was provided that "any nonresident against whom a tax has been assessed shall not be debarred of his right to make application to the assessors for an abatement of his taxes nor to appeal from their decision according to the provisions of this act, by his failure to bring in a list of his estate to the assessors, but in such case no costs shall be allowed to the appellant." In the revision of 1903, therefore, the words "any person" in Rev. Stat. 1883, chap. 6, § 93, were changed to "any resident owner." The cases cited by the defendant on this point—Boothbay v. Race (1878) 68 Me. 351, and Orland v. County Comrs. (1884) 76 Me. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

402—were decided prior to this amendment while in Edwards Mfg. Co. v. Farrington (1906) 102 Me. 140, 143, 66 Atl. 309, it expressly appeared that the plaintiff was a Maine corporation and an inhabitant of Augusta for taxing purposes.

In the case at bar the appellant, on the contrary, is a corporation organized under the laws of and is a resident of New Jersey, as the residence of a corporation is in the state of its creation, although it may carry on business in another state. Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 588, 10 L. ed. 274, 307; Shaw v. Quincy Minn. Co. 145 U. S. 444, 36 L. ed. 768, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 935; Hammond Beef & Provision Co. v. Best, 91 Me. 431, 42 L.R.A. 528, 40 Atl. 338.

It follows therefore that the appellant being neither an "inhabitant" under § 73, nor a "resident owner" under § 74, was not obliged to furnish the assessors with a list of its taxable property, and the objection to the maintenance of the appeal is not well taken.

2. Was the property in question legally taxable to the appellant on April 1, 1908? In the opinion of the court it was not. This property which was assessed as personal property is called a refrigerator, but from the description given it really consisted of several cold storage rooms forming a part of a leased building. If taxable at all to the appellant it must be on the ground that it was a trade fixture, removable by the tenant during the lease, and therefore owned by it during that time as personal property. From the agreed statement it appears that the appellant has occupied a store in Portland since 1901 under a written lease, the terms or conditions of which, however, are not given; that a refrigerator or receptacle for the storage of meats and provisions has been constructed by the appellant during its occupancy; that "said refrigerator is constructed of wood, and occupies the whole width of the building aforesaid at one end, from wall to wall, a distance of about 23 feet, and is in length about 30 feet. It occupies the basement and the five floors immediately above the same, and is constructed by sheathing the interior walls of the building with wood, and packing between this wood and said interior walls shavings to the thickness of some 6 or 8 inches. A double wall of wood similarly packed with shavings constitutes the front of the refrigerator, extending from side wall to side wall, and extends from the basement to the roof of the building, six stores in all. The basement of the refrigerator is separated from the story immediately above, as is that story from the next succeeding story, and so on, up to and including the third story above the basement, by a double wooden floor, filled with wood shavings, of some 18 inches in thickness, which floors replace the original floors of the building which were torn out by the petitioner, with the consent of the lessor, in the construction of the refrigerator. It is admitted that said refrigerator could be removed from said premises only after having been taken to pieces." Did this constitute a trade fixture, or was it a part of the real estate at the time of the assessment?

There is authority for holding that even granting this to be a trade fixture, it became a part of the realty when annexed, and remained so until actually severed. Ewell on Fixtures, 2d ed. p. 122, states the doctrine in this language:

"The nature of this right of removal has been explained in two ways: By supposing that the chattel nature of the thing is preserved after its annexation, or by considering that the thing ceases to be a chattel by being affixed to the land, and becomes real property, but reducible again to a chattel state by separation from the realty. There is some confusion and looseness of expression among the authorities on this subject, occasioned probably by the fact that in some relations and for some purposes, as in favor of the execution creditors, or the executors of a tenant, the chattel nature of the thing is not lost by its annexation. For many, if not most purposes, however, during the continuance of the annexation, the thing is treated as a parcel of the realty; and though it is in the power of the party making the annexation to reduce the thing again to the state of goods and chattels by severance, yet until so severed, it remains a part of the realty; and this seems to apply as well to trade fixtures as to other fixtures." See also Preston v. Briggs, 16 Vt. 124; Bliss v. Whitney, 9 Allen, 114, 85 Am. Dec. 745; Stockwell v. Marks, 17 Me. 455, 35 Am. Dec. 266; Davis v. Buffum, 51 Me. 160; Sawyer v. Long, 86 Me. 541, 30 Atl. 111.

Under these authorities, the assessment being laid while the annexation continued, it was invalid. But the property in the case at bar never constituted a fixture. It is undoubtedly true that the rules of law defining fixtures have grown less rigid in later years, and especially is this true of trade fixtures as between lessor and lessee. It is also true that as to such fixtures the intention of the party making the annexation is given special prominence in applying the rule, and that the burden of showing the existence of the requisites for a merger is upon the party claiming such merger. Hayford v. Wentworth, 97 Me. 347, 54 Atl. 940. The three requisites specified in the case last cited are physical annexation, adaptability or usability, and intention. The first two of these requirements are fully met in the case at bar, as the description before given clearly shows. As to the third, the intention of the lessee, that must be proved not by the unrevealed and secret intention of the party, which would be well-nigh impossible, but by the facts and circumstances including the relations and the conduct. It is more a matter of inference than of declaration. Were it a question of intention as expressed subsequently, the attitude of the appellant in this suit, resisting the claim of a fixture and insisting upon the merger, would have great force, because it would be extremely difficult for the lessee to hereafter sustain such a claim in view of the position taken here. But the alteration made in this building by the lessee does not possess the elements of a trade fixture. "Trade fixtures" is a term usually used to describe property which a tenant has placed on rented real estate to advance the business for which the realty is leased, and may, as against the lessor and those claiming under him, be removed at the end of the tenant's term." 8 Words & Phrases, p. 7042; Ewell, Fixtures, p. 129. This definition embraces a large variety of additions and erections, of which the books are full, as the temporary partition in Hanson v. News Pub. Co. 97 Me. 99, 53 Atl. 990; a wash-down, syphon, water-closet in Hayford v. Wentworth, 97 Me. 347, 54 Atl. 940; an ice chest, consisting of a large and heavy wooden box lined with zinc, Park v. Baker, 7 Allen, 78, 83 Am. Dec. 668; bowling alleys nailed to the floor, Hanrahan v. O'Reilly, 102 Mass. 201; boilers, engines, shafting, etc., removable without material injury to the building, Bergh v. Herring-Hall-Marvin Safe Co. 70 L.R.A. 756, 69 C. C. A. 212, 136 Fed. 368; bakers' ovens and boilers, Baker v. McClurg, 198 Ill. 28, 59 L.R.A. 131, 92 Am. St. Rep. 261, 64 N. E. 701; temporary sheathing, partitions, and a cold-storage box, attached by strips and nails to the wall and floor, Ward v. Earl, 86 Ill. App. 635. But all these cases differ from the case at bar in two essential particulars: First, they involved addition, and not substitution; and, second, the fixtures could be removed without substantial injury to the realty.

It is a well-recognized principle that trade fixtures which are in substitution for essential parts of the leased premises, and not additions thereto, are not removable, but are presumed to be permanent additions. 19 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1066; Ewell, Fixtures, p. 146, note. This is but another way of stating that this fact when proved has great and possibly controlling weight upon the question of intention. In Felcher v. McMillan, 103 Mich. 494, 61 N. W. 791, the tenant removed the pillars, partitions sewers, and floors in the building occupied by him, replacing them by others more expensive but better suited to his business; held, that the latter became a part of the realty, and could not be removed as trade fixtures. The court say:

"The lessees chose to remove the pillars, the partitions, the sewers, the cement floor, and to replace them by others which they considered better suited to their business. If they chose to replace wooden pillars with iron ones, plate-glass fronts and partitions with refrigerators and mirrors solidly built in the partition walls, and to take up the sewers and floors, and replace them with others better and more expensive, the new ones did not thereby become trade fixtures, subject to removal by the tenant. The law does not permit tenants to remove fixtures which are built into the building and become a part of it." In Bovet v. Holzgraft, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 141, 23 S. W. 1014, a new stairway was substituted for an old one. Held, that the former became a part of the realty and as irremovable by the tenant as the latter. See also Ashby v. Ashby, 59 N. J. Eq. 536, 46 Atl. 528.

The tenant in the case at bar tore out the original floors in the rear 30 feet of the building, and replaced them with double wooden floors 18 inches thick, filled with wood shavings. When completed the new floor simply took the place of the old and became a part of the building. They could no more be removed by the tenant than the original.

Another principle equally well settled is that the right of removal can only be exercised when it causes no material injury to the estate. The value of this principle also is its bearing upon the question of intention. But it is a rule universally recognized, and nowhere more carefully than in the cases first cited, where the right of removal was granted, it being proved that no substantial injury would ensue. In Collamore v. Gillis, 149 Mass. 578, 5 L.R.A. 150, 14 Am. St. Rep. 460, 22 N. E. 46, a baker's oven, built of bricks and mortar, and so united with the building that the two were inseparable without the destruction of the oven and a substantial injury to the building, was held not to be a removable trade fixture.

"Where the chattel is so annexed that it cannot be removed without material injury to the realty, it would ordinarily be a necessary inference that the intention was not to remove it," says this court in Hayford v. Wentworth, 97 Me. at page 350, supra. That necessary inference must be drawn here. The appellant did not place any fixture in the building that it intended to remove. A part of the structure itself was changed and remodeled. It was for the most part a case not of construction, but of reconstruction; not of addition, but of substitution. Floors were removed and thicker floors were substituted. The walls were doubled with a thickness of 6 inches of shavings between, and a similar double wall was constructed to separate these several rooms from the rest of the building. To remove all this would be to leave the building with 30 feet in the rear without floors and open from basement to roof. And after removing what was put in, the tenant would have not a structure or machine the parts of which could fit into one another and be reassembled and set up in some other place, but a worthless mass of old lumber, hardware, and shavings. The burden of proof as to merger is fully sustained here by the character of the changes made by the fact of substitution, by the material injury to the building consequent upon removal, and by the valueless condition of the so-called fixture when removed, and the inference is irresistible that the property became a part of the building itself, and that the appellant is correct in its contention that it had no ownership therein.

Appeal sustained, with costs, and case remanded to the court at nisi prius, for the determination of the question of overvaluation in accordance with the stipulation of the parties.

So ordered.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER COMPANY OF AMERICA

v.

CLEMENT SMITH, Circuit Judge.

(— Mich. —, 127 N. W. 695.)

Monopoly — right to enforce collateral contracts.

1. Agents of a foreign corporation which was organized for legitimate business purposes, and has fully complied with the laws entitling it to do business in the state, cannot defeat an action by it to compel them to pay over money belonging to it, arising from goods sold and collections made, on

Note. — Agreements collateral to contracts forming illegal combinations, and the enforcement thereof by members of such illegal combinations.

This was the subject of a note to Straus v. American Publishers' Asso. 64 L.R.A. 712, also a note appended to Freed v. American F. Ins. Co. 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 368. It is intended to include herein only cases decided subsequently to the latter note.

As shown in the foregoing notes, both at the theory that it is a trust or monopoly, either at common law or under a statute making illegal contracts in restraint of trade or commerce, although the statute denies to a foreign corporation violating its provisions, the right to do business in the state.

Mandamus — invalid order — annulment.

2. Mandamus lies to compel a trial court to vacate an invalid order requiring a plaintiff to produce its books and papers for examination by defendant.

(September 28, 1910.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel the Circuit Judge for Easton County to vacate an order requiring re-common law and under the Federal anti-trust act, and also many state anti-trust acts, which in general only reassert the common-law rule against monopolies, or are similar thereto, the mere fact that a contract is made by or with a member of an illegal combination, or by or with the illegal combination itself, does not invalidate the contract if it is collateral to the illegal combination or agreement, and is based upon a sufficient consideration. Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Louis Voight & Sons Co. 212 U. S. 227, 53 L. ed. 486, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 280, affirming 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 143, 78 C. C. A. 567, 148 Fed. 939; Chicago Wall Paper Mills v. General Paper Co. 78 C. C. A. 607, 147 Fed. 491, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 889; Boatmen's Bank v. Fritzen, 175 Fed. 183; Johns-Pratt Co. v. Sachs Co. 176 Fed. 738; Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Laemmle, 178 Fed. 104; Virtue v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co. 102 C. C. A. 413, 179 Fed. 115; Midland Valley R. Co. v. Hoffman Coal Co. 91 Ark. 180, 120 S. W. 380; Buckhorn Plaster Co. v. Consolidated Plaster Co. 47 Colo. 516, 108 Pac. 27; Brooklyn Distilling Co. v. Standard Distilling & Distributing Co. 120 App. Div. 237, 105 N. Y. Supp. 267, affirmed on other grounds in 193 N. Y. 551, 86 N. E. 564; Freed v. American F. Ins. Co. supra.

Thus, the fact that the owner of a patent is a member of or is an illegal combination or monopoly, in reference to whose business the patent is used, is no bar to an action for the infringement of the patent. Virtue v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co.; Johns-Pratt Co. v. Sachs Co.; and Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Laemmle,—supra.

By alleging and proving a conspiracy to deprive the plaintiff of his interest in certain valuable patents, to establish therewith a monopoly, in violation of the state and Federal statutes, and the further fact that, in carrying out this conspiracy, the conspirators, by threats and false representations, induced the plaintiff to part with his interest in such patents, plaintiff is entitled to a cancellation of his assignment of his interest in the patents, or to an accounting of the profits derived therefrom. Disbrow v. 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

lator to produce certain books and papers in an action brought to compel the payment of certain moneys alleged to have been collected, and payment for goods sold and delivered. Granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James C. McMath, with Messrs. Harry H. Partlow and Thomas, Cummins, & Nichols, for relator:

Statutory provisions against "trusts" or monopolies are merely declaratory of the common law.

State v. Central R. Co. 109 Ga. 722, 48 L.R.A. 351, 35 S. E. 37; Trust Co. v. State, 109 Ga. 751, 48 L.R.A. 520, 35 S. E. 323; Norwich Gas-light Co. v. Norwich City Gas Co. 25 Conn. 19; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 6 L.R.A. 457, 43 N. W. 1102.

Creamery Package Mfg. Co. 110 Minn. 237, 125 N. W. 115.

A contract by a monopoly for the sale of merchandise is not illegal merely because the seller is an illegal combination, where the contract has no direct relation to the illegal combination, being merely a collateral contract, founded upon a good consideration. Chicago Wall Paper Mills v. General Paper Co. supra.

A member of an illegal trust or combination may, nevertheless, sue a railroad company for breach of its common-law and contractual duty to furnish cars to such member, although the cars are to be used by the member to transport a product with reference to which the illegal combination exists, since a breach of such a contract is not in any way connected with the alleged illegal combination. Midland Valley R. Co. v. Hoffman Coal Co. supra.

A lease of a distilling plant, to be used by a monopoly in the manufacture and sale of alcohol and spirituous liquors, is nevertheless valid, since such a contract does not come within the inhibition of the statute against arrangements or combinations whereby a monopoly in the production or sale of an article in common use is or may be created, as this statute does not prevent the selling or leasing of property, nor the buying or leasing of property to prevent competition, but is designed to prevent the owners or controllers of property from entering into a combination to regulate the production and maintain prices for their mutual benefit, according to their respective interest. Brooklyn Distilling Co. v. Standard Distilling & Distributing Co. supra.

So, a person engaged in a manufacturing business, who leases his plant to a consolidated company engaged in the same line of manufacture, and takes employment for a time with such company, cannot repossess himself of the leased property, and defend his possession on the ground that the lessee was an unlawful combination. Buckhorn Plaster Co. v. Consolidated Plaster Co. supra.

Promissory notes executed to a member of a trust or monopoly in part for borrow-

The collateral contracts of a "trust" are not void and unenforceable in Michigan.

Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; The Charles E. Wiswall, 42 L.R.A. 85, 30 C. C. A. 339, 57 U. S. App. 179, 86 Fed. 671; Barton v. Milvane, 59 Kan. 313, 52 Pac. 883; California Cured Fruit Asso. v. Stelling, 141 Cal. 713, 75 Pac. 320; National Distilling Co. v. Cream City Importing Co. 86 Wis. 352, 39 Am. St. Rep. 902, 56 N. W. 864; Hadley Dean Plate Glass Co. v. Highland Glass Co. 74 C. C. A. 462, 143 Fed. 242; Wiley v. National Wall Paper Co. 70 Ill. App. 543; Straight v. National Harrow Co. 51 Fed. 819; Gilbert v. American Surety Co. 61 L.R.A. 253, 57 C. C. A. 619, 121 Fed. 503; Chicago Wall Paper Mills v. General Paper Co. 78 C. C.

A. 607, 147 Fed. 491, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 889.

In the absence of statutes showing a contrary intent or policy, foreign corporations will be permitted to do business, and make contracts which, under the doctrine of state comity, will be held valid and enforced by the courts.

People v. Hawkins, 106 Mich. 482, 64 N. W. 736; Harris v. Runnels, 12 How. 84, 13 L. ed. 903.

In a collateral proceeding between a corporation plaintiff and an individual defendant, the latter is not entitled to prove that the former is a monopoly or "trust," in order to establish the illegality of the contract sued on.

Lafayette Bridge Co. v. Streator, 105 Fed. 729; American Steel & Wire Co. v.

money, and also for services performed or to be performed by the payee in the line of business with reference to which the monopoly existed, are not, for that reason, invalid, since such a contract does not have the direct and necessary effect of furthering the purposes of the monopoly, although it does indirectly or incidentally have such effect. Boatmen's Bank v. Fritzen, supra. The foregoing decision considered the legality of such a contract under the anti-trust laws of Kansas. In this connection it is interesting to compare State v. Wilson, 73 Kan. 343, 117 Am. St. Rep. 479, 80 Pac. 639, 84 Pac. 737, wherein was considered the validity of notes secured by a mortgage given under substantially similar circumstances; and it was held that, under the anti-trust laws of Kansas, such notes and mortgage were invalid. The important provision of this act, so far as concerns this question, was to the effect that any contract or agreement in violation of the act should be absolutely void, and not enforceable in any of the courts of the state; and when any civil action shall be commenced in any court of the state, "it shall be lawful to plead in the defense thereof that the plaintiff, or any other person interested in the prosecution of the case, is at the time, or has within one year next preceding the date of the commencement of any such action, been guilty, either as principal, agent, representative, or consignee, directly or indirectly, of a violation of any of the provisions of this act, or that the cause of action grows out of any business transaction in violation of this act." As stated, the transaction involved in each of these cases was the execution of notes secured by a mortgage to a member of a commission association engaged in the buying and selling of cattle under a by-law prohibiting the members from charging a commission of less than a certain amount. This commission or exchange practically controlled all this business at that point. The consideration for the notes was borrowed money and payment of services rendered or to be rendered by a member of this association in the sale of live stock. In reaching the conclusion that this transaction came within the provisions of the act, and hence was invalid, the court reasoned that the mortgage was void, not because it was given to one who was a member of an unlawful combination, but because a part of its consideration—the charge made for commission—was itself illegal, and added: "This is not an instance of an attempt to fasten a disability to sue upon an individual because of his violation of the law in some independent or collateral matter; the objection goes to the contract itself. The statute forbids a member of a trust to do any business in the state,—that is to say, as properly interpreted, to do any business in promotion of, or in pursuance of, the purposes of the trust. Assuming the facts to be as alleged by the defendant, the mortgagee, a member of the trust, bought these cattle for him, and, in pursuance of the obnoxious by-law, made him a charge of 50 cents a head for such service. This was an illegal act, and the contract to pay such commission was a contract to pay a sum exacted in defiance of the law. The contract for this payment was, therefore, a contract in violation of the statute, by the very terms of which such contracts are made not merely nonenforceable, but absolutely void."

In connection with the two preceding cases it is interesting to compare Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Louis Voight & Sons Co. supra, a leading and authoritative case on the question of what constitutes a collateral contract, in the sense that it does not come within the provisions of enactments against trusts and monopolies. This case was disposed of on demurrer to the answer of the defendants to an action brought for goods sold and delivered by a member of an alleged unlawful combination. By the demurrer the plaintiff admitted that it was a member of a combination or trust formed for the purpose of restraining and monopolizing trade and commerce among the sev-

Wire Drawers' & D. M. Unions Nos. 1 & 3, 90 Fed. 608; Harrison v. Glucose Sugar Ref. Co. 58 L.R.A. 915, 53 C. C. A. 487, 116 Fed. 304; Dennehy v. McNulta, 41 L.R.A. 609, 30 C. C. A. 422, 59 U. S. App. 264, 86 Fed. 825; Pennsylvania Co. v. Bay, 138 Fed. 204; Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Platt, 142 Fed. 606; Atty. Gen. ex rel. Miner v. Lorman, 59 Mich. 162, 60 Am. Rep. 287, 26 N. W. 311; Detroit Driving Club v. Fitzgerald, 109 Mich. 675, 67 N. W. 899; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 758, 769; 10 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 256; Importing & Exporting Co. v. Locke, 50 Ala. 332; Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 7 Pick. 344; Kayser v. Bremen, 16 Mo. 88; Centre & K. Turnp. Road Co. v. M'Conaby, 16 Serg. & R. 140; Pattison v. Albany Bldg. & L. Asso. 63 Ga. 373; Niemeyer v. Little Rock Junction R. Co. 43 Ark. 111; Aurora & C. R. Co. v. Lawrenceburgh, 56 Ind. 80; National Docks R. Co. v. Central R. Co. 32 N. J. Eq. 755; Duke v. Cahawba Nav. Co. 16 Ala. 372; Garrett v. Dillsburg & M. R. Co. 78 Pa. 465; Stout v. Zulick, 48 N. J. L. 599, 7 Atl. 362; Swartwout v. Michigan Air Line R. Co. 24 Mich. 393; Nichols v. Ann Arbor & Y. Street R. Co. 87 Mich. 368, 16 L.R.A. 371, 49 N. W. 538; Toledo & A. A. R. Co. v. Johnson, 49 Mich. 149, 13 N. W. 492; Canal Street Gravel-Road Co. v. Paas, 95 Mich. 381, 54 N. W. 907; Wyandotte Electric Light Co. v. Wyandotte, 124 Mich. 48, 82 N. W. 821; Detroit & T. Shore Line R. Co. v. Campbell, 140 Mich. 394, 103 N. W. 856.

Discovery will not be compelled in aid of any civil action, although no penalty or eral states in the manufacturing, buying, selling, and dealing in wall paper; that this combination had the direct effect to accomplish that purpose; that the defendant, engaged in buying and selling wall paper in Ohio and other states, was compelled to become a party to the illegal combination or go out of business; that the account in suit was made up as to prices and terms of sale, not upon the basis of an independent collateral contract for goods sold and delivered, but with direct reference to and in conformity with, and for the object of, enforcing the agreement that constituted or out of which came the illegal combination whose business was carried on under the name of the plaintiff; that a judgment against the defendant upon the account in suit would, in effect, legally and practically aid the combination to reap the fruits of agreements that were illegal under the acts of Congress, and the making of which was declared by that act a crime. On the part of the plaintiff, the contention was made that the contract in question was a collateral agreement within the rule of Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431. In distinguishing the two cases, the court pointed out that in the Connolly Case the defendant seeking to avoid payment for goods purchased had no connection with the general business or operations of the alleged illegal corporation that sold the goods. He had nothing whatever to do with the formation of that corporation, and could not participate in the profits of its business. His contract was to take certain goods at an agreed price, and was nothing more, and was not in itself illegal, nor part of, nor in execution of, any general plan or scheme which the law condemned. It was the case simply of a corporation that dealt with an entire stranger in its management and operations, and sold goods which it owned to one who wished to buy them. But the case then before it, the court said, was entirely different, and added: "The Continental Wall Paper Company seeks in legal effect the aid of the court to enforce a contract for the sale and purchase of goods which, it is admitted by the demurrer, was in fact, and was intended by the parties to be, based upon agreements that were and are essential parts of an illegal scheme. . . . If judgment be given for the plaintiff, the result, beyond all question, will be to give the aid of the court in making effective the illegal agreements that constituted the forbidden combination. . . . Stated shortly, the present case is this: The plaintiff comes into court admitting that it is an illegal combination whose operations restrain and monopolize commerce and trade among the states, and asks a judgment that will give effect, as far it goes, to agreements that constituted that combination, and by means of which the combination purposes to accomplish forbidden ends. We hold that such a judgment cannot be granted without departing from the statutory rule long established in the jurisprudence of both this country and England, that a court will not lend its aid in any way to a party seeking to realize the fruits of an agreement that appears to be tainted with illegality."

Under the anti-trust laws of Oklahoma, an illegal trust or monopoly, selling goods or merchandise manufactured within the state, cannot recover the purchase price thereof, where the illegality of the contract on this ground is properly pleaded by the purchaser. Wagner v. Minnie Harvester Co. (Okla.) 106 Pac. 969.

But to come within the provisions of such an act, the sale must have been made within the state, as the act does not apply to sales made in another state, since such a sale would be a part of interstate commerce, which cannot be controlled by an act of the state. Frank A. Menne Factory v. Harback, 85 Ark. 278, 107 S. W. 991.

A. G. S.

forfeiture would flow directly from it, if such discovery might have a tendency to, or might eventually, subject the party to such penalty or forfeiture in another proceeding.

6 Enc. Pl. & Pr. pp. 742, 743; Taylor v. Bruen, 2 Barb. Ch. 301; Skinner v. Judson, 8 Conn. 533, 21 Am. Dec. 691; Marshall v. Riley, 7 Ga. 367; Livingston v. Tompkins, 4 Johns. Ch. 432, 8 Am. Dec. 598; Lindsley v. James, 3 Coldw. 477; Northwestern Bank v. Nelson, 1 Gratt. 108; Thompson v. Whitaker Iron Co. 41 W. Va. 574, 23 S. E. 795; United States v. Saline Bank, 1 Pet. 100, 7 L. ed. 69; United States v. National Lead Co. 75 Fed. 94; Atterberry v. Knox, 8 Dana, 282; Legoux v. Wante, 3 Harr. & J. 184; March v. Davison, 9 Paige, 579; Stewart v. Drasha, 4 McLean, 563, Fed. Cas. No. 13,424.

Mr. Elmer N. Peters, with Mr. John L. Wright, for respondent:

Testimony as to the character of relator is admissible.

Detroit Salt Co. v. National Salt Co. 134 Mich. 121, 96 N. W. 1; Erpelding v. McKearnan, 143 Mich. 415, 107 N. W. 107.

The right of a foreign corporation to sue in our court is limited, first by statute, and second, by the general rule that the doctrine of state comity will not be applied in behalf of a foreign corporation seeking to recover upon a claim or contract expressly prohibited by law, or one which is clearly at variance with the settled policy of the state.

Seamans v. Temple Co. 105 Mich. 400, 28 L.R.A. 430, 55 Am. St. Rep. 457, 63 N. W. 408; People's Mut. Ben. Soc. v. Lester, 105 Mich. 716, 63 N. W. 977; 19 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1222; Swing v. Cameron, 145 Mich. 175, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 417, 108 N. W. 506, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 332; Thompson v. Waters, 25 Mich. 214, 12 Am. Rep. 243; American & F. Christian Union v. Yount, 101 U. S. 350, 25 L. ed. 890; Swing v. Weston Lumber Co. 140 Mich. 344, 103 N. W. 816; Heffron v. Daly, 133 Mich. 613, 95 N. W. 714; Union Trust Co. v. Preston Nat. Bank, 136 Mich. 460, 112 Am. St. Rep. 370, 99 N. W. 309, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 347; Edison General Electric Co. v. Canadian P. Nav. Co. 8 Wash. 370, 24 L.R.A. 315, 40 Am. St. Rep. 910, 36 Pac. 260.

Corporations are not entitled to the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states.

19 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1226 and note.

The question as to whether or not the relator has entered into a trust agreement, as defined in the statute, is material to the issue.

Detroit Salt Co. v. National Salt Co. 134 Mich. 119, 96 N. W. 1.
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Noncompliance with the provisions of the statute relating to the doing of business within the state by a foreign corporation may be interposed as a defense to a suit based upon contracts made in this state by such a noncomplying foreign corporation.

Rough v. Breitung, 117 Mich. 48, 75 N. W. 147; Wright v. St. Louis Sugar Co. 146 Mich. 555, 109 N. W. 1062; Hastings Industrial Co. v. Moran, 143 Mich. 679, 107 N. W. 706.

If the relator's books, papers, and records, if produced, would show that it had violated the anti-trust statute, the only effect of such disclosure, outside of the effect it would have upon the case at bar, would be the possible commencement of proceedings restraining the further carrying on of its business in this state; and this is not the infliction of a penalty of forfeiture, for the reason that foreign corporations doing business here, not by right, but by comity.

Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; State v. Standard Oil Co. 61 Neb. 28, 87 Am. St. Rep. 449, 84 N. W. 413; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Mayer, 28 Ohio St. 521.

Stone, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Relator is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Wisconsin. It was first incorporated in 1881, under the name of the Parker-Dennett Harvesting Machine Company, Limited, with a capital stock of $100,000, for the purpose of manufacturing and selling harvesting and other farm machinery. In March, 1882, its name was changed to the Dennett Harvesting Machine Company, Limited. In February, 1883, its capital was increased to $250,000. In December, 1883, it was again increased to $500,000. In November, 1884, the name of the company was changed to the Milwaukee Harvester Company. In April, 1889, the capital stock was increased to $750,000, and in January, 1893, was again increased to $1,000,000, where it has remained ever since. On September 5, 1902, the name of the company was changed to the International Harvester Company of America, which name it now bears. On April 3, 1903, the relator was regularly admitted by the secretary of state of Michigan to carry on its business in this state, in accordance with the provisions of Act No. 206 of the Public Acts of 1901, and in pursuance of the authority granted it, as aforesaid, has conducted its business of selling agricultural implements in this state since that time, and has invested large sums of money in real estate, and ware houses necessary and incident to its business aforesaid. Since its admission to do business in this state, it claims that it has complied with all the requirements of our foreign corporation laws by regularly filing its annual reports; and this claim is not denied by respondent. In 1907, in the regular course of its business in this state, the relator appointed Fayette De Puy and John Holmes (a copartnership doing business as De Puy & Holmes) its agents for the sale of its products at Grand Lodge and vicinity. During the continuance of this agency,—that is, during the spring and summer months of 1907,—the said De Puy & Holmes became indebted to the relator in the claimed sum of about $1,500, a large portion of which was for moneys collected by said De Puy & Holmes as agents of relator, and the remainder was for the purchase price of goods sold and delivered to said De Puy & Holmes by relator during the continuance of the agency aforesaid. Most of this indebtedness remaining unpaid, the relator, on November 12, 1909, commenced an action of assumpsit in the circuit court for the county of Eaton, against said De Puy & Holmes, to recover the amount owing to it, as above stated. The declaration was on the common counts. Defendant Holmes made no defense, and his default was regularly entered; but defendant De Puy filed a plea of the general issue, with notice of two special defenses, viz.:

(1) That the plaintiff, at the time the indebtedness mentioned was created, was a "trust," as defined by the statutes of this state, and hence any contract made by defendant with the plaintiff was null and void, and against public policy. That the said plaintiff is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of Wisconsin. That the purpose of said corporation is, to wit, the control of the manufacturing of all harvest machinery and other agricultural implements, to carry out restrictions in trade of the said agricultural implements, to limit or reduce the price of said implements, to prevent competition in the manufacture of said implements, to fix the price to the consumer, thereby controlling and establishing the price to the public at large by entering into an agreement whereby it has bound itself with the several harvester companies not to sell any of their or its manufactured products below a certain standard, by them and the plaintiff fixed. That the plaintiff is a pool and combine, whereby the interest of all, or nearly all, of the great harvester companies of the world, are united, and the interest of all such companies is fixed by the said plaintiff. And that the plaintiff thereby fixes and controls the price of their products.

(2) That the plaintiff had never filed a copy of its articles of incorporation with the secretary of state of the state of Michigan, or paid the lawful fees by it to be paid, before doing business in this state, and hence any contract made by defendant with the plaintiff was null and void, and could not be enforced. We note in passing that the second allegation of the notice is in direct conflict with the relator's petition for mandamus (Petition, par. 2), which paragraph of petition is admitted to be true, in the answer of respondent.

After issue was thus joined, defendant De Puy filed a petition under circuit court rules 50-57 (124 Mich. xxxviii. 87 N. W. vi.), first reciting in substance the defenses above mentioned, and then alleging that it was necessary, to enable him to prepare for trial, that the books, records, documents, and papers of the plaintiff (relator), showing the names of its stockholders, the amount of stock held by each, the names of its officers, the total amount of property in Michigan from 1903 to 1909, the total amount of property owned by it from 1903 to 1909, the total amount of business done by it from 1903 to 1909, the total amount of business done by it in Michigan from 1903 to 1909, also the number and location of factories, also the records of its stockholders' and directors' meetings from 1903 to 1909, or sworn copies thereof, be produced, and deposited with the clerk of said court, and that all proceedings in the suit of the plaintiff be stayed until such books, records, etc., were produced, as prayed for. The petition contained an averment, upon information and belief (in addition to the special defenses set up under the plea of the general issue), that plaintiff (relator) had increased from time to time the proportion of its capital stock represented by property and business in Michigan, and had not, within thirty days after such increase, filed a statement showing such increase, with the secretary of state. We note again the fact that, in its petition for mandamus, the relator avers that it has in all respects complied with the laws of this state, governing the business of foreign corporations in the state. The answer of respondent does not deny the averment. Berube v. Wheeler, 128 Mich. 32, 87 N. W. 50; Barlow v. Riker, 138 Mich. 607, 101 N. W. 820. After hearing the said petition of defendant De Puy, the respondent granted the order prayed for, whereupon the relator formally moved the respondent to vacate such order, which motion of relator was denied. Relator filed its petition in this court for a writ of mandamus to compel the respondent to vacate and set aside the order above mentioned; an order to show cause was issued and served; and respondent has made a return, substantially admitting all of the material averments of relator's petition.

At the outset it may be well for us to distinguish this case from the several cases in this court, cited by respondent's counsel to the proposition that contracts of an unlicensed foreign corporation, made in this state, are illegal, and that such corporations will be denied the aid of our courts in enforcing such contracts. Most of the cases cited are insurance cases, in which the contracts were expressly prohibited, and some of them are cases of foreign mercantile corporations, in which the statute expressly declared that such contracts should be void. Such corporations have sometimes been spoken of as having no legal existence here, and as having no standing in our courts. Among such cases are the following: Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 6 L.R.A. 457, 43 N. W. 1102; Seamans v. Temple Co. 105 Mich. 400, 28 L.R.A. 430, 55 Am. St. Rep. 457, 63 N. W. 408; People's Mut. Ben. Soc. v. Lester, 105 Mich. 716, 63 N. W. 977; Swing v. Weston Lumber Co. 140 Mich. 344, 103 N. W. 816; Swing v. Cameron, 145 Mich. 175, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 417, 108 N. W. 506, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 332. It was, however, held in People v. Hawkins, 106 Mich. 479, 64 N. W. 736, that an agent of a foreign corporation could not defend a charge of embezzlement, upon the ground that the corporation was prohibited from doing business in this state, by reason of noncompliance with the statutory conditions.

We are here dealing with a corporation that is alleged to be a "trust" or monopoly; one, however, which, as appears by its articles of incorporation, was lawfully organized for a legitimate purpose and business, under the laws of Wisconsin. It has complied with the laws of this state regulating foreign corporations. It comes into a court of this state, and sues upon an independent collateral contract, made with defendant, an agent in this state,—a contract in no way tainted with the illegality of the alleged trust or combination, and one not prohibited by our statute. Can the defense here sought to be imposed be maintained? Assuming, as contended, that the alleged combination was illegal if tested by the principles of the common law, still it would not follow that the defendant could refuse to pay for goods bought by him under special contract with plaintiff. The illegality of such combination and "trust" would not prevent the plaintiff corporation from selling goods that it obtained even from its constituent companies or either of them. It could pass title by sale to any one desiring to buy, and the buyer could not justify a refusal to pay for what he bought and received by proving that the seller had previously, in the prosecution of its business, entered into an illegal combination with others in reference generally to the sale of articles or products. Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431. This was an action brought upon a contract between the parties, which was itself legal and entirely collateral to any illegal combination. It was sought there by special defense to defeat the action by showing that the plaintiff was a "trust" or combination, and the Supreme Court of the United States held that the defense could not be maintained. The court cites Strait v. National Harrow Co. (C. C.) 51 Fed. 819, and Kiff v. Youmans, 86 N. Y. 329, 40 Am. Rep. 543. Justice Harlan said:

"In National Distilling Co. v. Cream City Importing Co. 86 Wis. 352, 355, 39 Am. St. Rep. 902, 56 N. W. 864, which was an action to recover the price of goods sold and delivered, one of the defenses was that the plaintiff was a member of an illegal trust or combination to interfere with the freedom of trade and commerce. The supreme court of Wisconsin said: 'The first defense does not deny any allegation of the complaint, but the substance of it is that the sale and delivery of the goods in question to the defendant was void, as against public policy, because the vendor was at the time a member of an unlawful trust or combination, formed to unlawfully interfere with the freedom of trade and commerce, and in restraint thereof, and to accomplish the ends therein set forth. . . . Conceding for the purposes of this case that the trust or combination in question may be illegal, and its members may be restrained from carrying out the purposes for which it was created by a court of equity, in a suit on behalf of the public, or may be subject to indictment or punishment, there is, nevertheless, no allegation showing or tending to show that the contract of sale between the plaintiff and defendant was tainted with any illegality, or was contrary to public policy. The argument, if any the case admits of, is that, as the plaintiff was a member of the so-called "trust" or "combination," the defendant might voluntarily purchase the goods . . . of it at any agreed price, and convert them to its own use, and be justified in a court of justice in its refusal to pay the plaintiff for them, because of the connection of the vendor with such trust or combination. The plaintiff's cause of action is in no legal sense dependent upon or affected by the alleged illegality of the trust or combination, because the illegality, if any, is entirely collateral to the transaction in question, and the court is not called upon in this action to enforce any contract tainted with illegality, or contrary to public policy. The mere fact that the plaintiff is a member of a trust or combination, created with the intent and purposes set forth in the answer, will not disable or prevent it in law from selling goods within or affected by the provisions of such trust or combination, and recovering their price or value. It does not appear that it had stipulated to refrain from such transactions. A contrary doctrine would lead to most startling and dangerous consequences.' . . . Denphey v. McNulta, 41 L.R.A. 609, 30 C. C. A. 422, 59 U. S. App. 264, 86 Fed. 825, 827, 829. . . .

"It is undoubtedly the general rule that a contract made in violation of a statute is void, and no recovery can be had upon it; as in Embrey v. Jemison, 131 U. S. 336, 348, 33 L. ed. 172, 177, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 776. That was an action upon a promissory note given in execution of a contract for the purchase of 'future delivery' cotton, neither the purchase nor delivery of actual cotton being contemplated by the parties, but the settlement in respect to which was to be on the basis of the 'difference' between the contract price and the market price of cotton futures, according to the fluctuations in the market. The contract was held to be a wagering contract, and therefore illegal and void." Miller v. Ammon, 145 U. S. 421, 36 L. ed. 759, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 884; McMullen v. Hoffman, 174 U. S. 639, 654, 43 L. ed. 1117, 1123, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 839.

Assuming, therefore, that relator is a "trust" or monopoly, as defined by our laws, its independent or collateral contracts, such as is sued on in this case, are just as valid and enforceable as are the contracts of any other person or corporation, unless some statute has changed the rule of the common law in that respect. The only statutes touching the matter are act No. 255, Pub. Acts 1899, and act No. 329, Pub. Acts 1905. Subdivision 5 of § 1, and §§ 2, 3, and 8 of the act of 1899, are here referred to. Act No. 329 of 1905 is entitled, "An Act Relative to Agreements, Contracts, and Combinations in Restraint of Trade or Commerce." It is declared to be supplementary to, and declaratory of, and in addition to, act No. 255 of 1899. Its first five sections are material here, and are referred to. Neither of the acts undertakes to prohibit or forbid the making of such contracts as the one involved in this suit. It is evident that, by the language of § 8 of the act of 1899, and § 5 of act of 1905, above referred to, the legislature did not leave to inference or implication the illegality of the particular contracts which it was dealing with.

The language of Justice Harlan in Con- 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

nolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. supra, where he deals with the special defense in that case, based upon the "Sherman anti-trust act," is pertinent here: "The special defense based upon act Cong. July 2, 1890, chap. 647, 26 Stat. at L. 209, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3200, was also properly rejected. . . . Much of what has just been said in reference to the first special defense, based on the common law, is applicable to this part of the case. If the contract between the plaintiff corporation and the other named corporations, persons, and companies, or the combination thereby formed, was illegal under the act of Congress, then all those, whether persons, corporations, or associations, directly connected therewith, became subject to the penalties prescribed by Congress. But the act does not declare illegal or void any sale made by such combination, or by its agents, of property it acquired or which came into its possession for the purpose of being sold, such property not being at the time in the course of transportation from one state to another or to a foreign country. The buyer could not refuse to comply with his contract of purchase upon the ground that the seller was an illegal combination which might be restrained or suppressed in the mode prescribed by the act of Congress; for Congress did not declare that a combination illegally formed under the act of 1890 should not, in the conduct of its business, become the owner of property which it might sell to whomsoever wished to buy it. So that there is no necessary legal connection here between the sale of pipe to the defendants by the plaintiff corporation and the alleged arrangement made by it with other corporations, companies, and firms. The contracts under which the pipe in question was sold were, as already said, collateral to the arrangement is of the combination referred to, and this is not an action to enforce the terms of such arrangement. . . . In the case of The Charles E. Wiswall (D. C.) 74 Fed. 802, which was a libel in rem by certain tug owners against a steam dredge, to recover the value of certain services rendered by the tug in towing the dredges, it was sought to avoid payment for the services thus rendered upon the ground that the tug owners were members of an association which was illegal and void under the Sherman act. The court, assuming that the agreement by which the tugs acted in unison was prohibited by that act, said: 'He [the claimant] should not be permitted to repudiate his just debts to the individual tugs because their association was illegal. Having asked for their services, and having accepted the benefit thereof, he should pay. . . . An agreement by the tug Mayflower to tow the dredge Wisewall, for a reasonable sum, from Albany to Troy, is not void because the Mayflower is associated with other tugs to regulate the price of towing at Albany. Should the claimant purchase a pair of trousers at an Albany clothing shop, he would find it difficult to avoid paying their actual market price because the vendor and other tailors of that city had combined to keep up prices.' Nor can the defendants refuse to pay for what they bought upon the ground that the 7th section of the Sherman act gives the right to any person 'injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful' by the act to sue and recover treble the damages sustained by him. We shall not now attempt to declare the full scope and meaning of that section of the act of Congress. It is sufficient to say that the action which it authorizes must be a direct one, and the damages claimed cannot be set off in these actions, based upon special contracts for the sale of pipe, that have no direct connection with the alleged arrangement or combination between the plaintiff and other corporations, firms, or companies. Such damages cannot be said, as matter of law, to have directly grown out of that arrangement or combination. . . . If the act of Congress expressly authorized one who purchased property from a combination organized in violation of its provisions to plead, in defense of a suit for the price, the illegal character of the combination, that would present an entirely different question. But the act contains no such provision." Chicago Wall Paper Mills v. General Paper Co. 78 C. C. A. 607, 147 Fed. 491, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 889. It was held there that a contract for the sale of merchandise is not rendered illegal by the fact that the selling corporation is a "trust" or monopoly organized in violation of law, either Federal or state; the contract of sale being collateral and having no direct relation to the unlawful scheme or combination. The following cases are cited: Hopkins v. United States, 171 U. S. 578, 43 L. ed. 290, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40; Anderson v. United States, 171 U. S. 604, 43 L. ed. 300, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50; Star Brewery v. United Breweries Co. 58 C. C. A. 133, 121 Fed. 713; Harrison v. Glucose Sugar Ref. Co. 58 L.R.A. 915, 53 C. C. A. 484, 116 Fed. 304. This case was in the seventh circuit. Opinion by Jenkins, Ch. J., and concurred in by Grosseup and Humphrey. The opinion commences with the following language: "The objection that the appellee is an illegal trust or monopoly condemned by the law of the state of Illinois, and so declared by the supreme court of that state, cannot be sustained. We have held, in the case of an injurious combination of the nature here asserted, that the remedy is by direct proceedings; that with respect to a contract which is independent of the illegal combination, and is merely incident to other and innocent purposes, one who voluntarily and knowingly deals with parties so combined cannot, on the one hand, take the benefit of his bargain, and, on the other, defend against the contract on the ground of the illegality of the combination,"—citing Dennehy v. McNulta, 41 L.R.A. 609, 30 C. C. A. 422, 59 U. S. App. 264, 86 Fed. 825. See also National Folding-Box & Paper Co. v. Robertson (C. C.) 99 Fed. 985. Reference is also made to Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Hadley-Dean Plate Glass Co. v. Highland Glass Co. 74 C. C. A. 462, 143 Fed. 243 (eighth circuit), opinion by Van Devanter, Ch. J., concurred in by Judges Hook and Lochren. The Allen Glass Company, a Pennsylvania corporation, engaged in manufacturing glass in that state, received and accepted an order for the manufacture and delivery of glass from the Hadley-Dean Glass Company, a Missouri corporation. There was some evidence tending to show that, at the time of making the contract, the plaintiff and others, not including the defendant, were in an unlawful combination to stifle competition to the sale of glass, and to arbitrarily control its price, and because of this it was contended that, in directing a verdict for the plaintiff, the court failed to give effect to the anti-trust statute of Missouri, and to the anti-trust legislation of Congress. After holding that, as to the said statute, it could have no application to the contract under consideration without impinging upon the exclusive authority of Congress to regulate commerce among the several states, the court proceeds to consider the "Sherman anti-trust act," and quotes therefrom, and proceeds in the following language: "That it does not render illegal or prevent a recovery on this contract is shown by Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. supra.

The only provision in either the act of 1899 or 1905 which gives any force to the claim that the collateral contracts of "trusts" and monopolies are void and unenforceable in this state is that contained in § 3 of act of 1899, which in substance provides that "every foreign corporation violating any of the provisions of this act is hereby denied the right and prohibited from doing business in this state; and it shall be the duty of the attorney general to enforce this provision by bringing proper proceedings in quo warranto," and the provision of § 4, act 1905. There is not a word in either statute that gives a purchaser of goods the right to plead these statutes as a defense. As we have already indicated, it is not contended but that the relator is duly and regularly organized as a corporation under the laws of Wisconsin, and that its articles of incorporation state a purpose entirely lawful and legitimate. The notice of special defense in effect and substance is that, although the relator was duly and legally incorporated under the laws of Wisconsin authorizing the formation of corporations for a perfectly legitimate and lawful purpose, and although its articles of incorporation state a purpose in compliance with such laws, nevertheless the real purpose of the incorporation was unlawful, viz., to carry out restrictions in trade and commerce, contrary to the common and statute law. In short, to create a "trust" or monopoly.

If the articles of the relator state a purpose for which the statute authorizes a corporation to be formed, then, if other requirements of the law are complied with, it is not only a corporation de facto, but it is a corporation de jure. In such a case the illegality of its organization cannot be attacked at all, and it can only be shown that the corporation is guilty of a misuser of its corporate franchises by attempting, under the guise of a legal corporate existence, to conduct a business not authorized by its charter, or in a manner contrary to law or some principle of public policy; and this by a direct proceeding to test its right. Atty. Gen. ex rel. Miner v. Lorman, 59 Mich. 162, 60 Am. Rep. 287, 28 N. W. 311; Detroit Driving Club v. Fitzgerald, 109 Mich. 674, 67 N. W. 899; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 76d. The rule that, where a corporation is incompetent by its charter to do an act, a private party cannot raise the question, but the sovereign alone can object, in a direct proceeding instituted for that purpose, applies here. This rule has frequently been applied to ultra vires acts of national banks. Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. ed. 188.

In conclusion, we quote the following from 10 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 256: "This brings us to a doctrine, founded in public policy and convenience, and supported by an almost unanimous consensus of judicial opinion, which is that rightfulness of the existence of a body claiming to act, and in fact acting in the face of the state, as a corporation, cannot be litigated in actions between private individuals, or between private individuals and the assumed corporation, but that the rightfulness of the existence of the corporation can be questioned only by the state; in other words, that the question of the rightful existence of the corporation cannot be raised in a collateral proceeding." More than 100 cases are cited in the note, from thirty states of the Union and United States Supreme Court. The Michigan cases are Montgomery v. Merrill, 18 Mich. 338; Toledo & A. A. R. Co. v. Johnson, 49 Mich. 148, 13 N. W. 492; Wyandotte Electric Light Co. v. Wyandotte, 124 Mich. 43, 82 N. W. 821.

It seems very clear to us that persons who buy goods or receive services from members of a combination cannot interpose the defense that the plaintiff is a party to an independent combination in restraint of trade, in no way affecting the contract sued upon, unless, as in some few states, there is an explicit statutory provision creating such a defense; and that there is no such statutory provision in Michigan.

We are of opinion that the claimed defense is not available to, and cannot be maintained by, the defendant in the pending suit.

It follows that the order made by the respondent should be vacated, and the writ of mandamus will issue as prayed for in relator's petition, with costs to the relator against the defendant De Puy.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

MARK UPDIKE

v.

CITY OF OMAHA, Appt.

(— Neb. —, 127 N. W. 229.)

Municipal corporation — defective street — notice.

Section 207 of the act governing cities of the metropolitan class (Comp. Stat. 1907, chap. 12a), requiring written notice of defective public ways or sidewalks thereof to be filed with the clerk five days before the occurrence of the injury complained of, has no application to defects caused by the city itself in negligently constructing a sewer in one of the streets of the city.

(Root and Letton, JJ., dissent.)

(June 10, 1910.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Douglas County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Headnote by SEDGWICK, J.

Note. — As to the necessity of written notice as to defects, as a condition of liability of a municipal corporation for injuries due to the positive act of its officers or servants, see the note accompanying Tewksbury v. Lincoln, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 282.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Harry E. Burnam, I. J. Dunn, and John A. Rine, for appellant:

As the liability of a city for injuries resulting from the defective condition of its streets must rest on some express or implied provision of the statute, the legislature may place such limitations upon it as it may deem proper, or, for that matter, take it away entirely.

Goddard v. Lincoln, 69 Neb. 594, 96 N. W. 273; Woods v. Colfax County, 10 Neb. 555, 7 N. W. 269; Hollingsworth v. Saunders County, 36 Neb. 141, 54 N. W. 79; Bryant v. Dakota County, 53 Neb. 755, 74 N. W. 313.

The statute must be complied with in order to hold the city responsible.

Schmidt v. Fremont, 70 Neb. 577, 97 N. W. 830; Nicholson v. South Omaha, 77 Neb. 710, 110 N. W. 558; Williams v. Galveston, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 63, 90 S. W. 505; Galveston v. Posnainsky, 62 Tex. 119, 50 Am. Rep. 517; Schigley v. Waseca, 106 Minn. 94, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 689, 118 N. W. 259, 16 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 169; MacMullen v. Middletown, 187 N. Y. 37, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 391, 79 N. E. 863; Lincoln v. Grant, 38 Neb. 369, 56 N. W. 995; Lincoln v. Finkle, 41 Neb. 575, 59 N. W. 915; Lincoln v. O'Brien, 56 Neb. 761, 77 N. W. 76.

The knowledge or notice which the statute requires is that of the particular defect complained of, and not knowledge or notice of other defects which, although they are shown to exist to the knowledge of the city, did not occasion the injury alleged.

Dundas v. Lansing, 75 Mich. 499, 5 L.R.A. 143, 13 Am. St. Rep. 457, 42 N. W. 1013; Ruggles v. Nevada, 63 Iowa, 185, 18 N. W. 867; Northdurft v. Lincoln, 66 Neb. 434, 92 N. W. 628, 96 N. W. 163; Fuller v. Jackson, 82 Mich. 480, 46 N. W. 723.

The courts cannot, by construction, destroy the effect of a plain and unambiguous act of the legislature because, in the judgment of the court, to accept the law as the legislature passed it would amount to an admission that the law-making body in enacting the law showed a lack of foresight.

Shellenberger v. Ransom, 41 Neb. 643, 25 L.R.A. 564, 59 N. W. 935; Stoppert v. Mierle, 45 Neb. 112, 63 N. W. 382; State ex rel. School Dist. No. 6 v. Moore, 45 Neb. 18, 63 N. W. 130; Coad v. Read, 48 Neb. 43, 66 N. W. 1002.

Mr. F. W. Fitch, for appellee:

Where an obstruction in a street is the natural result of defects in its original construction by the city, the city is chargeable with notice from the beginning, and 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

is under a continuing duty to repair it, and written notice of defect is unnecessary.

Tewksbury v. Lincoln, 84 Neb. 571, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 283, 121 N. W. 994; Stedman v. Rome, 88 Hun, 279, 34 N. Y. Supp. 737; Oklahoma City v. Welsh, 3 Okla. 288, 41 Pac. 598; Denver v. Saulcey, 5 Colo. App. 420, 38 Pac. 1098; Sweeney v. Butte, 15 Mont. 274, 39 Pac. 286; Sutton v. Snohomish, 11 Wash. 24, 48 Am. St. Rep. 847, 39 Pac. 273; Smith v. St. Joseph, 42 Mo. App. 392; Detroit v. Corey, 9 Mich. 165, 80 Am. Dec. 78; Chicago v. Major, 18 Ill. 349, 68 Am. Dec. 553; Akers v. New York, 14 Misc. 524, 35 N. Y. Supp. 1099; Buck v. Biddeford, 82 Me. 437, 19 Atl. 912; Holmes v. Paris, 75 Me. 559; Evans v. Iowa City, 125 Iowa, 202, 100 N. W. 1112; Denver v. Aaron, 6 Colo. App. 232, 40 Pac. 587; Riddle v. Westfield, 65 Hun, 432, 20 N. Y. Supp. 359; Wilson v. Troy, 135 N. Y. 96, 18 L.R.A. 449, 31 Am. St. Rep. 817, 32 N. E. 44; Ringelstein v. San Antonio (Tex. Civ. App.) 21 S. W. 634; Barr v. Kansas City, 105 Mo. 550, 16 S. W. 483; Birmingham v. McCary, 84 Ala. 469, 4 So. 630; Abilene v. Cowperthwait, 52 Kan. 324, 34 Pac. 795; Bourget v. Cambridge, 159 Mass. 388, 34 N. E. 455; Kleopfert v. Minneapolis, 93 Minn. 118, 100 N. W. 669; McDonald v. Duluth, 93 Minn. 206, 100 N. W. 1103; 7 Thomp. Neg. § 5993; Pratt v. Cohasset, 177 Mass. 488, 59 N. E. 79; Hutchinson v. Clarke, 26 R. I. 307, 58 Atl. 948; Torphy v. Fall River, 188 Mass. 310, 74 N. E. 465; Drake v. Kansas City, 190 Mo. 370, 109 Am. St. Rep. 759, 88 S. W. 689; Brake v. Kansas City, 100 Mo. App. 611, 75 S. W. 191; Poole v. Jackson, 93 Tenn. 62, 23 S. W. 57; Houston v. Owen (Tex. Civ. App.) 67 S. W. 788; Dallas v. McAllister (Tex. Civ. App.) 39 S. W. 173; Cantwell v. Appleton, 71 Wis. 403, 37 N. W. 813; Dallas v. Muncton, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 112, 83 S. W. 431; Elam v. Mt. Sterling, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 701, note; Hughes v. Fond du Lac, 73 Wis. 380, 41 N. W. 407.

The question of notice to city authorities concerning the condition of a street, or an obstruction therein, is involved only where they have not produced the condition themselves.

Salem v. Webster, 192 Ill. 369, 61 N. E. 323; Ludlow v. Fargo, 3 N. D. 485, 57 N. W. 506.

When negligence on behalf of the municipality is the main issue, either in original construction, failure to inspect and repair, or to warn the public of danger, notice to the municipality of the condition of a public street or thoroughfare is implied, and need not be given prior to the injury of such defect or obstruction.

3 Elliott, Ev. § 2513; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp.

§ 1024; Lincoln v. Calvert, 30 Neb. 305, 58 N. W. 115; Harvard v. Stiles, 54 Neb. 29, 74 N. W. 399; Ft. Wayne v. Patterson, 3 Ind. App. 34, 29 N. E. 167; Dallas v. Muncton, supra; McSherry v. Canandaigua, 129 N. Y. 612, 29 N. E. 821, 35 N. Y. S. R. 432, 12 N. Y. Supp. 751; Boltz v. Sullivan, 101 Wis. 608, 77 N. W. 870; Sullivan v. Oshkosh, 55 Wis. 508, 13 N. W. 468; Weber v. Creston, 75 Iowa, 16, 39 N. W. 126; Shinnick v. Marshalltown, 137 Iowa, 72, 114 N. W. 542; Wheeler v. Ft. Dodge, 131 Iowa, 566, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 146, 108 N. W. 1057.

Evidence as to the condition of the surface of the street in the immediate vicinity of the accident was admissible for the purpose of showing that the general condition of the street in that vicinity was such as to lead to the discovery of the defect in question.

Ledgerwood v. Webster City, 93 Iowa, 726, 61 N. W. 1089; Pumorio v. Merrill, 125 Wis. 102, 103 N. W. 464; Elgin v. Nofs, 212 Ill. 20, 72 N. E. 43; 6 Thomp. Neg. § 7845; Chase v. Chicago, 20 Ill. App. 274; Clayton v. Brooks, 31 Ill. App. 62; Tice v. Bay City, 84 Mich. 461, 47 N. W. 1062; Kankakee v. Steinbach, 89 Ill. App. 513; Gude v. Mankato, 30 Minn. 256, 15 N. W. 175; Osborne v. Detroit, 32 Fed. 36; Shelbyville v. Brant, 61 Ill. App. 153; Armstrong v. Ackley, 71 Iowa, 76, 32 N. W. 180; McConnell v. Osage, 80 Iowa, 293, 8 L.R.A. 778, 45 N. W. 550; Munger v. Waterloo, 83 Iowa, 559, 49 N. W. 1028; Smith v. Des Moines, 84 Iowa, 685, 51 N. W. 77; Edwards v. Three Rivers, 102 Mich. 153, 60 N. W. 454; Belton v. Turner (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 831; Shaw v. Sun Prairie, 74 Wis. 105, 42 N. W. 271; Dallas v. Muncton, supra.

For the purpose of proving notice to a municipality the plaintiff may prove the condition of the place both before and after the accident.

Gude v. Mankato, supra; Chicago v. Dalle, 115 Ill. 386, 5 N. E. 578; Hunt v. Dubuque, 96 Iowa, 314, 65 N. W. 319; Sheren v. Lowell, 104 Mass. 24; Neal v. Boston, 160 Mass. 518, 36 N. E. 308; Upham v. Salem, 162 Mass. 483, 39 N. E. 178; Chacey v. Fargo, 5 N. D. 173, 64 N. W. 932; Bloomington v. Osterle, 139 Ill. 120, 28 N. E. 1068; Cramer v. Burlington, 49 Iowa, 213; Nesbit v. Garner, 75 Iowa, 314, 1 L.R.A. 152, 9 Am. St. Rep. 486, 39 N. W. 516; Hoyt v. Des Moines, 76 Iowa, 430, 41 N. W. 63; Munger v. Waterloo, 83 Iowa, 559, 49 N. W. 1028; Abilene v. Hendricks, 36 Kan. 196, 13 Pac. 121; Shippy v. Au Sable, 85 Mich. 280, 48 N. W. 584; Johnson v. St. Paul, 52 Minn. 364, 54 N. W. 735, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

O'Neil v. West Branch, 81 Mich. 544, 45 N. W. 1023.

The legislature cannot exempt a city from damages growing out of its own carelessness in doing those things and carrying out those powers granted to it for its own benefit and advantage, and for which it received consideration and benefit.

Birmingham v. Starr, 112 Ala. 98, 20 So. 424; Barr v. Kansas City, 105 Mo. 550, 16 S. W. 483; Brake v. Kansas City, 100 Mo. App. 611, 75 S. W. 119; McDonald v. Duluth, 93 Minn. 206, 100 N. W. 1102; Poole v. Jackson, 93 Tenn. 62, 23 S. W. 57; Houston v. Owen (Tex. Civ. App.) 67 S. W. 788; Dallas v. McAllister (Tex. Civ. App.) 39 S. W. 173; Cantwell v. Appleton, 71 Wis. 463, 37 N. W. 813; Dallas v. Muncton; Flam v. Mt. Sterling; and Hughes v. Fond du Lac,—supra; Salem v. Webster, 102 Ill. 369, 61 N. E. 323; Ludlow v. Fargo, 3 N. D. 485, 57 N. W. 506; Steadman v. Rome, 88 Hun, 279, 34 N. Y. Supp. 737; Hardy v. Brooklyn, 90 N. Y. 435, 43 Am. Rep. 182; 28 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1265; Peacock v. Dallas, 89 Tex. 438, 35 S. W. 8; Durham v. Spokane, 27 Wash. 615, 68 Pac. 383.

A municipality when charged in its corporate character with the performance of a municipal function in regard to governmental affairs is civilly liable for injuries resulting from misfeasance or nonfeasance with respect to such municipal duties.

Weet v. Brockport, 16 N. Y. 161, note; Missano v. New York, 160 N. Y. 123, 54 N. E. 744; 28 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 1258, 1260, 1263; New York v. Furze, 3 Hill, 612; Martin v. Brooklyn, 1 Hill, 545; McDade v. Chester, 117 Pa. 414, 2 Am. St. Rep. 681, 12 Atl. 421; Erie City v. Schwingle, 22 Pa. 384, 60 Am. Dec. 87; Bieling v. Brooklyn, 120 N. Y. 98, 24 N. E. 389; Seifert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 143, 54 Am. Rep. 664, 4 N. E. 321; Rankin v. Buckman, 9 Or. 253; Wilmington v. Ewing, 2 Penn. (Del.) 66, 45 L.R.A. 79, 43 Atl. 305; Winn v. Rutland, 52 Vt. 481; Conrad v. Ithaca, 16 N. Y. 159; Chicago v. Seben, 165 Ill. 371, 56 Am. St. Rep. 248, 46 N. E. 244; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 167; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 961, 965, 981, 1049; McMahon v. Dubuque, 107 Iowa, 62, 70 Am. St. Rep. 143, 77 N. W. 517; Aldrich v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 141, 23 Am. Rep. 434; Hines v. Lockport, 50 N. Y. 236; Omaha v. Olmstead, 5 Neb. 452; Hart v. Bridgeport, 13 Blatchf. 289, Fed. Cas. No. 6,149; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 248; Hitchins Bros. v. Frostburg, 68 Md. 100, 6 Am. St. Rep. 426, 11 Atl. 826; Bowden v. Kansas City, 69 Kan. 587, 66 L.R.A. 181, 105 Am. St. Rep. 192, 77 Pac. 573, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 955; Toledo v. Cone, 41 Ohio St. 149; Johnston v. District of Columbia, 118 U. S. 19, 30 L. ed. 75, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 923; Henly v. Lyme, 5 Bing. 91, 3 Barn. & Ad. 77; 1 Bing. N. C. 222; Neff v. Wellesley, 148 Mass. 487, 2 L.R.A. 500, 20 N. E. 111; Moulton v. Scarborough, 71 Me. 267, 36 Am. Rep. 308; St. Germain v. Fall River, 177 Mass. 550, 59 N. E. 447; Fox v. Chelsea, 171 Mass. 297, 50 N. E. 622.

Sedgwick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

While the plaintiff, who was a teamster, was driving along Sixteenth street in the city of Omaha with a loaded wagon, the pavement gave way and let the wagon down with such force that it threw the plaintiff from his seat to the pavement. He brought this action in the district court of Douglas county to recover from the city the damages which he alleged he sustained by reason of the injuries received in his fall. He recovered in the district court, and the city has appealed.

Plaintiff alleges in his petition that some time prior to the 26th day of July, 1906, the defendant city constructed a sewer along, through, and under Sixteenth street from Vinton street south (north) to some point in the vicinity of Pacific or Pierce, and to lay said sewer made an excavation through the center of said street running north and south of the depth necessary to build such sewer, and in filling the excavation after said sewer was constructed the city carelessly and negligently placed the dirt over said excavation in said sewer in such a way as to cause the same subsequently to settle, and that by reason of the careless and negligent omission to properly construct, pack, tamp, and harden said earth, the dirt fell in said sewer and gradually settled so as to leave an opening and excavation immediately under the surface of said street, and that afterwards the city relaid or paved the street over said excavation and placed the paving, consisting of granite block stone, upon and along said excavation in such a way as to hide, cover up, and obscure the defect in so packing, filling in, tamping, and making solid the dirt underneath said paving along and upon said Sixteenth street, especially in the vicinity of Center and Sixteenth streets, and that on said 26th day of July, 1906, he was employed as a laborer in hauling and delivering sand, and was driving a team attached to a wagon loaded with sand, on which wagon the plaintiff was riding and driving, and being near the center of Sixteenth street in the vicinity of Center street, and while driving along over the paving of said street, because of the defect in so constructing said sewer, and because of covering up the same by paving, both wheels on the left-hand side of said wagon broke through the paving and into the excavation so made by the settling of the dirt and earth in said excavation for said sewer, and that because of said defect in the street and overturning of the wagon the plaintiff was suddenly and without warning and without fault on his part thrown from the wagon to the street; that his right foot and ankle were broken thereby and he was permanently injured. The plaintiff alleged that after the accident he gave the notice thereof required by statute, but the petition contained no allegation that prior to the said accident the notice had been given of the defect in the street, required by § 207, chap. 12a, Comp. Stat. 1907. There was a general demurrer to the petition, which was overruled, and the defendant answered admitting that the sewer was constructed along Sixteenth street by the defendant prior to July, 1906, and that the defendant caused the street to be paved, and admitted that the plaintiff was injured to some extent, and that at the time and place where the plaintiff was injured a portion of the paving gave way while the plaintiff was driving a team and wagon over and along the street. The answer alleged that the accident and injury to the plaintiff was not caused by any defect in the street of which the city had, or was chargeable with, notice, or that the city could have discovered by an inspection or examination of the street, and that the defect complained of was not due to any act or omission on the part of the defendant, but was due to causes over which the defendant had no control and for which the defendant was not responsible.

There was a great deal of evidence given by both parties, and the principal question controverted in the evidence was as to the cause of the settling of the earth in the sewer trench. The plaintiff insisted and produced evidence tending to prove that the sewer in question along Sixteenth street, which was laid at the depth of something over 20 feet, and which was constructed about nineteen years before the accident, was not properly covered at the time of its construction; that the earth was carelessly replaced in the sewer trench and was insufficiently tamped; and that this caused the earth to settle, leaving the cavity under the paving. It appears to be conceded by both parties that there was a considerable settling of the earth at many places along this sewer, and that for several years prior to the accident it became necessary for the city in repaving the street to break down the concrete under the paving at various places along the sewer line and fill up the cavity under the paving caused by the setting of the earth from time to time. The defendant insisted that this happened in all parts of the city; that the conditions were such that it was impossible to replace the earth in sewer trenches so as to prevent settling; and that particularly at the place where this accident occurred the settling of the earth was caused not only by natural conditions that could not be avoided, but also by the breaking of a water pipe which allowed large quantities of water to enter the sewer trench beneath the paving. A large part of defendant's brief is devoted to the discussion of the evidence as bearing upon this question, and there is much evidence tending to show that the settling of the earth and the cavity under the paving might have resulted from natural causes and from the action of the water from the broken service pipes. There is also evidence tending to show, as the plaintiff claimed, that the sewer trench was improperly filled, which was the cause of the cavity. The issue so presented was manifestly for the jury, and presents no question of law to the court. It is unnecessary to attempt an analysis of the large mass of testimony upon this point. The jury has resolved this question in favor of the plaintiff, and we must therefore consider that the original construction of the sewer by the defendant was improper, and that this was the cause of the cavity under the paving. Whether the original improper construction of the sewer was the proximate cause of the accident is a question of fact and is the subject of much conflicting evidence. This is also a question for the jury, and must be considered as determined in plaintiff's favor by the verdict.

This brings us to the consideration of the important question in the case. Section 207, chap. 12a, Comp. Stat. 1907, provides as follows: "Cities of the metropolitan class shall be absolutely exempt from liability for damages or injuries suffered or sustained by reason of defective public ways or the sidewalks thereof within such cities, unless actual notice in writing of the defect of such public way or sidewalk shall have been filed with the city clerk at least five days before the occurrence of such injury or damage. In the absence of such notice, so filed, the city shall not be liable, and in all cases such notice shall describe with particularity the place and nature of the defects of which complaint is made." No written notice of the defect in the paving at the point where the accident occurred had been filed with the city clerk, and the defendant insists that the statute applies in such case and that the plaintiff cannot recover.

The attorneys for defendant have furnished an able discussion which has greatly assisted us in our inquiry as to the true purpose and meaning of the statute in question. It is insisted: That unless provided by the statute no liability exists. That it does not require a legislative act to exempt municipalities from liability for defective streets, but it does require a statute to create such liability. The man who claims that the city would be liable must point to the law creating such liability, and there is none except that imposed by the legislative enactment. That, when the legislature by statute fixed such liability with reference to defective streets, the statute must be held to be exclusive. That the legislature may absolutely exempt the municipality from liability, or exempt it unless certain conditions are complied with. That if the legislature keeps within its constitutional right, and the language of the act is plain and free from doubt, there is nothing to interpret, and the courts should accept the law as it is. That it is not for the court to determine whether it is good or bad, just or unjust, reasonable or unreasonable. That a city acts through its officers, agents, or servants; but the city does not act by and through the doings of every officer, agent, and employee; strictly speaking, the city acts officially only through its mayor and council. That the city is not charged with "absolute knowledge" of the acts of a day laborer, a policeman, a fireman, or other employees, and the knowledge of such persons is not the knowledge of the city. That it was because the courts held the city to strict accountability, and held that the act of an agent or employee in many matters was the act of the city, that the legislature enacted § 207. That the city attorney of Omaha drafted this section of the statute for the express purpose of protecting the city against claims based upon implied notice of which the city actually had no notice or knowledge. That by this statute the city is not to be held liable for the negligent conduct of any individual, whether citizen, agent, officer, or employee of the city, which causes a defect in the street, until the city in its official governmental capacity has had its attention directed to the particular defect by written notice.

While this case has been pending in this court, the decision in Tewksbury v. Lincoln, 84 Neb. 571, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 282, 121 N. W. 994, has been published. In that case a statute substantially the same as said § 207 was construed. While the case at bar might be distinguished in some respects from that case, the defendant has not attempted to do so. The brief, so far as the construction of the statute is involved, is confined to an attack upon that decision as unsound. The criticisms of the brief are especially directed to a quotation from the opinion in that case as follows: "To hold that five days' notice should be given for a wrong committed by the city itself one hour, or one day, before the occurrence of the accident, and of which the city already has absolute knowledge, would be in the highest degree ludicrous, and attribute to the lawmaker a want of foresight, insight, and comprehension which we cannot do. It is true that the statute provides that the city shall be 'absolutely exempt from liability' unless such notice be given; but we must give a reasonable construction to the language of the act. The law never requires an impossible thing. The section presupposes that the defect in the public way must have existed at least five days, otherwise the notice would be impossible." The criticism is that, when the language of the statute is plain and unambiguous, it is not the province of the court to say that the lawmakers acted without foresight and comprehension, if they are acting within their constitutional limitations. The language criticized, however, assumes that it is proper and necessary to ascertain the real intention of the legislature, and that in determining that intention the court will give such construction to the statute as will not attribute to the lawmaker a want of foresight and comprehension, and we are entirely satisfied with the language there used.

Is it true that no liability exists unless provided by statute? There is no express statute making the city liable for damages caused by defects in the street. If it can be said that the liability arises from statute, it is by implication only, and this implication is not derived from the language of the statute or any of its express provisions. It is not derived from a construction of the statute itself. It is rather an implication which the common law raises from the fact that the legislature has conferred certain privileges upon the municipality. When the legislature confers powers upon the city for the advantage of the city itself to enable it to hold its property and to conduct such affairs as are for the benefit of the city in its corporate capacity as distinguished from those powers which relate to its governmental functions, such privileges and benefits carry with them duties and liabilities of the same character as are imposed upon private corporations or individuals, who enjoy corresponding privileges. It is quite generally held that when the city accepts such powers and privileges it accepts them with the conditions that the common law imposes. The law requires that in using such powers and privileges the city, like individuals, must so use them as not to violate the rights of others, and in doing so must use ordinary care and diligence to avoid injuries to others. This duty is not derived from the construction of the language of the statute, but is derived from the obligations which by the common law accompanies such powers and privileges. It seems, therefore, that to say that the liability is created by statute, without qualification, may be misleading. In Goddard v. Lincoln, 69 Neb. 594, 96 N. W. 273, it was said: "As the liability in such cases must rest on some express or implied provision of the statute, it is clear that the legislature may place such limitations upon it as it may deem proper, or, for that matter, take it away entirely." We have seen in what sense the liability is implied from the provisions of the statute, but what is meant by saying that the statute may take away the liability entirely? It was not necessary in that case to say, and we do not think that the language used must be construed as meaning, that the legislature can confer powers and privileges of the nature above suggested and at the same time relieve the municipality of all liability for their improper exercise. The defendant insists that it can, and to explain this position the following illustration is given: "Suppose the city dug a sewer trench and left it open, and the first night a man fell in and was injured; would the city be liable?" The question is answered in the negative, and it is argued that to hold that the city would be liable in such case assumes "that somehow the city was liable until the legislature passed a law exempting the city from liability," whereas, "on the contrary, there was no liability until the legislature so declared."

Can it be possible that the legislature is competent to authorize a city or any private corporation or individual, in the transactions of its own affairs and for its own benefit, to make a trench across a public thoroughfare and to take no precautions against dangers to the traveling public and at the same time relieve the city from any liability for the consequence of such an act? It would seem more reasonable to say that, if the legislature intended to relieve the city from incurring liability for such damages, it should withdraw from the city the power and privilege of constructing such a trench, and that when it is said that the legislature might relieve a city from all liability it is inferred that in order to do so it must prevent the city from engaging in such transactions.

There is no doubt that if the legislature keeps within its constitutional right, and the purpose and meaning of the act are clear and unambiguous, "the court should accept the law as it is." When it is found that the attempted legislation is not prohibited by constitutional limitations of the legislative power, the next thing for the courts to do is to find out, if they can, the intention of the legislature, and when that is determined and declared, the duty of the courts in that regard is performed. It is not the duty nor the privilege of courts to change the meaning of constitutional acts of the legislature, nor to modify or enlarge their scope and purpose. The meaning of the legislature must be derived from the language used; all valid legislation on the given subject being considered and construed together. What did the lawmakers intend to do? If there was some apparent evil to be remedied, what remedy did the legislature propose to provide?

The defendant assumes that the object of the statute in question was to relieve the city of some part of the burden of claims for damages of this character. Can it be that the intention was to establish an arbitrary line of division between claims against the city for the purpose, without regard to merit or justice, of lessening the number of claims? Does the written notice required by statute become an essential element of the claim against the city? Was it intended that persons from other parts of the state, who had no means of knowing whether dangerous pitfalls existed, or whether notice had been filed with the city clerk, should be discriminated against. Of course it will not be presumed that the legislature intended such a result.

The city must act by its agents, and if it sends an agent to do a specified act, as to open a trench across a thoroughfare, that act, when done, is, of course, the act of the city. To provide that a notice must be lodged with the clerk stating that the trench has been opened, and is not being guarded, and that the stranger who falls into the trench within five days after such statement is filed has no remedy, but one who falls into the trench after the five days have expired may recover damages, will no doubt have the effect to limit the number of claims against the city; and so would a provision that under such circumstances none but an inhabitant of the city might recover, or one of light complexion. If the legislature could grant the power to a city to construct such work and allow it to so remain without guarding the public in any way for a period of five days, and exempt the city from liability for damages, which is at least doubtful, it would not be presumed to have intended to do so, if a different and more reasonable purpose can be derived from the statute.

In another part of the brief a better reason for this legislation is suggested. "What was the purpose of requiring this notice? Clearly, to direct the attention of the proper officers of the city to the fact that at a particular point on one of the public highways of the city there exists at the time a condition in the public highway which renders the street unsafe and dangerous for public travel, a condition likely to result in injury to some traveler on the highway. The purpose of this notice was to enable the city to prevent accidents by repairing or guarding the defect." This is undoubtedly the real purpose of the legislation. The city had been held liable in some cases in which it was uncertain whether the officers of the city had notice of the defect complained of. It was regarded as a question of fact for the jury to determine whether they knew, or the circumstances were such that with reasonable diligence they must and ought to have known, of the dangerous condition of the streets. And having apparently more regard for the financial interests of the city than for the rights of strangers or dangers to the citizens, the legislature purposed to change this. There should no longer be any liability on the part of the city unless its officers actually knew of the defect. It was not presumed that the officers of the city would themselves create the defect. The statute was not necessary nor intended for such a contingency. To so construe the statute would be to hold that the intention of the legislature was to bar a proportion of the claims against the city without regard to the justice of the claims or the conditions under which they arose.

If we suppose that the statute applies in a case like this, what should the notice contain? If prior to this accident the written notice specified in the statute had been filed with the clerk, it must have stated that the original construction of the sewer was negligent, and that the earth had settled over the sewer so that there was danger of the paving giving way, and that the defect was hidden so that ordinary passengers would not discover it. If such a notice had been given, the city authorities must be presumed, pursuant to such notice, to have done precisely what they did do in this case. It appears that for several years prior to this accident the authorities recognized the deficiency in the construction of the sewer, and made many attempts, more or less effective, to remedy the defect. Can the defendant now deny liability because such notice was not given? It is generally held that where written notice is required it may be waived by the party entitled to it. The fact that the city knew of the condition of the street and recognized its duty to remedy it, and attempted, however ineffectively, to do so, is equivalent to notice, and amounts to a waiver of notice, so that the city cannot now say it had no notice of the defect.

In Goddard v. Lincoln, supra, it was held that the plaintiff could not recover because the written notice required by § 110 of the act governing cities of the first class, which is substantially the same as the statute herein considered, was not given. In that case a sidewalk had become badly and dangerously out of repair. "The boards of the same . . . being loose, . . . and one or two boards being entirely removed therefrom, so that said sidewalk was, at said time and place, in an unsafe and dangerous condition." When a walk or a street, through wear or some accidental cause, becomes in an unsafe condition, the city authorities will perform this duty if the necessity of so doing comes to their knowledge. This at least the statute assumes, and its object and effect is to make certain that the officers of the city shall have such knowledge. The statute requiring notice of the defect to be in writing filed with the clerk is analogous to the statute of frauds. It guards against mistake or perjury in doubtful cases. The proof that notice has been given must be in writing. If the act causing the dangerous condition is done by the officers of the city themselves, the knowledge of its existence is inherent in the act. To suppose that the legislature intended that they must be notified of their own act is to question the judgment and the motives of the lawmakers. The defect was not caused by the city, and from its nature must have been without the knowledge of its officers. In such case knowledge must in some way be conveyed to the city officials, and the statutory method of accomplishing this had not been followed. The decision in that case was clearly right, but it furnishes no precedent for a case like this.

In Schmidt v. Fremont, 70 Neb. 577, 97 N. W. 830, the construction of § 39, art. 3, chap. 13, Comp. Stat. 1901, was involved. That section provided that no city shall be liable for damages arising from defective sidewalks, unless written notice of the accident or injury complained of was given within thirty days after its occurrence, and it was held that the plaintiff could not recover because such notice had not been given. The object of that statute was to enable the city officials to properly investigate the nature and validity of the claim presented. It devolved a duty upon the claimant himself, and made that duty a part of his procedure in establishing his claim,—one of the necessary steps in enforcing his remedy analogous to the three days' notice required by the statute of forcible entry and detainer. The case is distinguishable from the one under consideration. Statutes somewhat similar to ours have been considered by other courts, although we have not observed any decisions involving the precise point here presented.

In Houston v. Isaacks, 68 Tex. 116, 3 S. W. 693, the law as applied in that state is stated in the first paragraph of the syllabus as follows: "A provision in a city charter exempting the corporation from liability to any person for damages caused by a street being out of repair through the gross negligence of the corporation, unless the same shall have remained so for ten days after special notice in writing to the mayor or street commissioner, does not apply where the city having put a contractor to work upon the street, and after he had commenced work, and made an excavation in the street, rendering it unsafe for travel, discharged him, and left the work in an unfinished condition. A person injured in consequence of such defect in the street may recover of the city though he has not given the ten days' notice. The city having by its own procurement made the street unsafe, and knowingly left it so, cannot escape behind the charter provisions, as it might if the defect had resulted from any extrinsic cause." In the opinion the court suggests a doubt as to the power of the legislature to exempt a city from all liability in such cases: "The provision is a most stringent one, and its practical effect would seem to be to exempt the city from all liability for such defects as ordinarily accrue. But we cannot say that it should not be enforced in a case in which it is applicable. We are of opinion, however, that it does not apply to the case before us. There may be some reason in requiring notice to the city authorities of a defect accruing from ordinary causes; such as the action of floods, the use of the street by the public, or it may be said from any cause except by the action of the city itself. But in the present case the city put a contractor to work upon the street, stipulating to have an excavation made which was to be filled with gravel, and after the work had been begun, and the street had been rendered unsafe for travel, discharged the contractor, and left the work in an unfinished condition."

The charter of the city of Fon du Lac, Wisconsin, provided that "no action shall be maintained against the city for injuries caused by any defect in the condition of the street unless notice in writing, signed by the injured party, shall have been given to the proper persons within five days of the injury," and it was held that the requirement of notice had no application when the plaintiff "was injured through his horse taking fright at a large wooden roller, which had been used in the care of the streets, and left standing therein by the servants of defendant." The Wisconsin court also suggested a doubt as to the power of the legislature to exempt from liability in such cases. Mr. Chief Justice Cole in the opinion said: "I should have great doubt about the validity of the provision requiring the notice to be given within five days of the injury, even if the liability of the city in the case was wholly statutory. The time fixed is unreasonably short, and in many cases could not be complied with. The injured person might be unconscious, or so seriously hurt that he could not state 'the place where, and the time when, such injury was received, and the nature of the same,' within that period; so that the remedy given is coupled with an impossible condition. Such a provision is unreasonable and unjust. . . . It is an arbitrary and unreasonable provision, which professes to give a remedy for an injury, but annexes to it a condition which, in many cases, cannot be complied with." Hughes v. Fond du Lac, 73 Wis. 380, 41 N. W. 407.

In Still v. Houston, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 447, 66 S. W. 76, the ground of the decision is stated in the third paragraph of the syllabus as follows: "A city charter provided that the corporation should not be liable for any injuries sustained owing to the defective condition of sidewalks, etc., unless such condition should have continued for ten days after notice to the mayor or certain committees. A city sold certain fences on property through which a street was opened, and authorized the purchaser to remove them, which he did to the knowledge of the city, but he failed to fill a hole left where a fence post was removed, and subsequently a pedestrian stepped into such hole, it being just beside the sidewalk. Held that, though no notice of such hole had been given, the charter provision did not protect the city, inasmuch as the act of the purchaser was, under the circumstances, to be considered the act of the city, and the provision had no application to such case." In the opinion the court said: "This action was taken by the very officers to whom the charter required the notice to be given. The city is not sought to be held liable for any injury caused by a defect accruing from any extrinsic cause, but for having by its own procurement made the street unsafe, and knowingly left it in that condition."

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The charter of the city of Springfield, Illinois, provided that a city should not be liable for damages arising from the bad condition of the streets by reason of the neglect of the proper officers to repair the same, until notice was given and reasonable time given to make repairs. The action was for damages for injuries sustained by falling into a sewer which was being made in one of the streets of the city. While the statute did not purport to exempt the city from liability in all cases where the notice had not been given, but only in case the proper officer had negligently failed to repair the defect, still that court expressed a doubt as to the propriety of such a clause. "Laying out of view all consideration of the propriety of such a clause, and its inconsistency with other provisions of the charter, and with established rules of law, it is very manifest it cannot apply to this case. . . . The injury complained of was not the result of a defective street, which a traveler upon it might have noticed and reported, but for permitting the sewer in it to be excavated in a manner hazardous to the safety of the people." Springfield v. Le Claire, 49 Ill. 476.

In Dallas v. McAllister (Tex. Civ. App.) 39 S. W. 173, a sewer on one of the principal streets had caved in, leaving a dangerous depression up and down the street 10 or 12 feet long. It had been there about two months. The driver of a wagon was going around this broken place in the paving where the street appeared to be solid, when the sewer caved in under the wagon causing the injuries complained of. It was held that since the testimony tended to show a connection between the original break and the one through which the injury occurred, in such a manner as to indicate that in repairing the former the cause of the latter would have become known, the city was liable for the damages notwithstanding a clause in the charter which provided that no action should be maintained against the city for injuries caused from streets being out of repair from the gross negligence of the city, unless the same shall have remained so for ten days after special notice in writing to the mayor or city engineer, and no such notice had been given. The court said: "The evidence, however, shows that the entire sewer was defective and dangerous from the place of the accident down to the original caving in,—a distance of 15 or 20 feet,—for it is testified to that, when the wagon went down, the ground caved all the way down to the other cavity. It is therefore a reasonable inference that the sewer was in an unsafe condition all the way down, and that notice of this would have followed ordinary care in repairing the first break; hence the city must be taken to have had knowledge of it, and be chargeable with the consequences."

In Adams v. Oshkosh, 71 Wis. 49, 36 N. W. 174, the case is stated in the syllabus as follows: "Plaintiff's horse was killed on a principal street of a municipal corporation by running, in the night time, upon a pile of gravel and stones placed there by an employee of the city while repairing the street. In an action to recover the value of the horse, held, that the provision of the charter 'that the city shall not be liable to or for any damages arising or growing out of any sidewalks, streets, drains, sewers, gutters, ditches, or bridges in said city being in a defective or damaged condition, or out of repair, unless it be shown that previous to the happening of the same one of the aldermen of the ward in which the same is located had knowledge thereof,' etc., does not apply to obstructions placed in the street by an employee of the city while in its employ." The court said in the opinion: "There is no claim that either of the aldermen of the ward had actual notice of the obstruction in the street, nor that it had existed for three weeks; so that, if the statute applies to an obstruction placed in the street by an employee of the city while engaged in repairing said street, the plaintiff did not make out a case. After a careful consideration of the statute, we think it was not the intent of the legislature to cover a case of this kind. In the case at bar the aldermen of the ward, in discharging a duty imposed upon them by law, were in fact engaged in repairing the street in question, and one of their employees negligently permitted the obstruction to be placed in and remain in said street. We think, in a case of this kind, the act of the employee while engaged in his employment must be considered as the act of the aldermen of the ward, and that the city, through the action of its ward officer, permitted the obstruction to be placed in the street, and to remain there. It cannot be supposed that the legislature intended to release the city from damages caused by the action of its officers in repairing its streets, when its employees create the obstruction, because such officers had no actual notice of the obstruction. In such case the acts of the employees are the acts of the officers, and their knowledge must be construed to be the knowledge of the employer. This would be the rule in every other case, and we cannot think the legislature intended to alter so just a rule in favor of the city."

In MacMullen v. Middletown, 187 N. Y. 37, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 391, 70 N. E. 863, it was held that the requirement in a city 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

charter that written notice should be given of the existence of snow or ice on sidewalks is constitutional. The court said: "The charter created a liability for a neglect of the duty to remove snow and ice from the streets and sidewalks, and gave a remedy by action. . . . The requirement is the expression of the legislative will that the notice of the defective condition of the public way, which has occasioned the injury sustained, shall be of so certain a character as to charge the corporation with actual knowledge. It was always the legal rule that notice should be brought home to the corporation, or facts from which notice was reasonably inferable. In order that something more certain than constructive notice should be relied upon, provisions were inserted in municipal charters that 'actual notice' of the alleged defect must be shown." This was perhaps all that it was necessary to say in deciding the case. In the absence of any statute upon the subject, the city would not be required to remove the snow as fast as it fell upon the walk. It would only be liable if it knew that the walk had become dangerous by reason of the accumulation of snow and ice, and failed to protect the public by causing it to be removed. No one could doubt the power of the legislature to prescribe the manner of giving such notice and the method of proof that the city officials had such knowledge when notice was necessary; but the court discussed at great length the question whether removing snow and ice from walks is a governmental function and concludes that it is, contrary to the view of most other courts, and especially of this court, as expressed in Burke v. South Omaha, 79 Neb. 793, 113 N. W. 241, and Tewksbury v. Lincoln, 84 Neb. 571, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 282, 121 N. W. 994. The language used in the opinion in MacMullen v. Middletown, supra, which appears to be in conflict without conclusion in this case, is based upon the proposition that such duties are governmental functions. The reasoning upon this question in Tewksbury v. Lincoln, supra, and other authorities there cited, precludes this court from accepting such a view.

In Parsons v. San Francisco, 23 Cal. 463, it was held that the city was not liable in consequence of its streets or highways being out of repair. The statute exempting cities from such liability was held to be constitutional, but this is put expressly upon the ground that the statute afforded the injured parties a complete remedy. It made the person or persons on whom the law may have imposed the obligation to repair such streets, and also the officer or officers through whose official negligence such defects remained unrepaired, jointly and severally liable to the parties injured. This was thought to be a complete remedy, and, if the officer by whose negligence the injury was caused and his official bonds are presumed to be responsible, the remedy would appear to be complete.

In Williams v. Galveston, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 63, 90 S. W. 505, it was held that the city was not liable for damages caused by a defective bridge. The charter provision exempting the city from such liability was upheld. This opinion also placed the decision upon the theory that the repair of bridges is a governmental function. It is said in the opinion that "the counties in the state are held exempt from liability for the negligent construction or maintenance of public highways, and the act in question does no more than place the city of Galveston upon a plane with the counties."

If this court were not already fully committed to the doctrine that in the performance of such duties the cities are not exercising governmental functions, it might be thought necessary to further discuss this question.

It was complained in the brief that there were some errors in the instruction of the court to the jury, but these supposed errors are not discussed at length. For the most part objections made to the instructions are derived from principles already discussed, and it does not appear to be advisable to prolong this opinion after having devoted so much space to the main question involved. We have found no errors in the instruction, requiring a reversal of the judgment.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

Rose, J., concurring:

I concur in the affirmance on the ground that the statute requiring notice does not apply to the defects of which complaint is made in plaintiff's petition.

Root, J., dissenting:

I am unable to concur in the majority opinion. The courts are not in accord concerning the principle controlling the liability of a municipal corporation for personal injuries inflicted by reason of its defective streets. In Omaha v. Olmstead, 5 Neb. 446, 451, we held that the city, in accepting its charter and the privileges therein bestowed, by implication promised the state to perform the duties thereby cast upon the municipality, and individuals injured by the city's failure to keep its promise had a right of action against the city: "The acceptance of these privileges is considered as raising an implied promise on the part of the city to perform its corporate duties; and this implied agreement made with the sovereign power inures to the benefit of every individual interested in the proper performance of such duties." 5 Neb. 452, supra. In Goodrich v. University Place, 80 Neb. 774, 115 N. W. 538, the law is re-examined, and the liability of a city for personal injuries is again based upon its implied contract with the sovereign state. Judge Dillon suggests there is no contractual relation between the state and a municipality in those cases where the city may not reject, but is compelled to accept, its charter. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 967. Judge Dillon admits, however, that the reason given by us in Omaha v. Olmstead and Goodrich v. University Place, supra, for holding a city liable in personal injury cases, sustains many decisions imposing a like liability upon municipalities. If the law may raise an implied promise by a city and fasten a liability upon it for a failure to keep that promise because the city has acted under a charter it is powerless to reject, it seems arbitrary and unjust to deny the city the benefit of those immunities specifically granted the city therein.

The defendant's charter provides that it "shall be absolutely exempt from liability for damages or injuries suffered or sustained by reason of defective public ways or the sidewalks," unless notice in writing of the defect shall have been filed with the city clerk at least five days before the accident occurred. And, further, "in the absence of such notice, so filed, the city shall not be liable." If, as suggested in the majority opinion, the legislature does not have the power to absolutely exempt a city from liability to respond in damages to those injured by reason of its defective streets, or may not lawfully provide that such a liability shall not arise unless the city shall have had notice in writing of the defect before such accident occurs, the statute is void if construed according to its terms. No principle of law is cited to sustain the suggestion made in the majority opinion. No adjudicated case has been referred to, nor do I believe one can be found, to sustain the proposition that the legislature may not, by the enactment of a statute uniform as to the class of cities upon which it operates, exempt a municipality from all liability because of personal injuries inflicted by reason of its defective streets or alleys. On the other hand, statutes granting such an exemption have been sustained by courts of last resort. O'Hara v. Portland, 3 Or. 525; Rankin v. Buckman, 9 Or. 253; Wilmington v. Ewing, 2 Penn. (Del.) 66, 45 L.R.A. 79, 43 Atl. 305; Williams v. Galveston, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 63, 90 S. W. 505.

In the opinion filed in the last cited case the court did say, as suggested in the majority opinion, that the effect of the statute is to reduce the city's liability to that of a county. The majority opinion is also correct in stating that we hold that a city in controlling its streets exercises corporate and not governmental functions; but that question was not involved in the Texas case. The supreme court of Texas is in harmony with our decisions upon that subject. The real point determined in Williams v. Galveston, supra, was that the legislature had the power to relieve a city from the liability theretofore imposed upon it by judicial construction. Having the power to grant complete immunity, it follows as a matter of course that the legislature may extend a qualified exemption to the city. We also held in Goddard v. Lincoln, 69 Neb. 594, 96 N. W. 273, where a statute identical in terms with the one considered in the case at bar was construed and upheld. That case did not involve the mere determination of the power of the legislature to relieve the city from liability in cases resting upon imputed notice to the city that a sidewalk was defective. The plaintiff in the Goddard Case alleged in his petition that the sidewalk at the point where his intestate was injured was unsafe and dangerous by reason of the absence of boards which had formed a part of the way, and that the defendant city had "full knowledge" of said defect for a long time prior to the accident. The defendant's demurrer to the petition was sustained, and we affirmed the judgment of the district court. The constitutionality of the statute was raised, considered, and determined in the Goddard Case, and we held that, although the city had knowledge for a long time prior to the accident of the defect responsible for the injury, the defendant was not liable because the statutory written notice had not been given. See also McNally v. Cohoes, 53 Hun, 202, 6 N. Y. Supp. 842; MacMullen v. Middletown, 187 N. Y. 37, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 391, 79 N. E. 863. But it is said that a fair consideration of all the other legislation upon the subject, in connection with the statute concerning notice and the apparent evil to be remedied thereby, will convince the impartial, judicial mind that the statute should not be literally construed. There is no ambiguity in the statute under consideration; it is not inconsistent with any other provision in the city charter, nor does it conflict with any other legislative act. Under these circumstances, the court should hesitate before applying rules of construction to read exceptions into the written law inconsistent with the context and tenor thereof. Morrill v. Taylor, 6 Neb. 236, 243; 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

State ex rel. McLean v. Liedtke, 9 Neb. 468, 4 N. W. 61; State ex rel. School Dist. No. 6 v. Moore, 45 Neb. 12, 63 N. W. 130; Stoppert v. Nierle, 45 Neb. 105, 63 N. W. 382.

It is argued, however, that in Tewksbury v. Lincoln, 84 Neb. 571, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 282, 121 N. W. 994, we departed from the literal meaning of the Lincoln charter, and for that reason are not bound by the language employed by the legislature in the statute under consideration in the instant case. Tewksbury v. Lincoln was a hard case, and, if it is authority for the majority opinion, should be overruled; but I am not willing to concede so much. In that case, while employees of the city of Lincoln were engaged for their master in flushing a sewer during cold weather, they negligently sprayed a street crossing so that it became slippery and dangerous. The plaintiff, while those servants were at work and by reason of such negligence, slipped, fell, and was injured. We said: "The law never requires an impossible thing. The section presupposes that the defect in the public way must have existed at least five days; otherwise the notice would be impossible." A well-recognized rule of statutory construction was thereby applied. Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 516. The instant suit presents no such feature, and the rule ought not to be applied. It is suggested, however, that where the defect has been caused by the city it has knowledge of the fact, waives the written notice, and the statute does not apply. This argument proceeds upon the assumption that the legislature did not intend to release the city where it had knowledge of the defect. We held to the contrary in Goddard v. Lincoln, supra. Furthermore, a municipal corporation is without perception, intellect, or memory, and all knowledge acquired or notice received by it must be by imputation from the knowledge of or notice to some of its officers or agents. In the case at bar the defendant's negligence is inferred from the alleged fact that in 1887, twenty years before the plaintiff was injured, the municipality failed to properly tamp the dirt on each side of and above a sewer 24 inches in diameter laid 20 feet beneath the surface of a street in said city; that subsequently the dirt settled in said trench, and the city paved the street so as to conceal the open trench. The defendant's liability, however, is predicated solely upon the alleged failure of the city to properly tamp or otherwise settle the dirt in said trench in 1887. That there may be no uncertainty upon this point, I quote the eighth paragraph of the district court's charge to the jury: "You are instructed as a matter of law, the plaintiff cannot recover in this case unless the city was negligent in the construction of said sewer; that is to say, failed to use ordinary care and caution in tamping or ramming the dirt when refilling said sewer. And if the plaintiff has failed to satisfy you by a preponderance of the evidence that the city so failed, or if you find the evidence evenly balanced, then you should find for the defendant."

The judicial mind may logically reason and understand that whatever knowledge the city's agents or officers may have acquired in 1887 concerning the negligent tamping of earth in said sewer was by some process communicated to a conscious municipal mind and continued within the memory and understanding of that intangible person for two decades; but the laymen may be excused for refusing to accept that logic. The mere fact that courts do thus reason is a satisfactory explanation for the enactment of the statute under consideration. Many cases are brought against a city for personal injuries, where the doctrine of respondet superior is invoked to induce and justify a judgment. Where any considerable period of time exists between the happening of the alleged negligence and the injury to the plaintiff, there is fully as much probability that the city will be wrongfully mulcted in damages, as in those cases where imputed notice to the city of a defect in its streets caused by the negligence of third persons, or the action of the elements, is the basis for the demand. In the case at bar the defendant's negligence, if established, is demonstrated by the testimony of a member of the defendant's city council in 1887, who testified in substance that once or twice a day while the contractor was filling said trench he noticed the methods employed by the workmen, and observed that the specifications in the contract between the contractor and the city were being ignored. This evidence was supplemented by expert testimony. There is proof to the effect that at intervals subsequent to the construction of said sewer, and up to within about a year before the accident, the city had refilled parts of said trench and repaired the pavement along the line of the sewer; but the testimony further shows that the soil in Omaha is of a peculiar texture, and when used to fill excavations will settle, notwithstanding all known ordinary methods may be used to make it firm. An impartial consideration of the facts, and the well-known inclination of juries to accept slight proof to support a finding of notice to a municipality of defects in its streets, lead to the belief that the legislature intended to make the city's liability depend upon the statutory written notice in all cases where a defective street is the proximate cause of an injury.

Judge Gray, in MacMullen v. Middletown, supra, gives a logical reason for statutes like the one considered in the instant case: "The novelty of the case, in the feature of the statutory requirement that a written notice shall have been given, is explained in the legislative purpose to make that certain which before was often uncertain. The fact of knowledge should no longer be dependent upon interferences from the evidence of circumstances; nor the liability of the municipality be left to a determination reached upon an indulgent construction of the legal rule as to actual notice."

I do not understand the opinion in the cited case to hold, as suggested in the majority opinion, that the city was exempt from liability because the removal of snow and ice from sidewalks is a governmental function; the court recognized that the defendant, in the absence of legislation upon the subject, would be liable for its neglect in such a case. I again take the liberty of quoting from the opinion: "Where the charter of a municipal corporation is silent upon the subject, the legislature may be regarded as having left its liability to depend upon the general rule that, if the power conferred relates to the accomplishment of corporate purposes, for the corporate benefit, the corporation is as a private company, and there attaches the same responsibility as there would to a legal individual, if possessing like powers and franchises. But where the charter voices the will of the legislature, upon the subject of the responsibility of the political agency of the state to answer to the complaint of a private individual, it announces a rule of conduct which is to govern the relations of the municipality with its citizens. No right is thereby taken away; but relative rights are defined, which are to be binding upon those who choose to remain residents of the municipality."

The opinion further demonstrates that, in the distribution through charters to municipalities of governmental powers and administrative duties, there is no constitutional limitation upon the regulative power of the legislature. The legislature may specifically impose a liability in cases like the one at bar, may attach conditions thereto, leave the citizen to the judge-made law upon the subject, or exempt the municipality from all financial responsibility. The legislature has prescribed conditions precedent to the defendant's liability for its defective streets which shield it from the plaintiff's claim. If the statute works a hardship to the citizen, the legislature should remedy the evil by an amendment to the law. We should not destroy the statute under the guise of construing its meaning.

The judgment of the district court should be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

Letton, J., dissenting:

The facts in this case do not bring it within the rule of the Tewksbury Case, where the injury was the immediate and direct result of the negligence of the city's servants. In the present case the city is held liable for a latent defect in its streets, caused by a contractor twenty years before the accident.

In my opinion, the city is not liable in the absence of the statutory notice.

Petition for rehearing denied November 21, 1910.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

J. L. NEWHOUSE, Plff. in Err.,
v.

MARVIN M. ALEXANDER.

(— Okla. —, 110 Pac. 1121.)

Quo warranto — jurisdiction — constitutional provisions — construction.

1. The constitutional convention, by providing in article 7, § 2, Const., that the supreme court, and in § 10 of the same article that the district courts, shall have power to issue writs of quo warranto, looked rather to the substance than to the form, and simply meant not so much to give those courts power to issue writs of a prescribed form, but to solemnly fix the ancient remedies secured by that writ, and leave it to the legislature to prescribe any new process or procedure to invoke those remedies in the courts, and to amplify and extend the remedies theretofore obtainable in the form of the ancient writ.

Election — ballots — failure to preserve in manner provided — effect.

2. That part of Sess. Laws (Okla.) 1905, chap. 17, art. 1, § 8, which provides that "said ballot package shall be preserved by the county clerks in some secure and safe place," is not mandatory. Where the ballots are preserved so that their identity is assured, they can be counted during a contest; and they are undoubtedly better evidence of the vote cast than the returns, and should prevail where there is a difference. But, before a recount of the ballots should be allowed to rebut the presumption of the correctness of the official returns, it should be proved satisfactorily that the ballots have not been tampered with since the election, and that those offered in evidence are the identical ones cast.

Headnotes by TURNER, J.
30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Same — failure to seal — effect.

3. That part of Sess. Laws (Okla.) 1905, chap. 17, art. 1, § 8, which provides that "all of the ballots counted and one certificate, one poll book, and one tally sheet shall be securely sealed in a stout paper or muslin envelop or bag," is not mandatory, and when the ballots at the close of the count were placed in a large paper envelop, and the envelop not sealed, with the names of the election judges written across the seal, but was folded over at the end and sewed through with a needle and twine string, and the envelop containing the ballots was placed in the box and locked, and the ballots produced in court were the identical ballots voted by the voters of the precinct in question, and in the identical condition that they were placed in the envelop by the election officers of the precinct, held, that the court did not err in admitting the same in evidence to rebut the presumption of the correctness of the official returns.

Same — improper indorsement — effect.

4. That part of Sess. Laws (Okla.) 1905, chap. 17, § 8, which provides: "If, in the canvass of the votes, any ballot is found not indorsed with the initials of the poll clerks, as provided, and any ballot which bears any distinguishing mark, or on which any writing appears with pen and pencil, and any ballot upon which the judges are unable to agree as to how it shall be counted, the same shall not be counted, but shall be designated as mutilated ballots, and shall be preserved and kept separate from the ballots counted, . . . " is mandatory, and all ballots which do not comply therewith were properly excluded by the court as evidence to rebut the presumption of the correctness of the official returns.

(June 8, 1909.)

Note. — Scope and effect of provisions in election law for preservation of ballots.

At the threshold of a discussion of this question, it may be stated that the rule of law is well settled, as declared in Avery v. Williams, 8 Ariz. 355, 76 Pac. 403, that where ballots have been preserved in strict accordance with the statutory requirements, so that they have in no way been tampered with, they are the primary and controlling evidence of the number of votes cast for the respective candidates, and are sufficient in themselves, without further evidence, to contradict and overthrow the returns. This rule is supported not only by all the authorities herein reviewed, but also by the following cases, in which it appeared that the ballots were preserved as required by law, and had not been tampered with: People ex rel. Budd v. Holden, 28 Cal. 123; Coglan v. Beard, 65 Cal. 58, 2 Pac. 737, on subsequent appeal 67 Cal. 303, 7 Pac. 738; Huston v. Anderson, 145 Cal. 320, 78 Pac. 626; Perkins v. Bertrand, 192 Ill. 58, 85 Am. St. Rep. 315, 61 N. E. 405; Reynolds v. State, 61 Ind. 392; Pedigo v.

ERROR to the District Court for Okmulgee County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action in the nature of quo warranto to try the defendant's title to the office of judge of the Okmulgee County Court. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. W. Witten, B. T. Buchanan, and J. L. Maynard, for plaintiff in error:

To render doubtful or questioned ballots admissible as evidence in a judicial or other investigation, they must be sealed and returned as required by the statute.

Struss v. Johnson, 100 Ky. 319, 38 S. W. 680; Banks v. Sergeant, 104 Ky. 849, 48 S. W. 149; Anderson v. Likens, 104 Ky. 699, 47 S. W. 867; Neesley v. Rice, 123 Ky. 814, Grimes, 113 Ind. 148, 13 N. E. 700; Ferguson v. Henry, 95 Iowa, 439, 64 N. W. 292; Searle v. Clark, 34 Kan. 49, 7 Pac. 630; Cole v. Nunnally (Ky.) 130 S. W. 972; Lester v. Fogarty, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 759, 99 S. W. 910; Leonard v. Woolford, 91 Md. 626, 46 Atl. 1025; Schneider v. Bray, 22 Nev. 272, 39 Pac. 326; People ex rel. Brink v. Way, 179 N. Y. 174, 71 N. E. 756; People v. McClellan, 191 N. Y. 341, 84 N. E. 68; Lunnicutt v. State, 75 Tex. 233, 12 S. W. 106; Gray v. State, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 521, 49 S. W. 699.

Under the circumstances of the cases just cited, the question here offered for discussion is one easy of solution. A more serious problem, however, is presented where it appears that, in keeping the ballots after an election, the statutory requirements in that regard have not been strictly followed. The question then arises: Does such a state of affairs result in the utter discrediting of the ballots? Here, too, there is great unanimity among the authorities, and it may be laid down as a general rule of law, as declared in NEWHOUSE v. ALEXANDER, that such provisions will be deemed directory only, and not mandatory, and that therefore mere irregularities by the election officers in the performance of their duties in preserving the ballots, or omissions on their part strictly to obey the statutory requirements, will not be allowed to result in the rejection of the ballots.

Thus, in Avery v. Williams, supra, in which it was also declared that the statutory requirements for the preservation of the ballots were not mandatory, but directory, and court used the following language: "The object of the election law is to prevent fraud, and to guarantee to the voter the registration and count of his ballot. A construction of the statute that would render it impossible to ascertain the will of the voter, as expressed by his ballot, without fault on his part, and would make that ballot inadmissible in evidence solely because of the action of the election officials in failing to comply with certain of the requirements of the statute in respect to the manner of preservation of the ballots, would make it possible for such officers to nullify the will of the voter, or of any number of voters, by a simple departure from some of the requirements of the statute, and would tend to defeat the object of the law. We think that where the requirements of the statute with respect to the method of preservation of the ballots have not been complied with, the object of the statute, to give effect to the expression of the will of the voter, is best subserved by holding that such noncompliance does not necessarily make the ballots inadmissible in evidence, but the burden of proof in such case is cast upon the party offering to introduce them in evidence, to show that the ballots offered are the identical ballots cast at the election, and that there is no reasonable probability that the ballots have been disturbed or tampered with; and, if it appears that the ballots are before the court in their integrity, they should be admitted in evidence."

97 S. W. 730; Edwards v. Logan, 114 Ky. 312, 70 S. W. 852, 75 S. W. 257; Powell v. Holman, 50 Ark. 85, 6 S. W. 505; Howser v. Pepper, 8 N. D. 484, 79 N. W. 1018; State ex rel. Funkhouser v. Spencer, 164 Mo. 23, 63 S. W. 1112; Hudson v. Solomon, 19 Kan. 177; McCrary, Elections, 475; Cooley, Const. Lim. 625; Windes v. Nelson, 159 Mo. 51, 60 S. W. 129; People ex rel. Dickinson v. Sackett, 14 Mich. 320; People ex rel. Williams v. Cicott, 16 Mich. 283, 97 Am. Dec. 141.

That provision of the statute which requires both clerks of election to place their initials on the lower left-hand corner of the ballot is not a mandatory requirement.

Eufaula v. Gibson (Okla.); State ex rel. Law v. Saxon, 30 Fla. 668, 18 L.R.A.

And in Tebbe v. Smith, 108 Cal. 101, 29 L.R.A. 673, 49 Am. St. Rep. 68, 41 Pac. 454, the court said: "While the ballots are the best evidence of the manner in which the electors have voted, being silent witnesses, which can neither err nor lie, they are the best evidence only when their integrity can be satisfactorily established. One who relies, therefore, upon overcoming the prima facie correctness of the official canvass by a resort to the ballots, must first show that the ballots, as presented to the court, are intact and genuine. Where a mode of preservation is enjoined by the statute, proof must be made of a substantial compliance with the requirements of that mode. But such requirements are construed as directory merely, the object looked to being the preservation inviolate of the ballots. If this is established, it would be manifestly unjust to reject them merely because the precise mode of reaching it had not been followed."

And in Mallett v. Plumb, 60 Conn. 352, 22 Atl. 772, in which the disregard of the statutory provisions for the preservation of the ballots was denominated by the court as "gross," it was declared that the ballots, when returned to the boxes immediately after the election, and carefully kept in the same condition as when so returned, furnished the best evidence of the result of an election, and that the object of the statute was to make this source of evidence still more available by throwing around it safeguards for its preservation, and that this object was best subserved by holding that where the trier was satisfied that the ballots had not been tampered with or disturbed, they should be admitted in evidence, even though some provision of the statute had not been complied with. The court reasoned that, inasmuch as the statute in question contained diverse provisions, all looking to this main purpose or object, and enjoined with equal explicitness the observance of all these requirements, regardless of their relative importance, it could hardly follow that the nonobservance of any one or all of them should shut out the ballots as a source of evidence, and thus defeat the main object of the legislature in enacting the statute. It also thought it quite significant that the statute did not expressly provide that a failure to comply with one or all of its requirements should be followed with any such consequence.

721, 32 Am. St. Rep. 46, 12 So. 218; State ex rel. Sturdevant v. Allen, 43 Neb. 651, 62 N. W. 35; Wheeler v. Chicago, 24 Ill. 105, 76 Am. Dec. 736; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, §§ 433, 436, 437; Stackpole v. Hallahan, 16 Mont. 40, 28 L.R.A. 502, 40 Pac. 80; Hamilton v. Police Comrs. 2 Ct. Sess. 299; Wigmore, Ev. p. 196; Hawkins v. Smith, 8 Can. S. C. 676; Jenkins v. Brecken, 7 Can. S. C. 247; Hope v. Flentge, 47 L.R.A. 810, note; State ex rel. Braley v. Gay, 59 Minn. 6, 50 Am. St. Rep. 389, 60 N. W. 670; Moyer v. Van de Vanter, 12 Wash. 377, 29 L.R.A. 670, 50 Am. St. Rep. 900, 41 Pac. 60; Jones v. State, 153 Ind. 440, 55 N. E. 229; Horning v. Board of Canvassers, 119 Mich. 51, 77 N. W. 446; Pennington v. Hare, 60 Minn. 140, 62 N. W. 116; People ex rel. Hirsh v. Wood, 148 N. Y. 142, 42 N. E. 536; McCrary, Elections, 4th ed. 521, § 724; Lynip v. Buckner, 22 Nev. 426, 30 L.R.A. 354, 41 Pac. 762; Cooley, Const. Lim. 775.

And in O'Gorman v. Richter, 31 Minn. 25, 16 N. W. 410, the statutory provisions as to the preservation of the ballots cast at an election were held to be "merely directory," and that where it was clearly and satisfactorily shown that the ballots had been kept intact and inviolate, they were admissible evidence, though not sealed up in envelopes, as required by the statute. To quote from the opinion: "The statute does not make the ballots evidence. They are common-law evidence, and, when properly preserved and identified, they furnish the best evidence of the will of the electors. The statute treats of them as an existing form of evidence, and gives certain directions for the more careful preservation of them. Neither does the statute assume to

Messrs. F. F. Lamb, Belford & Hiatt, and Mark L. Bozarth, for defendant in error:

Ballots not initialed by poll clerks, as required by law, cannot be counted.

Bowers v. Smith, 111 Mo. 61, 16 L.R.A. 754, 33 Am. St. Rep. 491, 20 S. W. 101; Boyd v. Mills, 53 Kan. 594, 25 L.R.A. 486, 42 Am. St. Rep. 306, 37 Pac. 16; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 726; Parvin v. Wimberg, 130 Ind. 561, 15 L.R.A. 775, 30 Am. St. Rep. 254, 30 N. E. 790; State ex rel. Waggoner v. Russell, 34 Neb. 116, 15 L.R.A. 740, 33 Am. St. Rep. 625, 51 N. W. 466; McCrary, Elections, 5th ed. §§ 225, 226; Kirkpatrick v. Deegans, 53 W. Va. 275, 44 S. E. 405; Mauck v. Brown, 50 Neb. 382, 81 N. W. 313; Orr v. Bailey, 59 Neb. 128, 80 N. W. 405; Lorin v. Seitz, 8 N. D. 404, 79 N. W. 869; Miller v. Schallern, 8 N. D. 395, 79 N. W. 805; Kelso v. Wright, 110 Iowa, 560, 81 N. W. 805; McKay v. Minner, 154 Mo. 608, 55 S. W. 866; Slaydeclare that the ballots shall not be admissible if not preserved as the statute directs. The preservation of the ballots being the only and ultimate object of the statute, if that fact is accomplished, the object is accomplished; and the omission to observe all the formalities provided by the law will not be fatal to the competency of the evidence; the point of inquiry always being the will of the electors, as manifested by their ballots. To exclude such evidence merely on account of an omission to comply with these statutory provisions would put it in the power of any ignorant, careless, or corrupt judge of election to frustrate an investigation into any election. Therefore, the general tendency of all courts is to hold all such provisions as directory only."

And in People ex rel. Dailey v. Livingston, 79 N. Y. 279 (a case fully set forth in NEWHOUSE v. ALEXANDER), it was declared that the preservation of ballot boxes inviolate being the ultimate object of the statute, the omission of the proper officers to observe all the formalities to secure that object would not prevent the admission of the ballots as evidence, if such object was in fact accomplished.

And in Hartman v. Young, 17 Or. 150, 2 L.R.A. 596, 11 Am. St. Rep. 77, 20 Pac. 17, it was held that the statutory provisions for the safe-keeping of ballots were "directory only;" and where it appeared that the ballots had been securely kept and preserved inviolate, they would not be excluded as evidence because of some omission to comply with the statutory requirements. To quote from the opinion: "The object of all such provisions is to secure the safe-keeping of the ballots, so that they may be easily identified in case they need to be resorted to in some judicial inquiry; and if they have been safely kept, and protected from any tampering, the chief object of the law is subserved, although omissions or ir-maker v. Phillips, 5 Wyo. 453, 47 L.R.A. 842, 40 Pac. 971, 42 Pac. 1049; Rhodes v. Driver, 69 Ark. 501, 64 S. W. 272; Arnold v. Anderson, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 508, 93 S. W. 692; Clark v. Hardison, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 611, 90 S. W. 342; People ex rel. Nichols v. County Canvassers, 129 N. Y. 395, 14 L.R.A. 624, 29 N. E. 327; Lippincott v. Felton, 61 N. J. L. 291, 39 Atl. 646; Sweeney v. Hjul, 23 Nev. 409, 48 Pac. 1030, 49 Pac. 169; Keller v. Toulme (Miss.) 7 So. 508; State ex rel. Barry v. Connor, 86 Tex. 133, 23 S. W. 1103 (Tex. Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 815; Donnell v. Lee, 101 Mo. App. 101, 73 S. W. 997.

By forbidding the inspector and judges from depositing any ballot upon which the initials of the poll clerks do not appear, regularities may have occurred, . . . the ballots are the best evidence of the will and choice of the voters; and if it is shown, or the facts find, that they have been securely kept, and preserved inviolate, they are entitled to be recounted, that the will of the electors may be carried into effect, and allowed to prevail."

Upon these principles, such statutory provisions were declared to be directory in the following cases also: State v. Ninth Judicial Ct. Judge, 13 Ala. 805 (in which the court said that while it was highly important that such provisions should be observed, yet, if the election officers failed in this respect to do their duty, the right to office, if it could be ascertained correctly, would not be thus divested); Murphy v. Lentz, 131 Iowa, 328, 108 N. W. 530 (in which it was declared that mere irregularities in not strictly pursuing the statutory provisions could not be permitted to defeat the will of the electors); People ex rel. Lake v. Higgins, 3 Mich. 233, 61 Am. Dec. 491; People ex rel. Williams v. Cicott, 16 Mich. 283, 97 Am. Dec. 141; Hughes v. Holman, 23 Or. 481, 32 Pac. 298; Re Zacharias, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 656 (in which the court used the following language: "Ignorance, inadvertence, mistake, or even intentional wrong on the part of local officers should not be permitted to disfranchise a district").

And in the following cases, the ballots were permitted to overcome the returns, though they were not preserved strictly in accordance with the statute: Conaty v. Gardner, 75 Conn. 48, 52 Atl. 416; Blankinship v. Israel, 132 Ill. 514, 24 N. E. 615; Murphy v. Battle, 155 Ill. 182, 40 N. E. 470; Dooley v. Van Hohenstein, 170 Ill. 630, 49 N. E. 193; Collier v. Anlicker, 189 Ill. 34, 60 N. E. 615.

The following cases furnish illustrations of the practical application of these rules of law:

In McCarthy v. Wilson, 146 Cal. 323, 82 Pac. 243, it was held that the failure of the election officers to write their names across the seal of the envelop containing the ballots, as required by law, would not warrant § 9950 of Wilson's Statutes of Oklahoma, when taken in connection with § 8, chap. 17, Session Laws of Oklahoma, 1905, has the same force as it would have if it contained the express statement that such ballots are void.

People ex rel. Nichols v. County Canvassers; Kelso v. Wright; Rhodes v. Driver; McKay v. Minnier; and Donnell v. Lee,—supra; State ex rel. Barry v. Connor, 86 Tex. 133, 23 S. W. 1103; Clark v. Hardison; Arnold v. Anderson; and Keller v. Toulme,—supra.

Turner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At the election held in the proposed county of Okmulgee, in the proposed state of the disfranchisement of all the voters of those precincts, where there was "no pretense" that the ballots in question were not the original ballots, and it was manifest that no injury resulted therefrom.

And in Apple v. Barcroft, 158 Ill. 649, 41 N. E. 1116, the result of a recount was preferred, though it appeared that the officer charged with the custody of the ballots kept them in an unlocked bureau drawer at his dwelling house, it being shown that the seal had not been broken, and that the ballots had not been tampered with.

To the same effect is Kreider v. McFerson, 189 Ill. 605, 60 N. E. 49, though it appeared that the officer charged with their custody put the ballots in a wooden ballot box, which was locked with a common lock, and placed by him in a room in the rear of his office, to which other persons had access, there being no testimony that the ballot box or lock was tampered with.

And in Dorey v. Lynn, 31 Kan. 758, 3 Pac. 557, the ballots were held to be controlling, though between the time they were properly inclosed in the ballot box and delivered to the proper officer, and the time of the contest, a city council, while acting as a canvassing board, illegally opened the envelop containing the ballots, and counted them.

Upon the same principle it was held in Hardin v. Cress, 113 Ky. 734, 68 S. W. 1090, and in Pace v. Reed (Ky.) 128 S. W. 891, that the innocent mistake of the election officers in destroying ballots after they had been counted, instead of preserving them, as required by statute, would not authorize throwing out the vote of the precinct where such mistake occurred, there being no question as to the truth of the returns.

In Coffey v. Edmonds, 58 Cal. 521, it was held that when packages of ballots came into the custody of a court, for use in an election contest, properly sealed, in accordance with the statute, the object of the law requiring them to be sealed was accomplished, and that the ballots were not, in the absence of evidence that any of them had been tampered with, to be discredited because, when brought into court to be Oklahoma, on September 17, 1907, for the election of state and county officers, J. L. Newhouse, plaintiff in error, defendant below, and Marvin M. Alexander, defendant in error, plaintiff below, were rival candidates for judge of the county court of that county. On the face of the returns as certified by the board of canvassers, Alexander received 1,307 votes and Newhouse received 1,384 votes for said office, whereupon Newhouse was declared elected, and certificate of election issued to him. He thereupon qualified and took possession of said office, and was proceeding to hold the same when Alexander commenced this action against him in the district court of that county, which said action is in the nature of a quo warranto to try the title of that office.

After answer and reply, the cause was submitted by agreement to the Honorable George L. Mann, special judge, for trial, who thereupon proceeded to take testimony from which he made findings of fact and conclusions of law, and rendered judgment in favor of Alexander, declaring him legally elected judge of the county court of that county, and entitled to immediate possession of said office, and ousted Newhouse therefrom, from which said judgment, after motion for a new trial filed and overruled, said Newhouse appeals. It is first contended by Newhouse that the court was without jurisdiction to try this cause for the reason that the writ of quo warranto and proceedings by information in the nature of quo warranto, abolished by Wilson's Rev. & counted, the seal was found broken and the strings loose.

Of course, the ballots will not be regarded as the best evidence of the result of an election if it appears that, as a result of their not being kept as required by the law, they were tampered with by unauthorized persons. People ex rel. Freund v. Burden, 45 Cal. 241; Rhode v. Steinmetz, 25 Colo. 308, 55 Pac. 814; Beall v. Albert, 159 Ill. 127, 42 N. E. 106; Choisser v. York, 211 Ill. 56, 71 N. E. 940; Roland v. Walker, 244 Ill. 129, 91 N. E. 80; Spidle v. McCracken, 45 Kan. 356, 25 Pac. 897; Moorhead v. Arnold, 73 Kan. 132, 84 Pac. 742; Bailey v. Hurst, 113 Ky. 699, 68 S. W. 807; Galloway v. Braddburn, 119 Ky. 49, 82 S. W. 1013; McEuen v. Carey, 123 Ky. 536, 96 S. W. 850; Browning v. Lovett, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 692, 94 S. W. 661; Andrews v. Probate Judge, 74 Mich. 278, 41 N. W. 923; Windes v. Nelson, 159 Mo. 51, 60 S. W. 129; Owens v. State, 64 Tex. 500; Stafford v. Sheppard, 57 W. Va. 84, 50 S. E. 1016.

Thus, in McMahon v. Crockett, 12 S. D. 11, 80 N. W. 136, ballots were not allowed to prevail over the official canvass where it appeared that the boxes containing the ballots were, after the election, delivered to the contestant, who was then the officer charged by law with their custody, and that he opened them for the purpose of getting the poll books to compare, and with the avowed purpose of ascertaining the result of the vote, and upon their production in court, they were found to be in a different condition than when delivered to him, and there was testimony that material alterations had been made in some of them.

There are many cases that have declared the law to be that if, as a result of the ballots not being kept as required by statute, they were exposed so as to furnish reasonable opportunity to be tampered with, they cannot be permitted to decide the result of the election. Powell v. Holman, 50 Ark. 85, 6 S. W. 506; Chatham v. Mansfield, 1 Cal. App. 298, 82 Pac. 343; Rhode v. Steinmetz, supra; Catron v. Craw, 164 Ill. 20, 46 N. E. 3; Eggers v. Fox, 177 Ill. 185, 52 N. E. 269; Bouney v. Finch, 180 Ill. 133, 54 N. E. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

318; Caldwell v. McElwain, 184 Ill. 552, 50 N. E. 1012; Garms v. People, 108 Ill. App. 631; Doak v. Briggs, 139 Iowa, 520, 116 N. W. 114; Hudson v. Solomon, 19 Kan. 177; Edwards v. Logan, 114 Ky. 312, 70 S. W. 852, 75 S. W. 257; Scholl v. Bell, 125 Ky. 750, 102 S. W. 248; Hamilton v. Young, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 447, 81 S. W. 682; Newton v. Newell, 26 Minn. 529, 6 N. W. 346; Sone v. Williams, 130 Mo. 530, 32 S. W. 1016; Albert v. Twhig, 35 Neb. 563, 53 N. W. 582; Martin v. Miles, 40 Neb. 135, 58 N. W. 732; Fenton v. Scott, 17 Or. 189, 11 Am. St. Rep. 801, 20 Pac. 95; Hughes v. Holman and McMahon v. Crockett, supra; Dent v. Taylor County, 45 W. Va. 750, 32 S. E. 250; Fishback v. Bramel, 6 Wyo. 293, 44 Pac. 840.

For example, in Kingery v. Berry, 94 Ill. 515, ballots were held to have lost their value as evidence where it appeared that after they were placed in the custody of the proper officer, he, with others, including the candidate whom the returns showed to have been defeated, out of the presence of the other party, and of the election officers, opened the ballot box and handled the ballots notwithstanding there was no evidence that the ballots had been tampered with or altered.

And in Jeter v. Headley, 186 Ill. 34, 57 N. E. 784, ballots were held not properly preserved by the officer charged with their custody, where they were kept in his office, in a vault accessible only through his office, having but a single door, provided with a combination lock, and it was shown that the lock was in such condition that persons unfamiliar with the combination could open the door, and there were many keys to his office, and his employees, when at their desks, could not see the entrance to the vault, particularly where the evidence tended strongly to show that the ballots had been tampered with after being placed in the vault. Accordingly, such ballots were not permitted to prevail over the returns.

And in West v. Sloan, 238 Ill. 330, 87 N. E. 323, it was held that ballots could not prevail over returns where the evidence showed that, though strung on a wire and Anno. Stat. Okla. 1903, § 4848, revives by §§ 2 and 10 of article 7 of the Constitution, the ancient writ of quo warranto, which makes it the sole remedy of Alexander in this cause. If such is the effect of said provisions when construed together, then Alexander is without remedy, for the reason that the functions of the ancient writ were limited to matters of publici juris, and the same was not available for the trial of purely private rights. 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 598. There is no conflict in said provisions, and nothing in this contention. We take it that the constitutional convention, by providing in article 7, § 2, Const., that the supreme court, and in § 10 of the same article that the district courts, shall have power to issue writs of quo warranto, looked rather to the substance than to the form, and simply meant not so much to give those courts power to issue a writ of a prescribed form, but to solemnly fix the ancient remedies secured by that writ, and leave it to the legislature to prescribe any new process or procedure to invoke those remedies in the courts, and to amplify and extend the remedies theretofore obtainable in the form of the ancient writ. This was done by Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. (Okla.) 1903, art. 29, under the head of "Procedure Civil," which, in effect, provides that the remedies theretofore obtainable in that form might be had by civil action, and extends the remedy so as to permit a private person to contest with another private person the right or title sealed, as required by law, they were put in a paper envelop and sealed only with mucilage, and kept by the officer charged with their custody for eleven weeks at the town hall, in a wooden cupboard, easy of access and easily opened, and a portion of the envelop was partly torn off when the officer took the ballots from the cupboard and produced them in court, and the ballots might easily have been re-marked, with little chance of detection, and without unstringing them or breaking the seal on the wire.

The same result was reached in Davenport v. Olerich, 104 Iowa, 194, 73 N. W. 603, in which it appears that, of the ballots rejected, some were wrapped in papers and others were not sealed, and all were placed on the floor under a table, in a vault in the office of the officer charged with their custody, where his employees did not at all times have them in sight, and many people had access to the vault, which was left open. The court declared the duty of preserving the ballots not to be "a negative one of noninterference, but a positive requirement to do whatever may be necessary in order to accomplish the purposes of the law in keeping them inviolate."

And in DeLong v. Brown, 113 Iowa, 370, 35 N. W. 624, ballots were held to be incompetent as evidence in an election contest where it appeared that they were left uncovered in the original envelopes in a vault which had no door, but did have an unfastened outside window, and many people had access to the vault unattended, and while in there were out of sight of the officer and his employees, and the envelopes in which the ballots were placed were in some instances so sealed that the ballots could be extricated, and in other instances the seals were of such a character that they could be opened and resealed without detection.

And in Howser v. Pepper, 8 N. D. 484, 79 N. W. 1018, it was held that ballots lost their character as the best evidence, and could not be allowed to impeach the official canvass, where it appeared that one of the boxes in which they were placed was taken by an election inspector to his father's house, and left in a bedroom generally accessible to all the family occupying the house, and the other was taken to the house of a judge of election, where the inspector got it the day before the trial, and produced it in court, not having had it in his custody in the meantime, or having seen it, and the boxes were thus kept for a period of seventy days before their production in court.

And in Farrell v. Larsen, 20 Utah, 283, 73 Pac. 227, ballots were held to be inadmissible where it appeared that they were delivered to the contestant, who was the officer charged with their custody, with a number of the packages unsealed, and were placed and kept in an unlocked telephone room in an unlocked office, to which unauthorized persons had access.

In the following cases, however, it was held that a mere irregularity showing that it was possible for someone to have tampered with the ballots was not sufficient to discredit them. Avery v. Williams, 8 Ariz. 355, 76 Pac. 463, supra; Tebbe v. Smith, 108 Cal. 101, 29 L.R.A. 673, 49 Am. St. Rep. 68, 41 Pac. 454, supra; Mentzer v. Davis, 109 Iowa, 528, 80 N. W. 557; Wheeler v. Lawrence, 78 Kan. 878, 99 Pac. 228.

To the Kentucky cases cited in NEWHOUSE v. ALEXANDER, holding mandatory the provisions of the Kentucky statute as to doubtful ballots, should be added: Struss v. Johnson, 100 Ky. 319, 38 S. W. 680; Duff v. Crawford, 124 Ky. 73, 97 S. W. 1124; Childress v. Pinson, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 767, 100 S. W. 278.

In the cases which follow, statutes requiring the preservation of the ballots cast in an election were construed as to matters not involving a failure to keep them as required.

In Re Massey, 45 Fed. 629, it was held that the laws of the United States concerning congressional elections being paramount, provisions of the Arkansas statute which forbade the opening of ballots preserved in accordance with other requirements of such statute, except in cases of to a public office. On this subject in State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Messmore, 14 Wis. 116, the court said: "It was insisted that § 3 of article 7 of the Constitution only gave this court power to issue the writ of quo warranto at the common law; that the statutes of 1849 abolished the common-law writ and substituted the proceedings by information; that the present statute abrogated both the writ and the information, and declared a civil action to be the only remedy, and, as it was a mere civil action, it could not be entertained. We consider that the framers of the Constitution looked rather to the substance than the form; that their object was not so much to give us power to issue a writ of a prescribed form, as to enable us to hear and determine controversies of a certain character; and that this jurisdiction could not be taken away by any legislative changes in the forms of the remedy, but that we might adopt any new process which was calculated to attain the same end." We are therefore of the opinion that the lower court had jurisdiction to try this cause. On the trial, Alexander, in support of the allegations in his petition, assumed the burden of proof to rebut the presumption of the correctness of the official returns, inter alia, of precinct No. 1, Seever's township, and to show that the ballots from that township were the identical ones before the court, and that the statutory provisions concerning their custody had been complied with, or, if not, that they had not been tampered with, and that they contested elections, would not justify the refusal of the officer charged with their custody to produce them before the grand jury of the United States, pending an investigation of alleged violations of Federal election laws.

On the other hand in Keenan v. People, 58 Ill. App. 241; Bryan v. Yungblut, 136 Ky. 815, 125 S. W. 251; and Ex parte Arnold, 128 Mo. 256, 33 L.R.A. 386, 49 Am. St. Rep. 557, 30 S. W. 768, 1036, it was held that, under such a statutory provision, the officer charged with the custody of ballots could not be compelled to produce the same before the grand jury; while in Ex parte Brown, 97 Cal. 83, 31 Pac. 840, it was held that such officer could not be compelled by a committing magistrate to produce and open the ballots in a criminal prosecution against an election officer.

And in Getty v. Holcomb, 79 Kan. 224, 99 Pac. 218, it was held that a statutory provision forbidding ballots in contested cases to be opened except in open court, or in an open session of the body trying such contest, forbade their opening in a proceeding for the taking of depositions preliminary to the trial of a contested election.

In Gonsoulin v. Decuir, 121 La. 611, 46 So. 608, it was held, under a statute giving, under certain conditions, the right to a party in any suit to proceed to take evidence at any time before trial, that a trial judge might order ballot boxes to be opened and their contents examined before as well as after the filing of a suit to contest an election. The opinion does not show what were the requirements of the election law as to opening ballot boxes.

In Lovewell v. Bowen, 75 Ark. 452, 88 S. W. 570, it was held that, after the officer charged with the custody of ballots had produced them in court, the ballots passed from his control and into that of the court; and that the production of ballots from such officer after the ballots had been turned into court was not from the proper custodian of them, and that no presumptions of official regularity could be indulged on account of the source whence produced. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Patten v. Florence, 38 Kan. 501, 17 Pac. 174, it was held that a statutory provision requiring an officer charged with the custody of ballots not to permit them to be inspected except in cases of contested elections would not prevent the canvassers of an election from publicly opening the envelopes containing the ballots, and taking therefrom poll books which had been improperly inclosed with the ballots, so as to justify their refusal to canvass the returns.

In Keith v. Wendt, 144 Mich. 49, 107 N. W. 443, and Ward v. Culver, 144 Mich. 57, 107 N. W. 444, it was held that a recount board must, in order to have a recount, find from an inspection of the ballot boxes that the statutory requirements for the preservation of ballots as cast had been observed. The court in the first-cited case added, however, that it was true that in quo warranto proceedings the law as to the preservation of the ballots was to be held so far directory that it became a question of fact as to whether the ballots not cared for strictly as the law directed were in fact the ones cast at the election, upon the ground that there was an opportunity in such case for a judicial determination of the facts.

In Re Van Cott, 34 Misc. 411, 69 N. Y. Supp. 934, it was held that, under a statute requiring sealed packages of void and contested ballots to be retained inviolate for a certain period in the office in which they were filed, subject to the order and examination of a court of competent jurisdiction, the supreme court might, at the application of a defeated congressional candidate, order an inspection of such ballots, though no contest had been begun.

In People v. McClellan, 52 Misc. 614, 103 N. Y. Supp. 827, the court, in refusing to order certain ballot boxes to be taken from the custody of the officers designated by the election law, without proof of facts affording reasonable ground for the fear that they would be tampered with, or that they would be exposed to the danger of loss, declined to decide whether the court in any event had power to change the custody designated by law.

J. A. C.

should be received in evidence for that purpose. At the close of the testimony on both sides, the court opened the ballot box containing said ballots, and made with reference to them the following findings of fact:

"(4) That at precinct No. 1, SeEVERS township, there were counted, certified, and returned by the election board of said precinct 133 votes as having been cast for the office of judge of the county court of said county, of which 20 ballots were counted, certified, and returned for plaintiff, and 113 ballots for the defendant.

"(5) The court finds from the evidence that during the count in precinct No. 1 of SeEVERS township, the ballots were strung upon a string as they were counted, and at the close of the count were placed in a large paper envelop. The envelop was not sealed with the names of the judges written across the seal, but was folded over at the end, and sewed through with a needle and twine string. The envelop containing the ballots was placed in the ballot box and locked, and the ballot box taken in charge by the inspector at that precinct, and by him delivered to J. C. Trent, the county clerk of the proposed county of Okmulgee. The ballot box containing the ballots was kept by Trent for a time in a room the door of which was fastened with an ordinary lock, easily unlocked with what is commonly known as a skeleton key, and then removed and kept for a time in another room, the door of which fastened with a similar lock. These doors were kept locked, but any person with a skeleton key could easily have entered the same, and at least two persons not authorized to have the custody of the ballots did actually enter the rooms where these ballots were. Prior to statehood, Trent removed the ballot box containing the ballots from this precinct to the vault of the First National Bank of Okmulgee, where it remained until brought into court. Some time after statehood, Trent turned the ballot box over to Fred H. Smith, the deputy county clerk of Okmulgee county, by going with him to the First National Bank, and stating to the officers of that institution that the ballot box was turned over to Smith. The keys of the ballot box were not turned over to Smith, but remained in the possession of Trent until brought into court. When the ballots from this precinct were produced in court, they were in the envelop inside of this ballot box. The ballot box was made of wooden boards, apparently an inch thick, securely nailed together. The top fitted into the box by means of grooves in the board forming the sides of the box.

30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

and could not be removed except by unlocking the box. The box was locked with two locks of different design, and not easily unlocked except with the key. When the box was opened, the ballots were found to be in the envelop, the box being in perfect condition as described above, showing no evidence of having been disturbed. The ballots were on a string, and in apparently perfect condition. The court finds from all the evidence that the ballots as produced in court were the identical ballots voted by the voters at this precinct, and in the identical condition that they were in when placed in the envelop by the election officers of that precinct.

"(6) The court finds from an inspection and count of the ballots cast at precinct No. 1 of SeEVERS township that of the 20 votes cast at that precinct for plaintiff, Marvin M. Alexander, 8 ballots had on the back thereof the full name of one polling clerk only, and were numbered to correspond with the voter's number on the polling book, 4 ballots had on the back thereof the initials of one polling clerk only, and were numbered in like manner, 3 ballots had on the back thereof the initials of one polling clerk and were not numbered, 2 ballots were initialed 'L. G. H.,' the initials of both clerks being written by L. G. Hamilton, one of the clerks, 1 ballot had on the back thereof, in the lower left-hand corner, the initials of both polling clerks, 1 ballot had on the back thereof in the upper right-hand corner the name of one clerk in full and the initials of the other clerk, and 1 ballot was printed on colored paper. The court further finds that of the ballots cast at said precinct for defendant, J. L. Newhouse, 43 had on the back thereof the full name of one polling clerk only, and a number to correspond with the number of the voter on the poll book, 33 ballots had on the back thereof the initials of one polling clerk only, and a number to correspond with the number of the voter on the poll book, 15 ballots had on the back thereof the initials of one polling clerk only, 1 ballot had on the back thereof the full name of one polling clerk only, 4 ballots had on the back thereof the initials 'L. G. H.' and 'E. H.,' both sets of initials being written by L. G. Hamilton, one of the clerks, 1 ballot having on the back thereof the initials of one polling clerk in the lower left-hand corner, and the initials of one clerk in the upper left-hand corner, and 15 ballots had on the back thereof in the lower left-hand corner the initials of both polling clerks. . . . The court finds that none of the irregularities above found were accompanied by fraud, and that the result of the election was not in anywise changed by reason thereof."

The court also found the following:

Conclusions of Law.

(1) Upon the finding of fact numbered 5, the court declares the law to be that the ballots from precinct No. 1, Seevers township, should be admitted in evidence, and, when so admitted, are controlling as to the result of the election in said precinct.

(2) Upon the finding of fact numbered 6, the court declares the law to be that ballots having on the back thereof the name or initial of but one of the polling clerks, and ballots numbered on the back to correspond with the number of the voter on the poll book, and ballots printed on colored paper, and ballots having on the back thereof the initials of both clerks, both sets of initials being written by one clerk, are mutilated ballots, and should be excluded from the count. The number of ballots so excluded were counted, certified, and returned by the election board of said precinct is 18 ballots cast for plaintiff and 96 ballots cast for defendant.

As a result of the above findings of fact and conclusions of law, the court finds that the plaintiff received 1,349 legal votes at said election for the office of judge of the county court, said defendant 1,288 legal votes for said office, electing plaintiff by a majority of 61, and judgment will be entered accordingly, establishing the plaintiff's right to the office, and ousting the defendant therefrom.

George L. Mann, Judge.

It is contended by Newhouse that the court erred in admitting in evidence over his objection the ballots of precinct No. 1, Seevers township, because, he says, in effect, that said findings of fact show that the statutory provisions requiring the county clerk to preserve said ballot package in some secure and safe place had not been complied with, and that said facts so found were insufficient to rebut the presumption that said ballots had been tampered with. That this was not the identical ballot box returned from precinct No. 1, Seevers township, or that the box or its contents was in fact tampered with, or bore evidence that it had been, he does not contend. Neither does he contend that the findings of fact are unsupported by the evidence. Under said findings, we see no good reason why the ballots therein should have been excluded. If it be conceded that said statute was not complied with, that would not afford sufficient reason for excluding them, as said statute is not mandatory. The ballots themselves were better evidence of how the electors voted at that particular precinct than the returns, and should be counted in a contest if free from fraud. The burden was upon Alexander to prove this, and we cannot say that the court erred in finding that he had fairly sustained it. 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 830, states the rule thus: "Where the ballots are preserved, so that their identity is assured, and they can be counted during a contest, they are undoubtedly better evidence of the vote cast than the returns, and should prevail where there is a difference. . . . Before a recount of the ballots should be allowed to rebut the presumption of the correctness of the official returns, it should be proved satisfactorily that the ballots have not been tampered with since the election, and that those offered in evidence are the identical ones cast. . . . Where the statute provides that the ballots shall be kept in a certain way, and they are in the hands of the proper officer, it is presumed that he has done his duty, and the burden of proof is upon those assailing them to show that they might have been tampered with. On the other hand, when it is made to appear that the statutory provisions have not been complied with, this fact alone does not render the ballots inadmissible, but merely throws upon the person who asks the recount, the burden of proof to show that they have not been tampered with. But this is a question of fact, to be determined by the jury or the court trying the issues." In Edwards v. Logan, 114 Ky. 312, 70 S. W. 852, 75 S. W. 257, the court said: "The rule may be stated to be that, where the ballots are preserved so that their identity is assured, they can be counted during a contest, and they are undoubtedly better evidence of the vote cast than the returns, and should prevail where there is a difference. Hughes v. Holman, 23 Or. 481, 32 Pac. 298; Owens v. State, 64 Tex. 500; People ex rel. Budd v. Holden, 28 Cal. 123. But, before a recount of the ballots should be allowed to rebut the presumption of the correctness of the official returns, it should be proved satisfactorily that the ballots had not been tampered with since the election, and that those offered in evidence are the identical ones cast." In People ex rel. Dailey v. Livingston, 79 N. Y. 288, it was said: "The statute required the ballot boxes to be preserved undisturbed and inviolate, and it is incumbent upon the party offering the evidence to show that they had been so kept,—not beyond a mere possibility of interference, but that they were intact to the satisfaction of the jury. The burden was upon the relator to satisfy the jury that the boxes had remained inviolate. The returns are the primary evidence of the result of an election. They are made immediately upon canvassing the votes, and the votes are canvassed at the close of the polls in public, and presumably in the presence of the friends of both parties. . . . After the election, it is known just how many votes are required to change the result. The ballots themselves cannot be identified. They have no earmarks. Everything depends upon keeping the ballot boxes secure, and the difficulty of doing this for several months in the face of temptation and opportunity requires that the utmost scrutiny and care should be exercised in receiving the evidence. . . . Every consideration of public policy, as well as the ordinary rules of evidence, require that the party offering this evidence should establish the fact that the ballots are genuine. It is not sufficient that a mere probability of security is proved, but the fact must be shown with a reasonable degree of certainty. If the boxes have been rigorously preserved, the ballots are the best and highest evidence; but, if not, they are not only the weakest, but the most dangerous evidence."

It is next contended by Newhouse that these ballots should not have been admitted in evidence to rebut the presumption of the correctness of the official returns, because he says that they were not sealed with the names of the election board written across the package, as required by that part of Sess. Laws 1905, chap. 17, art. 1, § 8, which reads: "On completing the canvass, and recording same on the tally sheets, and executing the certificates, all of the ballots counted and one certificate, one poll book, and one tally sheet shall be securely sealed in a stout paper or muslin envelop or bag, with the names of the election board written across the seal of the package," and which he says is mandatory. The findings of fact disclose that these ballots "were strung upon a string as they were counted, and at the close of the count were placed in a large paper envelop. The envelop was not sealed with the names of the election judges written across the seal, but was folded over at the end and sewed through with needle and twine string. The envelop containing the ballots was placed in the ballot box and locked, . . . that the ballots produced in court were the identical ballots voted by the voters at this precinct, and in the identical condition that they were when placed in the envelop by the election officers at that precinct." The uncontradicted evidence in addition discloses that a needle and twine string were furnished with the election supplies, but no sealing wax, that said envelop was not sealed for that reason, and that the judges signed their names at the places designated on said envelop. We do 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) not think the statute mandatory, and are of the opinion that the omission of the seal was at most a mere irregularity, in no manner affecting the actual merits of the election. The test as to whether an election statute is mandatory or merely directory is stated thus by Mr. McCrary in his work on Election, 4th ed. § 225: "If the statute expressly declares any particular act to be essential to the validity of the election, or that its omission shall render the election void, all courts whose duty it is to enforce such statute must so hold, whether the particular act in question goes to the merits, or affects the result of the election, or not. Such a statute is imperative, and all considerations touching its policy or impolicy must be addressed to the legislature. But if, as in most cases, that statute simply provides that certain acts or things shall be done within a particular time or in a particular manner, and does not declare that their performance is essential to the validity of the election, then they will be regarded as mandatory if they do, and directory if they do not, affect the actual merits of the election." Section 227: "The rule of construction to be gathered from all the authorities was thus stated in Jones v. State, 1 Kan. 273, and approved in Gilleland v. Schuyler, 9 Kan. 569: 'Unless a fair consideration of the statute shows that the legislature intended compliance with the provisions in relation to the manner to be essential to the validity of the proceedings, it is to be regarded as directory merely.'" A mere irregularity in forwarding the returns such as is here complained of will not warrant their rejection when free from fraud. 15 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 377: "The manner of forwarding or transmitting election returns is purely a matter of statutory regulation; but these statutes are directory merely unless a noncompliance with them is expressly declared to be fatal, and, in the absence of fraud or any suspicion of fraud, a mere irregularity in forwarding the returns will not warrant their rejection. Thus, where it is the duty of the election officers to return the votes sealed, it has been held that a return of them unsealed, in the absence of any proof or suspicion of fraud, is good,"—citing Mallory v. Merrill, Clarke & H. Elec. Cas. 328; Platt v. Goode, Smith, Elec. Cas. 650; Patton v. Coates, 41 Ark. 111; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 742: "There would seem to be no doubt that the principle that only things which are of the essence of the matter are mandatory, and that other provisions are to be considered as directory only, applies to forwarding the returns. And the authorities seem to bear out this doctrine, though there are some cases which seem to be at least partially opposed to it." Mallory v. Merrill, supra, was a contested election case for a seat in the Sixteenth Congress. On January 5, 1820, the committee on elections to consider the contest reported that in their opinion Merrill was not entitled to the seat, and that Mallory was entitled to it. Under the laws of Vermont, from whence the contest came, the returns of the towns were transmitted to a canvassing committee chosen by the general assembly, and in accordance with the findings of that committee, and in accordance with the law, the governor of the state executed credentials to Mr. Merrill, but the committee on elections, going behind the governor's certificate and the result ascertained by the canvassing committee, found "that the canvassing committee had rejected the legally given votes of the town of Fairhaven because the election officers of that town had transmitted the certificate of votes to the canvassing committee in an unsealed packet, while the law required the packet to be sealed. The committee, holding that the house of representatives had not been accustomed to allow votes legally given to be defeated by the mistake or negligence of a returning officer, were of the opinion that the votes of Fairhaven should be allowed to the contestant," and by a vote of 116 to 47 Mallory was declared entitled to the seat. The syllabus of that case in part says: "No fraud being alleged, the house counted returns transmitted in an unsealed package, although the state law required the package to be sealed." In People ex rel Williams v. Board of Canvassers, 105 App. Div. 197, 94 N. Y. Supp. 996, the question considered was one closely akin to the one here. In that case the court said: "It is alleged also by the relators that original statements of canvass from 12 election districts, showing in the aggregate 1,404 votes in the affirmative and 1,166 in the negative, were filed with the county clerk and delivered to the defendant board and wrongfully canvassed, for the reason that they were not securely and separately sealed with sealing wax, as required by § 112 of the election law [Laws 1896, chap. 909]. These allegations were denied by the answering affidavits, which show that, while such statements were not in every case 'separately sealed,' yet in every case they were 'securely sealed' with sealing wax when filed with the county clerk; one having been sealed inclosed with the tally sheet, one with detached stubs and unvoted ballots, one with the poll book and tally sheet, and others with other official papers used at the election. The answering affidavits show that the failure to comply strictly with the requirements of the statute in this respect was in each case unintentional. At the most, these failures were mere irregularities, resulting either from not fully comprehending the statutory requirements, or from oversight on the part of the inspectors. In the absence of any claim that these irregularities resulted in any tampering with the returns, or in any fraud in connection with them, or that these returns as canvassed did not correctly show the votes cast on the question in the districts from which they came, the electors in such districts should not be disfranchised because of them. People v. Cook, 8 N. Y. 67, 59 Am. Dec. 461." Patton v. Coates, supra, was a contested election over the office of judge of Pulaski county. The law made it the duty of the election judges, before dispersing, to put one of the poll books under cover and seal the same, and direct it to the county clerk, to be delivered to him by one of the judges. It then became the duty of said clerk to call to his assistance two justices of the peace and canvass the vote. There was a failure to seal one of the poll books before sending it to the clerk. The court said: "It is plain enough from the evidence that the poll books from all the townships and wards in the county were those actually used and made up by the officers holding the election, that they are substantially authenticated in accordance with the statute, and that they contain no internal indication of fraud." And in the fourth division of the syllabus says: "The failure or omission of the judges to seal the poll book before sending it to the clerk will not invalidate it, where it has no appearance of having been tampered with."

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And so we say in this case that, as there was no evidence whatever that the envelop in question or the ballots therein contained had been tampered with, and the same is not contended, we are of the opinion that the court did not err in admitting the same in evidence. In so holding we are not unmindful of the authorities cited by counsel for Newhouse, to wit, Banks v. Sergeant, 104 Ky. 849, 48 S. W. 149; Anderson v. Likens, 104 Ky. 699, 47 S. W. 867; Neeley v. Rice, 123 Ky. 806, 97 S. W. 739; and Edwards v. Logan, 114 Ky. 312, 70 S. W. 852, 75 S. W. 257, which seem to be followed on no other state. In those cases, the statute in substance required that, if there were any ballots counted or left uncounted concerning the legality or regularity of which there was any doubt or difference of opinion in the minds of the judges, said ballots "shall be placed in the large linen envelopes furnished by the county court clerk for that purpose and sealed up, and across the seal thereof the officers of the election shall plainly write their names, and at the point of the seal inlicated for that purpose the judges of the election shall, in the presence of the judge and sheriff, place the election seal in hot wax, and the same shall be returned to the clerk of the county court with the returns of the election, for such judicial or other investigation as may be necessary, with a true statement of whether they have or have not been counted, and, if counted, what part and for whom." In construing said statute, all of said cases held the same with reference to the certificate of the election officers in regard to contested ballots, to be mandatory, in the absence of which said certificate said ballots were without probative force, but none of said cases go so far as to hold that the mere omission of the seal would have that effect in the absence of fraud, and, if they did, we would not feel disposed to follow them in the construction of the statute in question. That such was the effect of the holding in those cases is evident. In Neeley v. Rice, supra, the court said: "It is agreed that the officers of the election at Cow creek precinct did not comply with the provisions of the statute in making their returns as to the 85 contested ballots. They were placed in a large linen envelop, sealed and marked 'Contested ballots,' but without any certificate of the officers of the election attached thereto, and without any of the names of the officers of the election being written across the seal of the envelop. It will be observed that the statute requires a certificate to be attached to, or placed with, the questioned ballots, with a true statement as to whether they have or have not been counted, and, if counted, what part and for whom. The statute further requires that the officers of the election shall plainly write their names across the seal on the envelop and that the judges of the election shall, in the presence of the clerk and the sheriff, place thereon the county election seal in hot wax. All of this the election officers failed to do. Notwithstanding this statute, the court counted these ballots, evidently upon the theory that the statute had been changed since the opinions of this court were rendered in Struss v. Johnson, 100 Ky. 319, 38 S. W. 680, Anderson v. Likens, supra, and Banks v. Sergeant, 104 Ky. 843, 48 S. W. 149. In all of these cases this court held the provisions of the statute as it then existed with reference to the certificate of the election officers in regard to contested ballots were mandatory."

It is contended that the court erred in excluding from the count of the ballots so returned from precinct No. 1, Seevers township, the 18 ballots cast for Alexander and the 96 ballots cast for Newhouse, not bearing the initials of the poll clerks and otherwise mutilated, thereby reducing the legal votes cast for the former to 1,349 and the legal votes cast for the latter to 1,288. We do not think so. Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903, § 2937: "At the opening of the polls, after the organization of and in the presence of the election board, the inspector shall open the package of ballots in such a manner as to preserve the seals intact. He shall then deliver to the poll clerk of the opposite political party from his own, twenty-five each of the territorial and local ballots, and to the other poll clerk the stamps for marking the ballots. The poll clerks shall at once proceed to write their initials in ink on the lower left-hand corner of the back of said ballots, in their ordinary handwriting, and without any distinguishing mark of any kind. As each successive elector calls for a ballot, the poll clerk shall deliver him the first signed of the twenty-five ballots of each kind, and the inspector shall immediately deliver to the poll clerks another of each kind, which the poll clerks shall at once countersign as before and add to the ballots already countersigned, so it shall be delivered for voting after all of those heretofore countersigned." Section 2950: "No inspector of election or judge acting for an inspector shall deposit any ballot upon which the initials of the poll clerk, as hereinbefore provided, do not appear, or any ballot on which appears externally any distinguishing mark, defacement, or mutilation." Sess. Laws (Okla.) 1905, chap. 17, art. 1, § 8: "If, in the canvass of the votes, any ballot is found not indorsed with the initials of the poll clerks as provided, and any ballot which bears any distinguishing mark, or on which any writing appears with pen or pencil, and any ballot upon which the judges are unable to agree as to how it shall be counted, the same shall not be counted, but shall be designated as mutilated ballots, and shall be preserved and kept separate from the ballots counted. . . ." The statute is mandatory. No authority is cited to the contrary. "The clerks shall at once proceed to write their initials in ink on the lower left-hand corner of the back of said ballots, in their ordinary handwriting. . . . No inspector of election or judge acting for an inspector shall deposit any ballots upon which the initials of the poll clerks . . . do not appear, or any ballot on which appears externally any distinguishing mark, defacement, or mutilation," and "the same shall not be counted." Under the subhead of "Irregularity in Ballots," 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 726, lays down the general rule that "these statutes, being designed to preserve the secrecy of the ballot, and to prevent fraud, intimidation, and bribery, will generally be considered mandatory; and this will be so in all cases where the statute provides that a ballot varying from the requirements of the law shall not be counted."

In Kirkpatrick v. Deegans, 53 W. Va. 275, 44 S. E. 465, the court, speaking of similar statutes, says: "No case had been found, nor is it believed that any exist, in which the court has held that the disobedience to such a requirement does not invalidate the ballot, when the statute itself is held to be constitutional." And, after an exhaustive review of the authorities, says: "Further authority to the same effect is found in McCrary on Elections, 4th ed. At § 225, he admits that mere irregularity on the part of election officers, or their omission to observe some merely directory provisions of the law, will not vitiate the poll, but in § 226 he says, after referring to a case (West v. Ross, in 53 Mo. at page 350) in which the statute requiring the ballots to be numbered according to the numbers on the poll books was held to be mandatory: 'Although this doctrine may sometimes result in very great hardship and injustice, by depriving the voters of their rights by reason of the negligence or misconduct of the officers of the election, it is nevertheless difficult to see how any different construction could have been placed upon such a statute. Statutes which simply direct the judges of election to number the ballots, without declaring what consequences shall follow if this be not done, may well be held directory only; but, where the statute both gives the directions and declares what the consequences of neglecting their observance shall be, there is no room for construction. Such statutes are intended to prevent fraudulent voting; and, if the legislature is of the opinion that the general good to be derived from their strict enforcement will more than counterbalance the evils resulting from the occasional throwing out of votes honestly cast, the courts cannot reconsider the mere question of policy. The legislative will upon such a subject, when clearly expressed, must prevail.' Major v. Barker, 99 Ky. 305, 35 S. W. 543; Slaymaker v. Phillips, 5 Wyo. 453, 47 L.R.A. 842, 40 Pac. 971, 42 Pac. 1049; State ex rel. Barry v. Connor, 86 Tex. 133, 23 S. W. 1103; Russell v. McDowell, 83 Cal. 70, 23 Pac. 183; Sego v. Stoddard, 136 Ind. 297, 22 L.R.A. 468, 30 N. E. 204; Kreitz v. Behrensmeyer, 125 Ill. 141, 8 Am. St. Rep. 349, 17 N. E. 232." In Mauck v. Brown, 59 Neb. 382, 81 N. W. 313, the court says: "The ballots cast at the election were obtained and counted by the county court, and it was decided that the appellee had received 1,277 votes and the appellant 1,273, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) or that for the former there was a majority of 4. In the district court the ballots were examined, and as the result of another count it was settled that for the appellee there were 1,277 legal votes, and for the appellant 1,272, a difference of 5 in favor of the former, who was adjudged entitled to the office. . . . There were discovered during the count of the ballots 9 with the name of but one judge of election on the back of each. Seven of these were favorable to the election of appellant, and two to that of appellee. They were not counted, and that they were not is [one] of the complaints of appellant. In the decision of the case of Orr v. Bailey, 59 Neb. 128, 80 N. W. 495, similar questions were presented and examined, and it was determined that the provisions of the ballot law that the signatures of two judges of the election should be written on the back of the ballot before given to the voter, and, if not, the ballot should not be deposited in the ballot box, and, if it was, should not be counted, were mandatory, and ballots not so identified, or on the back of which there appeared the signature of but one judge of the election, should not be counted. A re-examination of the question at this time does not change our views of the matter; hence this objection must be overruled." In Orr v. Bailey, supra, the precinct in question cast 41 votes, as shown by the abstract and by the count, of which Bailey received 31 and Orr 10. The court said: "That each of the 41 ballots cast in said precinct at said election was indorsed on the back with the name of 'Christ Eichenberge,' written in ink, and that said name was all and the only indorsement on said ballots. . . . One of the important objects of the Australian ballot law was, and is, to provide purity and honesty in elections, to prevent frauds; and the prescriptions that the signatures of two of the judges of election shall be placed on the back of each ballot, before it is delivered to a voter, and it shall by the voter be folded so as to disclose these signatures, when he presents it for deposit in the ballot box, and it may not be deposited unless they do so appear or are in fact on the back of the ballot, and, if deposited without such indorsement, the ballot shall be void and not counted, are but parts of the general scheme, and it will be noticed that the voter is called upon to aid. He must take notice of the signatures of the two judges on the back of his ballot, and so notice them as to materially assist in the process of casting the ballot and its identification prior to deposit by the proper official. The elector is charged with a knowledge of the law, and he can hardly escape the discovery that the signatures are or are not on the back of the ballot when he folds it, and that it is or is not a ballot which can be used. To this extent he must be asked to give his attention, and that he be so asked is certainly not destructive to the freedom of the election, nor do we deem it an impediment or a hindrance of the exercise of the elective franchise, nor a new qualification of an elector. The provisions in question are clearly but regulative in their essential features, and assist in the honest, intelligent exercise of the right to vote, and are not violative of the Constitution." In Kelso v. Wright, 110 Iowa, 560, 81 N. W. 805, a statute was under construction quite similar to the one in question. The court in its syllabus said: "Under Acts 24th Gen. Assem. chap. 33, §§ 21, 25, providing that one of the judges of election shall indorse his initials on the ballot given to the voter, and no ballot without such indorsement shall be deposited in the ballot box, and only ballots provided in accordance with the provisions of the act shall be counted, a ballot on which the initials of one of the judges are not indorsed should not be counted." In support of this doctrine, see also Lorin v. Seitz, 8 N. D. 404, 79 N. W. 869; McKay v. Minner, 154 Mo. 608, 55 S. W. 866; Slaymaker v. Phillips, supra; Rhodes v. Driver, 69 Ark. 501, 64 S. W. 272; Arnold v. Anderson, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 508, 93 S. W. 692; Clark v. Hardison, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 611, 90 S. W. 342; People ex rel. Nichols v. County Canvassers, 129 N. Y. 395, 14 L.R.A. 624, 29 N. E. 327.

We are therefore of the opinion that the court did not err in excluding the ballots in controversy, and, finding no error in the record, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

COLORADO SUPREME COURT.

WINDSOR RESERVOIR & CANAL COMPANY et al., Appts.,
v.

HOFFMAN MILLING COMPANY.

(— Colo. —, 109 Pac. 422.)

Water — periodic appropriation — locality.

1. Where a mill for which water has been appropriated is idle part of the time, the water not then needed for its purposes is subject to appropriation by a user above the point of the mill's intake.
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same — sale by first appropriator — validity.

2. One who has appropriated water for a mill which he uses only a portion of the time cannot sell to another his right to the water during the time he does not use it, as against the rights of one who has made a valid appropriation of the water when not needed by him.

(March 7, 1910.)

Note. — Right as between appropriator above, and junior appropriator below, mill, during periods when water not used by mill.

The question whether a user of water above a mill may take and appropriate the water belonging to the mill, when it is idle, as against a junior appropriator who, while the mill was running, has continuously used it after it was returned to the stream, seems to have arisen only in Colorado, and even there all the cases have been concerned with the use of the water of one stream.

The first case that arose, and which evidently has since created considerable misunderstanding by the trial courts, is Cache La Poudre Reservoir Co. v. Water Supply & Storage Co. 25 Colo. 161, 46 L.R.A. 175, 71 Am. St. Rep. 131, 53 Pac. 331. In this case a water company above a mill which was the oldest appropriator made an appropriation for storage purposes prior in time to an appropriation by a reservoir company below the mill. The water company always had recognized the superior right of the milling company, by permitting the amount appropriated by it to pass down the river and into the mill race. Before the water company had ever made any attempt to use the amount of water appropriated by the milling company, the reservoir company had appropriated the water turned back into the river by the milling company. Upon a threatened attempt of the milling company to abandon its use of the water in favor of the water company, the question arose which one of the two other companies was entitled to the water. The court held that since the reservoir company had made the first appropriation of this particular volume of water, it was, as to such water, an appropriator prior to the water company, though the latter might be, as against the reservoir company, as to all other waters of the stream, a senior appropriator. The court concluded by saying: "It follows, therefore, when the plaintiff [reservoir company] went upon the stream, and saw the use that was being made of the water by the milling company, and then made its appropriation, no subsequent act of omission or commission by the milling company could operate to the injury of the plaintiff: and, by virtue of its appropriation, the plaintiff, on the basis of then existing conditions, secured a vested right to have the water continue to flow, either from the mill race or from the stream itself, in substantially the same quantity as it flowed when its appropriation was

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the District Court for Larimer County restraining them from diverting waters from a certain natural stream in alleged violation of plaintiff's rights. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James W. McCreery for appellees.

Mr. L. R. Rhodes and P. W. Lee for appellee.

Bailey, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action by the Hoffman Milling Company, a Colorado corporation, appellee, as plaintiff, against the Windsor Reservoir & Canal Company, appellant, and others, as defendants, was brought for equitable relief by way of injunction. The complaint, among other things, avers that the Hoffman Milling Company is a milling and manufacturing corporation; that on or about the 1st day of April, 1894, it commenced the construction of a mill race to take water from the Cache la Poudre river, below the town of Ft. Collins, to procure water for power purposes, and thereafter diverted water for that use, whenever the same could be obtained, up to the time of the commencement of this suit. The complaint also shows that another milling company had, by means of the Mason & Hottel mill race, so called, therefore made an appropriation, to the extent of 60 cubic feet of water per second, also for power purposes, from the same stream, above the city of Ft. Collins, and had diverted water to operate its mills from 1868 to 1894, when the plaintiff company commenced the construction of its mill and mill race; that the water diverted through the Mason & Hottel mill race was returned to the river by a tail race, at a point above the location of the head gate of the Hoffman mill race; that by reason of the return of this water to the river from the upper mill to the lower mill, the plaintiff, as owner of the lower mill race, claims the right to take the water from the tailrace of the upper mill for its use, to the exclusion of all other appropriators of this water, above the tailrace of the old mill, without regard to the date of appropriation above the tailrace. And further that the Windsor Reservoir & Canal Company, being the owner of a reservoir for the storage of water for irrigation and agricultural purposes, with a decreed right as of date prior to July, 1890, had diverted and sought to divert water from the Cache la Poudre river at a point above said tailrace, for the filling of its reservoir, whenever it could obtain the same from the river, and when the appropriation of the 60 cubic feet of water of the upper mill was not actually in use, and thus thereby deprived, as is said, the lower mill of the use of the water for propelling its machinery, which the upper mill made. The plaintiff, though junior to the milling company in so far as the use of the water for power purposes is concerned, is a senior appropriator to the milling company as to the water which the former appropriated after it left the mill race. That right was just as valid as was the prior right of the milling company for power purposes, and each becomes a vested right.

The water company could not, by purchase, acquire from the milling company any superior right to this 60 cubic feet of water appropriated by the plaintiff, for the milling company had no prior rights to convey. Why, if the milling company ceases temporarily or permanently to use its appropriation, the water company could or should obtain a right which it could not get by purchase, is difficult to perceive, for one may not abandon a right in favor of another." After a new trial, this case was reaffirmed by the supreme court in 27 Colo. 532, 62 Pac. 420.

The last case was followed by Windsor Reservoir & Canal Co. v. Lake Supply Ditch Co. 44 Colo. 214, 98 Pac. 729. Although it is extremely difficult to determine all the facts from the opinion, it was evidently contended that the reservoir company noted in the earlier case, or any other person, might thereafter make an appropriation of water for storage purposes, through ditches taking water out of the river below the tailrace, and thereby acquire a priority over reservoirs for which appropriations had theretofore been made by means of ditches whose point of intake on the river was above the head gate of the mill race, where such earlier appropriations above the mill race were made subject only to the rights of the milling company and those of the reservoir company for the benefit of its particular reservoir, in controversy in the earlier case. The court, however, after saying that it was not decided or intended to be decided in the earlier case, that one who had, subject only to the superior right of the milling company, made an appropriation for storage purposes from the river above the mill race, and before any below the point of its discharge had acquired rights to the return waters, was junior to the latter as to such returned volume, continued: "When we said there that the storage company might not, as against the reservoir company, for its reservoir then in question, take this 60 cubic feet of water, this was not equivalent to saying that it had no right whatever thereto. The effect of the holding was not that as to such volume the storage company had no right at all, and never could acquire any, but that until the reservoir of the reservoir company was filled, the storage company might not intercept any of the mill-race flow. Under the fundamental law of such priorities, if the storage company made an appropriation from the river of a given volume, as it had, though it was junior to that of the reservoir company, had appropriated long prior thereto, and which was accustomed to flow on down, after being used by the upper mill, to the lower, or Hoffman, mill race.

The answer of the Windsor Reservoir & Canal Company alleges that it had made an appropriation of water for filling its reservoir as of date July 8, 1890, and that from and after that date it had diverted water for such purpose from the Cache la Poudre river, whenever the same could be obtained without interfering with the rights and use of prior appropriators, including the first mill appropriation; that the reservoir company had used, at times, the 60 feet of water or an amount equivalent thereto, for storage purposes, when the same, for any reason, was not being used to supply the old mill appropriation; that, subject to the rights of the latter, and the use of water by it when actually required, the said reservoir company claimed the right to use that particular water, or any water found flowing in the Cache la Poudre river, by virtue of a prior appropriation thereto, for storage in its reservoir, at stated intervals of time, as against any right acquired by the Hoffman Milling Company under its appropriation.

At the conclusion of the trial, the court found in substance that the Windsor Reservoir & Canal Company had made an appropriation out of the Cache la Poudre river, for storage purposes, of waste, nonused and winter waters, as of date prior to July, 1890; that the Hoffman Milling Company had an appropriation, for the purpose of propelling its mill machinery, of 50 cubic feet, as of date April 1, 1894, diverted below the return point to the river from the Hottel mill race; and that the date of appropriation of the Mason & Hottel mill race was of date 1868, for 60 cubic feet of water per second of time, also for power purposes. Under this state of facts the court held in effect, without reference to the prior appropriation of the Windsor Reservoir & Canal Company for storage purposes, that the Hoffman Milling Company was entitled, to the extent of its appropriation, to the undisturbed and constant enjoyment of water from the Cache la Poudre river below the tailrace of the old mill, in the same manner as if the old mill race diverted its 60 feet of water per second of time continuously, and discharged the same back into the river. That the new mill race should be held to be first appropriated of the particular water appropriated and used by the old mill, without regard to claims of intervening appropriators from the river, between the dates of 1868 and April 1, 1894, diverting water from a point or points above the tailrace of the old mill. The court, in reaching this conclusion, was constrained to do so in obedience to what it understood to have been decided by this for its particular reservoir, it became senior as to all the waters of the river, including the 60 feet, irrespective of the location of its head gate with reference to the mill race, as against all subsequent appropriators who divert water from the same stream for storage purposes, whether they take it out above or below the mill race.

"This part of the decree proceeded upon the theory deduced by the trial court from our former decision, that when the reservoir company made its appropriation by diverting water at a point below the mill race, 60 cubic feet of water thereby became segregated from the river, and was reserved for all time to appropriations then and thereafter to be made below that point, and never could be utilized by appropriators above the mill race, even though their reservoirs were constructed and used years before such lower ones were started. Fairly considered, as it should be, with reference to the facts of the particular case, we do not think the decision susceptible of the construction which the court below, and appellee here, put upon it; but if it is, it is to be qualified by the views herein expressed."

And see the review of the above two cases in WINDSOR RESERVOIR & CANAL CO. v. HOFFMAN MILL CO.

The holding of the court in the HOFFMAN MILL CO. CASE was reaffirmed in Windsor Reservoir & Canal Co. v. Hoffman Mill. Co. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(Colo.) 109 Pac. 425, which was an action for damages between the same parties, and arising out of the same facts.

It will be noted that in the HOFFMAN MILL CO. CASE the question also arose whether the proprietors of the mill could sell the use of the water to an upper appropriator as against the rights of the lower appropriator. It would seem that so far as the facts of this case are concerned that question can be of very little importance, since if the upper appropriator is entitled to use the water immediately upon the mill ceasing to use it, conceding that they cannot sell it, they can at least do indirectly what they are not permitted to do directly. That question would therefore seem to arise properly only in cases where the upper appropriator was junior in time to the lower appropriator. For another case on this question, see Cache La Poudre Reservoir Co. v. Water Supply & Storage Co. supra.

The question of periodical appropriation of water is discussed in a note in 46 L.R.A. 175.

For cases on right to store appropriated water, see note to Seven Lakes Reservoir Co. v. New Loveland & G. Irrig. & Land Co. 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 329.

Appropriation of waste water not in channel, see note to Burkart v. Meiberg, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1104. G. V.

court in the so-called Mill Race Case, where in the Cache La Poudre Reservoir Company was appellant, and the Water Supply & Storage Company et al. were appellees, reported for the first time in 25 Colo., at page 161, 46 L.R.A. 175, 71 Am. St. Rep. 131, 53 Pac. 331, and again in 27 Colo., at page 532, 62 Pac. 420. In its opinion, at the trial of this case, the court below, among other things, predicated its remarks upon its construction of what was determined by this court in those decisions, had this to say: "The Windsor Reservoir Company, with its head gate above the Hottel discharge, cannot ask to have this water distributed to it on its original reservoir priority, to the prejudice or injury of the Hoffman priority and the appropriation of this particular water. As against such appropriators of the Hottel mill appropriation below the mill discharge, no appropriator with head gate on the stream above can ask to have this water diverted in order of their original priority; on the contrary, the appropriators of this water below the Hottel mill race discharge may ask to have it diverted in order of their priority, as against those having earlier original priorities on the stream above the point of the mill discharge."

We waive a consideration of all other error assignments, and dispose of the case upon the fundamental point involved, it being the one upon which the trial court bases its decision. The judgment and decree here is founded solely upon the interpretation, by the court below, of the opinions in the Cache La Poudre Reservoir Co. v. Water Supply & Storage Co., supra, to the effect, as above indicated, that the 60 cubic feet of water appropriated by the Mason & Hottel mill race was a segregation thereof from the general waters of the stream, which must thereafter be allowed, whether used or not, or whether needed for use, by the Mason & Hottel mill race, to go down the river, subject to reappropriation only by those taking water from the stream at a point below the tail of the old mill race. That is, that this water was not subject, and could not be subject, to appropriation by those diverting water from a point above the old mill tailrace. No such holding was ever intended by this court, and no such thing was in fact held or decided in the opinions above referred to.

The point of diversion of water for a beneficial use is a mere incident, and is in no sense a controlling factor in effecting an appropriation. This is just as true of the waters involved in the Mason & Hottel mill race appropriation as it is generally of the waters of a natural stream. Whenever the waters constituting this particular appropriation were not in use, or were not needed for use, by the milling company, and were by it left in the stream, they were as subject to appropriation and use during such times, at any point upon the river, either above or below the tail of the old mill race, as were any of the other unused or unappropriated waters of the stream, and the one first in time to actually take and apply this water to a beneficial purpose, when not being used by the milling company, is the first in right, whether such an one has his point of diversion above the tail of the old mill race or below it. An analysis of those opinions will disclose that they announce no other or different doctrine than the foregoing. The vital and essential proposition there involved and decided, indeed the only one necessary to be, and the only one in fact, determined, a proposition fundamental in this case, is that the prior appropriator of water to a beneficial use is first in right. While it may be true that certain expressions made use of in those opinions, when standing alone, give some color of support to the contention that a modification of this principle has been announced, still when these expressions are taken and considered in connection with the peculiar facts of that particular case, as they must be, and with the opinions themselves as a whole, it is clear that there was no intention to modify, and that in fact there has been no modification of, this cardinal principle. If anything outside of the opinions themselves is needed to establish and show the fact that the construction here given to those opinions is correct, such helpful support is abundantly found in the opinion of this court in Windsor Reservoir & Canal Co. v. Lake Supply Ditch Co. 44 Colo. 214, 98 Pac. 729, where they received a construction precisely in conformity with the views here expressed, and exactly contrary to the construction given them by the trial court in that case, which construction of the trial court there was identical with the view adopted by the same court at the trial of this case. That interpretation, on the authority of the case last above referred to, may not be permitted to stand. The opinion of this court last above referred to is decisive of, and rules, the case at bar, and requires its reversal.

To the extent, both in time and volume, to which the Windsor Reservoir & Canal Company had, by diversion and application to a beneficial use, made a prior appropriation of the 60 cubic feet of water of the old mill race appropriation, when the same was not in use and was not needed for use thereunder, before the Hoffman Milling Company made its appropriation, the former company is entitled, as against the latter one, to continue to divert and use the same, as theretofore diverted and used. The question of the extent of this right is purely one of fact to be determined in a proper proceeding for that purpose.

Referring briefly to the question of the right of the owner of the Mason & Hottel mill race appropriation, which is discussed in the briefs, to sell the same to one diverting it above the tail of its mill race, which question is only incidentally involved here, as we view the matter, the court having decided the controversy upon the point above discussed, it is proper to say that, as against a vested right of a user and appropriator of this particular water, below the tailrace of the old mill appropriation, the owner of the Mason & Hottel mill race right cannot in any wise lawfully dispose of that right to another, to be applied to a new and different use, either above the tail of the mill race or at any other point on the stream, so as to adversely interfere with or injuriously affect the vested right of such other appropriator. In short, the relative rights to the use of this particular water depend upon, and must be governed by, the doctrine of prior beneficial use and appropriation thereof, both as to the volume of use and length of time for which use has been made of it, all parties being limited both in point of time of use and volume, by the facts of each particular case.

The judgment and decree is reversed, and the cause remanded to the court below for further proceeding, in conformity with the views here expressed.

Steele, Ch. J., and White, J., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied June 6, 1910.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

ALANSON BAKER, Appt.,
v.

INCORPORATED TOWN OF AKRON et al.

(— Iowa, —, 122 N. W. 926.)

Water — diversion — liability of municipality.

1. A municipal corporation cannot, in grading and guttering streets, carry surface water out of its natural watershed, and cast it in a body on land outside its limits, without liability for the injury thereby caused.

2. That a season in which injury is done Same — unusual moisture. to land outside the limits of a municipality, by surface water turned by it out of its course, and cast upon such land, was un- 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

usually wet, does not absolve the municipality from liability for the injury.

Joint wrongdoers — liability — inability to determine responsibility.

3. That it may be difficult to determine what portion of the injury to land by surface water was due to the act of a municipality, and what to another cause, does not defeat an action against the municipality for its share of the damage.

(October 26, 1909.)

Note. — Liability of municipal corporation for changing course of drainage, to injury of private property.

This note is limited strictly to those cases passing on the question whether a municipal corporation may, by the grading and guttering of streets, or otherwise, carry surface water out of its natural watershed, or gather it from a large extent of territory, and cast it in a body on private property. The note is therefore not concerned with the question whether a town or city is liable merely because, in the construction or grading of a street or highway, surface water is incidentally cast to a greater degree upon adjoining land.

The question of liability of a municipal corporation for damming back surface water by grading of street is discussed in a note to Hume v. Des Moines, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 126.

Since the question here presented has heretofore been discussed in notes to Johnson v. White, 65 L.R.A. 256, and Roe v. Howard County, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 831, the cases gathered here are only those supplementary thereto.

As will be observed from the above note, the authorities are practically uniform in holding that a municipal corporation has no right to collect surface water, and carry it out of its natural course, and cast it in a body on adjoining property, or, as it has been expressed, carry it to the vicinity of an owner's premises without furnishing a sufficient outlet therefor.

Recent cases so holding are: Valparaíso v. Spaeth, 166 Ind. 14, 76 N. E. 514, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1021, affirming in this respect 74 N. E. 518; Valparaíso v. Kyes, 30 Ind. App. 447, 66 N. E. 175; Lewis v. Springfield, 142 Mo. App. 84, 125 S. W. 824; Sandy v. St. Joseph, 142 Mo. App. 330, 126 S. W. 989; Kehoe v. Rutherford, 74 N. J. L. 659, 122 Am. St. Rep. 411, 65 Atl. 1047; Houston v. Richardson & South-erland, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 147, 94 S. W. 454; McGarvey v. Strathroy, 10 Ont. App. Rep. 631; Derinzy v. Ottawa, 15 Ont. App. Rep. 712; Smith v. Eldon Twp. 9 Ont. Week. Rep. 963.

This was also recognized in Cromer v. Logansport, 38 Ind. App. 661, 78 N. E. 1045; Garrett v. Winterich, 44 Ind. App. 322, 87 N. E. 161, 88 N. E. 308.

To the same effect is Miles v. Brooklyn, 98 App. Div. 195, 90 N. Y. Supp. 702, where,

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the District Court for Plymouth County dismissing the petition in an action brought to recover damages caused by the alleged unlawful flooding of plaintiff's lands, and to restrain further flooding thereof. Reversed.

Statement by Deemer, J.:

Action to recover damages for the flooding of plaintiff's land by the defendants city and the railway company, and for an injunction to restrain the continuance of the nuisance. The case was tried to the court as in equity, and at the conclusion of plaintiff's testimony, the trial court sustained a motion directing a decree for the railway company, from which no appeal has been taken. The case proceeded as against the other defendants, resulting in a decree dismissing plaintiff's petition, and he appeals.

Messrs. McDuffie & Keenan, for appellant:

As the street improvements complained of were unlawfully and negligently made by defendants, and conveyed water over a portion of plaintiff's premises, which, without such improvements, would never have flowed upon his land, and as such improvements cast water upon plaintiff's land in a different manner and in greater quantities than would naturally have flowed upon it, to plaintiff's damage the relief prayed in the petition should have been granted.

Livingston v. McDonald, 21 Iowa, 160, 89 Am. Dec. 563; Vannest v. Fleming, 79 Iowa, 641, 8 L.R.A. 277, 18 Am. St. Rep. 387, 44

because of the construction of a catch-basin and the simultaneous elevation of the street grade, adjoining property was flooded by collected surface water.

In McAdams v. McCook, 71 Neb. 789, 99 N. W. 656, a city was held liable where it appeared that, because of its failure to keep certain drains in repair, water gathered from a large part of the city, during a severe storm, was caused to flow against and injure adjoining property.

In Elser v. Gross Point, 223 Ill. 230, 114 Am. St. Rep. 326, 79 N. E. 27, it was held that an injunction would lie to prevent a municipal corporation from enlarging a culvert, the effect of which would be the draining of a swamp, and the casting of the water thereof upon land through which it had not theretofore flowed.

In Daley v. Watertown, 192 Mass. 116, 78 N. E. 143, a municipal corporation was held liable for a nuisance, where, after gaining permission from a private landowner for the digging of a ditch, it turned surface water through it into a shallow pond, causing such pond to overflow and flood adjoining property.

So, in Fitzgerald v. Sharon, 143 Iowa, 730, 121 N. W. 523, where water and filth gathered from private drains was caused to overflow adjoining property, the municipality was held liable for maintaining a nuisance. In this case it appeared that the mayor and councilman and other officers of the city had entered upon plaintiff's premises, and, against his wishes and without legal consent, extended the drain several feet. The court took occasion to say that this entry was a particularly lawless and unwarranted act, which could not be justified in any way, and which created liability somewhere.

Although a city must provide adequate means for the escape of surface water which has been gathered together, and brought to a place where it would not otherwise have flowed, it is not liable for the failure of ditches, culverts, and outlets to carry the waters that are the result of a cloud-burst or other rain storm of unprecedented and extraordinary character. Valparaiso v. Spaeth, supra.

And where a park was improved without negligence, and in accordance with an adopted plan, and surface water was thereby caused to flow onto a street and thence onto adjoining property, the city is not liable and is under no obligation to provide sewers with sufficient capacity to carry off the waters, to one who became the tenant of such property after the improvement was completed. Schweriner v. Philadelphia, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 128.

That a city may, by construction and grading of streets, so change the flow of surface water as to bring down upon a lot owner from new watersheds, water which would not otherwise have taken that course or reached his lot, was recognized in Peck v. Baraboo, 141 Wis. 48, 122 N. W. 740. The above case seemingly recognizes a distinction between cases such as itself and those where surface water was allowed to escape from a negligently defective sewer, after the municipal corporation had taken water into the sewer and assumed the carrying of it to the place of discharge.

It will be noted that in BAKER v. AKEON considerable stress was laid upon the fact that the property upon which the surface water was cast was outside the limits of the town. No other recent case has been found which has attempted to make this distinction. It may be observed here that, in view of the statement above made, that the cases—the vast majority of which no doubt concern property within the limits of the municipal corporation—are practically uniform in holding that a city cannot cast surface water gathered from other watersheds on private property, the distinction in most jurisdictions would not seem to be of much importance, since, if city property is not compelled to carry such a burden, there is certainly no less reason for holding that property outside the limits cannot be compelled to receive water in a body which the municipal corporation, by the grading and guttering of streets, has gathered from other sources. G. V.

N. W. 906; Dorr v. Simerson, 73 Iowa, 91, 34 N. W. 752; Wharton v. Stevens, 84 Iowa, 107, 15 L.R.A. 630, 35 Am. St. Rep. 296, 50 N. W. 562; Collins v. Keokuk, 91 Iowa, 293, 59 N. W. 200; Williamson v. Oleson, 91 Iowa, 290, 59 N. W. 267; Stinson v. Fishel, 93 Iowa, 656, 61 N. W. 1063; Cedar Falls v. Hansen, 104 Iowa, 189, 65 Am. St. Rep. 439, 73 N. W. 585; Holmes v. Calhoun County, 97 Iowa, 360, 66 N. W. 145; Geneser v. Healy, 124 Iowa, 310, 100 N. W. 66; Schofield v. Cooper, 126 Iowa, 334, 102 N. W. 110; Brown v. Armstrong, 127 Iowa, 175, 102 N. W. 1047; Matteson v. Tucker, 131 Iowa, 511, 107 N. W. 600; Jones v. Stover, 131 Iowa, 119, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 154, 108 N. W. 112; Hull v. Harker, 130 Iowa, 190, 106 N. W. 629.

It was the duty of the defendants in making its street improvement, to provide water ways sufficient to carry away, without damage to plaintiff, the water that might reasonably be expected to come upon its streets.

Damour v. Lyons City, 45 Iowa, 276; Powers v. Council Bluffs, 50 Iowa, 197.

Messrs. Zink & Roseberry and Sammis & Bradley for appellees.

Deemer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellees are the town of Akron and its mayor and city council. Plaintiff is the owner of a large tract of bottom land lying south and west of the limits of the town, and he claims that the town has so graded and guttered its streets as to collect and discharge the surface water falling upon the lots and lands within its limits onto plaintiff's lands, in a manner other and different from the way in which it passed off prior to the time the grading and guttering was done, to his great damage. The defendant denies that it has collected or is discharging the surface water from its natural course; that, in any event, it had the right to grade its streets, and turn surface water from its natural course; that it was guilty of no negligence in improving, guttering, and grading its streets; that it had the right to fight surface water, treating it as a common enemy; that whatever damage plaintiff has suffered was due to extraordinary floods; and that in no event is the town liable, for the reason that it was given full power to grade and gutter its streets.

Plaintiff's land is considerably lower than the land within the corporate limits of the town, and must, of course, bear its proper servitude. But it is not true, as counsel contend, that the town had the right to collect surface water originally flowing in another direction, and to discharge the same 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

upon plaintiff's land, or in such a manner as that it caused an overflow of plaintiff's land, to his damage. Plaintiff's property is not within the limits of the town, and he was not amenable to the order and direction of the city council. He could not be compelled to bring his property to any grade established by the town council. In so far as the town is concerned, he had the same rights against it as if it were a natural person who was interfering with his rights and privileges. Collins v. Keokuk, 91 Iowa, 293, 59 N. W. 200. Had his property been within the town limits, a different question would arise, and the authorities cited for defendant would be applicable. In its relations to landowners outside the town limits, the town, had no greater rights than any citizen or private corporation. In grading and guttering its streets, it, so far as outsiders were concerned, acted in a proprietary capacity, and not as an instrumentality of government, and nowhere in our statutes is it given the right to collect and discharge surface water upon an adjoining property in a manner different from the way in which nature intended or provided. Noonan v. Albany, 79 N. Y. 470, 35 Am. Rep. 540. In this case Andrews, J., speaking for the court, said: "A municipal corporation has no greater right than an individual to collect the surface water from its lands or streets into an artificial channel, and discharge it upon the lands of another; nor has it any immunity from legal responsibility for creating or maintaining nuisances. Weet v. Brockport, 16 N. Y. 172, note; Byrnes v. Cohoes, 67 N. Y. 204; Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 208; Atty. Gen. v. Leeds, L. R. 5 Ch. 583." See also Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 285, 72 Am. Dec. 302; Maximilian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468; Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 3 Am. Rep. 485; O'Brien v. St. Paul, 25 Minn. 331, 33 Am. Rep. 470.

Assuming, then, that the defendant town occupies no different relation to plaintiff than if it had been a private corporation or an individual, we look to the law of this state with reference to the discharge and diversion of surface waters. We have adopted what is known as the civil-law rule in the leading case of Livingston v. McDonald, 21 Iowa, 160, 89 Am. Dec. 563. The substance of that rule is that the owner of higher land has no right, even in the course of the use and improvement of his property, to collect the surface water upon his own lands into a drain or ditch, increased in quantity or in a manner different from the natural flow upon the lower lands of another, to the injury of such lands. This case has been followed time after time, and was reaffirmed as late as the year 1906. See Matteson v. Tucker, 131 Iowa, 511, 107 N. W. 600. The following cases also announce the same doctrine: Hull v. Harker, 130 Iowa, 190, 106 N. W. 629; Wharton v. Stevens, 84 Iowa, 107, 15 L.R.A. 630, 35 Am. St. Rep. 296, 50 N. W. 562; Brown v. Armstrong, 127 Iowa, 175, 102 N. W. 1047; Schofield v. Cooper, 126 Iowa, 334, 102 N. W. 110; Holmes v. Calhoun County, 97 Iowa, 360, 66 N. W. 145; Cedar Falls v. Hansen, 104 Iowa, 189, 65 Am. St. Rep. 439, 73 N. W. 585; Collins v. Keokuk, supra. Now the evidence shows, without substantial dispute, that before the town graded and guttered its streets, there was a natural watershed running from near the southeast corner of town to the northwest corner; that the water east and south of this watershed ran through a depression or "swale" north and west to near the northwest corner of the town, where it emptied into the Big Sioux river a short distance from the railway track of the defendant railway company. It also appears without serious dispute that when the defendant graded and guttered its streets, it cut through this watershed, and caused water which fell upon the east part of the town, and which came down from the hills to the east, which, had it followed its natural course, would have gone north and west into the Big Sioux river, to flow east until it struck the embankment of the railway company running west of south, whence it ran along, and in places over, the embankment, and many times during the past five years flooded plaintiff's land, to his damage. There can be no doubt whatever that defendant caused water to run from the east along what are known as Main, Iowa, and Sargent streets, westward and down onto plaintiff's land, which did not originally go in that direction, but which went north and west and into the Big Sioux river. Defendant's own surveys, blueprints, and profiles establish these facts. Some of the water went through a culvert in the railway embankment, known as No. 511, down onto plaintiff's highland, and in times of high water it ran over the railway embankment and upon plaintiff's land. There is testimony to the effect that this increased the flow of water, and that this increased flow damaged plaintiff's lands and crops for several consecutive seasons.

Appellees contend, however, that, as they were not negligent in improving the streets, no recovery can be had. As the action is not bottomed upon negligence, this contention is without merit.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

They also insist that the damage was due to cloud-bursts and extraordinary floods. No doubt part of it was, but there was testimony that damages were suffered from ordinary rainfall. They also say that during the past five years the seasons have been unusually wet; but this, of course, constitutes no defense. Again, it is said that there is no testimony of any appreciable increase in the flow of water; but this too is not sustained by the record.

Again, it is asserted that there is no showing as to how much of plaintiff's damage was due to the diversion of the surface water by defendant, and how much to the overflow of a ditch on the south side of the town. It is true, perhaps, that the testimony as to this point is not definite, but, as it appears without serious conflict that the gutters and ditches increased the flow on plaintiff's land, defendant is responsible for its share of that increase, and the difficulty in arriving at its exact proportion of the damage is no reason for defeating plaintiff's action. Defendant is responsible for the damage it did, no matter what other causes contributed to the result.

The main proposition relied upon by appellee, however, is one of law, and that is, as applied to this case, the ordinary rules as to surface water do not obtain. We have seen that this is a misapprehension, and that the case is governed by these general rules. The cases cited by appellee from this state all have reference to the rights of land or lot owners within the limits of the municipal corporation. As to them, we have said in one or two cases the ordinary rules as to surface water do not apply. It will be found, returning to these cases, that the reasons given for these holdings were bottomed upon the fact that the property owner had certain duties to perform, because of the location of his property within the city or town limits.

As appellees' main premise is fallacious, the conclusion is manifestly unsound.

We shall not undertake on the appeal to fix the amount of plaintiff's damage. The case was not tried with any great degree of care on this issue, for the evident reason that defendants were proceeding on the theory of nonliability. For this reason, we shall remand the case for a retrial upon the issues as to the amount of damages to which plaintiff is entitled, and for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed and remanded.

Petition for rehearing denied.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FOURTH CIRCUIT.

NATHAN B. FRANK, Bankrupt., Appt.,
v.

MICHIGAN PAPER COMPANY et al.

(103 C. C. A. 268, 179 Fed. 776.)

Bankruptcy — false representation of partner — effect.

A false representation by one member of a partnership for the purpose of securing credit, of which the copartner is ignorant, will not prevent the latter from securing a discharge upon his individual petition therefor, under the statute requiring the granting of the discharge unless applicant obtained property on credit from any person upon a materially false statement made for that purpose, although it may prevent the discharge from operating as a release from liability for the credit so falsely obtained, under the section of the statute providing that the discharge shall release the bankrupt from all debts except such as are liabilities for obtaining property by false representations.

(July 12, 1910.)

APPEAL by Nathan B. Frank, bankrupt, from an order of the District Court of the United States for the District of Maryland denying his application for discharge on objections by the Michigan Paper Company et al. Reversed.

Statement by Keller, District Judge:

On the 21st day of May, 1908, the firm of McDonald & Frank, at the time composed

Note. — Right of bankrupt to discharge as affected by act of partner or agent.

A note on this question was appended to Hardie v. Swofford Bros. Dry Goods Co. 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 785, and only the additional cases found will be herein considered.

This question is governed by § 14b of the bankruptcy act, which provides, among other things, that the court may grant an application for discharge in bankruptcy unless the applicant has (2), with intent to conceal his financial condition, destroyed, concealed, or failed to keep books of account or records from which such condition might be ascertained; or (3) obtained money or property on credit upon a materially false statement in writing made by him for the purpose of obtaining credit; or (4) transferred, removed, destroyed, or concealed, or permitted to be removed, etc., any of his property, with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors. It will be noticed that intent is expressly made the criterion in clause 2.

A partner whose application for a discharge in bankruptcy is contested under this clause has the burden of establishing his innocence, where it is shown that the firm books were improperly kept, with the intent, upon the part of his copartner, to conceal the firm's financial condition. Re Schachter, 170 Fed. 683, 22 Am. Bankr. Rep. 389 (D. C. S. D. N. Y.); Re Currie, 23 Am. Bankr. Rep. 539 (Referee E. D. Mich.).

In Gilpin v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1023, 91 C. C. A. 445, 165 Fed. 607, it was held that a statement by the bookkeeper of the applicant for discharge, prepared from books not fully posted, which was believed to be approximately true, but which proved to be untrue, would not prevent a discharge. This followed from the view taken by the court that a false statement which prevented a discharge must be intentionally or knowingly untrue. (Upon that point, see opinion in this case, and note thereto, in 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1023.)
30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Adopting the same view, the court, in Firestone v. Harvey, 98 C. C. A. 420, 174 Fed. 574, 23 Am. Bankr. Rep. 468 (sixth circuit), held that the wilfulness necessary to prevent a discharge of the bankrupt under § 14b (3) was not shown by proof that, in pursuance of a custom or arrangement between the bankrupt, a private banker, and another bank whereby one would draw a draft in favor of the other for the amount of their daily balance, the assistant cashier of the bankrupt drew drafts after the latter's insolvency, and with knowledge that the drawee was not in funds, where it appeared that those particular drafts were drawn without the bankrupt's knowledge or consent, although it also appeared that the bankrupt had previously drawn drafts for the payment of daily balances due from him, at times when the drawees were not in funds, but that they had always been met.

See also W. S. Peck Co. v. Lowenbein, 101 C. C. A. 498, 178 Fed. 178, 24 Am. Bankr. Rep. 138 (fourth circuit), which is sufficiently set out in FRANK v. MICHIGAN PAPER Co.

Clause 4 expressly makes intent an element. Under this clause it has been held that where a partner has so concealed assets that he is not entitled to a discharge in bankruptcy, his act will not alone operate to disentitle his copartner to a discharge, even though the latter may remain civilly liable for the consequences wrought by the fraud. Re Schachter, 170 Fed. 683, 22 Am. Bankr. Rep. 389 (D. C. S. D. N. Y.).

Whether fraud in preventing the collection of a claim excepts it from a discharge in bankruptcy is considered in Jenkins v. Pilcher, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 423, and the note thereto appended.

See the note to American Steel & Wire Co. v. Coover, post, —, on the effect of adjudication of bankruptcy of member of firm on rights of creditors of firm, against firm property; and see the references therein to other notes involving partners and partnerships in bankruptcy.

T. A. W.

of Walter A. McDonald and Nathan B. Frank, was adjudicated an involuntary bankrupt. Subsequently, on the 25th day of November, 1908, said Nathan B. Frank filed his individual voluntary petition in bankruptcy, and on the same day was adjudicated a bankrupt. On January 2, 1909, he filed his petition praying for a discharge, and on January 18, 1909, the Michigan Paper Company and the Kalamazoo Paper Company, two corporation creditors of the firm of McDonald & Frank, filed their separate specifications of objection to the discharge of the bankrupt, Nathan B. Frank, setting forth that on September 30, 1907, the bankrupt firm of McDonald & Frank (then McDonald, Frank & McDowell), through McDonald, one of its members, wrote unto Elmer H. Haas, of New York, selling agent of both of said creditors, a letter in which said firm set forth that their capital amounted to the sum of $5,000, whereas said firm did not have the sum of $5,000 as their capital, but only had in their business about $2,500, as capital, and that the said creditors, upon said statement, "sold unto said firm of McDonald & Frank, of which said Nathan B. Frank was a member, large quantities of paper on credit, and that the said bankrupt firm, as aforesaid, have obtained the said property on credit upon a false statement in writing." To these specifications the bankrupt interposed his demurrer, and, the same being overruled, filed his answer, identical in form to the several specifications of objection filed by the corporate creditors. Upon the hearing before the district court, no evidence was introduced, but, in lieu thereof, the following agreed statement of facts was presented to the court:

"It is hereby agreed by Edward M. Hammond, attorney for the Kalamazoo Paper Company and the Michigan Paper Company, and E. Allan Sauerwein, Jr., attorney for the bankrupt, that the matters and facts upon which the specifications of the said paper companies, against the discharge in bankruptcy of the said bankrupt, shall be heard, are as follows:

That Walter McDonald and Robert McDowell were engaged in the paper jobbing business prior to the month of April, 1907, and during said month the bankrupt, Nathan B. Frank, was invited to and did become a partner, the firm name then being changed to McDonald, Frank, & McDowell; that McDonald invested two hundred and fifty dollars ($250) in cash, and gave his note for a thousand; McDowell invested two hundred and fifty dollars ($250) in cash, and gave his note for a thousand; and Frank invested twenty-five hundred dollars ($2,500) in cash,—all of which constituted the capital of the firm; that on the 20th day of September, 1907, the said McDonald wrote to one Elmer H. Haas, at New York, the selling agent of the said paper companies, the following letter:

We have your favor of the 19th, and thank you for the same. In regard to our responsibility, would say that our capital amounts to $5,000; as you know we are all young men, doing all our own work together, with small expenses so far as warehouse is concerned. We have dealt with mills only whom writer knows very well, and no one has refused to give us a good line of credit. For instance, we have been buying right along from P. H. Glatfelter in the way of book paper. We have discounted every month, and now owe them about $2,000. We would rather you not to write Glatfelter, however, because we don't want him to know whom else we are buying book paper from, but we would refer you to N. Frank & Sons, No. 1402 Mullikin St., and Hubbs & Corning Company, both of Baltimore, and the Lee Paper Company of Vicksburg, Michigan. We have bought some little from Kalamazoo, you know, whom we have paid promptly. We also inclose herewith some letters which speak for themselves.

Now, while our capital is small, as stated above, our expenses are small, and we are going along carefully, not overstepping the mark. Of course, there may be times when we will have to ask some of our mills for a little time, but thus far we have been able to discount. Would further state that we are not selling anybody but those who discount and pay their bills promptly. We are getting a very good percentage of the business in Baltimore, and some little out of town business. Altogether, we feel very much encouraged, and confidently believe that your mill will make no mistake in placing their paper with us. Kindly return the inclosed letters, and let us hear from you by an early mail. Thanking you for past favors, we are,

Yours truly,

McDonald, Frank, & McDowell,

By McDonald.

That said letter was written by the said McDonald for the purpose of opening an account with the said paper companies, and that the firm did thereafter, by virtue of said letter, obtain goods from them to the amount of $——, upon which credit payments of $—— were made; that the said McDonald had been engaged for some time in the paper business, and attended to the active management of the same for the firm and particularly to the purchasing of stock; that the said McDowell was the bookkeeper for the said firm, and that the said Frank, who, at the time of the formation of the said partnership, was not twenty-one years of age, had no knowledge of the business, and, during the existence of the partnership, he attended solely and only to the selling of goods; that said Frank, during the existence of the partnership, undertook to buy out said McDowell's interest for $250, but, because he could not get his note discounted at his bank, he gave his note to the firm, who indorsed it, and it was then discounted to Mr. Frank's father. The firm then assumed the purchase of the interest. After bankruptcy Mr. Frank's father paid the note; that said Frank became twenty-one years of age on the — day of —; that the said Frank knew nothing whatever of the writing of the said letter at the time it was written, nor at any time thereafter, until the firm was thrown into involuntary bankruptcy; that he did not know at any time prior to said bankruptcy of any statements whatsoever having been made to the said paper companies for the purpose of inducing a line of credit; nor did he know what was the inducing cause of the extension of credit by the said paper companies; nor did he ever wittingly derive any benefit from any credit so wrongfully obtained.

Edward M. Hammond,
Atty. for Michigan Paper Company and Kalamazoo Paper Company.
E. Allan Sauerwein, Jr.,
Attorney for Bankrupt.

Argued before Goff and Pritchard, Circuit Judges, and Keller, District Judge.

Mr. E. Allan Sauerwein, Jr., for appellant:

The discharge of the bankrupt should not be refused because the partner of the bankrupt, without his prior knowledge or his subsequent ratification, obtained from the firm a line of credit upon materially false statements.

Remington, Bankr. §§ 2467, 2562, 2563, 2567; Re Dresser, 13 Am. Bankr. Rep. 620; Neal v. Clark (Neal v. Scruggs) 95 U. S. 704, 24 L. ed. 586; Botts v. Hammond, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 775.

The right to a discharge is distinct from the effects of the discharge.

Re McCarty, 7 Am. Bankr. Rep. 40; Re Marshall Paper Co. 4 Am. Bankr. Rep. 468.

Mr. Edward M. Hammond, for appellees:

Where, in the regular course of a partnership business, one partner makes a materially false statement in writing, upon the faith of which property is obtained upon credit, the fraud thus committed may be interposed as a bar to the discharge of a partner who did not participate in the wrongful act, and had no knowledge thereof.

Re Hardie, 16 Am. Bankr. Rep. 313, 143 Fed. 607; Loveland, Bankr. 3d ed. 809, § 280a; Re Goodhile, 130 Fed. 782, 12 Am. Bankr. Rep. 380.

Keller, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

Section 14b of the bankruptcy act (act July 1, 1898, chap. 541, 30 Stat. at L. 550, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3427), as amended in 1903 (act Feb. 5, 1903, chap. 487, § 4, 32 Stat. at L. 797, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1909, p. 1310), provides that upon the bankrupt's application for a discharge, the judge shall "investigate the merits of the application, and discharge the applicant unless he has . . . (3) obtained property on credit from any person upon a materially false statement in writing made to such person for the purpose of obtaining such property on credit. . . ."

Section 17, as amended in 1903, provides that a discharge in bankruptcy "shall release a bankrupt from all his provable debts except such as . . . (2) are liabilities for obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations. . . ."

The only question to be decided here is whether the action of McDonald in making the statement of September 30, 1907, can be successfully urged to prevent the granting of a discharge to Frank, upon proceedings growing out of his individual voluntary petition in bankruptcy. In this connection it becomes important to distinguish between the right to a discharge and the effect of a discharge in bankruptcy. With regard to the latter, we think it clear from the language quoted from § 17 of the present bankruptcy act, as amended in 1903, that a false representation by one partner, by means of which property was obtained by the partnership, will in law be imputed to the other partners, to the extent of holding them civilly liable for the debt, and their discharge in bankruptcy will not discharge their liability as to such debt. Strang v. Bradner, 114 U. S. 555, 29 L. ed. 248, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1038; Schroeder v. Frey, 60 Hun, 58, 14 N. Y. Supp. 71; Collier, Bankr. 6th ed. p. 225. As applied to partnership debts, these questions ought to be considered in connection with the fact that under the present bankruptcy act a partnership is a "legal entity;" consequently a materially false statement made in writing by one of the partners (without the knowledge of the others), for the purpose of obtaining credit on behalf of the partnership, and by means of which such credit is obtained, is (1) the act of the individual partner making it, and (2) the act of the legal entity called the "partnership," and hence both the partner making such statement and the legal entity called the "partnership" are chargeable with having done one of the acts, the doing of which will, upon objection being properly made, prevent the granting of a discharge, under § 14b, bankruptcy act 1898, as amended in 1903; and it follows that any "party in interest" can successfully oppose the discharge of the acting partner and of the partnership.

Under the existing statute the question of what will bar a discharge has now been passed upon by at least three different circuit courts of appeals, and all of these decisions are in substantial harmony in holding that the bar to a discharge by reason of a false statement in writing is confined to such person or persons as actually made such statement with the intention to deceive, and to the partnership entity of which such person was a member.

In Hardie v. Swafford Bros. Dry Goods Co. 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 785, 91 C. C. A. 426, 165 Fed. 588, the circuit court of appeals for the fifth circuit (Shelby, circuit judge, dissenting), reversing the district court for the western district of Texas (143 Fed. 607), in a case in every way similar to the one at bar, held that a materially false statement in writing made by a partner in the ordinary course of business of the partnership, for the purpose of obtaining goods on credit, and by means of which they were so obtained by the firm, is not ground for refusing a discharge in bankruptcy, under bankruptcy act July 1, 1898, chap. 541, § 14b, c. 3, 30 Stat. at L. 550, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3427, as amended by act Feb. 5, 1903, chap. 487, 32 Stat. at L. 797, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1907, p. 1026, to another partner who did not participate in the wrongful act, and had no knowledge of it.

In W. S. Peck Co. v. Lowenbein, decided February 21, 1910, by this court (101 C. C. A. 498, 178 Fed. 178), it appeared that on September 14, 1907, Lowenbein, a member of the firm of Owens & Lowenbein, addressed a letter to W. S. Peck & Company, Baltimore, Maryland, which letter contained a statement of the financial condition of the firm of Owens & Lowenbein; that said statement was based almost entirely upon information derived by Lowenbein from Owens in the preparation of it; that matters in the statement other than those furnished by Owens were not misleading, being, in the main, true. The court affirmed the judgment of the court below, refusing a discharge to Owens, and granting that to Lowenbein, saying: "It is the evident purpose of the bankruptcy act to protect that unfortunate class of debtors who are unable to pay their debts, by giving them a discharge, thus affording them an opportunity to engage in business again, while, on the other hand, it is manifestly intended to deny a discharge to those whose conduct has been such as to show that they obtained credit by false statements calculated and intended to deceive and thereby defraud their creditors. Construing the act with these ends in view, it would be manifestly unjust to deny a discharge to a debtor, when it appears, as it does in this instance, that the statement which he made was not actuated by any fraudulent purpose. This finding of fact has been approved by the learned judge who heard the case below, and is within itself conclusive in so far as the question involved in this controversy is concerned."

In Gilpin v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1023, 91 C. C. A. 445, 165 Fed. 607, the bankrupt, upon the request of a bank from which he had asked an accommodation, for a financial statement, signed a statement form in blank, and delivered the same to his bookkeeper, requesting him to make an exact statement of his condition, for the bank, to which the bookkeeper replied that he could not (the posting of his books being in arrear), but that he would make an approximate statement and send it to the bank. The statement was made by the bookkeeper, marked "approximate," and sent to the bank, and upon the faith of this statement the bank extended credit. The referee found that, although the falsity of the statement sent to the bank was proved, the fact that the bankrupt knew it to be false, or did not know it to be true, was not proved, and said in his report: "There is no evidence to support the contention that the bankrupt knew or had any reason to believe that the statement sent to the bank by the bookkeeper was false, or that the bankrupt intended in any way to deceive the bank."

Upon these facts the circuit court of appeals for the third circuit, in an opinion by Gray, circuit judge, held that the word "false," as used in § 14b of the bankruptcy act, as amended by act February 5, 1903, which makes it a ground for denying a discharge to a bankrupt that he has obtained property on credit from any person upon a materially false statement in writing made to such person for the purpose of obtaining such property on credit, means more than merely erroneous or untrue, being used in its primary legal sense as importing an intention to deceive, and such a statement, in order to constitute a bar to a discharge, must have been knowingly and intentionally untrue.

It must be manifest that the intent to deceive can never be imputed to one who not only takes no part in making the written statement, but, as in the case at bar, knows nothing of it. We believe that the view taken by the circuit court of appeals for the third circuit, of the meaning of the word "false," as used in this section, is the correct one, and the decision above referred to is in entire harmony with the Lowenbein Case decided by this court.

Taking the view that the right to a discharge is determined by the good faith of the bankrupt, and that the effect of such discharge is to be determined in accordance with a proper recognition of his civil liability for the acts of partners and other agents, we come to the conclusion that the court below erred in refusing to grant a discharge to the bankrupt.

The order of the District Court for the District of Maryland, made and entered on the 22d day of January, 1910, sustaining the specifications of objection to the discharge of the appellant, and refusing to grant him a discharge, is therefore reversed, with costs, and the cause is remanded to the District Court for further proceedings herein not inconsistent with this opinion.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

FRANK PENAS, by Guardian ad Litem, Appt.,
v.

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE, & ST. PAUL RAILWAY COMPANY et al., Respts.

(— Minn. —, 127 N. W. 926.)

Master — liability for tort of servant — history.

1. In its early history, the law as to the liability of the master to third persons for the tort of his servant passed from holding the master absolutely liable, to holding him liable in case of particular command only. Later the liability was enlarged, and determined by general authority, express or implied, and was subsequently extended so as to result in the rule that the master is responsible for the tort of his servant, done in the scope of his authority, with the view to the furtherance of the master's business, and not for a purpose personal to himself, whether committed negligently or wilfully, and in excess of his authority, or contrary to his express instructions. The English courts now recognize a still larger responsibility in cases where the wrong complained of was not within the scope of the servant's authority, but was done in the course of employment. The American cases have correspondingly extended the master's liability, and have considered it, not only from the master's point of view, but also from that of the person injured, and have placed emphasis, not so much on authority, real or apparent, as upon the violation by the servant of the duty owed by the master to the person complaining.

Same — when liability attaches.

2. Liability may attach to the master under one or more of two different classes of circumstances; namely, first, by virtue of personal commission, singular or joint, or by consent before or after the wrong; and, second, by virtue of relationship subsisting between the master and the person injured, or because of creation, ownership, custody, or control of instrumentalities intrinsically or potentially dangerous, or where the master's conduct, his implements and premises and facilities for doing business, or the course of his business generally, or of dealing with the party complaining, have a natural tendency to create, or to determine the extent of, damages involved; or by estoppel.

Many reasons, often divorced from the resulting standard, concur in imposing liability on the master.

Same — basis of liability.

3. The master's responsibility in the first class of cases rests on personal culpability through participation or authority, including ratification. In the second class of cases it is largely independent of personal fault, and rests essentially on reasons of public policy, the principal ones of which are here referred to.

Same — authority — kinds.

4. The equivocation and uncertainty of the terminology of the subject is necessarily a prolific source of inconsistency in decision. "Authority" is used in the sense of (1) real or actual authority, express or naturally implied; (2) fictitious or imputed authority, or which (3) apparent authority is really one variety. "Scope of authority" and "course of employment," and their congeners, are often used indiscriminately and interchangeably, and sometimes as representing, respectively, the more restricted and the more enlarged, and usually the Note. — As to liability of master for malicious act of servant when master owes special duty to party injured, see note to Daniel v. Petersburg R. Co. 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 485.

As to liability of master for tort committed by servant in course of his employment, and with a view to the furtherance of his master's business, but contrary to the master's express instructions, see note to Barrett v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 416.

As to other aspects of the general subject of liability of a master to third persons for the torts of the servant, see Index to Notes, under topic, "Master and Servant."

most enlarged, criterion of liability of the master.

Same — liability for tort of servant — damages — necessity for.

5. The master's liability is conditioned on proof of damage consequent on the wrong committed by one who at the time is a servant of the master, and under such circumstances that liability is attached to the master under the criterion prevailing in the jurisdiction and appropriate to the circumstances involved.

Same — tests of liability.

6. Liability may attach under the test of authority, the test of motive and benefit, or the test of duty violated. No one rule of liability is the sole or invariable standard. Different specific torts, or the same tort committed under different circumstances, may involve the application of different principles.

Railroad — trespasser on train — injury — liability.

7. Plaintiff's minor, who was really, but not apparently, a trespasser, claimed to have been thrown from a moving train by defendant's brakeman and injured. It is held that defendant's liability was for the jury, under proper instructions from the court.

(September 9, 1910.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Ramsey County in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries for which defendants were alleged to be responsible. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Thomas C. Daggett, with Mr. D. J. Keefe, for appellant.

Messrs. F. W. Root and Nelson J. Wilcox, for respondents:

The tort, although done in the course of the brakeman's employment, with a view to the furtherance of the master's business, and not for a purpose personal to himself, was not within the scope of his actual authority, express or implied, and therefore the railway company is not liable.

Brevig v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 64 Minn. 174, 68 N. W. 401; 2 Elliott, Railroads, § 1255; Barrett v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 106 Minn. 57, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 416, 130 Am. St. Rep. 585, 117 N. W. 1047; Larson v. Fidelity Mut. Life Assn. 71 Minn. 106, 73 N. W. 711; Crandall v. Boutell, 95 Minn. 116, 103 N. W. 890, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 122; Merrill v. Coates, 101 Minn. 46, 111 N. W. 836; Ellegard v. Ackland, 43 Minn. 352, 45 N. W. 715; Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598, 107 N. W. 133; Soderlund v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 102 Minn. 242, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1193, 113 N. W. 449; Illinois C. R. Co. v. 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Martin, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 666, 110 S. W. 815; Wakefield v. Boston Coal Co. 197 Mass. 527, 83 N. E. 1116; Bassi v. Orth, 58 Misc. 372, 109 N. Y. Supp. 88; Waalder v. Great Northern R. Co. (S. D.) 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 297, 117 N. W. 140, 18 S. D. 420, 70 L.R.A. 733, 112 Am. St. Rep. 794, 100 N. W. 1097; Barmore v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 85 Miss. 426, 70 L.R.A. 629, 38 So. 210, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 594; Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168.

Jaggard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

For present purposes it will be assumed that plaintiff and appellant's minor was really, though not apparently, a trespasser on defendant's passenger train. Plaintiff's contention was that a brakeman struck or pushed him from one of its cars while in rapid motion, so that he fell to the ground in such a way as to have his right arm and part of his left hand severed. The jury found for defendants. This appeal was taken from the order of the trial court denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

I. This case involves a constantly recurring confusion in the law as to when a master is liable to third persons for the tort of his servant. That confusion is perhaps greater than in any other corresponding branch of our jurisprudence. The multiplication of authorities has not tended to clarify, but to obscure, the subject. Usually a decision on the subject consists of an imperfect collation of the more or less nearly related cases, without consideration of opposed opinions, and without inquiry into the status of the rule in history or in reason. One which contains even a bird's-eye view of the principles involved is a varissima avis. It has, indeed, become practically impossible to review all the decisions on the subject generally, and difficult even to refer to the opposed authorities on a particular point in issue.

The rules themselves originated from the law of master and servant and the law of principal and agent indiscriminately, at a time when torts as a general subject was practically unknown. In consequence their development has been largely, but not entirely, independent of many other necessarily related subjects. That evolution, however, has been in many respects radical. It is often ignored, and more often confused. Overruled cases and cases overruling them are constantly cited by eminent judges and writers as authority and reason for the overruled proposition itself, and almost as often for an inconsistent principle which has been repudiated times without number. In almost every state of the Union three or four stages of evolution may be found irreconcilably confounded. Current judicial language is a tessellation of the terminology of each of those stages.

It is impossible within the necessary limits of this opinion to formulate all pertinent considerations, or to discuss or even refer to any considerable portion of the authorities. At various times practically all the relevant decisions and discussions have been examined. It is feasible here to attempt to state only a small part of the results of that examination applicable to the facts here in issue.

II. This confusion has arisen primarily from failure to apprehend the historical development of the subject. It is elementary that the law as to when the master is liable to third persons for the tort of his servant has passed through many stages of development. These may conveniently be thus stated:

(1) The earliest theory recognized the absolute liability of the master. This survives in few cases only, as where the master is held to have insured safety.

(2) It then came to be recognized that the master was liable only in cases where he had given a particular command to his servant to commit the wrong complained of. This period is treated as beginning about the time of Edward I., 1300.

(3) During Lord Holt's time (about 1700) the rule was widened, so as to impose liability on the master for his servant's conduct in pursuance of general authority, express or implied. Blackstone recognized this as the criterion. His teaching, correct at the time, but inconsistent with the subsequent trend of decisions, has been followed, and is constantly to-day regarded as the law by both commentators and courts.

(4) In Lord Kenyon's time (1800 et circa), the master's responsibility was greatly enlarged, so as to give to implied authority a wide meaning, including cases within the "sweep" or "apparent scope" of authority, in order to embrace cases of authority, express or implied, and also cases of mistaken and excessive execution of authority. The master was held responsible, even if he had specifically forbidden the servant's conduct, and the servant had acted wilfully and maliciously. The essential criterion became whether the conduct was in furtherance of his employment and for the benefit of the master. (The superiority of American scholarship on this subject will be demonstrated by a comparison of Mr. Wigmore's invaluable article in 7 Harvard L. Rev. 383 et seq., with the English review of this history in Macdonell, Mast. & S. 263. The transition in thought between the third and fourth stages of development is well illustrated by contrasting the 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

familiar and leading cases of M'Manus v. Crickett [1800] 1 East, 106, and Limpus v. London General Omnibus Co. [1862] 1 Hurlst. & C. 529, 17 Eng. Rul. Cas. 258.

This rule has been subject to much criticism. It has been repudiated as a universal or invariable rule by practically all of the American courts. The English judges, absorbed in the contemplation of the law of master and servant and of principal and agent, appear to have been oblivious to the relation between the master and the person injured, necessarily involved, and to other considerations which in other but similar cases are judicially recognized as controlling in analogous situations. In particular they have overlooked the increasing stress the progress their own law has placed upon responsibility for the violation of duties recognized by law. Thus there are duties to third persons so far nondelegable as render the employer liable in damages for their breach, although the immediate cause of the harm complained of is an independent contractor, as in nuisance cases (and see Williams, J., in Pickard v. Smith, 10 C. B. N. S. 480; Penny v. Wimbledon Urban Dist. [1899] 2 Q. B. 72; Winslow v. Commercial Bldg. Co. [Iowa] 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 563, 124 N. W. 321), or a stranger (Illidge v. Goodwin, 5 Car. & P. 190, et sim.). Under analogous facts, not distinguishable on principle, the master has been exonerated from responsibility for the tort of his servant. On the same principle, a total stranger to a contract may recover damages in tort from the manufacturer or contractor who has been guilty of negligence in connection with the delivery of potentially dangerous instrumentalities to his servant. Parry v. Smith, L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 327. And see later cases collected and discussed in O'Brien v. American Bridge Co. 110 Minn. 304, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 125 N. W. 1012. The basis of the liability is a breach of duty. Clerk & L. Torts, Can. ed. p. 465. So, also, a master owes his servant duties which are nondelegable, on proof of the breach of which by another servant the master is liable, irrespective of the motive of the servant. Apart from its inconsistency with these and other lines of authorities, the English criterion fails in reason because it primarily rests on the state of mind of the servant. This is often in fact a remote, accidental, and collateral circumstance. 1 Thomp. Neg. 2d ed. 553, 554. The test is artificial and metaphysical. The saving grace of a sense of humor is obviously wanting. See e. g., Beven on Negligence, preface, and Macdonell, Mast. & S. 242.

It is usual, but not accurate, to regard the progress of the English law as having stopped at this point. Exactly what is the present English criterion is not clear, but (Mr. Beven to the contrary) it inclines to follow the reasoning of American courts, and to extend further protection to third persons. The difficulties in the situation have led the English courts to yield to "the modern tendency to extend the master's responsibility to acts naturally flowing from the employment thereof, not within its scope." Ruddiman v. Smith (1889) 60 L. T. N. S. 708 (where the servant negligently allowed water taps in a lavatory to run, plaintiff was damaged by the overflow, and the master was held liable. Cf. Stevens v. Woodward (1881) L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 318, where, under similar circumstances, the master was held not liable. The servant there was forbidden to use the lavatory. However, "the law is not so futile as to allow a master, by giving secret instructions to his servant, to discharge himself from liability." Willes, J., in Limpus v. London General Omnibus Co. supra. In Dyer v. Munday [1895] 1 Q. B. 742, master was held liable for the unauthorized wrong of his servant in executing a warrant. In Richards v. West Middlesex Waterworks Co. (1885) L. R. 15 Q. B. Div. 660, under similar circumstances, the master was exonerated. And see Engelhart v. Farrant [1897] 1 Q. B. 240, and McDowall v. Great Western R. Co. [1903] 2 K. B. 331.) In Citizens' Life Assur. Co. v. Brown [1904] A. C. 423, the court said: "He [the servant] had no actual authority, express or implied, to write libels, nor to do anything legally wrong; but it is not necessary that he should have had any such authority in order to render the company liable for his acts. The law upon this subject cannot be better expressed than it was by the acting chief justice in this case. He said: 'Although the particular act which gives the cause of action may not be authorized, still, if the act is done in the course of employment which is authorized, then the master is liable for the act of his servant.'" (Cf. Palmeri v. Manhattan R. Co. 133 N. Y. 261, 16 L.R.A. 136, 28 Am. St. Rep. 632, 30 N. E. 1001.) In view of these later decisions, the familiar controversy between Lord Erskine, who recognized the larger liability of the master (see Sleath v. Wilson, 9 Car. & P. 607, approved in Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. 468, 14 L. ed. 502), and Lord Cockburn, who restricted it (see Storey v. Ashton, L. R. 4 Q. B. 476, but cf. Venables v. Smith, L. R. 2 Q. B. Div. 279, at page 283), has a significance which is principally historical. Lord Erskine's ideas appear to have finally prevailed.

(5) In America, however, the subject has 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

undergone a radical change; and further, the master's responsibility has been distinctly increased. Mr. Beven has pointed out, in connection with Craker v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504: "Though of the same parentage as ours, American law has in late years been developing along divergent lines, and accepts principles widely applicable that are to us not only novel, but fundamentally unsound." Conspicuously the liability of a master to third persons for the torts of his servants has been materially extended. Beven, Neg. p. vii. Especially the earlier English cases, reasoned from the point of view of the master only. American judges have regarded the controversy both from the point of view of the master and of the person injured. They have placed emphasis, not so much upon the authority of the master, as upon the duty imposed upon him to the person injured, which has been violated by the servant. The term "scope of authority," and especially the term "course of employment," and their congeners, have been given a much narrower connotation and wider denotation than in most of the English cases at least. In many groups of cases, the master is held liable, although the act be disapproved of or clearly forbidden by the master (Grier, J., in 14 How. 486, 14 L. ed. 509; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Rahn, 132 U. S. 518, 33 L. ed. 440, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 175), although the motive of the servant was malicious, capricious, and not at all for the master's benefit or purpose, and even where the servant did wrong that he might embezzle for himself or merely injure the master's business. The English criterion is the formal result of a priori reasoning; the American is the natural product of a posteriori reasoning.

III. The confusion has been in part due to the failure to distinguish between the different ways in which liability for tort may attach. The person sought to be charged in an action ex delicto may be held responsible under one or more of two different classes of circumstances: (1) By virtue of personal commission, single or joint, or by consent before or after the wrong; i. e., by command or ratification. (2) By virtue of relationship, or because of the creation, ownership, custody, or control of instrumentalities intrinsically or potentially dangerous, or otherwise capable of doing harm, or because of conduct operating as estoppel. In the nature of things the elements of the second class often do not appear isolated. They usually run into each other, and occur blended in combinations in which they are more or less distinctly separable. The vital distinction is between the first and second class of cases.

See Amidon, J., in Helms v. Northern P. R. Co. (C. C.) 120 Fed. 389-395; Blackburn, J., in Mercey Docks and Harbour Board v. Gibbs, 11 H. L. Cas. 680, 715. And see Macdonell, Mast. & S. chap. 24.

In the first class of cases, liability attaches to the master's personal act, as where the master participates in the wrong of the servant, or is guilty of initial wrong, as in selecting or retaining an improper servant, or an insufficient number of servants, or in failing to establish rules for their government, and the like. It may also be that the master is held responsible because of his command or consent, given before or after the servant's tort, as where the master has expressly or impliedly authorized or ratified the tort. In such cases the wrong may be fairly said to be that of the master himself. In these cases he is usually culpable. The liability is founded on the doctrine of identification. The servant is the alter ego of the master. Qui facit per alium facit per se.

In the second class of cases, the tort is in no sense the master's personal wrong. He is not exonerated by proof of absence of personal culpability. He is merely held responsible in damages for reasons the law holds sufficient. His liability is "imposed" or "imputed." His authority to the servant to do the act complained of is, in strict logic, as wholly irrelevant as the fact that he may have expressly forbidden the servant so to act. His authority does not exist in fact. If the language of authority is used, the authority is purely fictitious. See Macdonell, Mast. & S. 247. It exists by construction, and this in cases wherein it is attributed, although the act complained of was not for the benefit of the master, but to his affirmative disadvantage. It is "imputed" or "quasi" (cf. Real and Quasi Contracts, 9 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 242, 243), as distinguished from "actual" authority.

(a) This is obvious in the familiar cases in which liability attaches by virtue of relationship existing between the person complaining and the person sought to be charged. A "principal who contracts to do a particular thing is liable for agent's torts which prevent the performance of the contract." Wharton, Agency, § 487. The relationship may be that of carrier and passenger. The carrier is liable for breach of his duty imposed, by common law, "of protecting each passenger from avoidable discomfort, from insults, disputes and personal violence." Singer Mfg. Co. v. Taylor, 150 Ala. 574, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 929, 124 Am. St. Rep. 90, 43 So. 210; Birmingham R. & Electric Co. v. Baird, 130 Ala. 334, 54 L.R.A. 752, 89 Am. St. Rep. 43, 30 So. 456; Craker v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. supra. 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Possible advantage to the master is entirely irrelevant. A street car conductor throws a dead hen at the motorman of another car, and strikes plaintiff, a passenger therein. The car company is liable. Hayne v. Union Street R. Co. 189 Mass. 551, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 605, 109 Am. St. Rep. 655, 76 N. E. 219. And see Savannah Electric Co. v. Wheeler, 128 Ga. 550, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1176, 58 S. E. 38, 66 Cent. L. J. 23, note; and compare with McCarthy v. Timmons, 178 Mass. 380, 86 Am. St. Rep. 490, 59 N. E. 1038, and Hayes v. Wilkins, 194 Mass. 223, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1033, 120 Am. St. Rep. 549, 80 N. E. 449. The relationship may be that of innkeeper and guest. The best discussion as to whether the innkeeper is liable for tort of servant, committed for his own purposes, will be found in the majority and dissenting opinions in Clancy v. Barker, 69 L.R.A. 653, 66 C. C. A. 469, 131 Fed. 161. And see 71 Neb. 83, 69 L.R.A. 642, 115 Am. St. Rep. 559, 98 N. W. 441, 103 N. W. 446, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 682. The relationship may be vendor and vendee. In Stranahan Bros. Catering Co. v. Coit, 55 Ohio St. 398, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 506, 45 N. E. 634, the master, the vendor, was held liable to his vendee for the act of his servant, done with intent to injure the master's business, in adulterating milk, contrary to statute. The relationship may be that subsisting between the proprietor of a place of amusement and a patron who has paid admission. Drew v. Peer, 93 Pa. 234; Dickson v. Waldron, 135 Ind. 507, 24 L.R.A. 483, 488, 41 Am. St. Rep. 440, 34 N. E. 506, 35 N. E. 1; cf. Williams v. Mineral City Park Assn. 128 Iowa, 32, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 427, 111 Am. St. Rep. 184, 102 N. W. 783, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 924. The relationship may arise out of contract generally. A watchman hired by defendant, who has agreed to guard plaintiff's house, burglarizes it; the defendant cannot escape liability on the "ground that he never authorized that other person to do the act complained of." Williams v. Brooklyn Dist. Teleg. Co. 12 Misc. 565, 33 N. Y. Supp. 849. And see Jones v. Morgan, 90 N. Y. 4, 43 Am. Rep. 131. (Cf. Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168, to which, without any appearance of conscious humor, defendant has referred us. That case was decided on the theory that no circumstances were shown from which could be inferred authority of the master to the servant to steal bags of gold delivered to the defendant bank as bailee; therefore the bank could not be held responsible for its servant's theft!)

The relationship need not be contractual; it may be merely conventional. The servant, for his own amusement or other personal purpose, assaults one whom the master has invited to use his premises as a store, station, or saloon; the master is liable, irrespective of the servant's authority or motive, or the master's benefit. Most of the many cases in this group may be found collated in Cressy v. Republic Creosoting Co. 108 Minn. 349-356, 122 N. W. 484. And see notes to McDermott v. Sallaway, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 456. So a railroad company may be liable for failure, e. g., to give prescribed warning to pedestrians at a crossing, or to protect persons near its works, as those loading cars; the owner of adjacent premises may be liable to persons on the highway for the misconduct of his servants, et sim. There are many other classes of cases similar on principle.

(b) The same situation is presented when liability attaches because the master has put in the servant's power an ability to do damage by means of instrumentalities dangerous intrinsically or potentially. See O'Brien v. American Bridge Co. 110 Minn. 364, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 125 N. W. 1012. This is a natural, though somewhat remote, extension of the familiar principle given extreme expression in Rylands v. Fletcher, L. R. 3 H. L. 330, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 235, 6 Mor. Min. Rep. 129, and in some cases of nuisance, modified so as to meet the facts of each case. Servants, contrary to orders, take a dog out of the inclosure and into the presence of the person who is injured. The employer cannot escape liability because the wrong was beyond the scope of the servant's authority. Fye v. Chapin, 121 Mich. 675, 680, 80 N. W. 707. An employee of defendant blows a whistle (Texas & P. R. Co. v. Scoville, 27 L.R.A. 179, 10 C. C. A. 479, 23 U. S. App. 506, 62 Fed. 730; Alsever v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 115 Iowa, 338, 56 L.R.A. 748, 88 N. W. 841; but see Ballard v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 128 Ky. 826, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1052, 110 S. W. 206), or explodes a torpedo (Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Shields, 47 Ohio St. 387, 8 L.R.A. 464, 21 Am. St. Rep. 840, 24 N. E. 658, which contains an especially valuable discussion; but cf. Sullivan v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 115 Ky. 447, 103 Am. St. Rep. 330, 74 S. W. 171, for his own amusement, and a horse runs away. Plaintiff, injured thereby, it is quite generally recognized, can recover from the master.

(c) The principle is the same in many cases where the work of the servant is not naturally dangerous to third persons. The liability is recognized in the master largely because the master has put it in the power of the servant to inflict harm by investing him with means or by putting him in positions, innocent enough in themselves. In cases of false imprisonment or malicious prosecution, for example, an officer of the law is in no wise, or but little, assisted in making an arrest by the fact that he may be in defendant's employ. The master's responsibility, if any, must depend largely on his authority, express or implied, actually conferred on his servant. The more restricted rule of liability usually controls cases of this kind. This is often true, also, in cases of assault and battery. The master's liability naturally involves the question of his authority to his servant, except where the circumstances impose a special duty of protection or hospitality. Supra; and see Mr. Shumaker's article in 5 Current Law, 275. For example: A train or car man who assaults a person on premises in which his employer has no property or interest ordinarily commits an independent tort. The fact that he is a servant has no natural tendency to contribute to or aggravate the wrong, and is naturally wholly disconnected from it. Yet a street car conductor, subject to a rule to prevent boys from catching on cars, who strikes a boy running by the side of the car, renders a car company liable. Hewson v. Interurban Street R. Co. 95 App. Div. 112, 88 N. Y. Supp. 816 (the collation of trespasser cases on pages 114, 115, of 95 App. Div., is valuable). When, for example, the railroad train man throws a trespasser from a moving train, the situation is substantially different. The fact of the service on the train and of the trespasser's place on the moving cars are necessarily conditions precedent to the commission of the wrong, and, in connection with the physical environment and the speed of the train, may determine the fact and extent of damage. If the trespasser is attempting to get on a train, he may be prevented by force without liability to the master; but his situation, if once on the moving car has a direct effect on the master's responsibility for the force exercised in his removal. Kline v. Central P. R. Co. 37 Cal. 400, 99 Am. Dec. 282. And if the assault be committed before the trespasser has left the car, and is completed by a brakeman who follows the plaintiff off the car, the defendant may be liable. Girvin v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 106 N. Y. 289, 59 N. E. 921. It is, however, too obvious to justify discussion that, e. g., an assault by a trainman on a trespasser when on a train at rest in a railroad yard, and when on a train moving rapidly over a high bridge, involves radically different applications of elementary rules of law. The master is under no affirmative duty to take care of a trespasser, but is subject to the familiar rule applied to trespassers generally, namely, to abstain from wilful or wanton harm. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R.

Co. v. Kelly, 36 Kan. 655, 59 Am. Rep. 596, 14 Pac. 172; Marion v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 59 Iowa, 428, 44 Am. Rep. 687, 13 N. W. 415; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Godfrey, 71 Ill. 500, 22 Am. Rep. 112; Illinois C. R. Co. v. King, 179 Ill. 91, 70 Am. St. Rep. 93, 53 N. E. 552; Holler v. Ross, 68 N. J. L. 324, 59 L.R.A. 943, 96 Am. St. Rep. 546, 53 Atl. 472; Johnson v. Great Northern R. Co. 49 Wash. 98, 94 Pac. 895; De Vane v. Atlanta, B. & A. R. Co. 4 Ga. App. 136, 60 S. E. 1079; Gates v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. 125 Mo. App. 334, 102 S. W. 50; Magar v. Hammond, 183 N. Y. 390, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1038, 76 N. E. 474; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Brown (Miss.) 39 So. 351 (brakeman). Cf. Ellington v. Great Northern R. Co. 96 Minn. 176, 104 N. W. 827-829. That the servant's motive in violating that duty was malicious is immaterial. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Kerr, 74 Neb. 1, 104 N. W. 49-54 (brakeman); Dealy v. Coble, (1906) 112 App. Div. 296, 98 N. Y. Supp. 452. (The transition in thought from the original rule, following M'Manus v. Crickett, is apparent with the contrast of this last case with Wright v. Wilcox (1838) 19 Wend. 343, 32 Am. Dec. 507, still sometimes cited as authority.) The motive of the servant generally, whether to act for the master's benefit or not, is not vital. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Kelly, 36 Kan. 659, 59 Am. Rep. 596, 14 Pac. 172.

While the language of authority is often used to describe the liability of the master under such and similar circumstances, it is strained to meet the conclusion which the court has reached by independent reasoning, as in Rowell v. Boston & M. R. Co. 68 N. H. 358, 44 Atl. 488. Cf. Barmore v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 85 Miss. 426, 70 L.R.A. 627, 38 So. 210, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 594. Thus the learned editor, in 27 L.R.A. 162, says of the familiar and leading case on this subject, Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 129, 21 Am. Rep. 507, Chase, Lead. Cas. on Torts, 237 (in which a boy trespasser was thrown from a moving train): "The absurdity of those statements [as to express and implied authority] taken together is such that the learned judge who made them never would have done so, had he not wished to apparently conform to precedents by which he did not intend to be bound, as is apparent from the remainder of the opinion." At the end of the opinion, the court rests the master's liability expressly upon the violation by the servant of the master's negative duty to abstain from wilful violence.

(d) On the same principle, the conduct of the master, the place, implements, facilities for doing business, and the course of the 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

business or dealing may justify third persons in believing that the servant had certain powers conferred upon him, and in acting in reliance thereon. Thus is created a duty to them, or, as is often said, the servant is given not real, but imputed, authority, commonly called "apparent authority." A telegraph agent, who is also an express agent, forges and sends a message from a merchant to his local correspondent for a purchase of grain. The agent steals the remittance. The telegraph company is liable, not because of the agent's authority or motive to benefit the master, but because a duty to third persons is imposed on the master by law, which the master has put in the power of the agent to violate. McCord v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 30 Minn. 181, 1 L.R.A. 143, 12 Am. St. Rep. 636, 30 N. W. 315; Jasper Trust Co. v. Kansas City M. & B. R. Co. 99 Ala. 416, 42 Am. St. Rep. 75, 14 So. 546. On much the same theory a railroad company is often, but not universally, held liable for a fraudulent bill of lading issued by an agent, who has appropriated the proceeds. Bank of Batavia v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 106 N. Y. 195, 60 Am. Rep. 440, 12 N. E. 433; Planters' Rice-Mill Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 78 Ga. 574, 3 S. E. 327. Cf. contra, Friedlander v. Texas & P. R. Co. 130 U. S. 416, 32 L. ed. 991, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570; and see National Bank v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 44 Minn. 224, 9 L.R.A. 263, 20 Am. St. Rep. 566, 46 N. W. 342, 560.

(e) This is really the principle involved in cases in which the liability of the master is worked out in the language of estoppel. A secretary of a corporation, intrusted with the seal of a corporation, and authorized to sign certificates of stock, issues unauthorized certificates and appropriates the proceeds. The agent, having no authority, could not have acted for his employer, but the corporation is held estopped from denying the validity of the fraudulent issue. See New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 30; Fifth Ave. Bank v. Forty-second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 137 N. Y. 231, 10 L.R.A. 331, 33 Am. St. Rep. 712, 33 N. E. 378. Great English judges have deplored their inability to enforce the just American rule. Their own authorities deny it. See British Mut. Bkg. Co. v. Charnwood Forest R. Co. L. R. 18 Q. B. Div. 714.

IV. Infinite confusion is produced by this anomaly: Criteria of liability formulated by the courts have generally no logical connection with the reasons for which liability is recognized by the law. All dictates of proper thought would lead to the creation of a test of liability which would be a natural result of, if not the formulated reason for, liability. In point of fact, the real basis of the master's liability and its accepted criterion are often absolutely divorced. The same estrangement appears in the terminology employed. The standard is adopted, not in pursuance of the logical basis of liability, but to accord with surviving tradition. In the effort to achieve consistency by the establishment of one test, the courts have produced confusion worse confounded. A necessarily abbreviated review of some of the various reasons for imposing the apparent hardship of liability on a personally innocent master it is hoped will tend to clarify the situation.

Negatively, the doctrine of identification, as has been pointed out, suffices only when the tort complained of is the master's own by commission or consent, including ratification, and when the law has imposed some duty to a third person on the master, but rarely, if ever, in any other case. Respondent superior is not a reason, but only a dogmatic restatement of the rule. Neither the lawfulness or unlawfulness, nor the maliciousness or mischief, nor the caprice, of the servant's conduct, is an invariable reason for the master's exoneration of liability.

Affirmatively there are numerous reasons of public policy "which have had their origin in history, not in science." Sometimes one is exclusive and sufficient; sometimes many concur to produce the rule. Often the result is clear and explicit; often obscure and inferential.

(1) The fundamental underlying reason applicable in such cases from general considerations of policy and security (see Moody, J., in Standard Oil Co. v. Anderson, 212 U. S. at page 221, 53 L. ed. 483, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252) is that announced in Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 49-55, 38 Am. Dec. 339: "This rule is obviously founded on the great principle of social duty that every man, in the management of his own affairs, whether by himself or by his agents or servants, shall so conduct them as not to injure another; and if he does not, and another thereby sustains damage, he shall answer for it." See Anderson v. Pittsburgh Coal Co. 108 Minn. 403, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 624, 122 N. W. 794.

(2) The expediency of having a remedy against someone capable of paying damages (see Willes, J., in Limpus v. London General Omnibus Co. 1 Hurlst. & C. 526, 17 Eng. Rul. Cas. 258; McClung v. Dearborne, 134 Pa. 406, 8 L.R.A. 204, 19 Am. St. Rep. 708, 19 Atl. 698), and of making a "master careful in the point of whom he employs" (Bramwell, B., in Swainson v. North-Eastern R. Co. L. R. 3 Exch. Div. at page 348), has been regarded as a general consideration. It was obviously not an adequate universal reason. Guy v. Donald, 203 U. S. 406, 51 L. ed. 246, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 63.

(3) The master is sometimes regarded as the causa causans of the mischief. Grier, J., in Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. 487, 14 L. ed. 510. And see Duncan v. Findlater, 6 Clark & F. 894; Quarman v. Burnett, 6 Mees. & W. 509; Mercy Docks & Harbour Board v. Gibbs, 11 H. L. Cas. 716, 717. Negatively, the master is not answerable for a tort of one whom he cannot select, control, or discharge, as a pilot whom he is compelled to accept. Guy v. Donald, 203 U. S. 399, 51 L. ed. 245, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 63. So there has often been applied the rule of public policy, not invariably of law, that, when one of two innocent persons must suffer by acts of a third, he who has enabled such third person to occasion the loss must bear it. Essentially the basis of the later English doctrine is this: "The grounds upon which it seems to rest, as explained in cases such as Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank (1867) L. R. 2 Exch. 259, 12 Eng. Rul. Cas. 298, appear to be that the principal is the person who has selected the agent, and must therefore be taken to have had better means of knowing what sort of a person he was than those with whom the agent deals on behalf of his principal, and that, the principal have delegated the performance of a certain class of acts to the agent, it is not unjust that he, being the person who has appointed the agent, and who will have the benefit of his efforts if successful, should bear the risk of his exceeding his authority in matters incidental to the doing of the acts the performance of which has been delegated to him." Hamlyn v. Houston [C. A. 1903] 1 K. B. 81, 85, 86. And see Houldsworth v. City of Glasgow Bank (1880) L. R. 5 App. Cas. at page 326; Citizens' Life Assur. Co. v. Brown [1904] A. C. 423, at page 428. Cf. Ploof v. Putnam, 83 Vt. 252, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 251, 75 Atl. 277.

(4) Estoppel may account for liability, because the master has retained the benefit of the servant's wrong, as in some cases of fraud and conversion (see Lord Mansfield, in Hamblly v. Trott, Cowp. pt. 1, p. 371, 2 Eng. Rul. Cas. 1) and because of considerations of purely general policy (e. g., New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, supra).

(5) The motive of the servant for the purpose or benefit of the master is regarded both as reason for and as a criterion of the master's liability. It is clear that the benefit of the master, as that expression is often used in England, is often misleading and sophistical. See Macdonell, Mast. & S. 242. The gist of the rule is that the motive of the servant must have been to have performed his duty to, or to further the business or the interests of, the master. It is not at all necessary that the actual result should have been to the master's benefit. The cases on this subject resolve themselves into three classes: (a) There are cases in which no recognized legal obligation to the party injured has been violated, where the controlling consideration is quite frequently held to be that the servant must have acted with the intention of furthering the master's business. See New York C. & H. R. Co. v. United States, 212 U. S. 481-493, 53 L. ed. 613-621, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 304; Kwiechen v. Holmes & H. Co. 106 Minn. 148, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 255, 118 N. W. 668. But see dissenting opinion. Compare Curran v. Olson, 88 Minn. 307, 60 L.R.A. 793, 97 Am. St. Rep. 517, 92 N. W. 1124, with Peter Anderson & Co. v. Diaz, 77 Ark. 606, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 649, 113 Am. St. Rep. 180, 92 S. W. 861. (b) Where the law recognizes that a duty is owed to the person injured, and that duty has been violated by the servant, the liability of the master follows, irrespective of the motive of the servant or the benefit of the master. A, for example, is employed to warn persons who go over a crossing near a sharp curve of the approach of a train. He forgets to do so; he falls asleep or gets drunk, and B is run over; A's employers would, it is conceived, be answerable, even under the English law, for misconduct certainly not intended to benefit them. Macdonell, Mast. & S. 242. Cf. Smith v. South Eastern R. Co. [1896] 1 Q. B. 178. (Quare, if a servant be insane, see Christian v. Columbus & R. R. Co. 79 Ga. 460, 7 S. E. 216; Id., 90 Ga. 124, 15 S. E. 701; and see Cole v. Nashville, 4 Sneed, 162.) And compare Stranahan Bros. Catering Co. v. Coit, 55 Ohio St. 398, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 506, 45 N. E. 634, with Nelson Business College Co. v. Lloyd, 60 Ohio St. 448, 46 L.R.A. 316, 71 Am. St. Rep. 729, 54 N. E. 471. This subject has been previously discussed. (c) Two motives may coexist in the mind of the wrongdoer; one, his own personal motive, and the other, the benefit of the master and the furtherance of the master's business. Many, but not all, cases refuse to subtly distinguish between the two classes of motives, and hold the master liable unless the motive be purely and solely personal to the servant. See Gracey v. Belfast Tramway Co. [1901] 2 Ir. Q. B. 322; New Ellerslie Fishing Club v. Stewart, 123 Ky. 8, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 475, 93 S. W. 598; Macdonell, Mast. & S. collecting cases, on page 243. The cases recognizing the liability of the master despite the deviation of the servant from the prescribed journey of his vehicle are familiar illustrations of this principle. 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

(6) The distinctive reasons for the American rule have been previously pointed out. In an increasingly large number of cases, and of classes of cases, the master is held responsible for the act of his servant as an instrumentality (cf. Innes on Torts), not because the servant was in any wise authorized to do the wrong, or because of his intention to benefit the master's business, but because he has violated the duty which the master owes to third persons. 27 L.R.A. 163. The rule in Craker v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504, is properly to be regarded as of general application, not as confined to carrier cases. That criticism is merely a rule of thumb for indexing or digesting. In Schaeffer v. Osterbrink, 67 Wis. 495, 58 Am. Rep. 875, 30 N. W. 922, the court, in approving the doctrines in the Craker Case, said: "The mere fact that the conductor's duty to the passenger in that case arose out of the passenger's contract with the master does not confine the principle involved to the breaches of duty created by contract." Responsibility for damages resulting from racing sleighs on a public highway was accordingly attributed to the master. So, in Winslow v. Commercial Bldg. Co. (Iowa) 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 563, 124 N. W. 320, it was held that, whenever the law imposes a personal duty upon anyone, he cannot escape responsibility therefor, for the manner of its performance, by delegating its performance to another.

V. The equivocation in the constantly recurring middle terms "authority," "scope of authority," "course of employment," and their congeners, is also a prolific source of error in decision. The reasoning of the law in this connection has been largely formal and nominalistic. It is saturated with the methods of the schoolmen. Its vices are those of medieval logic. The inevitable penalty for failure to clearly define terms has been peculiarly marked. In this connection, Holmes, J., in Guy v. Donald, 203 U. S. 406, 51 L. ed. 247, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 63, has aptly said: "As long as the matter to be considered is debated in artificial terms, there is danger of being led by a technical definition to apply a certain name, . . . then to deduce consequences which have no relation to the grounds on which the name was applied." In numberless instances, gross miscarriages of justice have resulted.

(a) It has just been pointed out that "authority" is used in three senses: (1) That of real or actual authority, express or naturally implied; (2) that of fictitious or imputed authority, of which (3) apparent authority is really one variety. The ambiguity is plain. We reiterate: It is a palpable misnomer to hold the master liable because of the authority to the servant to do the thing which the master has openly, in good faith, and expressly, forbidden the servant to do. It is still more misleading to trace the liability of the master to the authority of the servant, when the master has not only forbidden the servant's conduct, but also when the servant has not acted in the furtherance of the master's business, nor for the protection of the master's property, nor in performance of his assigned duty, but for the servant's own benefit, and to the master's damage. Yet, as has been pointed out, in many groups of such cases the master has been held responsible. The authority of the master survives, in many cases, as a "lazy easy reason" for the master's liability.

The term "implied authority," as used generally and by the trial court here, is worse than ambiguous. It is constantly treated as including (1) authority which is naturally inferred from actual authority; (2) authority apparent from the course of dealing between the parties, or from an established and known course of business; (3) imputed by law on recognized principles, entirely apart from the actual instructions given. A jury is generally the proper judge in the first class of cases, often of the second, and rarely, if ever, of the third. The authorities have recognized the certainty of consequent errors. Macdonell, Mast. & S. 247, note "f"; 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 492.

The subject is further confused by the fact that this law on master and servant is intimately related to, and largely, but indiscriminately, drawn from, that of principal and agent. The rule of master and servant concerns all acts of the representation which are noncontractual, and the rule of principal and agent such as are contractual. Hence, for example, an insurance solicitor who makes false representations as to the business in hand has been regarded as acting on behalf of the insurance company in a ministerial, and not in a contractual, capacity. Fraud has therefore been held to be chargeable to the insurance company, irrespective of the actual authority, and written restrictions on the agent's authority to be immaterial. Almost as many authorities have reached the opposite conclusion. See Mr. Vance in 4 Mich. L. Rev. 208-213.

(b) Quite as marked an equivocation and as great an uncertainty occurs in the current use of the middle terms "scope of authority" and "course of employment," and their antonyms and synonyms. "Much of the confusion in the decisions exists by reason of difficulty in determining what the courts mean by the phrase 'scope of employment.' If the same meaning were attached to this phrase by all of the courts using it in deciding the point under discussion, most of the confusion would vanish, and in many instances it would probably appear that decisions apparently conflicting were in reality harmonious, since it is used to describe acts ranging all the way from one clearly within the line of duty to one entirely outside it, but committed during the continuance of the contract relationship between the master and party injured, and in violation thereof." Note in 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 492. In England generally, and in America frequently, they are used indiscriminately. The later English cases, however, seem (for the matter is not wholly certain) to have followed the general American usage and regard the "course of employment" as indicating the widest measure of liability, as distinguished from "scope of authority," which signifies the more restricted rule. Compare later English cases previously cited and Mr. Abbott's celebrated note to Mallach v. Ridley, 24 Abb. N. C. 172-184, with Macdonell, Mast. & S. 241, 242.

(c) It is obvious that accurate and certain definition of these terms, "authority," "implied authority," "scope of authority," "course of employment," and the like, is a sine qua non to correct reasoning. Such a definition is rarely, if ever, to be found. Identically the same charge is given the jury in different jurisdictions to describe entirely different and inconsistent criteria. Miscarriage of justice is inevitable. The correct definition, it will be found, must resolve itself into an enlarged formula of the standard of liability applicable to the particular case.

VI. It follows from the previous discussion: (1) The master's liability is conditioned on proof of damage consequent on the wrong committed by one who, at the time, is a servant of the master, and under such circumstances that liability is attached to the master under the criterion prevailing in the jurisdiction and appropriate to the circumstances involved. (2) Liability may attach under the Blackstone test, the English test of motive and benefit, or the American test of duty violated. (3) No one rule of liability is the sole or invariable standard. Different specific torts, and the same tort committed under different circumstances, may involve the application of different principles. (4) The test of responsibility should be determined primarily by the reason the law assigns, and not by incidental or collateral circumstances, to be consistent with tradition. (5) The terms "implied authority," "scope of authority," "course of employment," and the like, when used, should be clearly defined. (6) Generally little significance is to be attached to the fact that a given conclusion is or is not sustained by a group of related cases. Many decisions are negligible, because they constitute anachronisms in history, anomalies in logic, and aberrations from accepted general principles. (7) The fact that liability was attached to the master under a restricted criterion of liability is entirely consistent with holding him, under other and appropriate circumstances, responsible under an enlarged standard. (8) The tendency of the cases is to increasingly regard the question of the master's responsibility as one of fact, to be determined by the jury.

VII. In this case the first question is whether the defendant was entitled to a directed verdict; if so, plaintiff is not entitled to a new trial. Defendant argues on this appeal that "a brakeman upon a passenger train is presumed to have authority to eject from his train a person who is obviously a trespasser. But the presumption does not obtain where such person is not obviously a trespasser, and therefore the ejection of such a person would be without the scope of his authority." The subtlety, artificiality, and fallacy of this reasoning are apparent. The confusion as to authority and scope of authority is familiar. It might well be held that actual authority could be implied from the situation, but the liability of the master is independent of authority of that sort. It might exist, although the master is shown to have expressly forbidden the brakeman to determine the question or to expel the person from the train. The criterion for which defendant contends has been abandoned by courts of this and every other jurisdiction, including England and Massachusetts, for more than a century.

The question then arises whether plaintiff is entitled to a new trial. The court charged first that the master was liable within the scope of the brakeman's actual authority, express or implied. He then charged that the master was liable for what the servant did in the course of his employment, with a view to the furtherance of the master's business, and not for any purpose personal to himself, in which case the actual authority was immaterial. He finally charged that the company was not liable of the act was beyond the scope of his actual agency or authority. It is obvious that this charge submitted the Blackstone test then the later English criterion, and finally reverted to the rule of the great commentator. The anachronism is as plain as it is confusing. The criteria 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) are hopelessly inconsistent. Under the first charge, "if the authority was expressly withheld, or its exercise forbidden, then the defendant company would not be liable." Under the second charge, "the fact that the brakeman exceeded his authority, or even disobeyed his instruction, did not alter the rule that the defendant would be liable." This court itself held, in Brevig v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 64 Minn. 168-174, 66 N. W. 401, 404: "A railway company owes trespassers no contract duty. Neither are trespassers in a position to invoke the doctrine of apparent authority. They can only, under any circumstances, hold the company liable for acts of its agents or servants done within the scope of their actual authority, either express or implied." But in Barrett v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 106 Minn. 51-57, 1049, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 416, 130 Am. St. Rep. 585, 117 N. W. 1047, the court said: The "master is responsible for the torts of his servant, done in the course of his employment, with a view to the furtherance of his master's business, and not for a purpose personal to himself, whether the same be done negligently or wilfully, but within the scope of his agency, or in excess of his authority, or contrary to the express instruction of the master." The same conclusion must be reached if the question of liability be based on the violation by the servant of the duty to abstain from wilful harm the defendant owed to plaintiff.

Reversed.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

MAYOR AND COMMON COUNCIL OF CITY OF NEWARK

v.

GEORGE T. HATT et al.

and

CHARLES F. KILBURN et al., Pliffs. in Err.

(— N. J. —, 77 Atl. 47.)

Highway — vacation — damages.

1. Where part of a street between the two next adjacent cross streets is vacated, all of the land between the cross streets bounding on the partly vacated street suf-

Headnotes by BERGEN, J.

Note. — Right of property owner whose means of access from one direction is shut off or interfered with by closing of adjoining street or portion of street upon which he is situated.

The scope of this note, as indicated by the title, does not include a consideration of the rights of an owner of property abutfers a special injury, whether it abuts on the vacated portion or not, for which damages may be appraised and awarded, under a statute requiring a city to pay damages caused by the vacation of any street.

Same — railroad on vacated portion.

2. The building of a railroad embankment across such vacated portion of a street is not an element to be considered in assessing the damage resulting from the vacation in part of such street.

(Gummere, Ch. J., dissents.)

(June 20, 1910.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court to review a judgment setting aside an award by the commissioners of assessment for local improvements in Newark, of damages for ting directly upon the portion of a street closed, so that access from that street is wholly prevented; or the rights of an owner of property abutting on a street originally a cul-de-sac, of which a portion is vacated, so as to shut off his sole means of access, although he does not abut directly on the portion closed.

For cases decided prior to those cited in this note, as to the rights of a property owner whose means of access from one direction only has been shut off or interfered with by the closing of a street or portion of a street, see note in 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 269.

As indicated in that note, there is a conflict among the decisions of the different jurisdictions as to whether such a property owner may recover damages under the circumstances indicated. But the conflict seems to be in the application to specific facts of the generally adopted rule that, to entitle an owner to damages, he must show a violation of some right of his apart from that which he has as one of the public,— a loss or damage different in kind, and not merely in degree, from that suffered by the rest of the community.

Thus, in Ponischil v. Hoquiam Sash & Door Co. 41 Wash. 303, 83 Pac. 316, it is held that the owner of a city lot at the entrance of a cul-de-sac formed by the vacation of a portion of the street on which it abuts is not entitled to damages for the vacation, unless special damages are sustained, different in character from those suffered by the public at large; and that no such special damages are shown where the portion of the street closed has never been opened for travel, the business portion of the city is in the opposite direction, and the value of the lot in question has not been lessened.

But in Vanderburgh v. Minneapolis, 98 Minn. 329, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 741, 108 N. W. 480, it is held that an owner of lots on a city street which has been vacated from the line of such lots to another street, a portion of which was also vacated and which bounded on one side the block in which said lots are located, thus cutting off his means of access from that direction, and leaving his injuries to defendants' land caused by the vacation of a portion of a street. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Riker & Riker for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Herbert Boggs for defendant in error.

Bergen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The commissioners of assessment for local improvements in the city of Newark made an award for damages to certain landowners arising from the vacation of several public highways; among them were George T. Hatt, Addison Brown, Charles F. Kilburn, and Walter D. Osborne. The mayor and property fronting on a cul-de-sac, suffers an injury special and peculiar to his property, not common to the public at large, and is entitled to compensation under a constitutional provision which forbids the taking or damaging of private property for public use without compensation. The court said: "This question has been before many of the courts in other states having constitutional provisions similar to our own, and the general trend of the decisions is that, for the vacation of a public street under circumstances like those disclosed in this case, the property owner is entitled to compensation."

In some of the decisions, as in NEWARK v. HATT, and apparently in Vanderburgh v. Minneapolis, supra, the question whether a property owner has suffered a special injury from the closing of an adjoining street or a portion of the street on which he is situated, for which injury he is entitled to recover damages, turns upon the question of fact as to whether or not there is an intervening cross street between his property and the portion of the street closed.

Thus, in Henderson v. Lexington, 132 Ky. 390, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 20, 111 S. W. 318, it is held that the property owners entitled to compensation for the vacation of a street or portion of a street include all those, and only those, abutting on such street within the block or blocks in which the closed portion lies, not necessarily limited to those abutting on the vacated portion only.

And under a statute providing for damages for the vacating of streets, an owner of lots abutting on a city street sustains no injury which will entitle him to recover damages for the vacation of a portion of such street within another block, with a cross street or streets intervening, so that access to the lots in question is not cut off from any direction, but it is merely made necessary to travel farther than before to reach them from points in one direction beyond the portion vacated. Re Ruscomb Street, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 476.

But where the vacation of a part of a street leaves to lots on the remainder of the street but one mode of access from the common council of the city of Newark being dissatisfied with the award, removed the proceedings to the supreme court by writ of certiorari, in which court the award to the aforesaid landowners was set aside (see 77 N. J. L. 48, 71 Atl. 330), which judgment was brought here on error by Kilburn and Osborne, the other owners not joining in the writ. The facts shown in the record are that Lawrence street in Newark, previous to these proceedings, was a public highway connecting Hamilton street with Mechanic street, and that Osborne and Kilburn owned lands fronting on it; the Osborne tract being on the corner of Mechanic and Lawrence streets, with a frontage of 64 feet on the latter, and 107 feet along Mechanic street, the Kilburn tract having a frontage of 50 feet on Lawrence street adjoining the Osborne lot, and it also extended along the side of the Osborne lot to Mechanic street. A railroad company, being the owner of all the land abutting on Lawrence street between the Osborne and Kilburn tracts and Hamilton street, desired to elevate its road-bed, and the city, by ordinance, vacated all of Lawrence street from the southerly line of the Kilburn lot to Hamilton street; the effect being to make that part of Lawrence street upon which the lots of these two owners abutted, a cul-de-sac. The railroad company elevated its road to the height of 8 feet 6 inches, and built a concrete retaining wall along the southerly Kilburn line and across Lawrence street, thus effectively closing it to the south of the lands of Os-general system of street in the vicinity, whereas before the vacation there were two, damages will be allowed to the owners of such lots. On Reargument, 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 148.

In Highbarger v. Milford, 71 Kan. 331, 80 Pac. 633, an injunction action to restrain the closing of certain streets, it was held that an owner's right to pass freely in all directions to and from his premises by means of streets constituting the highway boundaries of the block in which his land is situated, at the time he purchased it, is a right in which he has a greater and more vital interest than has the general public.

And in Reis v. New York, 188 N. Y. 53, 80 N. E. 573, affirming 113 App. Div. 464, 99 N. Y. Supp. 291, a suit to restrain the continued maintenance and further erection of obstructions in the vacated portion of a street, it was said that a city having statutory authority to close streets may close a portion of a street between two cross streets without liability to make compensation for damages to an owner of property not abutting on the portion of the street closed, but on portions thereof in the two next adjacent blocks, so that the ways of access to such property are merely made less direct from certain points.

Under a statute providing for the compensation of owners of property "injuriously affected," an owner of property on one side of a street has been held to be entitled to compensation for the closing of a street running at right angles to the first street from opposite the property in question. Re Tate, 10 Ont. L. Rep. 651.

And so, also, an owner of property abutting on a highway was held to be entitled to damages for the closing of a portion thereof immediately adjacent to one of his boundaries, so that a road was left across the front of his lot, but terminated at that boundary, shutting off access from that direction. Re Brown, 14 Ont. L. Rep. 627.

But in Southern R. Co. v. Ables, 153 Ala. 523, 45 So. 234, it was held that an owner of property abutting on a street, but not on the particular part of the street vacated, is not within a constitutional provision for 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

compensation to owners of property taken or injured for public use, although the vacated portion of the street is adjacent to his property, and the vacation entirely shuts off his means of access from that direction.

And an owner of property which does not abut on the street vacated, or if so, lies beyond two avenues, with reference to the vacated portion, so that there are numerous convenient and reasonable ways of ingress to and egress from such property, does not suffer a "taking" of a private right of property by such vacation. Jackson v. Birmingham Foundry & Mach. Co. 154 Ala. 464, 45 So. 660.

And where one end of an alley between two streets is closed, an owner of lots fronting on one of said streets and abutting on such alley, but not on the portion thereof closed, is not entitled to compensation for such closing, as he is not deprived of a convenient and reasonable outlet to neighboring thoroughfares, and only abutting owners are within the constitutional provision requiring compensation for property taken or injured. Hall v. Atlanta, B. & A. R. Co. 158 Ala. 271, 48 So. 365.

In Enders v. Friday, 78 Neb. 510, 111 N. W. 140, 15 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 685, it was held that an owner of property abutting on a city or village street is not entitled to damages on account of the vacation of a portion of such street other than the portion upon which his property abuts.

And Lee v. McCook, 82 Neb. 26, 116 N. W. 955, an injunction action against city authorities to restrain the passage of an ordinance closing a certain street, following Enders v. Friday, supra, holds that an owner of property no part of which abuts upon or is adjacent to a roadway sought to be vacated suffers no wrong that would be actionable at law for damages on account of the vacation of such roadway; the only injury he sustains is such as is common to the community generally; the nature of the injury is no different from that sustained by other persons.

In Poythress v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 92 Miss. 638, 46 So. 139, a bill for an injunction to restrain the closing of a portion of borne and Kilburn, and preventing all access to their lands over Lawrence street from Hamilton street.

The charter of the city of Newark, P. L. 1862, p. 333, provides that when the city shall determine, by ordinance, to vacate any street, "and any land will be damaged by such vacating," the damages, if the city and owner cannot agree, shall be ascertained and awarded by commissioners appointed for such purpose. In the present case such award was made, and is now here under review. The record shows that the commissioners allowed damages to Osborne and Kilburn, estimated to result from the vacation of Lawrence street to the extent it was vacated, and also from the elevation of the roadbed of the railroad on their own land immediately adjoining the Kilburn tract and across Lawrence street. The supreme court set aside the award upon two grounds: First, because the commissioners awarded damages which they estimated to result to the land from the elevation of the railroad; and second, that the lands not abutting on the vacated portion of the street were not lands which "will be damaged by such vacating" of the street, within the meaning of the statute.

We agree with the supreme court that it was improper for the commissioners to consider the elevation of the railroad as an element of damage; for that was no part of the street vacation, but a lawful use by the landowner of its property. The other question is more difficult because of a conflict of judicial opinion; authority entitled to the highest consideration supporting each side of the general proposition. The question has not been distinctly passed upon by this court, and we are at liberty to adopt that rule which appears to use to be most reasonable and just.

The right of the state to destroy public improvements of this class without compensation is not limited by the Constitution, and except for the statute, as expressed in the charter of the city, this street a certain street, it was held that an owner of property abutting on the street, but not on the portion thereof proposed to be vacated, is not an abutting landowner on the street, within the meaning of the Mississippi Code, entitling him to have compensation first made to him before the closing of the street. The court said, however: "If the complainants have suffered any special damage by the closing of this street, not shared in by all the public, they have recourse against the municipality; but, in the meantime, it is within the power of the municipality to close the street, if, in the judgment of the municipality, it is dangerous to pedestrians and others."

And in Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Turner (Miss.) 52 So. 261, a suit brought after the closing of a street and the placing of an obstruction on the closed portion, to recover damages sustained by reason of such closing and obstruction, where the situation of the property with reference to the closed portion of the street seems to have been very similar to that in Poythress v. Mobile & O. R. Co. supra, it was held that an owner of property on a continuous street which, though its two ends bore different names, formed a continuous and unobstructed way to and from and in front of his property into a town and across a railroad right of way, is an "abutting owner," within the meaning of the same statute, and as such entitled to compensation in advance of the closing of a portion of the street adjacent to his property, whereby his means of access in one direction is entirely cut off, and he is compelled to take a very circuitous route to reach it.

In People ex rel. Bushnell v. Newell, 131 App. Div. 555, 115 N. Y. Supp. 399, it was held that an owner of property not adjacent to any part of a discontinued highway, but on a highway to which the discontinued one ran perpendicular, is not entitled to damages for the discontinuance, his land not being "affected thereby," within the meaning of the section of the highway law providing for discontinuing a road. The court said: "The inconvenience he suffers by reason of the discontinuance comes to him in common with the general public whose business or pleasure might lead them to continue to use the highway, if it had not been discontinued."

So, a statute permitting a recovery of damages for the closing of a street, by reason of rights or interests therein taken, affected, or damages, does not authorize the payment of damages to an owner of property which does not abut upon any part of the street affected by the closing, and which is bounded by other streets. Re West 151st Street, 123 N. Y. Supp. 343.

Where a street is laid out upon a city plan up to the line of a railroad on each side, but not across the right of way, and the crossing is merely permissive to the public by the railroad company, an owner of property abutting on the portion of the street on one side of the railroad is not entitled to recover damage for a vacation of the portion on the other side, "for if the public had no legal right to cross the right of way of the railroad at the point involved, it would follow that any damage which the property owners west of the railroad suffered by reason of the striking of the street from the plan would not be different from that of the public at large." Nor is an owner entitled to recover damages for such vacation, where there is no evidence to show that the crossing on the vacated side joined any well-defined road which at any time corresponded with the platted lines of the street on that side. Siddall v. Philadelphia, 225 Pa. 55, 73 Atl. 1013.

A. C. W.

could have been vacated without the slightest consideration of its effect upon any land lying along it, or the payment by the city of compensation to any landowners for damages. But this statute requires the city to ascertain, by agreement, or appraisalment by commissioners, the extent to which any land will be damaged by the vacation of a street, which damage the city is required to pay to the owner. It is not such damage as the owner may suffer in common with the public, but the impairment of the value of the land caused by the vacation of the street.

The question now presented is whether land abutting on a public highway over which access may be had to it from intersecting streets at each end of the block in which it is located "will be damaged," within the meaning of our statute, by the vacation of a portion of the abutting street, so that direct access to it from one of such intersecting streets is prevented, although the land does not adjoin the part vacated, but only abuts upon a cul-de-sac created by the vacation; or, are lands so affected not damaged in such peculiar or special manner as to justify the ascertainment and awarding of damages for the consequent impairment of their value. In Massachusetts the latter rule seems to have been adopted.

In Smith v. Boston, 7 Cush. 254, suit was brought by a landowner for damages claimed to have resulted from the vacation of a portion of Market street. Some of the land was on Market street, but part was not, and they were all accessible by other public streets. At the trial it was held that plaintiff could not prove damages because neither of his estates abutted on that part of Market street which was vacated, and the ruling was sustained on error in the supreme court. But the court said: "We do not mean to be understood as laying down a universal rule that in no case can a man have damages for the discontinuance of a highway, unless his land bounds upon it; although as applicable to city streets intersecting each other at short distances, it is an equitable rule." It did not appear in this case that the plaintiff's land was in the block along which a portion of the street was vacated; the inference to be drawn from the case, as reported, is that such was not the case. This case and others approving it were followed in Stanwood v. Malden, 157 Mass. 17, 16 L.R.A. 591, 31 N. E. 702, the court saying: "We express no opinion as to how we should have decided any of the foregoing cases, had they arisen before us for the first time. It is enough to say that Smith v. Boston is intelligible, even if with justice it might have been more liberal." The Massachusetts rule has apparently been adopted by the courts of New York. This rule, as I understand the reasoning, rests upon the ground that in the cases decided the lands affected by the vacation suffered damage of the same kind as that sustained by lands held by the general public, differing only in degree, and therefore too remote.

In Chicago v. Burecky, 158 Ill. 103, 29 L.R.A. 568, 49 Am. St. Rep. 142, 42 N. E. 178, the supreme court of Illinois had before it a case similar to that at present under consideration. There the plaintiff owned lands abutting on a street extending from one intersecting street to another, and the city vacated a part of that portion of the street, but not the part upon which plaintiff's land abutted; the vacated part, however, beginning at the corner of plaintiff's land, as in this case. In determining that the plaintiff had a right of action, the court said: "What was originally a thoroughfare along the entire line of plaintiff's property fronting on Sixty-first street was, by the action of the town, turned into a blind court. No other property was damaged or affected in the same way. . . . The property of the general public was not affected like plaintiff's, nor were the damages sustained by the public of the same kind."

In Re Mellon Street, 182 Pa. 397, 38 L.R.A. 275, 38 Atl. 482, it was held that, although the land alleged to be damaged did not abut on the vacated portion of the street, the effect of the vacation was to create a cul-de-sac, and therefore the land was subject to special damage, and the owner entitled to compensation therefor.

In Dodge v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 43 N. J. Eq. 351, 11 Atl. 751, the complainant filed his bill to restrain the Pennsylvania Railroad Company from obstructing Green street with an embankment at a point where it had been vacated for the purpose of allowing the company to elevate its railroad. The questions raised there are not pertinent to this issue, and the case is referred to only because it is relied upon by the defendant in error. But whatever may have been said by the court in deciding that case must be read in connection with the fact stated in the opinion that complainant's title was not to lands "in that part of Green street, extending both north and south of the lands conveyed to the two next adjacent cross streets, but in that part of Green street which lay entirely beyond the two next adjacent cross streets," thus showing that access to it was not restrained to a cul-de-sac.

In State, Kean, Prosecutrix, v. Elizabeth,

54 N. J. L. 462, 24 Atl. 495, it appeared that Schiller street crossed York street, on which prosecutor's land was located, between the land of the prosecutor and the vacated portion of York street, and the proceeding was to test the power of the city to vacate, no question of damages was presented, and in this court on error, 55 N. J. L. 337, 26 Atl. 939, the opinion of Chancellor, then Mr. Justice Magie, is confined to the question of the power of the city to pass the ordinance under review.

There is nothing to be found in the adjudged cases in this state inconsistent with the view that the right of the public in an open highway is of passage over it, and that this right the abutting owner has in common with the public, and suffers in common with it when deprived of such right by an obstruction to that use, and that there is in addition to this, at least, a special right of access to his land from the next adjacent intersecting streets, over the highway on which it bounds, and that such right of access, in either direction the street allows, is a special advantage to the lands lying on it between any two intersecting streets. It is not a question whether the land adjoins the vacated portion or not, but rather, Will its value be impaired if deprived of one of the immediate means of access to it? We are of opinion that such right of access is of special advantage to all the land abutting a highway on a block between two streets, and that the vacation of a part of such street diminishes the value of all the land between the next adjacent cross streets, and that, in appraising the damage to the lands of the plaintiffs in error, the commissioners of assessment should consider to what extent, if any, such lands are diminished in value because deprived of one means of access, but should not allow any damages on account of the track elevation. The views adopted by the supreme court resulted in denying to Messrs. Kilburn and Osborne any right whatever to damages for the vacation of Lawrence street. Accordingly, the judgment of that court in setting aside the award made by the commissioners of assessment did not provide for any new assessment to be made in favor of these land-owners.

The judgment of the Supreme Court should therefore be reversed, and a new judgment entered setting aside the award of damages under review by that court, and referring it back to the assessment commissioners to make a new award to the plaintiffs in error, Kilburn and Osborne, for the damages represented by the diminution of the market value of their lands, caused by the vacation of the street, but without allowance for any diminution of value caused by the track elevation.

The judgment under review is reversed.

Gummere, Ch. J., dissents.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

T. J. WALKER, Plff. in Err.,
v.

C. J. BOWMAN et al.

(— Okla. —, 111 Pac. 319.)

Action—against liability of title abstracter—when accrues.

A right of action against an abstracter for damages resulting from incompleteness, imperfections, or error in an abstract furnished by him, accrues at the time the examination is made and reported, and not when the error is discovered and the damages resulting therefrom have been paid.

(September 13, 1910.)

ERROR to the District Court for Oklahoma County to review a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the petition in an action brought to recover damages alleged to have been caused by errors in an abstract of title furnished by defendants. Reversed.

The former opinion in this case, rendered November 11, 1909, and reported in 105 Pac. 649, affirming the decision below, having turned upon the question of damages, and having been withdrawn upon rehearing, is of no value upon the question involved upon the present re-hearing, and is therefore omitted.

The other facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Mr. S. A. Horton, for plaintiff in error:

Plaintiff stated a cause of action by alleging that she gave W. T. Scott a warranty deed, that W. T. Scott had redeemed the land from an existing lien, and that she had thereby become liable to him, it being sufficient that she becomes liable to pay.

Abilene v. Wright, 4 Kan. App. 708, 46 Pac. 715; Donnelly v. Hufschmidt, 79 Cal. 74, 21 Pac. 546; Frankfort & V. Traction Co. v. Hulette, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 732, 106 S. W.

Headnote by DUNN, Ch. J.

Note.—The question when an action accrues against abstracters for making an incorrect report or abstract of titles is discussed in a note to Aachen & M. F. Ins. Co. v. Morton, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 160. A note to Equitable Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Bank of Commerce & T. Co. 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 449, discusses the general question of liability of title abstracter.

1193; Kirn v. Cape Girardeau & C. R. Co. 124 Mo. App. 271, 101 S. W. 673; Stanton v. French, 83 Cal. 194, 23 Pac. 355; Swartz v. Ballou, 47 Iowa, 188, 29 Am. Rep. 470.

Mr. H. R. Winn, for defendants in error:

In an action against an abstractor for incompleteness, imperfection, or error made in compiling an abstract, the petition must allege the incompleteness, imperfection, or error, and actual damage to the complainant by reason thereof.

Webb's Pollock, Torts, pp. 7, 215, 216; Cooley, Torts, 66, 67, 98; Allen v. Clark, 7 L. T. N. S. 781; Dodd v. Williams, 3 Mo. App. 281; Morange v. Mix, 44 N. Y. 315; United States Wind Engine & Pump Co. v. Linville, 43 Kan. 455, 23 Pac. 597; Kimball v. Connolly, 3 Keyes, 57; National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 25 L. ed. 621; Fish v. Kelly, 17 C. B. N. S. 194; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 215; Kahl v. Love, 37 N. J. L. 5; Houseman v. Girard Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. 81 Pa. 256; Chase v. Heaney, 70 Ill. 268; Symms v. Cutter, 9 Kan. App. 210, 59 Pac. 671; Mallory v. Ferguson, 50 Kan. 685, 22 L.R.A. 99, 32 Pac. 410.

Where the gist of the action is pecuniary damage, and no such damage has been sustained by plaintiff, the verdict should be for defendant, and not for nominal damages.

Sedgw. Damages, p. 45, note 2, pp. 55, 56; Commercial Bank v. Ten Eyck, 48 N. Y. 305; Hobson v. Thelluson, L. R. 2 Q. B. 642; Webb's Pollock, Torts, 7, 215, 216.

If there is in fact an error in the abstract, and through reliance upon it, the customer has sustained injury, he may hold the abstractor liable therefor to the extent only of the injury sustained.

Equitable Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Bank of Commerce & T. Co. 118 Tenn. 678, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 449, 102 S. W. 901, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 407; National Sav. Bank v. Ward, supra; Banker v. Caldwell, 3 Minn. 94, Gil. 46; Kane v. Rippey, 22 Or. 296, 23 Pac. 180; Heinsen v. Lamb, 117 Ill. 549, 7 N. E. 75; Wacek v. Frink, 51 Minn. 282, 38 Am. St. Rep. 502, 53 N. W. 633; Young v. Lohr, 118 Iowa, 624, 92 N. W. 684; Rankin v. Schaeffer, 4 Mo. App. 108; Keuthan v. St. Louis Trust Co. 101 Mo. App. 1, 73 S. W. 334; Dickle v. Nashville Abstract Co. 89 Tenn. 432, 24 Am. St. Rep. 616, 14 S. W. 896.

Dunn, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case presents error from the district court of Oklahoma county, and is an action brought by plaintiff in error as plaintiff, against C. J. Bowman and G. W. Stephenson, doing business under the firm name of Bowman & Stephenson, and certain sureties on their bond as abstractors. To the petition a demurrer was filed on the ground that the same did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, which the court sustained, from which action the appeal is prosecuted. From the petition it appears that the plaintiff employed and paid the principal defendants herein to prepare for her an abstract to a certain tract of land which she desired to purchase. She procured the abstract for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of the title. Prior to that date an attachment had been run against the land, and was an existing lien at the time the abstract was prepared and delivered, but was not shown on the abstract. Thereafter plaintiff, relying on the correctness of the abstract, purchased the land, and subsequently sold it, giving a warranty deed thereto. Her grantee was compelled, in order to retain and protect his title, to pay off the attachment lien above mentioned, whereupon plaintiff became liable on her deed to her grantee for the amount of his damages. The petition fails to disclose that plaintiff has paid the damages incurred by her grantee, and it is the contention of counsel for defendants herein that, until plaintiff has made that payment, no cause of action accrues, contending that she had not been damaged within the meaning of the statute. Counsel for plaintiff contends that the damage accrued at the time the abstract was delivered, and the issue thus made is the one presented to us for our determination.

Section 1, chap. 1, Comp. Laws (Okla.) 1909, provides for a bond to be given by persons who engage in the making of abstracts, to contain the following provision that they (the abstractor and his bondsmen) "will pay all damages that may accrue to any person by reason of any incompleteness, imperfections, or error in any abstract furnished by him." The word "accrue," as used in that sentence, means to become a present and enforceable demand. McGuigan v. Rolfe, 80 Ill. App. 256, 259. "A cause of action accrues from the time the right to sue for the breach attaches." Amy v. Dubuque, 98 U. S. 470, 476, 25 L. ed. 228, 231; 1 Words & Phrases, p. 101. And the rule on the question presented, as adduced from the authorities, is stated by 1 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 217, as follows: "The right of action against an abstractor for damages resulting from an incorrect abstract accrues at the time the examination is made and reported, and not when the error is discovered or damages result therefrom." See also cases cited under note 39. The following cases cited to sustain the text, and others, are noted as follows: Provident Loan Trust Co. v. Wolcott, 5 Kan. App. 473, 47

Pac. 8; Schade v. Gehner, 133 Mo. 252, 34 S. W. 576; Rankin v. Schaeffer, 4 Mo. App. 108; Security Abstract of Title Co. v. Longacre, 56 Neb. 469, 76 N. W. 1073; Brown v. Sims, 22 Ind. App. 317, 72 Am. St. Rep. 308, 53 N. E. 779; Russell & Co. v. Polk County Abstract Co. 87 Iowa, 233, 43 Am. St. Rep. 381, 54 N. W. 212; Lattin v. Gillette, 95 Cal. 317, 29 Am. St. Rep. 115, 30 Pac. 545.

In the case of Rankin v. Schaeffer, supra, it is said: "The examiner of titles does not warrant. He is not liable, except for negligence or want of necessary skill and knowledge. The contract made by him when he receives a fee and examines a title is not one of indemnity, but a contract that he will faithfully and skilfully do his work; and this contract is broken, and an action lies for the breach of it, so soon as he, through negligence or ignorance of his business, delivers a false certificate of title. Where indemnity alone is expressed, it has always been held that damage must be sustained before a recovery can be had; but, where there is a positive agreement to do the act which is to prevent damage to plaintiff, there the action lies if defendant neglects or refuses to do the act. Re Negus, 7 Wend. 499; Ham v. Hill, 29 Mo. 276; Rowsey v. Lynch, 61 Mo. 560." Also, in such a case, where the petition alleges the breach of duty and also special and consequential damages, the breach of the duty, and not the consequential damage, is the cause of action. Moore v. Juvenal, 92 Pa. 484.

The petition alleges the insolvency of plaintiff's grantor, and also with some detail sets up her liability on a warranty deed which she had made to the property, and under the authorities above noted, we think there can be no doubt about the liability of the defendants to her for the damage which she suffered by reason of any negligence on their part in making for her a faulty and erroneous abstract. If an abstracter could not be held liable under conditions presented and insisted on in this case, there would be practically no protection in an abstract to those who secure and pay for the same, for the purpose of relying thereon in the purchase of real estate.

The former opinion of this court in this case, reported in 105 Pac. 649, is reversed. The cause is accordingly remanded to the District Court of Oklahoma County, with instructions to set aside the judgment heretofore rendered, and proceed in accordance herewith.

Turner, Kane, Hayes, and Williams,
JJ., concur.
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

SALLIE G. WAGGONER, Appt.,

v.

JOHN P. WAGGONER et al.

(— Va. —, 68 S. E. 990.)

Will — property of devisee — election.

1. Under a will devising by one clause the homestead in which testator had only an undivided moiety, the other moiety belonging to his wife, to her for life, and by other clauses giving the rest of his property to her for life, she is required to elect between her right in the homestead and her rights under the will.

Same — mistake of fact — effect.

2. The claim of a widow owning a half interest in the homestead property, under the will of her husband, who owned the other half interest, which gives her a life estate in the whole homestead and in other property, does not amount to an election which will destroy her individual right, if she was ignorant of the fact that loss of her right would result from claiming under the will, where the other party can be placed in substantially the same situation as if no election had been attempted, since her act must be regarded as under misconception of fact.

Election — statute — time limit.

3. A statute requiring a widow to renounce the provisions of her husband's will within a certain time after his death, if at all, has no application to her duty to elect between the will, which attempts to dispose of her individual property and her independent rights in such property.

(September 15, 1910.)

Note. — Devise or bequest of property in which testator had but a part interest as putting co-owner, who is a beneficiary, to his election.

This note aims to include only those cases in which it appeared that the testator had a devisable interest in the property which he attempted to dispose of, and not those where his interest in the property expired at his death, as, for example, where the property sought to be disposed of was community property, or was held by the testator and beneficiary as tenants by the entirety.

All the authorities are agreed upon the rule of law applied in the above decision that the doctrine of election is not applicable to a gift of property by a testator having only a part interest therein, unless he has so expressed his disposition thereof as to show an attempt to give the whole of such property.

One of the clearest expressions of this rule of law is in Pratt v. Douglas, 38 N. J. Eq. 516, where the court said: "Where a testator has only a limited interest in property he affects to dispose of by his will, as, for instance, an undivided share,

A PPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Corporation Court of the City of Roanoke in defendants' favor in a suit to construe the will of John P. Waggoner, deceased, to recover certain advances alleged to have been made to decedent's estate, and to partition such estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hall, Woods, & Jackson for appellant.

Messrs. C. B. Moomaw and H. M. Moomaw, for appellees:

He who accepts a benefit under a deed or will must adopt the contents of the whole instrument, conform to all its provisions, and relinquish every right inconsistent with it.

Penn v. Guggenheimer, 76 Va. 846.

The party must elect where it appears that there has been a disposition of the property of another to a third party, where there is a valid gift of the testator's property to such third person.

Eaton, Eq. Jur. 180-185; Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 464, 489; Penn v. Guggenheimer, 76 Va. 839; Kinnaird v. Williams, 8 Leigh, 400; Wilson v. Townshend, 2 Ves. Jr. 697.

To permit complainant to claim her undivided half interest in lot 15, section 9, and also a life estate in the residue of lot 15, section 9, and a life estate in lot 14, section 9, which was a part of the home property, and her life estate in the other property described in the will, would have the effect of destroying the whole scheme of the will. Craig v. Walthall, 14 Gratt. 518.

The petitioner had made an election under the will.

Penn v. Guggenheimer, 76 Va. 850; Adsit v. Adsit, 2 Johns. Ch. 448; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1097, 1098.

there is a distinction between a gift in general words of description, such as 'all my lands,' or 'all my estate,' and the like, and a gift of specific property. In cases of the first class, an obligation to elect does not arise, for the testator's language can have full effect when applied only to his share or interest, and he is presumed to have intended to give only the property he had power to dispose of. In cases of the second class, it cannot be said that, upon every specific devise or bequest, a duty to elect arises. A case for an election by the co-owner of the property so given, who is a beneficiary under the testator's will, will be presented only where the testator's gift of it to another is so expressed by words of description as to import an intent to give to the latter the whole of the common property in its entirety."

And in Ditch v. Sennott, 117 Ill. 363, 7 N. E. 636, it was held that while it was true that the doctrine of election has no application to a case where the testator had but a part interest in the estate, and such interest only was devised, yet if it was apparent from the terms of the will that the intention of the testator was to devise the whole of the estate, including the interest of his co-owner, then the doctrine of election would apply, if the latter were a devisee under the will.

And in Penn v. Guggenheimer, 76 Va. 830, it was held that where the testator disposed of property not entirely his own, the presumption was that he intended to dispose of his share, and nothing more, unless the intention was "clearly manifested by demonstration plain, or necessary implication, on the part of the testator, to dispose of the whole estate." To quote further from the opinion: "Where the testator proposes to give the whole thing itself, using language which, by reasonable intention, must necessarily describe and define the whole corpus of the thing in which his particular interest exists as a distinct and identified piece of property, then an intention to bestow the whole, and not merely the testator's individual share, must be inferred, and a case for an election arises."

And in Miller v. Thurgood, 33 Beav. 406, it was declared to be the rule that if a testator having an undivided interest in a particular property devised that property specifically to his co-owner, a case of election arose, and the devisee must choose between his own interest in the property and the interest he took under the will; but that if the testator did not dispose of it specifically, but by general words, such as, "all my land and hereditaments," or the like, no case for election arose, because there was other property of the testator's sufficient to satisfy the devise.

And the application of this rule was thus illustrated in Sanford v. Jackson, 10 Paige, 266: "If the testator should devise all his real and personal estate to his children, in general terms, to be equally divided between them, such a devise would not be held to include a particular estate which one of the children had in some of his father's real property, so as to compel him to elect between that particular estate and the portion devised to him by will. On the other hand, if the devise to the children was of a particular farm, and of all the testator's personal property, to be equally divided between them, one of the children would not be permitted to set up a particular estate in that farm as belonging to himself, and also to have an equal division of all the rest of the property except that particular estate, which was neither excepted nor referred to in the will, but he would be put to his election."

In accordance with these principles it has been held that a co-owner of property devised was put to his election between his own interest in the property and the provision for his benefit in the will:

—where the testator, in disposing of the property in which a legatee claimed an interest as a partner, described it "as my drug business," it appearing that the mani-

Buchanan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

John P. Waggoner, the husband of the appellant, departed this life in September, 1904, testate. At the time of his death he was the owner of some personal estate, but not sufficient to pay his debts. He was also the fee simple owner of a house and lot, of a lot adjoining and used with the dwelling house in which he resided at the time of his death, and an undivided half interest in the dwelling house property; the other half being owned by his wife. He left a widow, the appellant, three children by a former wife, who were adults, and one child, an infant, by his last wife. By his will he disposed of all of his property in the following manner:

"First: After all my lawful debts are paid and discharged, I give and bequeath to my beloved wife, Sallie G. Waggoner, the dwelling house and land connected therewith which we now occupy as a homestead, and everything in and about said premises, the above to be held by her during her life time, or such portion thereof as she may remain my widow.

"Second: She shall have all moneys or any other property that may at any time come into my possession, this all to be used by her for the benefit of herself and my legal minor heirs, and at her death or marriage, all property of whatever kind shall be used for the benefit of my legal minor heirs. And after all my children shall have arrived at the age of twenty-one years, all property of whatsoever kind shall be equally divided among the same or their legal heirs (provided, however, that my wife, Sallie G. Waggoner, still survives me and remains my widow). The property shall not be divided so long as she shall live and remain as above stated.

"Third: I hereby appoint my wife, Sallie G. Waggoner, to be my executrix. And in case of her death or marriage, then the oldest of my surviving sons shall act as my executor."

The main question involved in this case depends upon the construction to be placed upon the first clause of the will. If by that clause the testator intended to devise the whole of the dwelling house or homestead property to the appellant, and not merely his undivided interest therein, it was incumbent upon the appellant to make her election, since she cannot claim both her own estate in that property and the provisions made for her by the will; for it is well settled that he who accepts a benefit under a will must accept the contents of the whole instrument, conforming to all its provisions, and relinquishing every right inconsistent therewith. Penn v. Guggenheimer, 76 Va. 839, 846, 847, and authorities cited. But, in order to make a case of election, it is equally well settled that the intention of the testator to give that which is not his own must be clear and unmistakable. It must appear from his language, which is unequivocal and which leaves no room for doubt as to the intention of the test intention of the testator as to such property could not possibly have operation if the adverse claim of a partnership interest asserted by the legatee were established. Lamar v. McLaren, 107 Ga. 591, 34 S. E. 116;

—where the land devised was described as containing the amount of acreage of the whole tract, though it was further described as "to include all the land I own in" such tract. Ditch v. Sennott, supra; —where there was a bequest of the proceeds "from all insurance policies on my life, except from the policies wherein my daughter (naming her) is the beneficiary," it appearing that but one of the policies was payable to the estate, and that one of the beneficiaries of the two policies in question (which were other than those expressly named in the exception) was a child who was a beneficiary under the will. Van Schaack v. Leonard, 164 Ill. 602, 45 N. E. 982;

—where the land devised was described as that purchased from its former owner, naming him, and was specifically designated by its number in the plan of the town, so that, in the words of the court, it was "impossible to satisfy the terms of its description without supposing that she intended to pass the lot as an entirety." Isler v. Isler, 88 N. C. 581;
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

—where the testator owned but a third of the property in question, which was known as the "home place," the other two thirds belonging to his wife, and in disposing of it by will, used the following language: "It is my will and desire that my wife should retain the home place, and at her death it should be the property of my son, . . . which I hereby give to him, his heirs, and assigns forever." Penn v. Guggenheimer, supra;

—where the will described the property in question as "my farm," and went on to state that the devise thereof to his wife (the co-owner) should "be so construed as to give her only an estate for her natural life, and I devise and bequeath to my beloved daughters . . . said real estate after the death of my said beloved wife." Tolley v. Poteet, 62 W. Va. 231, 57 S. E. 811;

—where the property devised was described as "all that my freehold messuage or tenement, with the garden and all and singular, and the appurtenances thereunto belonging." Padbury v. Clark, 2 Macn. & G. 298;

—where the will read: "All that his messuage, tenement, and estate." Fitzsimons v. Fitzsimons, 28 Beav. 417;

—where the property was described as "all and every his freehold messuages or testator. Penn v. Guggenheimer, supra, and authorities cited. It is not necessary that such intention should be expressly declared, but it may be gathered from the whole and every part of the instrument. But the will must be reasonably construed, even where by so doing the parties are put to an election. Penn v. Guggenheimer, supra, and cases cited; Wilkinson v. Dent, L. R. 6 Ch. 339.

The difficulty of ascertaining the testator's intent is generally, if not always, greater where he has a partial interest in the property devised than where he undertakes to dispose of an estate in which he has no interest. In the former case the presumption is that he intended to dispose of that which he might properly devise, and nothing more; and this presumption will always prevail unless the intention is clearly manifested by demonstration plain, or necessary implication, on the part of the testator to dispose of the whole estate, including interests other than his own. Usually where he has an undivided interest in certain property, and he uses general words in disposing of it, as "all my lands," or "all my estate," no case of election arises; for it does not plainly appear that he intended to dispose of anything not his own. Penn v. Guggenheimer, supra, and authorities cited; Note to Noys v. Mor-daunt, 1 White & T. Lead. Cas. in Eq. 514, and cases cited. But if a testator having an undivided interest in a particular property devises the property specifically to his co-owner, a case of election does arise, and the devisee must elect between his own interest in the property and the interest given him by the will. Same authorities; Miller v. Thurgood, 33 Beav. 496; Padbury v. Clark, 2 Macn. & G. 298.

Let us apply these principles to the case under consideration. By the first clause of the will, the testator devises the dwelling house and land connected therewith occupied by him and his wife as a homestead. That property consisted of two parcels,—one lot upon which the dwelling house was situated, and in which he only owned an undivided moiety, and another lot connected with and used as a part of the homestead, of which he was the sole owner. The devise is not limited to his interest in the lands devised. The property is described specifically as that occupied as a homestead, and as an entirety. The language of the devise is such as would be suitable in disposing of the whole property. It is ample, complete, and correct for that purpose, but wholly inapplicable to a gift of a moiety merely in the lot on which the dwelling house was located.

It seems to use that there can be no reasonable doubt that it was the intention of the testator to dispose of the entire homestead property.

Having reached the conclusion that the appellant, by the provisions of her husband's will, was put to her election, and tenement, cottages, hereditaments, and premises situate" in a certain named place "or elsewhere." Miller v. Thurgood, supra; —where the will described the property as "my farm" without (in the words of the court) "the slightest reference to the fact that the interest of the testator was only an undivided moiety." Howells v. Jenkins, 2 Johns. & H. 706;

—where the will described the property as "all that and those of the lands of C." Daxon v. Steele, 2 Jones (Ir.) 178.

In Colvert v. Wood, 93 Tenn. 454, 25 S. W. 963, devisees were held to have made an election where they declined to take under the will, and recovered by suit an undivided share in the lands devised to themselves and others, upon the theory that these lands were the property of a partnership composed of the testator, themselves, and a third person; but the language of the will is not shown.

On the other hand, in Leonard v. Steele, 4 Barb. 20, a testator's co-owner was held not to be put to his election. The opinion, however, fails to show the language of the will in that regard, though the court declared that the doctrine of election was not applicable to cases where the testator had only a part interest in the estate disposed 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of by him, unless an intention was clearly manifested in the will to dispose of the whole estates, including the interest of co-owners; and that therefore he would be presumed to have intended to dispose of only that part which he might lawfully dispose of, and no more.

And the same enunciation of the rule was made in Beal v. Miller, 1 Hun, 390, in which a co-owner of the testator, whose legacy under the will was of trifling value compared to his interest in the property devised, was held not to be put to his election, though the property devised was specifically described by name and as containing the acreage of the whole tract.

And in Gregory v. Gates, 30 Gratt. 83, the children of a testator by a former wife, who were part owners with him in a certain property, were held not to be put to their election by a will which declared: "I wish my estate kept together and managed by my executors," for the support of the widow and children, and the will further gave the executors power to sell any property of the estate except the property which he owned with his children as aforesaid, specifically naming it, which was the only reference made in the will to that property.

J. A. C.

that she could not and cannot choose both her own estate and the bequests made in her favor, the next question is: Has she made such election?

The proof of an election may be express, or it may be implied from the acts and conduct of the party, but in either case it must have been with knowledge of the party's rights and with the intention of making an election. See Showalter v. Showalter, 107 Va. 713, 720, 60 S. E. 48, and authorities cited.

There was no express election in this case. The acts and conduct of the appellant in holding and using the property actually owned by her husband, and in claiming it in her bill, show that she was claiming under the will. But there is nothing in her acts and conduct, nor in the allegations of her bill, which show that, in claiming her husband's property given her by the will, she knew that she must surrender her fee simple interest in the dwelling house property, or that she intended to do so. There is nothing to show that she has not always placed the same construction upon the will that she now contends for, and that she did not in good faith shape her conduct by such interpretation. So far as the record shows, no one placed a different construction upon it prior to the filing of the answer of the adult appellees, or that she was ever called upon by any party in interest to elect which of the two interests she would take,—her own fee simple interest in the dwelling house property or the interest given her by the will.

Where an election is once made by a party bound to elect, either expressly or impliedly, with full knowledge of all the facts, it binds him and those who claim under him, although made in ignorance of the law. Penn v. Guggenheimer, supra, 70 Va. 850, 851. Ignorance of law is no excuse for a party's conduct. But, as was held in Burton v. Haden, 108 Va. 51, 56, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1038, 60 S. E. 736, the maxim that ignorance of the law is no excuse is confined to matters of the general rules of law, and has no application to the mistakes of persons as to their own private rights and interests. The latter, as was said in that case, stand upon the footing of mistakes of fact.

"It is true," said Lord Chancellor Westbury in Spread v. Morgan, 11 H. L. Cas. 588, 602, "as a general proposition, that knowledge of the law must be imputed to every person, but it would be too much to impute knowledge of this rule of equity, election."

Treating this rule of equity as a matter of fact, and not as a matter of law, it would seem that the appellant's election to claim under the will of her husband was made under a misconception of her rights. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Where a party has elected to claim under an instrument under a misconception of fact, such election may not be binding.

In 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 515, it is said: "To raise an inference of election from the party's conduct merely, it must appear that he knew of his right to elect, and not merely of the instrument giving such right, and that he had full knowledge of all the facts concerning the properties. As an election is necessarily a definite choice by the party to take one of the properties, and to reject the other, his conduct, in order that an election may be inferred, must be done with an intention to elect, and must show such an intention."

In 1 Jarman on Wills, *435, it is said: "In order to presume an election from the acts of any person, that person must be shown to have had a full knowledge of all the requisite circumstances, as to the amount of the different properties, his own rights in respect of them, etc., and a person having elected under a misconception is entitled to make a fresh election."

In 2 Minor, Inst. 4th ed. at page 1006, quoted with approval in Showalter v. Showalter, supra, it is said: "It is well established that no one shall be constrained to make an election until the interests to which the election relates are clearly defined and their relative values ascertained, and an election made before that is done will, for the most part, be disregarded, at least if made under mistaken impressions as to the facts; but only upon the terms (supposing the election to have been unambiguously made) of restoring other persons; whose right are affected by the party's act of election, to the same situation substantially as if the act had not taken place." And at page 1008 it is said: "Clear proof of an election made must be furnished, and ambiguous acts and conduct will in general not be so construed, unless in those cases where the interests of others have been affected by the acts, and require that they should be interpreted to amount to an election. . . ."

Where a person bound to elect between two properties continues in possession or enjoyment or receipt of the rents and profits of both, without being called upon by the other party interested to elect, this conduct indicates no intention of taking one and rejecting the other, and does not therefore amount to an election. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. 1st ed. § 575, citing, among other cases, Spread v. Morgan, supra. See also Padbury v. Clark, supra.

From these authorities it would seem clear that, where a party elects to take under a will, under a misconception of fact as to his rights and interests under the will, such election will be disregarded where the other parties affected by such election can be placed substantially in the same situation as if no such election had been made.

The only person affected by the election made by the appellant is her infant son, and nothing has grown out of her action which will work wrong or injury to him.

It is earnestly insisted by the appellees' counsel that it is too late now for the appellant to make a new election, since the statute (Code 1904, § 2271) requires that a widow must renounce, if at all, the provisions of her husband's will within one year after its admission to probate.

That section has no application to a case like this. It was "intended to provide how a widow must proceed who desires to reject the provisions made for her by her husband's will out of property other than her own, and to take such interest in his lands as the law gives her. Where a testator disposes of property belonging to his wife in her own right, and also makes provision for her by his will, she has the same right of election as to such property as any other person, and whether or not she has elected to take under or against the will is to be determined as in other cases." Pence v. Life, 104 Va. 518, 521, 52 S. E. 257, and cases cited; Showalter v. Showalter, supra.

We are of opinion that the appellant has not yet made an irrevocable election, and that the trial court erred in holding that she had.

We are further of opinion that the trial court in the decree appealed from properly construed the will, and that the cross error assigned is without merit.

For the error in the decree holding that the appellant had made a binding election, the decree must be reversed, and the cause remanded to be further proceeded in not in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion, and with liberty to the appellant to make her election between her fee simple interest in the dwelling house property and the life estate or less in all the property disposed of by her husband's will.

Reversed.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

RICHARD MCGREGOR, Appt.,
v.

HENRY HARM et al., Respts.

(— N. D. —, 125 N. W. 885.)

Servant — extra work — compensation.

1. Compensation for work, within the scope of a regular employment, in addition to the usual but not fixed hours for a day's work, cannot be recovered in the absence of a contract therefor, unless the contract was entered into in reference to a controlling custom.

Headnotes by MORGAN, Ch. J.

Note. — See note, post, 652.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same — discharge — question of law.

2. Where the evidence is undisputed as to the cause for a discharge from service under an existing contract, it is a question of law for the court as to the sufficiency of such cause.

Same — refusal to work overtime.

3. Where the employer requests the servant to do additional work not unreasonable in view of the nature of the employment, and the servant refuses such request without cause, such refusal will justify his discharge by the master.

Same — contract of employment — construction.

4. Where a contract for services is entered into for a sum certain per week, with an additional sum to be paid if the service is continued for one year, and the servant remains sober, it is a contract for employment by the week, and not an entire one for a year.

Appeal — reversal — immaterial error.

5. Evidence of payment in full for all services considered, and it is held therefrom that it was not error to refuse to direct the jury to find in plaintiff's favor for a small balance of 39 cents, claimed to be unpaid.

Same — nominal sum.

6. No question of costs being involved, an error affecting that small sum would not be considered, as the principle of de minimis non curat lex applies.

Same — striking evidence — harmless error.

7. Question as to whether it was error to refuse to strike out the answer of a witness, on the ground that it was not the best evidence, considered, and held not to be prejudicially erroneous.

(March 8, 1910.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Grand Forks County in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover compensation alleged to be due plaintiff under an employment contract. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. H. A. Bronson, D. T. Collins, and L. A. Chance for appellant.

Messrs. Skulason & Burtness, for respondents:

The extra $5 per week constituted a bonus, payable only at a certain time and on certain conditions, which time never arrived, and which conditions were never performed.

26 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 1037, 1038.

The question as to whether or not the discharge was justified was one of law for the court.

Von Heyne v. Tompkins, 89 Minn. 77, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 524, 93 N. W. 901; Fuller v. Northern Pacific Elevator Co. 2 N. D. 220, 50 N. W. 359.

Unless there is an express agreement to pay for extra work, or a uniform and notorious custom sufficient to warrant the presumption that a contract was made with reference thereto, a servant cannot ordinarily recover additional compensation for extra work within the scope of his employment.

26 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1036; Luske v. Hotchkiss, 37 Conn. 219, 9 Am. Rep. 314; Levi v. Reid, 91 Ill. App. 430; Mathison v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 72 App. Div. 254, 76 N. Y. Supp. 89; Kopplitz v. Powell, 56 Wis. 671, 14 N. W. 831; Re Steam Dredge No. 1, 87 Fed. 760; Forster v. Green, 111 Mich. 264, 69 N. W. 647; Schurr v. Savigny, 85 Mich. 144, 48 N. W. 547; Cany v. Halleck, 9 Cal. 198; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 19.

Morgan, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action for an alleged balance of wages. The plaintiff was employed by the defendants as bartender in East Grand Forks, Minnesota, and worked as such from April 23 to August 26, 1907, for the agreed wages of $25 per week. On August 26th a new contract was entered into, under which the defendants were to pay the plaintiff $20 per week, and, if he worked one year and kept sober, he was to receive $5 per week in addition. According to the record, there is no substantial controversy as to the terms of the contract. A careful reading of the plaintiff's evidence clearly shows the above to have been the substance of the contract. In respect to this contract, one of the defendants testifies as follows: "At that time we made a new arrangement with him to pay him $20 a week salary, and, if he remained sober in our employ one year, we agreed to give him $250 at the end of the year. I cut him from $25 to $20 per week in order to keep him sober." In reference to the contract, the plaintiff testifies as follows: "At that time Mr. Oeschger told me he wanted to put me back to work, and he told me he would pay me the same wages he had been paying me. That was $25. He says, 'We will pay you $20 every week,' and at the end of the year they would pay me this holdback, and I told them this was satisfactory to me. That is, at the end of the year, if I stayed one year, I was to get an amount equal to $5 per week through the year, and if I kept sober." The plaintiff worked to the satisfaction of the defendants under the new contract from its date to March 30, 1908. On that day the plaintiff refused to work for an hour after his quitting hour that day, at the request of one of the defendants. On the next morning the defendants discharged him, and this action was brought to recover the sum of $163.95 as the balance claimed to be due on the new contract. The action is brought to recover the $5 per week and for certain extra time that plaintiff worked. The answer is a general denial and an allegation of payment in full. The trial court submitted the question of payment as to one item to the jury, under proper instructions, and they found for the defendants. Plaintiff appeals, and assigns five errors as grounds for a reversal of the judgment. We will notice the controlling assignments.

Some of them are based on the action of the court in reference to additional compensation for working outside or in addition to the regular hours. There was no showing whatever that the contract provided for pay for such extra work, if it may be called extra work, in view of the character of the employment, and that the working hours were not regular. In the absence of such showing, we deem it well settled as a proposition of law that no extra compensation is allowable. There was no error, therefore, in refusing to submit the question of compensation for working on some days more than the regular time during which the plaintiff was generally asked to work.

It is claimed that the plaintiff was discharged without cause, and is therefore entitled to pay for the $5 per week during each week from August 26th. The facts in reference to the discharge are not in dispute. The trial court held from such undisputed evidence that the discharge was for cause. We affirm that conclusion after a careful examination of the evidence. One of the defendants requested the plaintiff to remain at work on March 30th while said defendant went to supper, which would be about an hour's extra time. The plaintiff refused to do so. No fixed hours of work for each day, nor the hours during which the plaintiff should work during the day, were specified in the contract. There were at times three bartenders, and at others two, and the hours during which each should work were fixed by the defendants, and these varied at times. And during a part of the time the hours during which the plaintiff should work were fixed, and were at times varied at the request of the defendant. March 30th, when this request was made of the plaintiff, was an election day in said city, and plaintiff had only been on duty from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M., excepting an absence for dinner. During his employment, plaintiff had occasionally worked twelve hours, and on several occasions had worked more than the allotted hours, at the request of the defendants. Nothing had ever been said by the plaintiff or defendants as to special compensation for service during those additional hours. In view of the nature of the business and the fact that the contract did not provide how many hours should be considered a day's work, and no other fact appearing from which it may be reasonably deduced that a certain number of hours should be deemed a day's work, or that the plaintiff could not be called upon to work longer hours, there is no foundation for the claim that the discharge was without cause. On this day, plaintiff had only worked seven and one-half hours, or, at the most, eight hours. We deem the refusal to comply with the defendant's request an unreasonable one, and it justified the defendants in discharging the plaintiff. As to whether the discharge was justified, the evidence is undisputed. It is therefore a question of law whether the discharge was without cause. There was no question of fact in respect to the cause of the discharge. It was therefore not error to take that question away from the jury. We think it would have been error to submit it to the jury.

Considerable is said in the briefs as to whether the contract in question is an entire one or severable. In view of the fact that we find that the plaintiff refused to perform the contract without just cause, it is immaterial as to the nature of the contract. If the plaintiff had been discharged without cause, a different question would have been presented. We think it clear, however, that this was not a contract for a year at $20 per week. It was a contract for $20 per week, and, if the plaintiff worked a year, he would be entitled to an additional $5 per week if he remained sober. Under this contract, the plaintiff could have quit at any time without affecting the obligation of the parties at all, except as to paying the extra money. There is a dispute as to whether the plaintiff has been paid for one day, being the first Monday he worked under the new contract. The trial court expressly submitted this question to the jury, and it found for the defendants. The first check which plaintiff received under the new contract was for $24.25, and it is defendant's contention that this was a payment in full under the old contract and up to the first Monday, at 7 o'clock P. M. under the new contract. Plaintiff has been paid $20 each week since said day by checks which show that they are in full for all services up to date. The plaintiff is uncertain as to whether the $24.25 check does or does not include pay for this one day, and is uncertain as to what it did include. His acceptance of these checks each week since August 26th is strong evidence that he has been paid for this day, and, the jury having so found, the verdict should not be disturbed.

We do not think that there is any question of quantum meruit compensation in this case. The discharge from service was for an adequate cause, and no claim for the $5 per week extra arises, as plaintiff has not performed the contract so as to entitle him to any more than the payment of the $20 per week, and this is admitted to have been paid.

It is also claimed that the trial court erred in refusing to direct a verdict for the plaintiff for the sum of 39 cents, claimed to be due the plaintiff. It is claimed that the check for $24.25 should have been given for $24.64. The weekly checks from August 26th were given and accepted for full payment for all services up to date. The checks show this fact, and the witness Thompson so testifies. The plaintiff does not testify what the items composing the check for $24.25 were, and is unable to state what this sum was made up of. From April 26th to March 30th the parties dealt with each other in a manner showing unequivocally that there had been full payment of all sums due on the old contract, and on the new contract as well. This check was made up of eight days' work under the new contract and one-half day's work under the old contract, and was undoubtedly intended to include all sums due the plaintiff on account of all services at its date. We do not therefore think that it was error to refuse to submit this question to the jury, in view of the conduct of the plaintiff in accepting these weekly checks as full payment. If, however, it clearly appeared that there was due to the plaintiff the sum of 39 cents, we should not deem ourselves called upon to reverse the judgment for that reason, as the only question is whether the sum of 39 cents has been paid. It is a question where the doctrine or principle, De minimis non curat lex, should be applied. No question of costs is involved. Hass v. Prescott, 38 Wis. 146; Sutherland, Damages, 2d ed. § 11; Kenyon v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 100 Cal. 454, 35 Pac. 75.

It is claimed that it was error not to grant plaintiff's motion to strike out certain portions of the testimony of the witness Thompson, who was the bookkeeper of the defendants during the time that the plaintiff worked for them. Thompson drew the check for $24.25, and testified that it was delivered and accepted as payment in full for all past services. His entire testimony, considered together, shows that he was testifying from memory principally, although on cross-examination he stated that all he knew about the matter was from the books. In view of the positive testimony of this witness that the plaintiff accepted this check as full payment, we do not think that it was prejudicially erroneous to refuse to strike out that portion of the witness's evidence relating to the payment of all sums due on March 30th. If this testimony had been stricken out, the plaintiff's testimony would still remain upon the record as to this check, and also Thompson's testimony as to the fact that the plaintiff had accepted this check in full payment for all services. There was no motion to strike out all of the testimony of Thompson. In view of this fact, it was not prejudicial error to refuse to strike out the testimony on the ground that it was not the best evidence.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

All concur.

Petition for rehearing denied April 13, 1910.

Note. — Under what circumstances is a servant entitled to recover remuneration for extra work.

- I. Recovery in the absence of an express contract to pay remuneration.
 - a. Generally, 652.
 - b. Right of recovery considered with reference to the character of the extra work.
 1. Recovery denied, 653.
 2. Recovery allowed, 656.
 - c. Right of recovery considered with reference to the time when the services were rendered.
 1. Work done on week days. Effect of decisions under the common law, 658.
 2. Work done on Sundays, 659.
 - d. Recovery for extra work performed by governmental and municipal employees, 660.
 - e. Recovery for extra work in civil-law jurisdictions, 661.
- II. Express agreements to pay for extra work, 661.

I. Recovery in the absence of an express contract to pay remuneration.

a. Generally.

It is not disputed that, under some circumstances, a person employed to perform certain work for a stated remuneration, during a specified period, may be entitled to recover additional compensation for extra services rendered at the request of his employer, although there may have been no stipulation that those services should be paid for.¹

But the enforceability of a claim for compensation in this instance is not determined on the same footing as in a case from which the element of an express contract defining the regular duties of the employee, and the wages to be paid for the discharge of those duties, is entirely absent. The nature of the difference between the principles which are controlling in the two classes of cases is indicated by the following statement: "The rule of law that, from a request to perform services, an implied promise arises to pay what the services are worth, does not apply where the services are rendered by one in the employ of the person making the request; in such case the implication is that the services were rendered under the contract of employment, particularly if the services are of the same character as those embraced in that contract."²

The effect of this doctrine manifestly is that, in an action to recover additional

¹ Ross v. Hardin, 79 N. Y. 84.

In one case the doctrine was broadly laid down that "if the plaintiff rendered services the jury could infer an agreement, express or implied, to pay him;" and that "the mere fact of rendering services useful to the defendants would furnish prima facie evidence of their acceptance, and, in the absence of some proof to the contrary, the law would raise an obligation to pay him what they were worth, there being no proof of special value." Spencer v. Trafford, 42 Md. 1, holding that the trial judge had properly rejected a prayer for an instruction to the effect that, "even if the jury believe that the plaintiff rendered extra services, not provided for in his contract, he cannot recover for said extra services unless there was an express or implied agreement to pay for the same." This ruling is clearly opposed to the general current of authority. No authorities were cited.

"A contract for a fixed salary, and an implied assumpsit, cannot stand together: otherwise any clerk engaged at a fixed sal-

² Cincinnati, I. & C. R. Co. v. Clarkson, 7 Ind. 595 (instruction to the opposite effect was held to be erroneous in regard to employment to attend to a branch of a business); Isham v. Parker, 3 Wash. 755, 29 Pac. 835.
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

compensation for extra work performed during the period covered by a special contract, the employee, instead of being aided by a favorable presumption, as in the cases in which no such contract has been made by the parties, has the burden of overcoming an adverse presumption arising from the existence of the contract.³

It has been laid down that, except in that class of cases in which the right to recover is conceded on the ground of the essential distinction between the character of the extra services and that of the services stipulated in the special contract, a claimant cannot succeed in his action, unless he proves an express agreement to pay for the extra work.⁴

It has been held that, in an action against an independent contractor for work and labor, the plaintiff cannot recover for labor in excess of what was called for by his contract, occasioned by his own unskillfulness or negligence.⁵ The same doctrine would doubtless be applied in the case of a servant.

b. Right of recovery considered with reference to the character of the extra work.

1. Recovery denied.

The doctrine upon which several decisions proceed is that, in the absence of proof of an express agreement, an action to recover compensation for extra services performed at the request of the employer cannot be maintained by a person hired for a definite term at a certain rate of wages, if the services in question were essentially of the same character as those which the plaintiff was performing in the ordinary course of his employment;⁶ or were so inary would be entitled to recover in an action of assumpsit for any increased labor he might be put to, in consequence of an extension of his employer's business." Chandler v. State, 5 Harr. & J. 284.

See also Schurr v. Savigny, 85 Mich. 144, 48 N. W. 547 (where it was laid down that the existence of an express contract for one year, at a stated weekly compensation, excludes any implied agreement or understanding about wages), and the extract given in subd. b, infra, from the opinion in Voorhees v. Combs, 33 N. J. L. 494.

But this conception cannot, as it would seem, be reconciled with the standpoint disclosed by most of the decisions. It would render the servant's inability an inference of law, whereas the authorities, generally speaking, merely regard him as being required to overcome a presumption of fact. It seems to involve, moreover, a petitio principii; for the doctrine as to the incompatibility of an express and an implied agreement is applicable only to cases in which the subject-matter of each is the same. Where a claim for extra services is involved, the very question to be decided is whether the express contract does extend to them.

³ For a formal affirmation of the doctrine that where services are rendered by one in the employ of another, even upon request, the presumption is that they were rendered under the contract of employment, unless the contrary is shown, see Cooper v. Brooklyn Trust Co. 109 App. Div. 211, 96 N. Y. Supp. 56.

In a case where a request is made to a stranger to perform certain work, "the law generally implies an agreement to pay a reasonable remuneration, in the absence of circumstances showing that the service was meant to be gratuitous. In the case of the master and servant, the presumption is the other way." Richmond, J., in Mahoney v. R. 8 New Zealand L. R. (S. C.) 462.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The following statement from Bishop on Contracts, § 222, was adopted in Houghton v. Kittleman, 7 Kan. App. 207, 52 Pac. 898: "If one under a salary or other regular pay performs, without any express understanding as to compensation, duties in excess of what the contract of employment demands, they will be presumed to have been rendered under the contract or voluntarily, and the law will create no promise to pay for them."

⁴ Voorhees v. Combs, 33 N. J. L. 494; Mathison v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 72 App. Div. 254, 76 N. Y. Supp. 89 (for both these cases, see subd. b, infra.)

In Stadermann v. Heins, 78 App. Div. 563, 79 N. Y. Supp. 674, while the plaintiff was engaged in the performance of a special contract, at certain weekly wages, for the nursing of the decedent, the latter executed, but did not deliver, an instrument stating that it was her desire that the claimant should receive $250 for services in nursing her. The court disallowed a claim for this sum, taking the position that it was valueless as a testamentary disposition, and that it was neither a substitute for the existing agreement, nor controlling evidence of the terms under which the plaintiff was working, or of the amount which would be due as a debt after the maker's death.

⁵ Fruin v. Crystal R. Co. 89 Mo. 397, 14 S. W. 557.

⁶ A leading case on this aspect of extra services is Bell v. Drummond, Peake, N. P. Cas. 45. There a clerk to the commissioners of the land tax had been appointed clerk to the commissioners for managing other taxes. It was held that his deputy, who performed all the duties of his office, was not therefore entitled to an increase of salary. Lord Kenyon said that, had the plaintiff's case rested wholly on the fact of the new duty being imposed upon him, he should not think it such a case as would have entitled him to come into a court of justice for an additional stipend on a quantimately connected with his usual duties that he may reasonably be supposed to have contemplated them as being a possible incident of the work for which he was engaged.⁷

It is manifest that under no circum-

tum meruit; if it was, every porter in a shop, or clerk in an office, would, upon an increase of his master's business, be equally entitled to demand an increase of wages. But upon the evidence produced, it appeared clearly that the testator himself thought that he ought to pay something, and the only matter in controversy between him and the plaintiff was the quantum of the additional allowance.

In Ross v. Hardin, 70 N. Y. 94, affirming 12 Jones & S. 26, H., two days before his death, requested R., his confidential clerk, to bring to H.'s house a box of money and valuable papers, and thereupon to take charge thereof and put it in a safe deposit, all of which R. did, and, upon the appointment of the administratrix, eight days after H.'s death, delivered to her the box. R. sued her for such services, claiming compensation as upon a quantum meruit, besides his salary of $60 per month, but on the trial set up no claim to special employment, and was nonsuited. The court of appeals did not determine whether a contract may be made by a person during his life, for the preservation and safety of his property after his death and until administrators are appointed, but held that, if such a contract can be so made with an employee who has had similar services to perform during the life of the employer, it will be presumed, in the absence of a stipulation for an increase, that the same rate of compensation paid before the death of the employer was to continue thereafter. The plaintiff was held to be entitled to his salary for eight days; but the court refused to grant a new trial, for the reason that it would be of no benefit to him, where so small a sum was concerned.

A person employed as the secretary of a private corporation, at a fixed rate of compensation, cannot demand extra pay for services in that capacity, although they were not anticipated at the time of his appointment, and were not enumerated in the charter or by-laws. The fair construction of his contract is that he will do whatever his employers may have occasion to employ a secretary about. Carr v. Chartiers Coal Co. 25 Pa. 337, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 476 (extra services related to the numbering, filling, and countersigning of coupon bonds).

One employed by an insurance company as cashier cannot recover extra pay for acting as inspector of risks, in the absence of an express agreement therefor. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Goodrich, 74 Mo. App. 355. The jury were held to have been erroneously instructed that, if they found that defendant was employed by the company as its cashier, that that employment did not embrace services as inspector of risks, and that while so employed as cashier he was requested to act for the company as inspector of risks, he was entitled to compensation for such additional service.

In Savage v. Gibbs, 4 Gray, 601, where the court refused to entertain a claim for extra pay for services rendered by a member of a military band, Shaw, Ch. J., said: "The order given by the defendant, being a regular military order, made by the direction of his superior officer, constituted no ground for an assumpsit, express or implied, by the defendant to the plaintiff, to pay anything for the service to be performed. It seems that the plaintiff and his associates, as a military musical band, constituted a part of the organized volunteer militia, and whether they were entitled to any pay for such occasional service, and if so, on what occasion, to what amount, and from whom to be received, must depend on the rules and regulations for the government of the volunteer militia, to which, by enlisting, the plaintiff assented."

In a case where claimant's husband contracted with her paralyzed brother's committee to take care of the brother at their home for $35 a month, and after four years had the compensation increased to $37.50, which was paid until the afflicted man's death, her right to recover from the estate for taking care of him and nursing him while he was at her house was denied, on the ground that it appeared that such service was contemplated by her husband's contract. Carr v. Calvert, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 303, 102 S. W. 282.

⁷In Mathison v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 72 App. Div. 254, 76 N. Y. Supp. 89, it was held that an engine despatcher employed to inspect and repair engines and run engines in case of emergency does not perform work so far outside of the scope of his employment that an agreement for extra compensation should be implied, when, at his employer's direction, he afterwards runs a switch engine for a few hours each day. The court said: "There are authorities holding that in certain cases, where the extra service required is entirely without the sphere of the service for which the contract was made, or where the extra service exacted was such as required special skill or qualifications, in such case the law will imply an agreement for extra compensation. This rule is based upon the probability that for such service there was an intention on the part of the master to pay extra compensation, upon which the servant might rely. But this rule must be cautiously applied, and the service must be so far outside of the sphere of the employment as to indicate a probable intention on the part of the master to allow extra compensation therefor. If the question be one of doubt, the right to extra compensation should rest only upon an express agreement. Any other rule of law would introduce dangerous uncertainty and instability into all contracts of service."

In Bee v. San Francisco & H. B. R. Co. 46 Cal. 248, the defendant's superintendent, the amount of whose salary was not fixed by the terms of his engagement, had, before the surveys for a new line were commenced, performed by request certain services not technically within the line of a superintendent's duty, but such as he might properly have been directed to perform, viz., the procuring of a certain contract. Held, that he could not recover remuneration for these services in addition to the amount allowed for those admitted to be within the scope of his duty as superintendent. The defendant's contention that it was error to admit evidence of those services for the purpose of ascertaining the sum recoverable was rejected, the court taking the position that it would be presumed that in rendering them he acted in his capacity as superintendent.

In Turnell's Succession, 34 La. Ann. 888, it was held that a man employed as a clerk could not, in the absence of a special agreement, recover additional remuneration for services rendered in the general management of his employer's business.

In a case where a servant or domestic was employed at a stipulated monthly salary, and continued in that capacity, receiving her monthly wages to the time of her employer's death, it was held that she could not afterwards maintain an action against the estate of her employer to recover increased compensation on the ground that her labors were augmented by reason of his sickness, contracted subsequent to her entering his service. Voorhees v. Combs, 33 N. J. L. 494. The court said: "The plaintiff made her contract of service with reference to this affliction of the deceased, and the increase of labor incident to it. She had no right to suppose that the family in which she was to serve would be exempt from the ills of life, and having made no provision in her contract for added compensation in the event of sickness, she is fully paid by the stipulated price. The presumption of law is that for all services rendered by her to her employer, which are in the line of her regular duties, or of a similar nature, whether ordinary or extraordinary, she is satisfied by the payment of her fixed salary. The object of an express contract is to guard the parties against uncertainty as to its terms, or exaction in its performance. But an express contract will furnish slender protection indeed to the master, if, for every additional or extra service, he may be subjected to the payment of such sum as a jury may award. Such a rule would give the servant a valid claim for increased pay whenever the master entertained an unexpected guest, and enable the clerk at a fixed salary, to demand an increase of wages with every increase of the merchant's business. No reason can be perceived why the master might not, with equal propriety, upon the mere diminution of the servant's labor, reduce the remuneration. The doctrine upon which the plaintiff rests her case is contrary to the well-settled rule that an express contract excludes an implied one. An implied contract cannot exist when there is an existing express contract about the identical subject. The parties are bound by their agreement, and there is no ground for implying a promise. It is only when the parties do not agree that the law interposes and raises a promise. Where an express contract exists, there must be a rescission of it before the parties will be remitted to the contract which the law implies, in the absence of that agreement which they make for themselves. . . . The extra services of the plaintiff were not rendered in an employment different from that for which she engaged, but were more burdensome by reason of the testator's illness. In the absence of an express agreement to pay for the extra services, no recovery can be had."

In Murray v. John Griffiths & Son, 48 Misc. 398, 95 N. Y. Supp. 573, a man employed as watchman of a building in course of erection, and also to attend to the boilers of an engine used in the construction work, was held not to be entitled to recover for services rendered in cleaning out a small structure used as an office during the daytime.

In Houghton v. Kittleman, 7 Kan. App. 207, 52 Pac. 898, the decision that a person employed as housekeeper at an agreed price per week could not recover from the estate of her employer, who had died during the employment, compensation for services as nurse, in addition to her weekly wages as housekeeper, was put upon the ground that there was no evidence going to show that an agreement was made to pay for such extra services, or that the employer had any knowledge that she expected to charge therefor.

The writer ventures to express the opinion that, in the New Jersey and Kansas cases above cited, the courts were not justified in proceeding upon the theory that the extra services in question were, in point of law, within the sphere of those covered by the contract of employment. It may be conceded that claims for compensation in respect of those slight augmentations of duty which often occur in every household should, as a general rule, be rejected. But it is extremely difficult to accept a conclusion which is equivalent to asserting that no reasonable person could be otherwise than that services rendered as a nurse to a patient suffering from an illness so serious as to cause death are within the scope of the stipulated duties of a domestic servant. The view here put forward finds some support in the ruling of a trial judge in Delaware, to the effect that, while a person who enters a household as a boarder or lodger cannot be held liable upon an implied contract for such usual attentions to his health and comfort as might reasonably be expected under the circumstances, the question whether such a person is lia-stances will an employee be permitted to recover for work performed in excess of the explicit direction of his employer.⁸

2. Recovery allowed.

The courts, while leaning strongly against the inference of a right to recover compensation for extra work, concede that such a right may be predicable, even in the absence of an express agreement, if the work for which compensation is claimed was of such a nature as to render improbable the supposition that it was taken into account by the parties when the rate of wages was arranged. Or, to state the doctrine in a somewhat different form, compensation is recoverable in any case in which there is evidence from which reasonable men might find that the extra services were rendered with the expectation and belief, both on the part of the claimant and on the part of the employer, that they were to be paid for.⁹ The decisions in which recovery has been allowed are collected in the subjoined note; but it is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to reconcile some of them with those cited in the preceding subdivision.¹⁰

ble for services rendered in caring for him during illness is one of fact, depending upon the circumstances of the case, including the fact of his relationship to the plaintiff, if that appears in the case. Kenard v. Whitson, 1 Houst. (Del.) 36.

Whether the fees received by a railway claim agent during his regular business hours, for his services as notary, were included in his salary, was held to be a question for the jury, in Leach v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 86 Mo. 27, 56 Am. Rep. 408. In this case, an action to recover the fees, it was held that receipts given by the plaintiff, stating that the sums therein mentioned were in full for all demands for work done during regular and irregular hours, in the employer's service, were competent evidence to show the capacity in which the plaintiff acted and the relation which he sustained to the employer.

A member of a commercial partnership who requests a regular employee of the firm to write up his private account books does not incur an implied obligation to pay the employee compensation additional to that received from the firm. The court laid it down that, in order to rebut the presumption that the salary of an employee of a partnership is the measure of his compensation for all work done by direction of any member of the firm, "it must affirmatively appear that the work directed is so far out of the usual course, or is to be performed at or in such an unusual time or manner, that the law can safely imply that, in the nature of things, both parties must have known, and therefore contemplated, that extra compensation must follow as of course." The fact that the claimant did the extra work on holidays and in the evenings was held to be immaterial, as defendant was not aware of it. Carrere v. Dun, 18 Misc. 18, 41 N. Y. Supp. 35. The court observed: "An employee cannot, by taking work home which ought to have been done at the employer's place of business during business hours, conjure up a claim for extra pay. There must be some request on the part of the employer to depart from the customary course, or some approval thereof on his part, before he can be charged with impliedly contracting for extra compensation."

In Cany v. Halleck, 9 Cal. 198, a man 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

employed as a collector of rents was held not to be entitled to recover for services rendered in superintending some of the real estate of his employer. It seems permissible to express a doubt as to the correctness of the decision.

In Carter v. Hall, 2 Starkie, 361, an action brought by a purser's steward on an English ship of war against the steward, there was evidence that the purser's steward was a person known as such in the King's service, who could not be appointed by the steward without the assent of the commander; that he was entitled to the pay of an able seaman from the Crown, but that he usually received pay from the purser under a private contract with him; that it was usual for the purser to pay the purser's steward at the rate of £1 for every gun by way of annual salary. Lord Ellenborough nonsuited the plaintiff, grounding his conclusion upon the considerations (1) that a principle of too extensive an operation would be established if such an action were supported, and if a person receiving a specific salary from the Crown, in respect of his situation, could recover, upon an implied contract, a remuneration for his services from the officer under whose immediate authority he acted; and (2) that the purser had no fund allowed him out of which such services were to be paid.

Under ordinary circumstances, neither the members of a ship's crew nor pilots can recover compensation for salvage services, their obligation being to do their utmost for the preservation of the property at risk. Abbott, Merchant Shipping, 14th ed. pp. 965, 970; Calhoun v. Vechio, 3 Wash. C. C. 169, Fed. Cas. No. 2,310 (pilot not entitled to salvage where he safely conducts into port a vessel in distress at sea). This rule is taken for granted in the cases mentioned in note 10, infra, in which recovery was allowed.

⁸ Grabbe v. Moffit, 133 Iowa, 54, 110 N. W. 142.

⁹ Elwell v. Roper, 72 N. H. 254, 56 Atl. 342.

¹⁰ One employed to farm certain lands of his employer is entitled to additional compensation for farming, at the latter's request, other lands purchased by him during the employment, but not where the employment is for services, during a specified time, as a farm laborer. Delaney v. Grove, 162 Pa. 138, 29 Atl. 401.

A person employed by a railroad company as ticket and freight agent at one of its stations, at a regular salary, may recover extra compensation for services rendered in carrying mail bags to and from the postoffice, where the services are rendered at the request of the railroad company, without any agreement as to compensation, such service not being included in the general employment of ticket and freight agent. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Henderson, 9 Ind. App. 482, 36 N. E. 376.

In Middlebrook v. Slocum, 152 Mich. 286, 116 N. W. 422, evidence on the part of the plaintiff was given to the effect that he was employed under a specific contract to work in a flouring mill; that subsequently the employer installed an electric light plant, that the plaintiff worked therein during hours not contemplated in the contract and after he ceased work in the mill; and that no price for the work in the light plant was agreed on. Held, that this testimony warranted the submission to the jury of the question whether there was an implied agreement as to the work in the lighting plant.

In Brown v. Crown Gold Mill. Co. 150 Cal. 376, 89 Pac. 86, an action to recover the value of services rendered in exploiting a machine manufactured by defendant, it was held that the question whether these services were outside the scope of the plaintiff's employment had properly been left to the jury, and that an instruction that if plaintiff rendered services outside the sphere of his employment, at defendant's request, he was entitled to recover a reasonable compensation for such services in addition to his specified salary, was applicable to the evidence, where it was shown that plaintiff was engaged to show and explain the machine to visitors and answer criticisms in the press, and that, in addition to those duties, he acted as correspondent for defendant, classified ores, revised assays, wrote scientific articles, and acted as engineer and metallurgist for the company.

In Dull v. Bramhall, 49 Ill. 364, the defendant, the contractor for a tunnel under a lake, employed the plaintiff, at certain stipulated wages, to plan a crib and other means of accomplishing certain difficult parts of the work, and afterwards employed him to superintend the putting down of the crib, and otherwise apply his plans to the execution of the work. Held, that he might recover of the contractor additional compensation for the latter services, although receiving wages for the time he was therein employed.

In Wilford v. Devin, 43 Iowa, 559, W. was employed by D. as a man of all work at a fixed weekly stipend. During the sickness of the latter, he took care of him alternate nights and alternate Sundays for a period of two years, receiving pay for 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

his services upon Sunday, but none for those rendered at night; nor was there any agreement respecting them. The court refused to disturb a verdict awarding W. compensation for the services rendered at night. It was conceded that the fact that the plaintiff, during these two years, received regularly his weekly wages, and an extra sum every fortnight for Sunday service, without any express agreement for pay for night services, tended strongly to show that it was not understood that he was to be paid for such service. But the court was not prepared to say that this fact would necessarily overcome the evidence which went to show that there was such understanding,—more especially the great amount and the character of the night service.

The law will imply a contract between a person boarded and one furnishing the board under an express agreement for compensation, for the reasonable value of the service rendered by the latter to the former in nursing her when she fell sick. Cates v. Gilmer (Tenn.) 48 S. W. 280.

A contract for board, washing, and mending does not include services as nurse while the boarder is ill; and a contract to pay for such services will be implied. Pfeiffer v. Michelsen, 112 Mich. 614, 71 N. W. 156.

In Elwell v. Roper, 72 N. H. 585, 58 Atl. 507, the defendant's testatrix took the plaintiff, her niece, who was at that time about fourteen years old, to bring up and educate. Some years later the aunt married one W., and the plaintiff from that time lived and worked in the family until the year following that of Mr. W.'s death. Mrs. W. was an invalid for many years before her death. During the greater portion of the time she was unable to go up and down stairs, and the plaintiff waited upon her in her room. During the period of the plaintiff's service Mrs. W. was operated upon three or four times, and on these occasions her only nurse, day and night, was the plaintiff, excepting such attention as her husband gave. Mrs. W.'s mother was a member of the family until her death in 1885, and during the last years of her life was confined to her room by illness. The plaintiff attended to all her wants, and also acted as day nurse for Mr. W. during his last illness. Until 1891 the plaintiff also attended to the regular household duties without assistance. On one occasion Mrs. W. stated that the plaintiff was working for $2 per week, but that "she would be fully paid in the end;" at another time she said that she had never fully paid the plaintiff for her services, but would do so when the land was sold; and about a year and a half before her death she said that the plaintiff had been very faithful and should have her pay for it. None of these statements was made in the presence of the plaintiff. The theory upon which the plaintiff sought to recover was that she had two contracts which were independent of each other,—one by which she rendered the services of an ordinary

c. Right of recovery considered with reference to the time when the services were rendered.

1. Work done on week days. Effect of decisions under the common law.

Abstracting the element of the operation domestic in the family of the testatrix and her husband, and another under which she was to act as nurse to the three persons above referred to, and receive remuneration for her services as such. It was held that the evidence was such as to justify the inference of an understanding on both sides that the testatrix was to pay her something in addition to the wages to which she was entitled as a domestic servant. It was also held that entries upon the diaries of the deceased husband of the testatrix, showing certain payments to the plaintiff, were not competent evidence to disprove the existence of such an understanding. "It is not suggested," said the court, "that the evidence tended to prove that he paid her more than she would be entitled to for such services. Notwithstanding such employment and payment, the testatrix might employ the plaintiff to perform extra services, and legally bind herself and her estate to pay for them. Payments by the husband to the plaintiff would have no logical tendency to prove that the contract alleged in this action was not made, nor that the contract had been fulfilled, unless there was also evidence tending to show that the payments were made on account of the testatrix; and there was no such evidence, so far as appears." A third point decided was that evidence that, after the plaintiff left the employ of the decedent, the latter said she intended to give the plaintiff something more if she had stayed through the decedent's lifetime, was hearsay and therefore properly rejected.

A plain and unambiguous written contract by which a person agrees, for a stipulated salary, to take the entire charge and control of machines, boilers, and pumps in a certain mill, and see that they are satisfactorily run and operated, and keep them in good repair, does not prevent him from recovering extra compensation for superintending the construction of waterworks, under a reasonable expectation that he was to be paid for it, where the other party had reasonable grounds to believe that he expected to be paid, and accepted the work. The court observed that the contract was not one calling for the personal services of the plaintiff, in the sense that his time belonged to the defendant. Reiser v. Stauer, 73 Wis. 477, 41 N. W. 706.

The rule which, as already stated (note 7, supra), ordinarily precludes seamen and pilots from recovering compensation for salvage services, is subject to exception in cases where their contract has been dissolved by their discharge, or by the abandonment of their ship, or by its capture by of a statute which defines the number of hours which shall constitute a legal day's work, the rule to be deduced from the decisions is that, in the absence of proof of an express agreement,¹¹ or of a custom so general, uniform, and certain that it can be said the parties contracted with reference an enemy. Abbott, Merchant Shipping, 14th ed. pp. 965, 970; Akerblom v. Price, L. R. 7 Q. B. Div. 129 (pilot allowed to recover for services after abandonment); The Florence, 16 Jur. 572 (claim of seaman allowed under same circumstances); Hobart v. Drogan, 10 Pet. 108, 9 L. ed. 363 (seamen declared to be entitled to salvage, where extraordinary events have occurred, in which their connection with the ship may be dissolved de facto or by operation of law). Seamen are also entitled to salvage where they perform services distinctly in excess of their duty. Hobart v. Drogan, supra, and the cases next cited.

Where the ship salvaged and the ship whose crew rendered salvage services belong to the same owner, salvage may be recovered, provided the services performed are not within the contract which was originally made with the owner, and to which the stipulated wages apply. The Sappho, L. R. 3 P. C. 690; The Scout, L. R. 3 Adm. & Eccl. 512; The Laertes, L. R. 12 Prob. Div. 187.

It is settled doctrine of the English Admiralty that a pilot is not bound to go on board a vessel in distress, to render pilot service, for mere pilotage reward. Accordingly, where a vessel is seeking a port of safety out of the course of her intended voyage, a pilot, if engaged, may be entitled to additional remuneration in the nature of salvage. Maude & P. Merchant Shipping, pp. 267, 646. See The Jonge Andries, Swabey, Adm. 226, affirmed in 11 Moore, P. C. C. 313, where a pilot was allowed salvage fees for services not properly included in pilotage.

By the Supreme Court of the United States, the distinction taken is between extraordinary pilotage services, and salvage services properly so called,—the one going beyond the mere line of duty, the other going to the extreme line of duty. Hobart v. Drogan, supra, referring to The Joseph Harvey, 1 C. Rob. 306.

Where, in an action for salary, the only issue is whether compensation for the services sued on was included in a salary paid plaintiff for other services, a proposed examination, the object of which is to show plaintiff's method in performing his work, his representations respecting his ability, and the manner in which other employees perform their work, should be excluded. Fox v. Bialy, 151 Mich. 106, 114 N. W. 871.

¹¹ Schurr v. Savigny, 85 Mich. 144, 48 N. W. 547 (holding it to be error to refuse an instruction to the effect that "a servant cannot be required to labor an unreasonable number of hours, but, if the

t.¹² a person employed for a definite period at certain wages cannot recover compensation for extra work voluntarily performed at times other than those at which as stipulated or understood that his services were to be discharged. In other words, an implied promise cannot be predicated on the part of an employer to pay compensation for such work to a person who is regularly employed and receives wages at regular intervals.¹³ This rule, however, does not apply to night work performed by a person whose regular services are discharged by day,¹⁴ nor to a contract under which he is to render services during a part only of the time which would ordinarily be devoted to the service in question, and is to be paid a proportionate amount of wages, has actually rendered services for the whole of that time. Under such circumstances it may properly be inferred that the conditions of the contract have been altered, and he is entitled to recover at the specified rate in respect of the entire time during which he has performed services.¹⁵

The annotator has not found any other direct authority for the doctrine enounced in the principal case, viz., that compensation for work within the scope of a regular employment, in addition to the usual but not fixed form of a day's work, cannot be recovered, unless the contract was entered into with reference to a controlling custom.

In a case where the servant claims merely the value of services rendered outside the regular hours of work, and the contract embraces an express provision requiring him to render a certain amount of such services without extra wages, the sum which he is entitled to recover must be estimated with reference to the effect of the contract as a whole.¹⁶

2. Work done on Sundays.

In some cases the right to recover compensation for work performed on a Sunday has been determined with reference to whether the plaintiff does labor an unreasonable number of hours, or more than he has contracted to do. . . . he cannot recover compensation, unless there is an express promise to pay him therefor"); Re Steam Engine No. 1, 87 Fed. 760; Koplitz v. Powell, 6 Wis. 671, 14 N. W. 831; Mathison v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 72 App. 254, 76 N. Y. Supp. 89 (arguendo). Schurr v. Savigny, supra. Levi v. Reid, 91 Ill. App. 430. In Wilford v. Devin, 43 Iowa, 559, the court upheld a verdict in favor of a claimant who had been hired as a man of all trades at weekly wages, and had taken care of his employer during an illness, on alternate nights and alternate Sundays. The issue was that he had been paid extra wages for the Sunday work, but not for work done at night, and that there had been no agreement regarding the latter. Edrington v. Leach, 34 Tex. 285. In Posner v. Seder, 184 Mass. 331, 68 N. E. 335, plaintiff was employed by defendant for one year at $17 a week, "the wages to be paid at the end of each and every week." The contract required plaintiff to work from 6:30 A. M. to 6 P. M., with the exception of an hour between 12 M. and 1 P. M., and also, without extra pay, to work overtime, not more than two hours a week, and not more than two months aggregate in the year. The plaintiff contended that the $17 which he received each week was payment for only the time between 6:30 A. M. and 6 P. M., and not for the extra time; and that therefore he might, in case of breach of the contract, appropriate the weekly sum to the payment of the wages during the regular hours, and recover quantum meruit for the extra time. Defendants, on the contrary, contended that the $17 was a payment for the services of the week, whatever they were, and R.A. (N.S.)

therefor that the plaintiff had been fully paid, and so could not recover. Commenting upon these opposing theories, the court said: "Neither view seems to us correct. The contract was to continue a year. The weekly hours of labor were variable, and it is fair to assume that there would be a weekly variation in the value of the services. The contract is to be taken as a whole. On the one hand, the defendants could not hold the plaintiff to the work during the extra hours in any week for the sum of $17 except in connection with the other part of the contract, namely, that they were to pay him $17 in other weeks when there was no extra time; nor, on the other hand, could the plaintiff hold the defendants to the payment of $17 for a week in which he did not work extra time, except in connection with the other part of the contract, namely, that in any week in which he did work extra time he should receive only $17. The true construction of the contract is that it was a hiring for a year, payments to be made by weekly instalments, without reference to the weekly variation in the amount of work done. Since the payments were made during the existence of the contract, they cannot be considered as having no reference to the other parts of the contract. If the plaintiff desires to proceed upon the theory that the contract has been repudiated, his proper course is to proceed upon quantum meruit for the value of all his services, less what he has received. If he has been paid what they are worth, he can recover nothing; if he has not, he may recover the balance due him. But it is plain that the sum due him is not necessarily the fair price for the extra hours in addition to the sum of $17 per week which he has received. He cannot appropriate the $17 to the payment of the ordinary week's work, and sue only for the bal-

the question whether the work belonged to one of the categories excepted from the prohibitive clauses of one of the Lord's Day acts.¹⁷ The doctrine upon which other cases have proceeded may be enunciated thus: Where a person is hired for a definite term, at a certain rate of wages, to render services in an occupation of such a nature that he must presumably have contemplated the performance of more or less work on Sundays, he cannot, in the absence of an express stipulation, recover any extra compensation for such work.¹⁸ ance, because, for the reasons above stated, that is not in accordance with the contract under which the payment was made."

¹⁷ In Watts v. Van Ness, 1 Hill, 76, the New York act was held to be a bar to an action brought by an attorney's clerk to recover extra compensation for work performed on Sunday.

In Whitcomb v. Gilman, 35 Vt. 297, a farm servant was held entitled to compensation for work done on Sunday for the purpose of preventing a great waste of sap from sugar maples.

¹⁸ Lowe v. Marlow, 4 Ill. App. 420 (feeding of cattle, etc., by farm hand); Robinson v. Webb, 73 Ill. App. 569 (farm hand bound to do chores); Guthrie v. Merrill, 4 Kan. 187 (ferryman).

¹⁹ As to the right of government employees to recover, see Throop, Pub. Off. § 492; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 390.

The general rule is that an action of assumpsit will not lie in favor of a salaried officer of the state, to recover additional compensation for extra services imposed upon him after he has entered upon the performance of his duties. State v. Chase, 5 Harr. & J. 297 (judge); Chandler v. State, 5 Harr. & J. 284 (state printer).

As to the circumstances under which a public officer is entitled to recover extra compensation when he is appointed to a new position the duties of which are different in character from those of the original one, see Converse v. United States, 21 How. 463, 16 L. ed. 192; United States v. Brindle, 110 U. S. 688, 28 L. ed. 286, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 180.

Under the act of Congress of August 23, 1842, which declares that no allowance or compensation shall be made for any extra service which any clerk or other officer may be required to perform, it has been held that a clerk in the Department of the Interior could not recover compensation for his services in preparing an account of the London Industrial Exposition, and making a report thereon. Stansbury v. United States, 1 Ct. Cl. 123.

An employee who was directed to perform the duties of another who had been suspended pending the trial of an indictment against him, but who subsequently resumed his duties, was held not to be entitled to recover any compensation but the salary appointed for his own position. Fraser v. United States, 16 Ct. Cl. 507. The 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

d. Recovery for extra work performed by governmental and municipal employees.

A full discussion of the right of governmental and municipal employees to recover compensation for extra work would carry us beyond the scope of this treatise. In the note below, references are given to treatises which deal with the subject, and also to some cases which seem to be of sufficient general interest to be deserving of mention in this place.¹⁹ decision proceeded on the grounds that such a suspension was not a suspension within the meaning of the tenure of office act (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1768), and that there could not be two persons holding one office at the same time.

In a Newfoundland case, the court held that, as in the case of ordinary contracts of service, there was an implied obligation on the part of the government to compensate a police officer for the additional duties imposed upon him as a consequence of his transfer to a position of greater responsibility. Smith v. Newfoundland, Newfoundland Rep. (1884-96) 62.

As to the rule that a person accepting a municipal office with a fixed salary cannot claim additional compensation if his duties are increased, see Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 233.

That an increase by a city council of the duties of a city officer does not imply any obligation to increase his salary was laid down in Covington v. Mayberry, 9 Bush, 304.

But a city officer is entitled to be paid for acts done under appointment of the common council, outside the scope of his official duty. McBride v. Grand Rapids, 47 Mich. 236, 10 N. W. 353, following Detroit v. Redfield, 19 Mich. 376. In the former case, evidence that the person rendering the services did not make claim for compensation to persons who were without authority to pay him or to make a binding agreement that he should be paid was held not to be admissible for the purpose of showing that the services rendered were gratuitous.

A municipal servant is only entitled to the statutory rate of compensation fixed for the position originally accepted by him, although he may be detailed for other work when his services are not required for that position. McCunney v. New York, 40 App. Div. 482, 58 N. Y. Supp. 138.

A clerk in the bureau of highways of the city of New York, finding it to be the custom among other clerks to take the affidavits of certain employees in verification of their accounts of services rendered, and thinking it to be a part of his duties, obtained an appointment as commissioner of deeds, and thereafter took affidavits, at the request of the superintendent of the bureau, without making any charge, but without, at the time, having any expectation that the city would be responsible for

c. Recovery for extra work in civil-law jurisdictions.

The doctrine of the civil law is, it would appear, virtually the same as that of the common law.²⁰ his fees. Held, that he could not, on finding that the other clerks had been receiving fees from the employees for their services, recover the amount of his fees from the city. Benjamin v. New York, 77 App. Div. 62, 78 N. Y. Supp. 1067. The effect of the evidence was said to be that the plaintiff had rendered the services, either in the belief that they formed a part of his regular duties, or in the expectation that his compensation was to be derived only from those who made the affidavits.

In Merzbach v. New York, 163 N. Y. 16, 57 N. E. 96, reversing 19 App. Div. 186, 45 N. Y. Supp. 1018, which affirmed 10 Misc. 131, 62 N. Y. S. R. 499, 30 N. Y. Supp. 908, where a municipal officer was authorized by statute to take oaths and receive fees as a notary, it was held that the services rendered by him in that capacity were not incidental to his ordinary duties, and that the burden of showing that they were rendered voluntarily lay on the defendant.

²⁰(a) Scotland.—In this country the accepted doctrine is that where the amount of wages has once been fixed by regular agreement, mere extra labor, though considerable, will not entitle the servant to claim an increase over the sum specified, unless he can establish some express or implied contract. M'Whirter v. Guthrie (1821) Hume, Dec. 760; Fraser, Mast. & S. p. 47.

In Latham v. Edinburgh & G. R. Co. 4 Sc. Sess. Cas. 3d series, 1070, an action by a salaried manager of a railway company for remuneration for extra services said to have been rendered by him during a long period of years was dismissed as irrelevant, there being no specific averment (1) of the services he was engaged to perform; (2) of the extra services performed by him; and (3) of an agreement to remunerate him for such extra services. Lord McNeill said: "This is a very peculiar case, and the claims made by the pursuer are of a very peculiar kind. He was manager of this company, which has now expired. It is wound up, and he has been in the company's service for a length of time. He was paid by salary for his services as manager, and now he makes a claim against the funds of the dissolved company for payment of a reasonable amount in respect of extra services rendered by him during the whole period of his employment as manager. That is a very peculiar case, and I do not think I ever saw a case of that character before. The pursuer was employed as manager. The particular terms of his employment are not stated, but the nature of his office involved the purchase of his services for his whole time. Then, it appears that in the course of that employment the nature of his services was considered on 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

II. Express agreements to pay for extra work.

In some of the cases under this head, the questions involved were entirely of a general character, vis., whether the alleged more than one occasion, and his salary was more than once increased, but that is said to have been done in reference to his proper duties as manager. It is said that he performed a number of extra services, for which he now demands remuneration. It appears to me in reference to a retrospective claim of this kind, extending back over many years, that it would require to be very clearly stated what the services were which he was engaged to perform, what the extra duties were that were done by him, and what was the remuneration that was agreed to be paid to him for these extra services. I have no idea that a person employed to do certain things, and asked to do things which are supposed to fall under the general engagement, can make a demand for special remuneration, without alleging a special agreement and specifying the work done. But we have not got such a statement here. We have specimens given of the services which were rendered, but we have no specific contract alleged; on the contrary, the statement (in cond. 13) rather imply that there was no specific contract. . . . Without a more specific statement of the contract, showing how the extra services rendered clearly stand out from the ordinary duties of the pursuer's office, this case cannot be sent to trial. I am of opinion the pursuer has no case, and that we ought to dismiss the action."

In Money v. Hannan (1867) 5 Scot. L. R. 32, a person entered the defendant's service as clerk, cashier, and bookkeeper, on December 31, 1860, at a salary of £90 per annum, the period of services being left indefinite. The engagement was made by letter, which stipulated: "It is understood that your whole attention is to be devoted to our business, and that you shall not have any other business whatever to attend to." The pursuer continued in the employment of clerk, etc., as above, till March, 1862, when he was directed by his employers to go to Bergen, and, acting for their firm, to investigate the books of a certain company, there strike a balance, and inquire into the meaning of certain transactions. He was four months absent on this commission, when he returned to Glasgow, and resumed his former employment with the defendants, in which he continued till their firm was dissolved in October, 1862. In January, 1866, he raised an action, concluding for extra remuneration, over and above his salary of £90, in respect of the employment at Bergen, estimating the sum to which he was entitled at £250. The majority of the court were of opinion that, though the pursuer could not have been compelled to go to Bergen, yet, having consented to, without stipulating for extra remuneration, he could not now claim any.

agreement was, as a matter of fact, entered into;²¹ whether the given services had

They considered his employment abroad to be ejusdem generis with that for which he was engaged.

(b) Louisiana.—In this state it has been held that a clerk in the employment of a merchant, at a fixed salary, cannot be allowed an additional compensation against the succession of his former employer, for services rendered in the general management of decedent's business, without proving an agreement to that effect between the deceased and himself. Turnell's Succession, 34 La. Ann. 888.

(c) Quebec.—The law as applied in this province has been thus stated: "The general principle involved in a claim for extra remuneration seems to me to be very clear. If a person employed in a particular capacity by another is charged to perform some duty not theretofore performed by him, he may decline to do it, and then the question will arise nakedly whether the new employment is of a similar kind to that which he was employed to perform. If it is, he is bound to perform the duty to the best of his ability. But if the person employed performs the new duty without remonstrance, the presumption is that the new work falls within the general scope of that which he was employed to perform, and he has no legal claim to additional remuneration. This is evidently the rule of reason and of ordinary experience." Dugdale v. Montreal (1880; Montr. Q. B.) 3 Legal News, 204. The court then proceeded to observe that in the case under review the position of the parties was not so clearly defined, and that the general rule was therefore not perfectly applicable. The plaintiff was appointed as a health officer, and he had medical duties to perform. During this time an epidemic broke out, which required the establishment of an extra hospital, entailing far more work than was at first contemplated. Dr. Dugdale did not refuse to do the work, neither did he continue to perform it in silence. He spoke to the members of the committee as to extra remuneration, and one of them informed these gentlemen that their claims would be considered. Under these circumstances it was considered that the case was governed by the principle that the plaintiff agreed to trust to the generosity of his employer, and therefore had no claim beyond that which the corporation chose to allow.

²¹ In Voorhees v. Combs, 33 N. J. L. 494 (discussed under another aspect in I. b, ante), the labors of a domestic servant had been increased by the sickness of the testator, her master; discussing the contention that his execution in her favor of a promissory note for $500, for the alleged extra services, amounted to an express promise to pay for them, the court said: "There is no pretense in the case that the plaintiff ever demanded of the testator increased pay, or that she ever had any conversation with him on the subject of her increased labors. The evidence shows that on one occasion during the testator's illness, Duryee, his financial agent, asked him what he intended to give the plaintiff, as she had been very kind to him; the testator asked what he ought to give; Duryee said, 'Give what you please, it is all your own;' the testator then said, 'Give her $500.' Then Duryee wrote a note for $500, and the testator signed it. Soon after this was done, the plaintiff came into the room where the testator was, and he told her he had given her $500. This transaction had none of the characteristics of an express promise to pay for extra services. It was a mere gratuity on the part of the testator, and was not done in discharge of any legal obligation which rested upon him. It was expressly stated to be a gift, an expression of his gratitude to the plaintiff, and could not lay the foundation of an action at law."

See also Pearson v. Great Northern R. Co. 90 Minn. 227, 95 N. W. 1113; and Friedman v. Fertel, 107 N. Y. Supp. 832,—cases containing a review of certain evidence, which did not embrace any salient points of interest worth noting here.

In Jerome v. Wood, 39 Colo. 197, 88 Pac. 1067, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 662, plaintiff entered defendant's service as a domestic in July, 1900, knowing that defendant's wife was an invalid, and that plaintiff's service would include certain attentions to the wife. In September a change of treatment was prescribed, which increased plaintiff's services, and shortly thereafter plaintiff's wages were raised $3 per month. Plaintiff's wages were paid at the end of each month, and on February 21, 1901, a settlement was had, in which plaintiff was paid her wages to the succeeding day, when she terminated the employment. Plaintiff testified that when her work was increased, she threatened to leave, but that defendant stated that, if she would remain, he would "make it all right,"—"that he would do well by plaintiff, or something to that effect," which defendant denied. Held, that such facts were insufficient to rebut the presumption that plaintiff was paid for all of her services, and that she was therefore not entitled to recover for extra services of a similar nature.

In Lucas v. Boss, 110 App. Div. 220, 97 N. Y. Supp. 112, it was held that evidence which showed merely that the defendant's testator promised that, if the plaintiff, a nurse, remained in his employ, he would provide for her in his will; that she refused to remain, and left against his protest; and that he failed to make a satisfactory provision for her,—did not justify the inference of a promise to pay the plaintiff any sum in addition to that which she had received under her special contract, and which it is evident was the sum that the plaintiff was willing to and did accept for the services that she rendered.

It has been laid down that "the promise and duly performed by the claimant;²² and whether the defendant was, under the given circumstances, entitled to a reduction of the claim on account of time lost during the stipulated term.²³ Others proceeded upon a special doctrine which may be stated thus: In an action brought by a servant for the purpose of enforcing a promise to pay, in respect of extra services, remuneration additional to that stipulated in an existing contract, the defense of a want of legal consideration will operate as a bar to recovery, if he was bound, under the terms of his contract, to perform the services upon which his claim is founded. If the services are not covered by the contract the action may be maintained.²⁴ Other reasons which have been to pay extra compensation must be definite, certain, and explicit" (Jerome v. Wood, supra); and that, in order to warrant the allowance of a claim against the estate of a decedent, "the contract must not only be certain and definite, and founded upon an adequate consideration, but also that it must be established by the clearest and most convincing evidence" (Lucas v. Boss, supra).

²² Under a contract to pay a salesman an additional sum if his sales were satisfactory, it was held to lie with the employer alone to determine whether the sales were satisfactory. Alford v. Cook, 107 N. Y. app. 710. In that case, letters written by the employer in answer to reports sent in by the salesman, and containing words of praise for orders taken, and encouragement to keep up the good work," were held to be, at most, the ordinary messages of an employer to his employee, calculated to impute him to renewed effort.

²³ In Keysaw v. Dotterweich Brewing Co., 11 App. Div. 58, 105 N. Y. Supp. 562, an action to recover for overtime work of plaintiff while in defendant's employ during a period of two years, it appeared that plaintiff had failed in many instances during the second year's service to work a full day's work, for which he had received a full day's pay, and that the arrangement between the parties as to pay for extra work extend over the entire period of service. Held, that it was error to exclude testimony showing how often and how long during the second year plaintiff failed to work the full number of hours, and to refuse to permit the jury to consider such testimony in reduction of plaintiff's claim for overtime work done during the first year.

²⁴ In Stilk v. Myrick, 2 Campb. 317, where some of the crew deserted a ship, and the captain, not being able to find others to supply their place, promised to divide the wages which would have become due to them among the remainder of the crew, Lord Ellenborough based his own ruling that the action was not maintainable, on the ground that "there was no consideration for the ulterior pay promised to the mariners who remained with the ship. Before they sailed from London they had undertaken to do all they could under all the emergencies of the voyage. They had held all their services till the voyage should be completed. If they had been at liberty to quit the vessel at Cronstadt, the case could have been quite different; or if the captain had capriciously discharged the two who were wanting, the others might not have been compellable to take the whole duty upon themselves, and their agreeing to do so might have been a sufficient consideration for the promise of an advance of wages. But the desertion of a part of the crew is to be considered an emergency of the voyage, as much as their death, and those who remain are bound by the terms of their original contract to exert themselves to the utmost to bring the ship in safety to her destined port."

This decision was followed in The Araminta, 18 Jur. 793, where wages forfeited by deserters had been distributed by the master among the members of the crew who consented to stay and navigate the ship home. Held, that the shipowners were entitled, in settling with them, to deduct from their wages the sums so distributed.

In Harris v. Carter, 3 El. & Bl. 559, the plaintiff, a sailor, signed articles for a voyage out to M. and home, at £3 per month. On the arrival of the ship at M., several of the crew deserted. The captain, to induce the rest to remain, signed fresh articles with plaintiff and others at the rate of £6 per month for the home voyage. Plaintiff continued in the vessel till her arrival home, and then sued the shipowner for work and labor. Defendant paid money into the court at the rate of £3 per month. Plaintiff claimed to be paid at the rate of £6 for the home voyage. On the trial, there was some evidence that at M. the captain had consented to the discharge of some of the crew. The judge asked the jury if the plaintiff himself had been discharged before entering into the fresh articles. On their answering that he had not, the judge directed a nonsuit. Held, on a motion for a rule for a new trial, that the nonsuit was right, since there was no evidence of any circumstances to free the plaintiff from his original contract, so as to enable him to give consideration for the fresh promise to him, or to authorize the captain to bind the owners by such a contract.

In Hopkins v. M'Bride, 50 Week. Rep. 255, a claim by seamen for additional remuneration promised in consideration of their remaining on board their ship after an accident, and working her home, was held not to be enforceable, for the reason that there was no evidence to show that the accident had rendered the ship so unseaworthy that they would have been justified in breaking their articles.

Libellants contracted with respondent, which owned a salmon-canning plant in Alaska, to perform services as sailors in navigating a vessel from San Francisco to assigned for disallowing the claims in question are the following: That the original contract of hiring was in writing, and constituted, under the given circumstances, such plant and return, and in catching and canning salmon, while there, during the season, for which they were to receive a stipulated compensation. After reaching the plant they refused, without cause, to further perform the contract, unless respondent's superintendent signed an agreement to pay additional compensation. He stated that he had no authority to do so, but, being unable to procure other men, and influenced by the remoteness of the place and the shortness of the season, he complied with their demand, and a second contract was signed, identical with the first except as to the compensation to be paid. Held, that, conceding the superintendent's authority to make it, the agreement to pay additional compensation for services which libellants were legally bound to render under the old contract was void for want of consideration, there being no sufficient ground for claiming, under the circumstances shown, that respondent voluntarily waived the breach of the original contract by libellants. Alaska Packers' Assn. v. Domenico, 54 C. C. A. 485, 117 Fed. 99, reversing 112 Fed. 554. The court adopted the general principle laid down in King v. Duluth, M. & N. R. Co. 61 Minn. 482, 63 N. W. 1105, that a person who refuses to perform a contract, and thereby constrains the other party to the contract to promise to pay him an increased compensation for doing that which he was legally bound to do, cannot sue on the promise.

For other cases in which agreements to pay extra compensation for services covered by the contract have been held invalid as being without consideration, see Frazer v. Hatton, 2 C. B. N. S. 512 (steward of ship); Bartlett v. Wyman, 14 Johns. 260 (seaman threatened to abandon ship if higher wages were not paid); Bloodgood v. Wuest, 69 App. Div. 356, 74 N. Y. Supp. 913 (assistant clerk of a county).

The general doctrine of the law of contracts which is illustrated by the decisions above cited has been thus stated by two eminent text writers: Neither the promise to do a thing nor the actual doing of it will be a good consideration, if it is a thing which the party is bound to do by the general law, or by a subsisting contract with the other party. Pollock, Contr. pp. 161, 176.

"The performance of that which the party was under a previous valid, legal obligation to do" is not a sufficient consideration for a contract. 1 Parsons, Contr. p. 437.

In the note to the last-mentioned treatise are cited some cases in which it has been held that, if one party to a contract refuses to perform unless some further pay or benefit than the contract provides is promised, and such a promise is made, it is binding; the ground taken being that the making of a new contract shows the rescission of the 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

original contract and the substitution of another. This was the doctrine followed in the reversed decision of the lower court in Domenico v. Alaska Packers' Assn. 112 Fed. 554, but there is a very decided preponderance of authority against it.

In two Scotch cases it has been laid down that, in order to show a prima facie right to recover for extra work, there must be averments stating what the services were which the claimant was engaged to render, what were the extra duties which were performed by him, and what remuneration he was promised. Latham v. Edinburgh & G. R. Co., 4 Sc. Sess. Cas. 3d series, 1070; Mackenzie v. Baird (1906-07) Sc. Sess. Cas. 838.

With regard to the rule that a special contract to pay a public officer a larger amount of remuneration than that fixed by law is invalid, see Mechem, Pub. Off. 374; Throop, Pub. Off. 477.

Where a ship is left, before the completion of the voyage, so short-handed that it is dangerous to proceed, the crew are not bound by their articles to proceed. Accordingly, an agreement to give them higher wages to do so is not void for want of consideration. Hartley v. Ponsonby, 7 El. & Bl. 872.

In Turner v. Owen, 3 Fost. & F. 176, a ship navigated by a crew hired at a home port had put into an intermediate port in an unseaworthy condition. The crew there signed articles, by which they agreed to navigate the ship home if extra hands were taken, and then refused to proceed unless £5 was paid to each man. The master having agreed to pay the sum demanded, the sailors took the vessel home. On the trial of an action brought by one of them to recover the stipulated amount, the law applicable to the facts was thus stated to the jury by Chief Justice Cockburn: "When a seaman has signed articles, he cannot claim extra remuneration for the same services as are included in the articles. On the other hand, when he signs articles it is implied, on the part of the owner, that the ship shall be reasonably fit for navigation, i. e., shall be seaworthy. And if, before the ship sets sail, the seaman discovers that she is one in which he cannot safely embark, he can refuse to do so, and enter into a new contract."

In Harris v. Carter, 3 El. & Bl. 559, subd. a, supra, Lord Campbell, Ch. J., intimated that the captain might have had authority to bind the owners by a stipulation for higher wages, if there had been an entire change of the voyage.

See also the extract from Lord Ellenborough's direction to the jury in Stilk v. Myrick, 2 Campb. 317, subd. a, supra.

In Clutterbuck v. Coffin, 3 Mann. & G. 842, the plaintiff agreed to enter as captain's cook on board of a brig of war, upon an undertaking by the defendant, the commanonly legitimate evidence of the rights obligations of the parties;²⁵ that the promise was invalid, as being contrary to public policy;²⁶ that the policy of some particular statute would be contravened by allowance of the given claim for additional remuneration;²⁷ that the promise exacted by taking an undue advantage the necessities of the employer.²⁸ of the vessel, to pay him wages beyond government pay to which he would be entitled on his rating as an able seaman. (1) that there was a sufficient consideration for the agreement to entitle the plaintiff, on the services being performed, to maintain an action against the defendant for such wages; and (2) semble, per Tindal, J., and Maule, J., that such an agreement is not illegal. Tindal, Ch. J., considered that the plaintiff's leaving the employment in which he was then engaged was a sufficient consideration for the defendant's promise. Referring to the case of Harris v. Watson, note 26, infra, and other authorities of the same type, which had been cited how that no debt arose between the plaintiff and the defendant, Maule, J., said: "There is this material distinction between the cases referred to and the present, that in those cases, contracts were entered into with parties who were already bound to do work for which the extra wages were to be paid. Here, the defendant, instead of contracting to do work which he was already bound to perform, was a free agent, and not sui juris, when he entered into the agreement."

See also Hanson v. Royden, L. R. 3 C. P. An able seaman succeeding to second mate's wages was held to be entitled to a second mate's wages; The Providence, 1 Hagg. 391 (second mate succeeding in place of discharged chief mate, held to be entitled to same remuneration as the chief mate).

In Elsworth v. Woolmore, 5 Esp. 84, the court held upon which Lord Alvanley held that a mariner who had signed articles for a certain pay per month could claim any further wages or gratuity by custom or usage, that the act of 2 Geo. IV. chap. 3, was express, requiring in such cases that articles should be signed by the master; that it would be a fraud on the part of the crew if the owners were permitted to make a private contract to give more wages to one than to another. Accordingly, the court was of opinion that there could not be legal contracts; that the only one allowed was that entered into by articles, and binding on the seaman.

This case was followed in Bartlett v. Wyman, 14 Johns. 260 (for facts, see note infra).

In Harris v. Watson, Peake, N. P. Cas. 120, it was held that no action would lie at suit of a sailor on a promise of the master to pay him extra wages in consideration of his doing more than the ordinary duty in navigating the ship. Lord Mansfield, R.A. (N.S.)

Kenyon said that if such a promise could be enforced, sailors would in many cases suffer a ship to sink unless the captain would accede to any extravagant demand they might think proper to make.

In Stilk v. Myrick, 2 Campb. 317, Lord Ellenborough, while he expressed the opinion that the above case was rightly decided, doubted whether public policy was the true principle on which the decision was to be supported.

But in Harris v. Carter, 3 El. & Bl. 559, Lord Campbell dissented from this criticism, being of opinion that "it would be most mischievous to commerce if it were supposed that captains had power, under such circumstances, to bind their owners by a promise to pay more than was agreed for."

²⁷ In Bartlett v. Wyman, supra, one of the grounds upon which a seaman who had, by threats of desertion, compelled his captain to enter into new articles at a higher rate of wages, was held not to be entitled to recover, was that, to sanction this exaction by holding the contract thus extorted binding on the master of the ship would be not only against the plain intention of the act of Congress of 1790, which required the making of a written agreement between the master of every ship bound for a foreign port and each seaman hired by him, but would be holding out encouragement to a violation of duty, as well as of contract. This statute, it was remarked, protected the mariner, and guarded his rights in all essential points; and to put the master at the mercy of the crew would take away all reciprocity.

An employee within the purview of a statutory provision fixing the number of hours that shall constitute a legal day's work "may lawfully contract to labor beyond that period, and stipulate for extra compensation for the labor rendered in excess of that time." McCarthy v. New York, 96 N. Y. 1, 48 Am. Rep. 601.

A promise to pay a public officer an extra sum beyond that fixed by law is not binding, though he renders services and exercises a degree of diligence greater than could legally have been required of him. Dill. Mun. Corp. § 234.

²⁸ Bartlett v. Wyman (facts stated in note 27, supra); Lingenfelder v. Wainwright Brewing Co. 103 Mo. 578, 15 S. W. 844 (services of architect involved in this case).

C. B. L.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

JAMES W. RAMSEY et al., Trustees, etc., App'ts.,
v.

JOSEPH P. HICKS et al.

(— Ind. —, 91 N. E. 344.)

Religious corporation — conclusiveness of decision.

1. The decision of a proper church tribunal proceeding in manifest good faith, under color of authority, that it has jurisdiction to form a union with another church, is binding on the civil courts, although such authority is not expressly conferred by the constitution of the church.

Same — civil jurisdiction — ecclesiastical rights.

2. A civil court has no jurisdiction to examine into the regularity and validity of a church tribunal, and restrain its proceedings for nonconformity with its own laws, in a matter concerning only spiritual or ecclesiastical rights.

Same — Presbyterian and Cumberland union.

3. The decision of the General Assembly of the Cumberland Church, that the revised Confession of Faith of the Presbyterian Church was in substantial accord with its own doctrinal tenets, is binding and conclusive upon the membership of the church and upon the civil courts.

Same — power to consolidate.

4. The power to consolidate the Cumberland Church with another ecclesiastical body resided in its General Assembly and presbytery, and not in the individual membership of the church.

Same — constitutional limitation — construction.

5. The provision of the constitution of the Cumberland Church, prescribing the jurisdiction of the session, presbytery, synod, and General Assembly, which declares that the jurisdiction of those courts is limited by the express provisions of the constitution, limits such jurisdiction as between themselves, Note. — Union or reunion of Cumberland Church with the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.

Since the preparation of the note appended to Mack v. Kime, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 692, 717, the decision of the supreme court in RAMSEY v. HICKS has taken Indiana out of the group of states in which the attempted union or reunion has been held invalid, so far as property rights dependent thereon are concerned, and added it to the majority group in which such union or reunion is sustained.

The case having been transferred to the supreme court from the appellate court, the opinion of the former court, to which it adhered on rehearing, of course, overrules the opinion of the appellate court in the same case (which is set out at page 717 of the note referred to). After the decision of the supreme court, the same question came again before the appellate court, in Bentle v. Ulay (Ind. App.) 93 N. E. 459, and the latter court, while stating that ordinarily the conclusion announced by the supreme court will be followed without remark, said that the principle involved in the question under consideration was so important, and the decision in the RAMSEY CASE so "revolutionary," that it would transfer the case at bar to the supreme court, with the recommendation that its decision in the RAMSEY CASE be overruled. This disposition of the case is followed by a vigorous opinion by the chief judge, in which apparently all the associate judges concurred, reaffirming the soundness of the position taken by the court in its previous opinion, and criticizing the opinion of the supreme court in the RAMSEY CASE.

In addition to the cases referred to in the earlier note, the position of the supreme court in the RAMSEY CASE is further sustained by a case in Arkansas (Sanders v. Baggerly [Ark.] 131 S. W. 49), and a case in Illinois (First Presby. Church v. First Cumberland Presby. Church, 245 Ill. 74, 91 N. E. 761). In both of these cases, which were decided since the note referred to, the 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) faction of the local church, formerly in the Cumberland connection, which adhered to the united body, was held entitled to the property of the church, as against the faction adhering to the Cumberland body. Elaborate opinions were written in both cases, but both follow closely the argument and reasoning of the cases cited in the other note.

In the Sanders Case, two of the judges dissented upon the ground that the organic law of the Cumberland Church had not in express terms, or by necessary implication, conferred upon the church courts or judicatories the power to dissolve the church, and to form a union with another religious society. The inherent power of the Cumberland Church to form such a union was recognized, but the opinion was expressed that the church courts, being bodies with delegated powers, did not possess that inherent power, which rested in the body of the church itself, and which could only be exercised by the unanimous consent of the units of the church.

In spite of the contrary conclusion reached in Missouri and Tennessee and by the Indiana appellate court and by the dissenting judges in some of the other cases, it is apparent that the weight of authority sustains the validity of the union or reunion as affecting property rights. Doubtless, the reluctance of the court to throw any obstacle in the way of church unity would in any event dispose them to obviate, if possible, the effect of merely technical objections. But in view of the broad principles laid down by the United States Supreme Court in Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 666, and especially the principle that the civil courts, in the disposition of property rights depending indirectly upon the decision of an ecclesiastical tribunal, will accept that decision as conclusive, without re-examining its merits in the light of church history or polity, it would seem that the conclusion of those courts in upholding the union is abundantly fortified by legal precedent.

does not circumscribe the sovereign er of the church itself, or of the body which the supreme power is vested.

ie — amendment or union — expediency.

The act of a church judicatory which authority to amend its Confession of h and constitution so as to make them orm to those of another ecclesiastical ety, in effecting a union with such other ety rather than a specific amendment he Confession and constitution, is one olicy or expediency rather than of power authority, and therefore cannot be tioned by the civil courts.

ie — power to consolidate.

The Cumberland Church had inherent er to unite with another ecclesiastical whose doctrine and polity were deemed army with its own.

ie — conclusive effect of decision.

A supreme church judicatory having ority to consolidate the church with her ecclesiastical body has power to le upon the proper mode of procedure, determine conclusively the regularity validity of the proceedings.

ie — authority to adopt name.

The express assent of the presbytery ie Cumberland Church to the union with Presbyterian Church proposed by its ral Assembly implied some modification ames, and empowered the General As-sly to adopt any name deemed by it appropriate for the consolidated ch.

ie — trust — conveyance — diver-on.

A conveyance for a consideration to trustees of the congregation of a speci-religious denomination does not crea trust in the property in favor of bers of the congregation, which will ont the proper authorities of such de-nation from uniting with another ecastical body, and conferring upon it a title to the property.

(March 31, 1910.)

PEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for Vanderburg ty in defendants' favor in a suit to repossession of certain church prop-which were alleged to have been con-in violation of plaintiffs' rights, and ges for the alleged wrongful deten-thereof. Affirmed.

3 facts are stated in the opinion.

ssrs. William Relster, W. C. Cald-and George W. Shaw, for appellants.

ssrs. John M. Gant, Ogden & In-Hastings, Allen, & Hastings, and Williamson for appellees.

ontgomery, J., delivered the opinion
e court:

s case was transferred from the ap-R.A. (N.S.)

pellate courts under the provisions of the second subdivision of § 1394, Burns's Anno.
Stat. 1908. Appellants, as trustees of the Washington Congregation of the Camberland Presbyterian Church in Daviess county Indiana, brought suit in ejectment to recover possession of a certain lot with the church building and manse situate thereon, and damages for the unlawful detention of the same. Appellees answered by general denial. The cause was sent, on application for a change of venue, to the superior court of Vanderburg county, where a trial resulted in a finding and judgment in favor of appellees. The overruling of appellants' motion for a new trial is the only alleged error. The grounds of the motion for a new trial are that the decision of the court is not sustained by sufficient evidence, and is contrary to law.

The lot in question was conveyed in 1854 by general warranty deed to certain named persons, "trustees of the Washington Congregation of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in Daviess county, Indiana," for a stated consideration of $85. This controversy grew out of the union or merger, in 1906, of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church with the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America; and the question for settlement is the legal successor of the original grantee named in this deed.
Appellees favored union of these churches, concurred in the action of the General As-semblies declaring such union accomplished, and hence represent the united church, and, as such representatives, claim title to the property. Appellants deny the authority of the General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church to effect a merger or union with another church, dispute the validity of the action taken, and refuse to acquiesce therein, and, retaining the original name, claim to be the true Washington Congregation of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church and the rightful and legal owner of the property in dispute. The civil courts have jurisdiction over the subject-matter, the title to property, and their judgment has been invoked by the parties, hence we are required, though reluctant, to enter upon the consideration of a controversy which inevitably involves the domain of ecclesiastical jurisprudence. The paramount question submitted is the validity or binding force of the union of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, which for brevity we shall style the "Cumberland Church," and the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, which we shall designate as the "Presbyterian Church," as respects both the parties to this action and the civil courts. Under our view of the law governing such cases as this, it will not be necessary to set out the declared doctrines and polity of these churches at a very great length.

The distinctive name "Presbyterianism" indicates primarily a system of church government embodying the belief that the management of the New Testament Church is in the hands of representatives of the people called "presbyters." Presbyterianism as it exists is both a polity and a doctrine. Its doctrine is commonly known as Calvinism; and its polity consists of self-government through chosen representatives, rejecting alike the rule of one man, and the rule of the extemporized and irresponsible assembly. All branches of the Presbyterian Church are founded essentially on the Westminster Standards, which consist of six books: The Confession of Faith, the Larger Catechism, the Shorter Catechism, the Form of Government, the Directory of Worship, and the Book of Discipline. The first three books are doctrinal, and the last three relate to government and worship. The Presbyterian Church, represented by appellees, adhered to the Westminster Confession of Faith, which among other things declared, that "God from all eternity did, by the most wise and holy counsel, of His own will, freely and unchangeably, ordain whatsoever comes to pass. . . .

"By the decree of God, for the manifestation of His glory, some men and angels are predestinated unto everlasting life, and others foreordained to everlasting death.

"These angels and men thus predestinated and foreordained are particularly and unchangeably designed; and their number is so certain and definite that it cannot be either increased or diminished. . . .

"Neither are any other redeemed by Christ, effectually called justified, adopted, sanctified, and saved, but the elect only.

"The rest of mankind, God was pleased . . . to pass by and to ordain them to dishonor and wrath for their sin, to the praise of His glorious justice. . . .

"Elect infants, dying in infancy, are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit, who worketh when and where and how He pleaseth. So, also, are all other elect persons who are incapable of being outwardly called by the ministry of the Word."

The governing body in each Presbyterian congregation is the church session, consisting of the pastor, when there is one, and one or more elders. A presbytery consists of all the ministers, in number not less than five, and one ruling elder from each congregation, within a certain district. A synod embraces at least three presbyteries, and consists of ministers and ruling elders from 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the local churches. The General Assembly is the highest authority in the church, and is a representative body composed of ministers and ruling elders selected by each of the presbyteries. A controversy arising in any of these bodies may be carried by appeal to the higher judicatories successively, until the General Assembly is reached, whose decision is final. Each member joining the church agrees to abide by the church laws, rules, and regulations.

The first Presbyterian Church on this continent was formed about the middle of the seventeenth century; and in 1785 the synods of New York and Philadelphia took steps for the union of all the Presbyterian bodies, which culminated in the formation and meeting of the first General Assembly, May 21, 1789.

The first constituent body of the Cumberland Church as an independent organization was a presbytery formed by three Presbyterian ministers, on February 4, 1810, in Dickson county, Tennessee. This action was the outgrowth of a revival and spiritual awakening which swept over the Western Wilderness in 1800 and succeeding years. This movement offended the Presbyterian Church, for three reasons: (1) The joyous emotions and demonstrations of converts were looked upon as fanatical, and not consistent with soberness and good order; (2) the mourners' bench, camp meeting, and other measures adopted to promote the revival were condemned as unscriptural, and the lowering of educational standards in licensing men as exhorters and evangelists, to meet the demand for ministers, was regarded as un-Presbyterian; (3) the pleading of revivalists with sinners to accept salvation freely offered to all seemed a denial of the certainty and definiteness of the eternal decrees taught by the Westminster Confession of Faith; and, finally, the men licensed as evangelists were ordained by the revival ministers, with permission to adopt the Confession of Faith, except "the idea of fatality," as it seemed to be taught in that book. This constituted the irreconcilable offense. The Cumberlands entertained a lingering hope of reconciliation and reunion with the mother church, until the growth of the church necessitated the formation of the Cumberland synod in 1813, which was the act of final separation. In 1814 the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church recognized the division as final, and thereafter dealt with the Cumberland Church as a sister evangelical denomination.

The distinctive belief of the Cumberland Church on doctrinal points of dissent from the Westminster Confession is concisely stated as follows: "(1) That there are no eternal reprobates; (2) that Christ did not r part only, but for all mankind; (3) all infants dying in infancy are saved by Christ and the sanctification of the Holy Spirit; (4) that the operations of the Holy Spirit are coextensive with the atonement,—as, on the whole world in such a manner as to leave it without excuse." The civil and governmental methods of the churches are conceded to be substantial alike. In 1829 a General Assembly of the Cumberland Church was formed and organized; and in 1883 the General Assembly adopted a constitution for that church which was duly ratified and approved by the Synod. The following provisions of the constitution are deemed relevant:

The General Assembly is the highest of this church, and represents in one all the particular churches thereof. It bears the title of the General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and sustains the bond of union, peace, correspondence, and mutual confidence among all churches and courts. . . . It shall assemble as often as once every two years, and shall consist of commissioners from the presbyteries."

The General Assembly shall have the power to receive and decide all appeals, and complaints regularly brought before it from the inferior courts; to testify against error in doctrine and immorality in practice, injuriously affecting the church; to decide in all controversies respecting doctrine and discipline.

To receive under its jurisdiction ecclesiastical bodies whose organization conformed to the doctrine and order of this church."

Upon the recommendation of the General Assembly, at a stated meeting, by the two-thirds vote of the members thereof, the Confession of Faith, catechism, constitutional rules of discipline, may be amended or changed when a majority of the Synod, upon the same being transferred for their action, shall approve."

Confession of Faith, Sec. III. "It is the duty of these courts, ministerially, to remove controversies of faith and questions of morals, to set down rules and orders for the better ordering of the worship of God and government of the church, . . . and authoritatively to remove the same, which determinations shall be received with reverence and submission."

In 1860 the General Assembly of the Cumberland Church passed a resolution declaring its hope that the entire Presbyterian Church might soon be represented in one General Assembly; and in 1867, appointed a committee to take preliminary action thereon. (N.S.)

looking to organic union with the Presbyterian Church. The Cumberland Church, through its committee, proposed at that time to surrender its name, standards of ministerial education, and points of difference in form of government, discipline, and directory. This attempt at union failed. Propositions for union with the Evangelical Lutheran Church and the Methodist Protestant Church were under consideration by the General Assemblies of 1882-1887. The Cumberland General Assembly, in 1903, appointed a committee on fraternity and union, to confer with like committees from other Presbyterian bodies looking to organic union among Presbyterian churches in the United States. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, in 1903, disavowing the extreme fatalistic inferences drawn from statements in the Confession of Faith, and insisting that ordination vows required its reception and adoption only as containing the system of doctrine taught in the Holy Scriptures, made the following authoritative and explicit declaration:

"First, with reference to chapter III. of the Confession of Faith, that, concerning those who are saved in Christ, the doctrine of God's eternal decree is held in harmony with the doctrine of His love to all mankind. His gift of His Son to be the propitiation for the sins of the whole world, and His readiness to bestow His saving grace on all who seek it. That concerning those who perish, the doctrine of God's eternal decree is held in harmony with the doctrine that God desires not the death of any sinner, but has provided in Christ a salvation sufficient for all, adapted to all, and freely offered in the Gospel to all; that men are fully responsible for their treatment of God's gracious offer; that His decree hinders no man from accepting that offer; and that no man is condemned except on the ground of his sin.

"Second, with reference to chapter X., § 3, of the Confession of Faith, that it is not to be regarded as teaching that any who die in infancy are lost. We believe that all dying in infancy are included in the election of grace, and are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit, who works when and where and how He pleases."

The committee on fraternity and union of the Cumberland Church met with the committee on church co-operation and union of the Presbyterian Church and formulated and agreed upon a joint report to be submitted to the General Assemblies of the two churches, which report embraces: (1) Plan of reunion and union of the two churches. (2) Concurrent declarations to be adopted by the respective General Assemblies meeting in 1904. (3) Recommendation.

mendations. In this report the committee said: "We believe that the union of Christian churches of substantially similar faith and polity would be to the glory of God, the good of mankind, and the strengthening of Christian testimony at home and abroad." And among the concurrent declarations to be adopted was the following: "In adopting the Confession of Faith of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, as revised in 1903, as a basis of union, it is mutually recognized that such agreement now exists between the systems of doctrine contained in the Confessions of Faith of the two churches as to warrant this union,—a union honoring alike to both." The plan of union provided that the two churches be united as one, under the name and style of "the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America," and on the doctrinal basis of the Confession of Faith of the Presbyterian Church, as revised in 1903, and its other doctrinal and ecclesiastical standards, and the acknowledgment of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as the inspired word of God, the only infallible rule of faith and practice. It was further provided as follows:

"3. Each of the Assemblies shall submit the foregoing basis of union to its Presbyteries, which shall be required to meet on or before April 30th, 1905, to express their approval or disapproval of the same by a categorical answer to this question:

"Do you approve of the reunion and union of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America and the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, on the following basis: The union shall be effected on the doctrinal basis of the Confession of Faith of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, as revised in 1903, and of its other doctrinal and ecclesiastical standards, and the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments shall be acknowledged as the inspired word of God, the only infallible rule of faith and practice?"

"Each presbytery shall, before the 10th day of May, 1905, forward to the stated clerk of the Assembly with which it is connected a statement of its vote on the said basis of union.

"4. The report of the vote of the presbyteries shall be submitted by the respective stated clerks to the General Assemblies meeting in 1905, and if the General Assemblies shall then find and declare that the foregoing basis of union has been approved by the constitutional majority of the presbyteries connected with each branch of the church, then the same shall be of binding force, and both Assemblies shall take action accordingly."

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The joint report was adopted by the General Assembly of the Cumberland Church in 1904 by an affirmative vote of 162, and a negative vote of 74, and the basis of union referred to the presbyteries for their approval or disapproval.

The Cumberland Church contained 114 presbyteries, and its General Assembly in 1905 found that 60 had voted for approval of the reunion and union of the two churches, 51 for disapproval of the same, 1 for approval conditionally, and 2 had not voted. It was thereupon declared that a constitutional majority of the presbyteries had voted approval of the reunion and union on the basis set forth in the joint report, and that such reunion and union had been constitutionally agreed to by the Cumberland Church, and the basis of union constitutionally adopted. A minority protest was filed to the union movement.

The joint committee during the next succeeding year arranged the details of union, and agreed upon a joint report to both General Assemblies, including therein appropriate resolutions whereby the reunion and union was declared constitutionally and finally consummated. The final report of the committee on fraternity and union of the Cumberland Church, including therein such joint report, was adopted by the General Assembly convened at Decatur, Illinois, by an affirmative vote of 165 and a negative vote of 91. The moderator, in pursuance of the directions and requirements of said joint report thereupon, made the following announcements: "The joint report of the two committees on reunion and union, and the recitals and resolutions therein contained and recommended for adoption, having been adopted by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America and the General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and official notice of such adoption having been received by each of the said General Assemblies from the other, I do solemnly declare and here publicly announce that the basis of reunion and union is now in full force and effect, and that the Cumberland Presbyterian Church is now reunited with the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America as one church, and that the official records of the two churches during the period of separation shall be preserved and held as making up the history of the one church." It having been provided in said joint report that after the announcement of the foregoing declaration no further business in the General Assembly of the Cumberland Church should be in order, except a motion to adjourn sine die, as a separate assembly, the following adjourning order was adopted:

olved that this General Assembly do adjourn sine die, as a separate General Assembly, to meet in and as part of the One hundred and Nineteenth General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America on the third Thursday of May, 1907, at 11 o'clock A. M., at the place chosen by the One Hundred and Nineteenth General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America. Thereupon, the moderator declared said General Assembly adjourned in accordance with the adjourning order." Immediately after the adjournment, the dissenting minority reassembled in the Grand Opera House near by, chose a temporary chairman and clerk, passed a resolution denying the above action rescinded, and adjourned to meet at a designated time and place the following year. This organization has been maintained since, and claims to be the true Cumberland Presbyterian Church, entitled to all the property, rights, and legacies owned and held by the church of that name prior to the declared reunion and separation with the Presbyterian Church.

The appellant's contentions, in substance, are that the powers of the General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church are limited by its constitution; that no extra-territorial authority to form a union with another church is conferred, and that the attempted union and merger is accordingly void and void; that if the power to form the union existed, it was exercised so unlawfully as to make the result void; that the title to the property in question is vested with a special and limited trust which precludes its transfer to and use by any denomination other than the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

In the early case of Watson v. Jones, 13 679, 722, 20 L. ed. 666, 673, controversies involving the title to property held by religious societies were classified as fol-

"(1) The first of these is when the property which is the subject of controversy has been by the deed or will of the donor, or other instrument by which the property is held, by the express terms of the instrument, devoted to the teaching, propagation, or spread of some specific form of religious doctrine or belief. (2) The second when the property is held by a religious organization, which, by the nature of its organization, is strictly independent of ecclesiastical associations, and, so far as church government is concerned, owes no duty or obligation to any higher authority. (3) The third is where the religious organization or ecclesiastical body holding the property is but a subordinate member of a general church organization in which there are superior ecclesiastical tribunals, R.A. (N.S.) with a general and ultimate power of control, more or less complete, in some supreme judicatory, over the whole membership of that general organization."

We shall subsequently consider whether the terms of the deed to the property in dispute create such a special trust as to bring this case within the first of these classes. It is manifest that this controversy is not of the second class. The controlling question at issue falls clearly within the third of these classifications, and the declarations of law made in the case of Watson v. Jones, supra, and followed with constancy by this court, and generally by other American courts, aptly apply, and conclusively determine the matter in dispute. The case cited involved the conflicting claims of two factions of the Presbyterian Church to church property, and we quote with approval from the opinion of Mr. Justice Miller the following paragraphs: "There are in the Presbyterian system of ecclesiastical government, in regular succession, the presbytery over the session or local church, the synod over the presbytery, and the General Assembly over all. These are called, in the language of the church organs, 'judicatories,' and they entertain appeals from the decisions of those below, and prescribe corrective measures in other cases.

"In this class of cases we think the rule of action which should govern the civil courts, founded in a broad and sound view of the relations of church and state under our system of laws, and supported by a preponderating weight of judicial authority, is that whenever the questions of discipline or of faith or ecclesiastical rule, custom, or law have been decided by the highest of these church judicatories to which the matter has been carried, the legal tribunals must accept such decisions as final and as binding on them in their application to the case before them. . . .

"It may very well be conceded that if the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church should undertake to try one of its members for murder, and punish him with death or imprisonment, its sentence would be of no validity in a civil court or anywhere else. . . .

"But it is a very different thing where a subject-matter of dispute strictly and purely ecclesiastical in its character—a matter over which the civil courts exercise no jurisdiction, a matter which concerns theological controversy, church discipline, ecclesiastical government, or the conformity of the members of the church to the standard of morals required of them—becomes the subject of its action. It may be said here, also, that no jurisdiction has been conferred on the tribunal to try the particular case, before it, or that, in its judgment, it exceeds the powers conferred upon it, or that the laws of the church do not authorize the particular form of proceeding adopted; and, in a sense often used in the courts, all of those may be said to be questions of jurisdiction. But it is easy to see that, if the civil courts are to inquire into all these matters, the whole subject of the doctrinal theology, the usages and customs, the written laws, and fundamental organization of every religious denomination, may, and must, be examined into with minuteness and care, for they would become in almost every case the criteria by which the validity of the ecclesiastical decree would be determined in the civil court. This principle would deprive these bodies of the right of construing their own church laws, would open the way to all the evils which we have depicted as attendant upon the doctrine of Lord Eldon, and would, in effect, transfer to the civil courts, where property rights were concerned, the decision of all ecclesiastical questions."

The recital of portions of the constitution of the Cumberland Church and the proceedings of its General Assembly in this opinion was not for the purpose of reviewing the facts, and determining for ourselves the correctness of the conclusion reached, but chiefly to show that the question considered and decided was wholly ecclesiastical, that the proceedings were fairly regular, and not founded upon a naked usurpation of authority. If church judicatories proceed palpably without jurisdiction, and their action is clearly ultra vires, neither the church membership nor the civil courts should respect their decisions; but when the matter in controversy is purely of ecclesiastical cognizance, and the church tribunal proceeds in manifest good faith under color of authority, its decision upon the question of its own jurisdiction, as well as upon subsidiary questions, is binding upon the civil courts.

In the case of Lamb v. Cain, 129 Ind. 486, 518, 14 L.R.A. 518, 29 N. E. 13, 22, this court, speaking to the point under consideration, said: "It will scarcely be denied that the general conference, which is the highest legislative and judicial body in the church, has power to determine what is the constitution under which it acts, and to determine what is the Confession of Faith of the church which it represents. The question as to whether the old Confession of Faith and the old constitution had been superseded by the new was a question that squarely confronted the conference of 1889. Assuming that the action of commission on revision, coupled with the action of the conference of 1885, and vote upon the subject 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) of revision and amendment, gave it jurisdiction in the premises, the general conference of 1889 adjudged and declared that what appears in the record before us as the revised Confession of Faith and amended constitution was in fact the fundamental belief and constitution of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ in the United States. Who shall question the correctness of its decision, or revise it? The civil courts? To do so would be to assume ecclesiastical jurisdiction; a jurisdiction they do not possess. It was clearly an ecclesiastical matter, pertaining to the government of the church, and the church, through its legally constituted tribunal, having adjudicated the matter, we think the civil courts are bound by such adjudications."

In the case of White Lick Quarterly Meeting v. White Lick Quarterly Meeting, 89 Ind. 136, 151, this court, by Niblack, Ch. J., said: "Civil courts in this country have no ecclesiastical jurisdiction. They cannot revise or question ordinary acts of church discipline, and can only interfere in church controversies where civil rights or the rights of property are involved. Where a civil right depends upon some matter pertaining to ecclesiastical affairs, the civil tribunal tries the civil right, and nothing more, taking the ecclesiastical decisions, out of which the civil right has arisen, as it finds them, and accepting those decisions as matters adjudicated by another jurisdiction. The civil courts act upon the theory that the ecclesiastical courts are the best judges of merely ecclesiastical questions, and of all matters which concern the doctrines and discipline of the respective religious denominations to which they belong. When a person becomes a member of a church, he becomes so upon the condition of submission to its ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and however much he may be dissatisfied with the exercise of that jurisdiction, he has no right to invoke the supervisory power of a civil court so long as none of his civil rights are invaded." See also Gaff v. Greer, 88 Ind. 122, 45 Am. Rep. 449; O'Donovan v. Chatard, 97 Ind. 421, 49 Am. Rep. 462; Dwenger v. Geary, 113 Ind. 106, 14 N. E. 903; Smith v. Pedigo, 145 Ind. 361, 19 L.R.A. 433, 32 L.R.A. 838, 33 N. E. 777, 44 N. E. 363; State ex rel. Hatfield v. Cummins, 171 Ind. 112, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 85 N. E. 359.

Appellants have cited the cases of Smith v. Pedigo, supra, and Hatfield v. De Long, 156 Ind. 207, 51 L.R.A. 751, 83 Am. St. Rep. 194, 59 N. E. 483, as sustaining their contention that civil courts will examine and construe for themselves ecclesiastical constitutions, rules, and usages, when necessary in determination of property or civil rights. The first of these cases involved a dispute between two factions of a Baptist church which was of the congregational type, strictly independent of other ecclesiastical associations, and, so far as church doctrine or government was concerned, owing no fealty or obligation to any higher authority. The case, therefore, came within that class where there is no authorized ecclesiastical judicatory to decide the matter of difference, and it is alleged that property dedicated and held for a particular use is being diverted by the teaching of a doctrine different from that contemplated at the time the donation or dedication was made, in which case the court, however delicate and difficult the task may be, will inquire whether the party accused of violating the trust is teaching a doctrine so far in variance with that originally intended as to defeat the objects of the trust, and if the charge is found true, will make such order in the premises as to secure a faithful execution of the trust confided. See also United Zion Baptist Church v. Whitmore, 83 Pa. 138, 13 L.R.A. 198, 49 N. W. 81; Christian Church v. Church of Christ, 219 Mo. 503, 76 N. E. 703; Hale v. Everett, 53 Ill. 9, 16 Am. Rep. 82; Schnorr's Appeal, 12 Pa. 138, 5 Am. Rep. 415; Ramsey's Appeal, 88 Pa. 60; Cape v. Plymouth Congregation, 117 Wis. 155, 93 N. W. 449.

Certain declarations in the case of Hatfield v. De Long, supra, are not in accord with American authorities, and must be disapproved. If, as in that case, the subject-matter involved is wholly of ecclesiastical character, civil courts are without jurisdiction to act at all, or to grant any relief, legal or equitable. The right to worship according to the dictates of conscience is guaranteed to the citizens of this Republic, controversies growing out of differing religious beliefs and spiritual conceptions, involving no civil right, are too inalienable to form the basis of a civil action.

It is the exclusive prerogative of religious tribunals, when considering only ecclesiastical interests and questions, to construe their statutes and ordinances, and to define for themselves the regularity and validity of their proceedings. It cannot be for the civil authorities whether one charged with a spiritual offense be tried by an ecclesiastical tribunal, or be denied the exercise of religious rights and privileges without or without cause, since membership in an unincorporated religious society does not constitute a civil or valuable right, within the meaning of the law. Fussell v. Hatfield, 233 Ill. 73, 84 N. E. 42; Shannon v. Nance, 3 B. Mon. 253; Nance v. Busby, 91 Ill. 303, 15 L.R.A. 801, 18 S. W. 874.

It is not accurate or correct to say that an association for religious worship is like an ordinary fraternal or beneficial society or social club, and its membership and affairs to be determined by the same legal principles, since the one is founded upon a distinctive conception of the relation and duty of man to his Maker, and the other is concerned only with the relation of man, to his fellows. In so far as the case of Hatfield v. De Long, supra, holds that in a matter concerning only spiritual or ecclesiastical rights, a civil court has jurisdiction to examine into the regularity and validity of a church tribunal, and restrain its proceedings for nonconformity to its own laws, it is expressly overruled. Fussell v. Hatfield, supra. We have seen that the General Assembly of the Cumberland Church, by § 43 of its constitution, had specific authority to decide all controversies respecting doctrine and discipline, and that it did explicitly decide that the Confession of Faith of the Presbyterian Church as revised in 1903 was in substantial accord with its own doctrinal tenets, and that decision, under our own holdings and other authorities, is accordingly binding and conclusive, not only upon the membership of the church, but also upon the civil courts. Ferraria v. Vasconcelles, 23 Ill. 456; Chase v. Cheney, 58 Ill. 509, 11 Am. Rep. 95; Schweiker v. Husser, 146 Ill. 399, 34 N. E. 1022; Brundage v. Deardorf, 34 C. C. A. 304, 92 Fed. 214; Watson v. Avery, 2 Bush, 332; Trinity M. E. Church v. Harris, 73 Conn. 216, 50 L.R.A. 636, 47 Atl. 116; East Norway L. N. Evangelical Lutheran Church v. Halvorson, 42 Minn. 503, 44 N. W. 663. This record does not present the case of a factional division of a congregation, or schism in the body of a church, on account of conflicting beliefs or doctrinal innovations, but that of a minority dissenting from the official judgment of the highest church judicatory, in which action, though protesting, they yet participated. It follows that unless the offending act was clearly unconstitutional and ultra vires, appellants and those allied with them were bound, and by their insubordination have become seceders, with no right to share in the property and temporalities of the church of which they were formerly a part.

This question might be judicially determined with brevity, but the sacred interests involved, and the earnest and conscientious purposes of the litigants, invite and make appropriate some elaboration of argument. It is insisted that the momentous issue of the surrender of its distinctive name and separate identity, and union and merger with a greater kindred organism, should have been submitted to and passed upon directly by the whole membership of the Cumberland Church, and that church sovereignty is in its individual membership, and not in its governing bodies. The primary object of religious association is worship, to which the possession of property is subordinate and necessarily incident. No man can hope to receive pecuniary profit from his religious membership, and as a communicant in a church he has no private interest in its property. The action now under consideration was purely ecclesiastical, and its effect upon church property was resultant and consequential. This statement is made merely to emphasize the fact that no personal or pecuniary rights are involved in this controversy, necessitating an opportunity to individuals to be heard or to participate in the proceedings of which complaint is made. But we have already seen that the Presbyterian system of government is not that of a pure democracy, but is republican in character and wholly representative. John Calvin, who formulated the Presbyterian system of doctrine and polity, was familiar with the governmental principles of the Genevese Republic. A notable resemblance has been remarked in the governmental system of the Presbyterian Church and of this great Republic of ours. An amendment to the Constitution of the United States must first pass both houses of Congress, and be ratified by the Legislatures of two-thirds of the states. The constitution of the church may be amended by a two-thirds vote of its General Assembly and the approval of a majority of the presbyteries, but in neither case does the individual member of the society directly participate. It is a suggestive historical incident that while the first General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church was convened in Philadelphia in May, 1789, at the same time and only four blocks distant, the convention was in session framing the Federal Constitution, with the dominant purpose of conferring upon the national government supreme executive, legislative, and judicial powers in national affairs. Many of the leaders of the constitutional convention were familiar with Presbyterianism, and it is said, on trustworthy authority, that Alexander Hamilton kept the Presbyterian Form of Government on his study table during the session of the convention. No express authority is found in the Federal Constitution for the expansion of our domain by the annexation of foreign territory and peoples, but this power is an inherent attribute of sovereignty, and is validly exercised by the national authorities without reference to the states or citizens for approval.

It is contended that the jurisdiction of the General Assembly is expressly limited 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

by § 25 of the constitution of the Cumberland Church. This section prescribes the jurisdiction of the church session, the presbytery, the synod, and the General Assembly, and concludes with the statement that "the jurisdiction of these courts is limited by the express provisions of the constitution." This provision was designed to fix definite limits to the jurisdiction of these judicatories as between themselves, but not to circumscribe the sovereign power of the church itself, or of the body in whom its supreme power was vested. This church from its inception entertained the belief that it had inherent or implied power to unite with another church of similar doctrine and order, and, as shown in the introductory statement of facts, often expressed the hope of reunion with the mother church, and made frequent overtures and efforts towards union with other denominations. It possessed, undoubtedly, all the sovereign powers of the parent church from which it sprang, and of other kindred Presbyterian branches. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, in 1801, made efforts to unite with the Reformed Dutch Church, the Associated Reformed Churches, and the General Assembly of Connecticut. It divided into the old school and the new in 1838, and reunited in 1870. The Associated Reformed Church and the Associate Church united in 1858, forming the United Presbyterian Church; the Independent Presbyterian Church of the Carolinas united with the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (South) in 1863; and the Alabama presbyteries of the Associate Reform Church united with the Presbyterian Church (South) in 1867. The union principle finds scriptural sanction, and had for its advocate the author of Calvinism himself, who devoted the last days of his life to the interests of church unity. He prayed and labored for the union of reformed churches, wrote letters, pamphlets, and books urging this upon all the friends of evangelical religion, and earnestly longed to see these churches closing their ranks and presenting an undivided front in the promulgation of their common doctrines.

In the light of these historical facts, it cannot be plausibly denied, and is not disputed, that the Cumberland Church had power to enter into a union with the Presbyterian Church, but the specific claim is that its General Assembly with the concurrence of the presbyteries had no authority without a vote of the membership to consummate such union. The church unions above enumerated were effected in a manner substantially the same as that adopted in the instance before us. There is no such thing in the Presbyterian polity as a popular vote, upon the General Assembly is conferred some legislative, administrative, and judicial authority in church affairs, and it constitutes the "bond of union" and presents in one body all the particular churches." It is charged with oversight of matters affecting the church as an entirety, and upon it is entered the duty of concerting "measures for promoting the prosperity and enlargement of the church," and it is expressly authorized "to receive under its jurisdiction other ecclesiastical bodies whose organization is formed to the doctrine and order of this church." The fundamental purpose of this church was to evangelize and Christianize the whole world, and if, in the promotion of that end, its General Assembly might lawfully take under its jurisdiction ecclesiastical bodies inferior in numbers and influence, it might, by the same right and with more propriety, consolidate its forces in a church of greater numbers, power, and resources, of like doctrine and polity. Its members earnestly desirous of the speedy attainment of the ultimate aim must enthusiastically applaud the acquisition of new members augmenting the power and influence of the common church, provided no surrender of conscientious convictions touches their faith and practice is required. It is conceded that the Cumberland General Assembly had power to amend the Confession of Faith and constitution of that church so as to make the same conform in every particular to the Confession of Faith and polity of the Presbyterian Church, by the precise method and vote pursued for the union of the two churches. This was the effect of the vote for consolidation, and not the mere act of effecting a union involved a question of policy and expediency rather than of power or authority. It is the conclusion that the Cumberland Church has inherent power to unite with another ecclesiastical body whose doctrine and polity are deemed in harmony with its own, and that the authority to consummate such a union was vested in its General Assembly, without the direct sanction of its lay membership; that that body did not usurp authority or transcend its powers, and so far as this court has jurisdiction to pass upon the question, the reunion and union of that church with the Presbyterian Church, as decided by the General Assembly at Decatur, Georgia, was legal and valid, and binding upon its membership and upon the decisions of the courts.

In the case of Smith v. Swormstedt, 16 How. 14 L. ed. 942, involved the validity of the division of the Methodist Episcopal Church, by its General Conference, and the court held that body had inherent power to make the division, saying in part: "It is insisted, however, that the General Conference of 1844 possessed no power to divide the Methodist Episcopal Church as then organized, or to consent to such division. . . . But we do not agree that this division was made without the proper authority. On the contrary, we entertain no doubt but that the General Conference of 1844 was competent to make it; and that each division of the church, under the separate organization, is just as legitimate, and can claim as high a sanction, ecclesiastical and temporal, as the Methodist Episcopal Church first founded in the United States. The same authority which founded that church in 1784 has divided it, and established two separate and independent organizations occupying the place of the old one. . . . It cannot therefore be denied, indeed it has scarcely been denied, that this body, while composed of all the traveling preachers, possessed the power to divide it, and authorize the organization and establishment of the two separate independent churches. The power must necessarily be regarded as inherent in the General Conference. As they might have constructed two ecclesiastical organizations over the territory of the United States originally, if deemed expedient, in the place of one, so they might at any subsequent period, the power remaining unchanged." See also Gibson v. Armstrong, 7 B. Mon. 481; McGinnis v. Watson, 41 Pa. 9.

The precise questions presented by this appeal have been recently passed upon by the courts of other states. In the case of Mack v. Kime, 129 Ga. 30, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 675, 58 S. E. 197, the supreme court of Georgia announced its conclusions as follows: "The General Assembly, as the highest church court, has determined the questions arising as to the alleged differences of doctrine. The General Assembly, as the highest authority of the church, executive, legislative, and judicial, has determined that it is wise and best that the reunion should take place, and the constitution of the church, as we have interpreted it, gives that body power and jurisdiction to deal with this question, and the question of reunion has been settled in form and manner as the constitution prescribes."

In Brown v. Clark, 102 Tex. 323, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 670, 116 S. W. 364, the supreme court of Texas said: "We conclude that the General Assembly of the Cumberland Church was the embodiment and expression of the sovereign power of the whole church and its membership, and that it could do for the churches and for the membership whatever they could have done if they had been assembled for that purpose.

The General Assembly of the Cumberland Church had authority to determine, from the provisions of the constitution, whether it had the power to enter into the union with the Presbyterian Church, and having decided that it had such authority, and having acted upon that decision, the civil courts have no power to review that action." A like conclusion was reached in the following cases: Fussell v. Hail, 134 Ill. App. 620; Wallace v. Hughes, 131 Ky. 445, 115 S. W. 691; Committee of Missions v. Pacific Synod, 157 Cal. 105, 106 Pac. 395.

A contrary holding was made in Landrith v. Hudgins, 121 Tenn. 556, 120 S. W. 783, and Boyles v. Roberts, 222 Mo. 613, 121 S. W. 805.

The Tennessee case affirms that the sovereign power of the Cumberland Church is in its General Assembly and presbyteries, which, acting together, had power to effect a union with another church of like doctrine and order, without a vote of the separate congregations. This proposition is forcibly stated in the following paragraph: "The General Assembly then is made up of representatives of the people,—that is, elders and representatives of the church at large, that is, ministers. Thus, it is composed of all governing agencies. The sovereignty of the organization, however, does not reside in that body alone, or in the presbyteries; . . . each acting alone is limited to powers expressly given (Const. § 25); when they act together, the whole governing body acts,—the church at large, and the people themselves in and through their elders, who are the representatives of each several church. The power which makes or amends the constitution or constituent contract of the organization is the power where sovereignty is lodged. This power is that of the General Assembly and the presbyteries acting together. This was shown by the manner in which the constitution of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church was adopted in 1883. In the case referred to, the people did not vote. The power that can constitute can dissolve, or can carry the organization into the body of another organization. Persons who become members of a church with this form of organization agree, by so doing, to abide the powers vested in the organization." That court, however, holds that civil tribunals, when called upon to determine property rights dependent upon the validity of such union or action, will examine ecclesiastical constitutions and church usages, and determine for themselves whether the proper procedure has been adopted and followed; and proceeding upon this principle, finds that the doctrines of the two churches were not substantially identical, and were not brought into accord 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) in a constitutional way, and that a material part of the plan of union was not submitted to the approval of the presbyteries. The Missouri court follows the Tennessee doctrine. Both these cases strongly rely upon the case of General Assembly v. Overtoun [1904] A. C. 612. The constitutional separation of church and state in this country should make the English case, if similar upon its facts, of little persuasive force as an authority in an American court.

The conclusion reached and announced, as to the jurisdiction and authority of the General Assembly, disposes of all subsidiary questions raised in argument. Appellants' counsel contended that the General Assembly of the Cumberland Church was not vested with implied power to merge that church into another body, and thereby terminate its existence and effect its death. The assumption that a union, consolidation, merger, or whatever it is pleasing to term the action in question, is the equivalent of death and the cessation of the organic functions of the church, is fallacious. Every congregation, presbytery, and synod of the church, with possibly some changes of constituent membership and geographical boundaries, will continue its existence and accustomed work without interruption,—the manifest purpose of the union being not death and disintegration, but a larger life, and, in the opinion the governing body, a greater opportunity in carrying forward the commands of the Master and Head of the Church.

Objection is made to the validity of the union because of the failure to submit to the presbyteries the agreement that by the merger the Cumberland name was to be surrendered, and the name of the Presbyterian Church adopted for the consolidated body. If it be conceded, as it is by all the civil courts which have considered the question, that the General Assembly and presbyteries had jurisdiction over the subject of making a union with another church, then, as the supreme executive, legislative, and judicial authority in the church, under our view of the law, the General Assembly had power to decide on the proper mode of procedure, and to determine conclusively the regularity and validity of the proceedings had to effect the desired object. It is manifest, however, that the fundamental and paramount point of disagreement between these two churches had been with regard to their faith and doctrine, and the vital question for decision was, Shall the reunion and union be made on the basis of the revised Confession of Faith and other standards of the Presbyterian Church? The surrender of the name distinctive of the Cumberland Church, apart from sentimental considerans, was of little consequence. The inherent power conceded to the General Assembly, and the express assent of the esbyteries to the proposed union on the etrinal basis approved, authorized the rmal completion of the union, implied me modification of names, and, it seems, us under any view of the law, empowered ie General Assemblies to adopt any name eemed by them most appropriate for the onsolidated church.

It is finally contended that, by the terms f the conveyance made in 1854 to the trustees of the Cumberland Church, a special and limited trust was created in this property, which precludes its diversion to the use of the united church. This deed is a civil contract, and it is the prerogative of the civil courts to construe its terms and to determine its meaning and legal effect. In a suit for forfeiture of title by the donor or grantor of property on the ground of the breach of a special trust expressed in the deed, a civil court may be and often is required to deal with ecclesiastical questions, since church judicatories have no jurisdiction to decide such matters. But we have no such case before us. This property appears to have been purchased for $85 in the ordinary way of business, and conveyed to the trustees by a general warranty deed, without condition or limitation. It is entirely clear that no trust, express or implied, is attached to the title. Appellants at no time had any interest in the property except as members of a congregation which was an integral part of the ecclesiastical society known as the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Our only duty is to determine the identity of the ecclesiastical successor of the original grantee. This we have seen has been determined for us, since the union of the Cumberland Church with the Presbyterian Church carried into the united body all its property. The validity of that union appellants cannot question, and in it they must acquiesce or defy the authority and decrees of the church to which they pledged allegiance. Consciences cannot be bound, and if, in the assertion of individual opinion and conscientious dictates, appellants segregate themselves from the body of the church, they must depart as they came in,—empty handed.

The court did not err in overruling appellants' motion for a new trial.

The judgment is affirmed.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Montgomery, J., on June 28, 1910, handed down the following response (92 N. E. 104):

It is charged in appellants' petition for a rehearing that this court abdicated its 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

functions in accepting the decision of the General Assembly of the Cumberland Church as conclusive upon the matter in controversy. The original opinion plainly declares that there are no provisions in the deed conveying to the church the particular property involved, creating a special or limited trust or requiring construction. This being true, both parties agree that the only remaining question is the validity of the union or merger of the two churches. This is purely an ecclesiastical question, over which civil courts have no jurisdiction. The circumstance that control over certain real or personal property devoted to church uses will pass as an incident of the contested matter does not change the nature of the controversy, or operate to clothe civil courts with power to decide the real issue, if a church judicatory has been provided for the settlement of such disputes. In the instance under consideration, a church judicatory existed, clothed with jurisdiction and supreme authority in the premises, which had formally passed upon the ecclesiastical question involved, and its judgment is therefore final and binding upon the civil tribunals, under all approved American authorities.

Complaint is also made because oral argument was heard in the absence of two members of the court. The granting of such argument in this case, after its transfer from the appellate court, was exceptional, and done on motion of the court for its own purposes, and not as a matter of right to the parties. No basis of complaint can be founded on such action. The case has received such careful and conscientious consideration from the entire court as its manifest importance deserved, and our conclusion is in accord with the overwhelming preponderance of judicial authority upon the same question in other jurisdictions. First Presby. Church v. First Cumberland Presby. Church, 245 Ill. 74, 91 N. E. 761.

We are without any misgiving as to the soundness of the legal conclusions heretofore announced, and the petition for a rehearing is overruled.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

WILSON R. HUNTER, Resp't.,
v.

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.

(184 N. Y. 136, 76 N. E. 1072.)

Foreign corporation — withdrawal from state — service of process.

1. Merely recognizing existing insurance policies and receiving the premiums on them at its office in another state and adjusting claims which accrue does not constitute doing business within a state by an insurance company after its asserted withdrawal therefrom, so as to continue in force its designation of the insurance commissioner as its agent to receive service of process.

Same — revocation as to nonresidents.

2. An insurance company, upon withdrawing from a state, may revoke its appointment of the insurance commissioner as its agent to receive service of process so far as claims of citizens of other states are concerned which are assigned after the withdrawal to residents of the state for collection, although the power of attorney provides that it is irrevocable so long as any liability of the company should remain outstanding in the state.

(February 27, 1906.)

Note. — Revocation by foreign corporation of appointment of attorney or agent to receive service of process.

Express statutory provision against revocation—business or transaction arising within the state.

To obviate the difficulty, under common-law rules, of bringing foreign corporations within the jurisdiction of any court other than those of their residence, many states have enacted statutes prescribing the conditions under which they will permit such corporations to transact business within their borders. A common form of such legislation is found in the North Carolina statute, provisions of which pertinent to the question here under discussion are sufficiently set forth in the above opinion. In spite of the clearness with which such statutes have pointed out when the appointment of an agent for service of process required by it of foreign corporations is to be irrevocable, many courts have been called upon to declare in the very terms of such acts that such appointment cannot be revoked so as to affect the rights of citizens of the state who, while the foreign corporation is there engaged in business, have entered into contracts with it in reliance on such appointment.

Thus, in Collier v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 119 Fed. 617, in which it appeared that a foreign insurance company went into business in Arkansas while there was in full force a statute containing similar provisions to the North Carolina act referred to, but which before suit was brought withdrew from the state and revoked its agencies, which circumstances, it was contended, precluded any suit against it even if service of process was had upon the person designated by it in accordance with the statute, it was held that such corporation could not revoke the authority of such agent so as to deprive a resident holder of a policy executed by it while it 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, in plaintiff's favor upon an agreed case submitted for the opinion of the court in a proceeding to enforce payment of certain judgments. Modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frank R. Lawrence, George Burnham, Jr., and Gordon T. Hughes, for appellant:

The courts of a state have not general jurisdiction to render a judgment in personam against a foreign corporation.

Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 27 L. ed. 222, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 354; Goldley v. Morning News, 156 U. S. 518, 39 L. ed. 517, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 559; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 43 L. ed. 569, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308;

was doing business in the state, of the right to make service upon such agent and bind the corporation thereby. The court said that the statute under the circumstances became a part of the policy sued on,—as much so as if it were written on its face. To quote from the opinion: "Moreover, it was an irrevocable contract, which the company could not avoid until it satisfied the terms of the statute, which could not be done so long as any liability to any resident of this state, entered into while the company was doing business in the state, continued."

In Magoffin v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 87 Minn. 260, 94 Am. St. Rep. 699, 91 N. W. 1115, it appeared that the defendant's license as a foreign corporation to transact business in the state had been revoked by the state insurance commissioner, and that thereafter and before commencement of the action the corporation attempted to revoke the stipulation which it filed in accordance with the statute authorizing service of process in any action against it on the insurance commissioner. It was contended that the sole consideration for the stipulation was the license to do business in the state and that, when the latter was revoked for any cause, the stipulation was revocable, and that the express provision of the statute to the effect that the stipulation should continue irrevocable as long as any liability of the company remained outstanding in the state was not a bar to this right to revoke stipulations, because it was not one coupled with interest. The court, in upholding service on the insurance commissioner, disposed of this contention in the following language: "The stipulation was not intended for the benefit of the insurance commissioner or of the state, but it was an agreement exacted by the state for the benefit of its citizens, as a condition precedent to the right of the company to do business in the state. It entered into and became a part of every policy which the company issued in the le v. Commercial Alliance L. Ins. Co. 394; Jackson v. Delaware River Amusement Co. 131 Fed. 134.

 pp. Div. 297, 40 N. Y. Supp. 269; Con-
 v. Mathieson Alkali Works, 190 U. S.
 47 L. ed. 1113, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 728;
 v. Mathieson Alkali Works, 190 U. S.
 47 L. ed. 1122, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 807;
 ington v. Central P. R. Co. 198 U. S.
 49 L. ed. 959, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 577;
 dall v. American Automatic Loom Co.
 U. S. 477, 49 L. ed. 1133, 25 Sup. Ct.
 768; Pennsylvania Lumbermen's Mut.
 ns. Co. v. Mayer, 197 U. S. 407, 49
 ed. 810, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 483; gerald & M. Constr. Co. v. Fitzld, 137 U. S. 98, 34 L. ed. 608, 11
 Ct. Rep. 36; Barrow S. S. Co. v. Kane,
 U. S. 100, 42 L. ed. 964, 18 Sup. Ct.
 526; De Castro v. Compagnie Fran-Du Telegraphe, 76 Fed. 425; Martin ew Trinidad Lake Asphalt Co. 130 Fed.

394; Jackson v. Delaware River Amusement Co. 131 Fed. 134.

A power of attorney, although irrevocable in terms, is revocable at the will of the principal.

Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. 174, 5 L. ed. 589; Knapp v. Alvord, 10 Paige, 205, 40 Am. Dec. 241; 2 Kent, Com. 643; Story, Agency, 9th ed. p. 587.

The agreement is for the benefit of those who may do business with the company under the permission granted it to enter the state. Such persons, and such only, are the beneficiaries of the agreement or power of attorney.

Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. ed. 451; Pennsylvania Lumbermen's Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Meyer and Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley, supra; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v.

while it was in force, and the insured insured an interest therein to the same extent as if it were written into each policy for the parties are deemed to have contracted with reference to the statute. Such being the case, it follows, and we so hold, that the stipulation here in question was revocable for any cause as to any liability of the defendant growing out of its policy issued while the stipulation or any real thereof was in force."

recovery has been allowed by the New York courts upon judgments obtained in North Carolina by citizens of that state against the defendant insurance company for service upon the insurance commissioner in accordance with the statute, although before the North Carolina actions were instituted the company had withdrawn from the state, and had attempted to revoke the appointment of the insurance commissioner as its agent upon whom service might be made. Woodward v. Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. 178 N. Y. 485, 102 Am. St. Rep. 71 N. E. 10 (reversing 84 App. Div. 82 N. Y. Supp. 908); Birch v. Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. 91 App. Div. 384, 86 N. Y. Supp. 872 (affirmed without opinion 181 N. Y. 583, 74 N. E. 1115, and U. S. 612, 50 L. ed. 620, 26 Sup. Ct. 752); Johnston v. Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. 104 App. Div. 544, 550, 629, 93 N. Y. Supp. 1048, 1052, 1062; Lambert v. Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. 104 App. Div. 93 N. Y. Supp. 1059. The first two are referred to in HUNTER v. MUTUAL RESERVE L. INS. CO., and in both the contention was that where a policy of insurance had been issued by a foreign company before the execution of the power of attorney appointing an agent for service process, and consequently not in reliance upon the policy holder's contractual obligations were not affected by the revocation of power and such revocation was there invalid and effectual as to them; while the last two it does not appear with certainty what the contention was upon L.R.A. (N.S.) which the defendant relied to defeat the application of the statute.

And in Biggs v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 128 N. C. 5, 37 S. E. 955, in which apparently the defendant contended that its designation of the state insurance commissioner as its agent to receive process was revocable because it had ceased to do business in the state, and because it did not domesticate under the Craig law (sufficiently explained in HUNTER v. MUTUAL RESERVE L. INS. CO.), the court in upholding service upon the insurance commissioner used the following language: "If that appointment could be revoked by the company at will, the end sought to be attained would be as illusory as a will of the wind, which fleets when it is sought to grasp it." And this case was followed in Moore v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 129 N. C. 31, 39 S. E. 637, and in Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Scott, 136 N. C. 157, 48 S. E. 581, and apparently the same contentions overruled.

In D'Arcy v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 108 Tenn. 567, 69 S. W. 768, the court upheld service of process upon the state officer appointed agent for that purpose by a foreign insurance company in accordance with the statute in force while it was transacting business in the state, though after the corporation withdrew from the state another statute was enacted expressly repealing the former and providing that another state officer should be designated by such corporation as agent for service, and no appointment was executed by the defendant as required by the later act.

In Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 43 L. ed. 569, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308, affirming 99 Tenn. 322, 44 L.R.A. 442, 42 S. W. 145, reviewed at length both in HUNTER v. MUTUAL RESERVE L. INS. CO. and in the United States Supreme Court's opinion affirming the latter decision, post, 686; and in which there was overruled a contention that the provisions of a statute giving permission to a foreign insurance company to do business within the state on condition that the company appoint the secretary of state as its agent to receive service on behalf of the company "at any and all times" after the company had been regularly admitted within the state, "even though such company may subsequently have retired from the state or been excluded," created a contract which precluded the state from authorizing service to be made on agents of the company, the Tennessee court declared such appointment to be irrevocable, at least as to causes of action which arose within the state, and it would seem that this was admitted by the insurance company.

Phelps, 190 U. S. 147, 47 L. ed. 987, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707; Home Ben. Soc. v. Muehl, 109 Ky. 479, 59 S. W. 520; Germania Ins. Co. v. Ashby, 112 Ky. 303, 99 Am. St. Rep. 295, 65 S. W. 611; Moore v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 129 N. C. 31, 39 S. E. 637; Fisher v. Traders' Mut. L. Ins. Co. 136 N. C. 217, 48 S. E. 667.

State statutes prescribing the manner of service of process upon the agents of foreign corporations do not confer jurisdiction over causes of action accruing outside the state upon contracts not made therein.

Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Carr, 76 Ala. 388, 52 Am. Rep. 339; Sawyer v. North American L. Ins. Co. 46 Vt. 697; Smith v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 14 Allen, 336; St. Clair v. Cox, supra; Newell v. Great Western R.

And in Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Duerson, 28 Gratt. 630, service upon the state officer designated for that purpose by a foreign corporation was upheld against the contention that the provision of law as to the revocability of such appointment was not applicable because, being subsequently enacted, it was not in force at the time the contracts sued upon were made, though such provision by its terms extended to policies previously made and the company accepted the same by complying therewith and by operating under it.

To the same effect is Paulus v. Hart-Parr Co. 136 Wis. 601, 118 N. W. 248, in which it was contended that the statute respecting service upon foreign corporations did not relate to interstate business, and was not applicable where the corporation's license to do business within the state was revoked.

—business or transactions not within the state.

On the other hand, the rule of law may now be said to be settled as decided in HUNTER v. MUTUAL RESERVE L. INS. CO. that the statutory provision as to the irrevocability of a foreign corporation's appointment of its agent for the service of process does not apply to the claims of citizens of other states which are assigned to residents of the state for collection after the company has withdrawn from the state, since that decision has been affirmed 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Co. 19 Mich. 336; Parke v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 44 Pa. 422; Camden Rolling Mill Co. v. Swede Iron Co. 32 N. J. L. 15; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Chumley, 92 Ala. 317, 9 So. 286; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Harrison, 122 Ala. 149, 82 Am. St. Rep. 68, 25 So. 697; Myer v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. 40 Md. 595; Cromwell v. Royal Canadian Ins. Co. 49 Md. 366, 33 Am. Rep. 258; Peters v. Neely, 16 Lea, 275; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Black, 80 Ind. 513; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 981; 6 Thomp. Corp. §§ 8005, 8007, 8008; Taylor, Priv. Corp. 5th ed. § 396; Cook, Corp. 5th ed. § 758.

Messrs. Paul Armitage and Albert P. Massey, for respondent:

Birch v. Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. 91 App. Div. 384, 86 N. Y. Supp. 872, 181

by the United States Supreme Court, 218 U. S. 573, 54 L. ed. 1155, post, 686, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127.

Before such affirmation the supreme court of North Carolina, in Williams v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 145 N. C. 128, 58 S. E. 802, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 51, arrived at the same conclusion as did the New York court in HUNTER v. MUTUAL RESERVE L. INS. CO., and held that one not a resident of North Carolina suing upon a contract which by its terms was made a contract of the state of the residence of the insurance company did not come within the language or spirit of the provision of the statute which limited the power of the company to revoke its power of attorney. The court declared that, except for the purpose stated in the statute, the defendant had a right at any time to withdraw from the state and cancel its power of attorney to the insurance commissioner.

And in Badger v. Helvetia Swiss F. Ins. Co. 136 App. Div. 31, 120 N. Y. Supp. 161, HUNTER v. MUTUAL RESERVE L. INS. CO. was cited to support the proposition that a foreign insurance company which for more than five years had ceased to do business in the state and whose policies issued therein had expired could revoke its designation of the state superintendent of insurance as a person upon whom service of process could be made in accordance with the statute regulating foreign insurance companies as to all persons not within the class intended to be benefited by the requirement that such a power of attorney be filed, though the superintendent of insurance refused to recognize the revocation.

And in Patton v. Continental Casualty Co. 119 Tenn. 364, 104 S. W. 305, it was said that a foreign insurance company if it had no obligations outstanding in the state "might" revoke a power of attorney appointing the insurance commissioner its agent for receiving service of process.

Where no express provision against revocation.

In all the cases heretofore reviewed in

Y. 583, 74 N. E. 1115, 200 U. S. 612, L. ed. 620, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 752; and Woodward Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. v. N. Y. 485, 102 Am. St. Rep. 519, 71 N. E. 10, are decisive in respondent's favor in this case.

Defendant continued to do business in North Carolina after the attempted revocation of the power of attorney.

Birch v. Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. supra; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratry, 172 U. S. 602, 43 L. ed. 589, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. v. Phelps, 190 U. S. 147, 47 L. ed. 987, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707.

When a foreign corporation undertakes to transact business in a state other than that in which it is incorporated, it submits to this note the statute in question provided that the power of appointment of an agent for the service of process against a foreign corporation should be irrevocable as long as the corporation had any outstanding liability in the state. In the cases to follow, however, the statutes before the court apparently contained no such provision, no reference, except in one or two instances, being made thereto in the opinions. Whether or not, under such statutes, the appointment of an agent for service of process is irrevocable as against a claim arising against the corporation while it was doing business within the state, presents a question upon which, as will be seen, the courts are not in accord.

In Lathrop-Shea & H. Co. v. Interior Constr. & Improv. Co. 150 Fed. 666, reversed on other grounds in 215 U. S. 246, 54 L. ed. 177, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 76, it was held that where a corporation withdrew its business from the state, and held no property therein, and revoked its appointment of the person upon whom process might be served, service upon the state officer designated by statute as the proper person to be served with process upon the failure of a foreign corporation to designate an agent for that purpose was not service upon the corporation, in the absence of a further provision of the statute that such service should be good during the existence of any outstanding liability within the state.

And in Millan v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 103 Fed. 764, it was held, under a statute which also omitted to place any limit to the revocability by a foreign corporation of its appointment of an agent upon whom process was to be served, that when the corporation ceased to do business in the state and revoked the authority of its agent appointed under the statute, it was no longer amendable to the jurisdiction of the courts of that state.

To the same effect is Swann v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 100 Fed. 922, in which it appeared that before the beginning of the action the defendant's license to do business within the state had been canceled by the state insurance commissioner, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

itself to the authority of the courts of such other state.

Pringle v. Woolworth, 90 N. Y. 509; People v. Commercial Alliance L. Ins. Co. 7 App. Div. 297, 40 N. Y. Supp. 269; Gibbs v. Queen Ins. Co. 63 N. Y. 120, 20 Am. Rep. 513; Douglass v. Phenix Ins. Co. 138 N. Y. 220, 20 L.R.A. 118, 34 Am. St. Rep. 448, 33 N. E. 938; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. v. Phelps, supra; Gibson v. Manufacturers' F. & M. Ins. Co. 144 Mass. 81, 10 N. E. 729; Aldrich v. E. W. Blanchford & Co. 175 Mass. 369, 56 N. E. 700; People v. Fire Assn. of Philadelphia, 92 N. Y. 311, 44 Am. Rep. 380; Vose v. Cockcroft, 44 N. Y. 415; Sherman v. McKeon, 38 N. Y. 266; Phyfe v. Eimer, 45 N. Y. 102.

It is not material that the suits were who was also the person designated by the defendant as its agent upon whom service of process might be made. The court, in refusing to uphold service upon such officer, declared that had the defendant actually rescinded the resolution creating such agency before the service, "there could have been no difficulty" as to the question of the invalidity of the service.

In all three cases last cited the cause of action arose within the state, and the result of the decisions reached therein would seem to be that in the absence of statutory provisions to that effect a citizen who had a claim against a foreign corporation arising out of a transaction with it in his state will be entirely powerless to collect the same in the courts of his own state, and will be left to a choice of pursuing the corporation to the state of its origin, or losing his claim. To avoid such result seems to have been the controlling influence with the courts in the following cases in denying the revocability of a foreign corporation's appointment of an agent for the service of process, in suits upon claims which arose in the state while the corporation was there doing business.

In Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. v. Phelps, 190 U. S. 147, 47 L. ed. 987, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707, the facts and conclusion of which are sufficiently set forth in HUNTER v. MUTUAL RESERVE L. INS. CO., the court said that it was to prevent foreign corporations from putting themselves beyond the reach of the courts of the state in which they were doing business that statutes were passed requiring such corporations to consent to service of process being made upon a permanent officer of the state, and declared that it would be obviously thwarting the purpose of such legislation if, after making a multitude of contracts with the citizens of the state, a foreign corporation should be enabled, by simply withdrawing its authority given to such officer, to compel all parties who had done business with it to seek the courts of its own state for the enforcement of their claims.

And in Davis v. Kansas & T. Coal Co.

based on contracts made by defendant with residents of states other than North Carolina and assigned to a resident of North Carolina.

McBride v. Farmers' Bank, 26 N. Y. 450; Jefferson County Nat. Bank v. Townley, 159 N. Y. 490, 54 N. E. 74.

Defendant will be presumed to have assented to be sued within the state by service on the insurance commissioner, and is estopped from showing either that it has not filed the requisite authority or that it has revoked it.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. 65, 20 L. ed. 354.

Ehrman v. Teutonia Ins. Co. 1 McCrary 123, 1 Fed. 471; Berry v. Knights Templars' & M. Life Indemnity Co. 46 Fed. 439; Diamond Plate Glass Co. v. Minneapolis Mut. F. Ins. Co. 55 Fed. 27; Old Wayne

Mut. Life Asso. v. Flynn (Ind. App.) 66 N. E. 57; Stewart v. Harmon, 98 Fed. 190; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. 270, 20 L. ed. 571; Hayden v. Androscoggin Mills, 1 Fed. 93; Wilson Packing Co. v. Hunter, 8 Biss. 429, Fed. Cas. No. 17,852.

The state had the power to make the statute and power of attorney broad enough to authorize the insurance commissioner of that state to receive process in all actions of every nature of which its courts had jurisdiction.

Aldrich v. E. W. Blatchford & Co. 175 Mass. 371, 56 N. E. 700; Youmans v. Minnesota Title Ins. & T. Co. 67 Fed. 282; Johnston v. Trade Ins. Co. 132 Mass. 432; Wilson v. Martin-Wilson Automatic Fire Alarm Co. 149 Mass. 24, 20 N. E. 318; Mooney v. Buford & G. Mfg. Co. 18 C. C. A. 421, 34 U. S. App. 581, 72 Fed. 32; Dar-

129 Fed. 149, the court declared that a foreign corporation doing business in the state could not escape suit in the state for contracts entered into by it or for torts committed by it, by simply ceasing to do business in the state, recalling its agents, and revoking the authority of the person designated by it under the law to receive process, and accordingly upheld service upon the state officer designated by the statute as the person upon whom service might be made if the corporation ceased to maintain within the state an agent to receive process.

And in Groel v. United Electric Co. 69 N. J. Eq. 397, 60 Atl. 822, the court in upholding service upon an agent of a foreign corporation who had been designated such in accordance with a statute which also provided that the agency so designated should continue in force until revoked and some other person substituted, though the corporation had attempted to revoke such agent's authority, used the following language: "It is not necessary to enlarge upon the fatuity of legislation which would permit a foreign corporation to come within the state and transact business upon condition that it name an agency upon whom process should be served, and leave it within the power of the corporation to prevent service by discharging the agent and revoking his authority whenever it pleased, leaving suitors within the state powerless to bring the corporation into court."

And in Michael v. Mutual Ins. Co. 10 La. Ann. 737, it was held that a foreign insurance company doing business through an agent and taking risks in the state could not be permitted to frustrate a claim in the state court upon a contract made with it, by revoking the power of its agent on the eve of the institution of a suit for loss of which it had been notified, and that a service upon such agent at the suit of the policy holder was sufficient to give jurisdiction.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And in Pervanger v. Union Casualty & Surety Co. 81 Miss. 32, 32 So. 909, it was held, under a statute requiring a foreign corporation to have an agent within the state upon whom service of process might be had, and in default thereof the person soliciting insurance for such company should be held to be the agent for that purpose, that a foreign corporation could not, by discharging all its agents, relieve itself from amenability to process, and accordingly service upon an agent through whom it issued the policy in suit was held to be good.

So, in Capen v. Pacific Mut. Ins. Co. 25 N. J. L. 67, 64 Am. Dec. 412, service upon one who had been duly appointed attorney and agent of a foreign corporation in accordance with a statute regulating such corporations was held to be good, though the agent so designated had resigned and his resignation had been accepted by the corporation before such service, where the plaintiff had no notice or knowledge of such resignation.

In Gibson v. Manufacturers' F. & M. Ins. Co. 144 Mass. 81, 10 N. E. 729, recovery was allowed upon a judgment obtained in New Mexico following service upon an agent who had been designated by the defendant as such in accordance with statutory provisions. The statute is not set out, but the court in referring to it used the following language: "Taking into consideration its evident purpose, and its utter fatuity if a company, appointing an agent to receive service, could, by an act known only to the agent and itself, withdraw his powers, it must be held that this appointment was irrevocable, unless this revocation might be made by the appointment, duly notified upon the public records, of a new agent, who should be competent to receive service of process in regard to any controversies arising upon contracts previously entered into."

J. A. C.

lington v. Rogers, 36 Phila. Leg. Int. 115; Palmer v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 84 N. Y. 63.

Hiscock, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant is a life insurance company, organized under the laws of this state. The judgment appealed from awarded recovery upon and for the amount of five personal judgments recovered against it in the state of North Carolina. The validity of said latter judgments as a sufficient basis for the present recovery is dependent upon a purported service of process upon the insurance commissioner of North Carolina as a representative for that purpose of the defendant, the latter in no other manner having been served upon or having appeared in said actions. These original judgments allowed recovery on account of five contracts of insurance issued by defendant, in one case to a resident of North Carolina while it was doing business there, and in the remaining cases to residents, respectively, of New York and New Jersey, who, long after defendant had attempted to withdraw from business in North Carolina, as hereinafter stated, assigned their claims to residents of said state. It is conceded by appellant that the judgment appealed from should be affirmed so far as it allows recovery upon the judgment under the North Carolina policy. But it is claimed that as to the other purported judgments the courts of the latter state did not acquire jurisdiction by the attempted service of process, and that as to them the judgment before us should be reversed. We think that the appellant's contention is well founded.

Some of the facts now presented to us and of the principles applicable thereto were fully considered by this court in Woodward v. Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. 178 N. Y. 485, 102 Am. St. Rep. 519, 71 N. E. 10. and it will only be necessary now to so far state the facts presented as may be necessary to make plain the reason for distinguishing this case from that. For several years before March 6, 1899, the defendant had been engaged in transacting its life insurance business in North Carolina under provision for service of process upon a local representative for that purpose. Upon the date mentioned the legislature of that state adopted a statute known as the Willard law, which created an insurance department and provided that no foreign insurance company should be admitted and authorized to do business until it had complied with certain conditions. Among these was one to the effect that it should "by duly executed instrument . . . constitute and appoint the insurance commissioner, or his successor, its true and lawful attorney upon whom all lawful processes in any action or legal proceedings against it [might] may be served, and therein [should] shall agree that any lawful process against it which may be served upon its said attorney [should] shall be of the same force and validity as if served on the company, and the authority thereof [should] shall continue in force irrevocable so long as any liability of the company remains outstanding in this commonwealth." The defendant duly executed and filed an instrument in accordance with the provisions of said act, and continued for a time to transact business.

Upon February 10, 1899, the same legislature had adopted a statute known as the Craig act, which, in substance, provided that any foreign insurance company desiring to transact business in the state of North Carolina after June 1st then ensuing, must become a domestic corporation of said state, and attaching penalties to any attempt to transact business in violation of said provisions.

May 17, 1899, defendant's board of directors adopted a formal resolution referring to the Craig act and stating its determination not to comply therewith, but instead to withdraw from the transaction of business in said state, and declaring that the appointment of the insurance commissioner as an attorney upon whom process might be served be "canceled, revoked, and annulled." Upon May 20th duly certified copies of this resolution were filed with and in the office of the insurance commissioner. Upon May 18, 1899, the defendant did withdraw all of its agents from the state of North Carolina, and since that date has had no agent therein, premiums upon policies theretofore issued by it to residents of said state being remitted to it by mail at its home office in New York city, where the policies and premiums were payable, and losses upon policies issued by it being paid by checks from said office. Outside of this, the defendant does not appear to have transacted any business whatever in the state since its withdrawal, save in four specific instances, two of them occurring a considerable period before and two a considerable period after the purported institution against it in the foreign state of the suits in question. Without going into the details of these transactions, it may be briefly stated that three of them involved the settlement of losses under or readjustment of policies issued to residents of North Carolina while the defendant was regularly transacting business there, and in the fourth case a special adjuster appointed to settle a claim with a supposed resident of Washington followed him for such purpose into the state of North Carolina, whither he had removed. More than two years after its above-mentioned withdrawal from, and revocation of power of attorney in, North Carolina, residents of New York and New Jersey made assignment of alleged claims under policies there issued to them to residents of North Carolina, and upon them four of the original judgments in question were secured through a purported service of process under the power of attorney as already stated.

Defendant conceding its liability upon the judgment upon the North Carolina policy, we need spend no considerable time in reviewing and restating the decision of this court in the Woodward Case, whereby it was, in effect, held that a stipulation made by a foreign insurance company as a condition of doing business in North Carolina, that process might be served in its behalf upon some official as long as there might be any outstanding liability upon its part under any contract of insurance, is an agreement for the benefit of and enforceable by a holder of a policy issued to him in that state which could not be subsequently canceled or evaded by the insurance company so long as the liability in behalf of such policy holder continued. The only question which we need discuss is whether the principles of that case, or any others invoked by the present plaintiff, prevented defendant from so canceling and revoking its power of attorney to the superintendent of insurance under the circumstances disclosed as to bar service upon him as its representative in suits upon claims contracted with persons residing outside of the state of North Carolina, and in no way belonging or transferred to a resident of said state until after the attempted revocation. The learned counsel for the plaintiff largely bases his contention that defendant did not escape service and jurisdiction in North Carolina upon two propositions. He urges, in the first place, that it did not, as it claimed to, discontinue transacting business there, and that for that reason its attempted revocation and withdrawal from the state was ineffective. And, secondly, he insists that the strict letter of its power of attorney to the insurance commissioner for service of process provides that such authority "shall continue in force irrevocable so long as any liability of the company remains outstanding in said (this) commonwealth," and that at the time purported service was made there were existing liabilities outstanding.

It may be assumed at once that if defendant upon a fair construction of language and of its acts did continue generally to transact and carry on the business of insurance in North Carolina after its purported revocation of its power of attorney and withdrawal from such state, the latter should be held ineffectual to prevent a continuance of the authority of the insurance official to receive service of a summons. The authorization by the company of service upon said official was a condition of its transacting business in said state, and so long as such transaction of business continued the company should not be allowed to escape the consequences of its agreement by any deceptive or apparent withdrawal. We do not, however, think that such was the true character of its acts. The Craig act, to which reference has already been made, by its provisions excluded defendant from the transaction of business unless it was willing to become a domestic corporation. It is urged that the Willard act, to which we have also referred, was passed subsequently and was so inconsistent with the former act as to repeal its prohibitory and penalizing provisions. We scarcely agree with this argument. We think that there was room for the provisions of both statutes. The courts of the state where they were passed in effect have so held, which certainly should be a matter of considerable weight with us in this discussion. Debnam v. Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 126 N. C. 831, 65 L.R.A. 915, 36 S. E. 269; Layden v. Endowment Bank, K. P. 128 N. C. 546, 39 S. E. 47. But whether this is so or not, the defendant apparently in good faith did regard the provisions of the Craig act as driving it from the state, in the absence of its willingness to be incorporated as a domestic corporation, and its acts then and thereafter performed indicate an intention actually and in good faith to cease doing business there, and to our minds the facts agreed upon do not show any subsequent modification of this intention. It had already issued policies and contracted liabilities in the state which could not be ignored. It dealt with these liabilities so far as it could from its office in New York, and the specific acts which are detailed in the submission arose in connection with the settlement and treatment of old liabilities and old business. We do not think that there was any such continuation of an ordinary, substantial, and active insurance business as would be necessary to keep alive the power of attorney within plaintiff's contention upon this point. Knights Templars' & M. Life Indemnity Co. v. Jarman, 187 U. S. 197, 204, 47 L. ed. 139, 145, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 108; Frawley v. Penn- Sylvania Casualty Co. 124 Fed. 259; Doe v. Springfield Boiler & Mfg. Co. 44 C. C. A. 128, 104 Fed. 684.

We therefore pass to the consideration of plaintiff's second contention, based upon the wording of the power of attorney. In so doing, and in construing this instrument, and determining whether defendant might revoke it and escape from its consequences as to the majority of the judgments involved in this action, we should keep in mind the policy which led to the adoption of the statute under which it was executed. This policy, briefly stated, involved and voiced the determination upon the part of the state that it would not allow a foreign insurance company to exercise the privilege of doing business within its limits without securing to its citizens, who might there be dealt with, and arrangement by which they might institute actions and enforce their contracts and policies at home, and without being driven into some foreign state where the company might have its origin and principal place of business. Statutes requiring the execution of some such agreement by foreign corporations as is invoked against the defendant here have always been regarded as primarily designed for the protection of the citizens of the state enacting the legislation, and who might acquire rights under contracts executed with them or for their benefit while they were such citizens. Such was the underlying principle and view which led to the decisions in the Woodward Case, in Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. ed. 451; in Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 43 L. ed. 569, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308; and in St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 27 L. ed. 222, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 354. It would be quite beyond the spirit of those decisions to hold, and we cannot believe that it was the further policy of such legislation to create and perpetuate, a local forum to which under guise of an assignment to some resident, nonresidents of far distant states might flock for the purposes of instituting litigation upon contracts issued to them at their homes, against a corporation there readily subject to service and which long before had attempted in good faith to withdraw from the jurisdiction thus hunted out.

Holding this view, we are not willing to decide that defendant's power of attorney was irrevocable as against the four foreign claims upon which recovery was had in North Carolina. It is true that, as the statute required, said power of attorney upon its face was irrevocable so long as any liability of the company should remain outstanding in said state. But it is well settled that a power of attorney, although by its literal terms irrevocable, may be revoked, unless some interest or right founded or created upon the faith thereof requires its perpetuation and continuance. Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. 174, 5 L. ed. 589; Knapp v. Alvord, 10 Paige, 205, 40 Am. Dec. 241; Story, Agency, 3d ed. § 476. The citizens of North Carolina who had taken contracts from the defendant while it was there doing business, in reliance upon this power of attorney, which had been executed for their protection under the requirements of the statute, were entitled to have it remain unrevoked as provided by its terms. As we have already seen, they are to be regarded as having made their contracts upon the faith of it, and as against them defendant could not escape from its consequences. But the plaintiffs in the North Carolina actions, who secured their claims from nonresident assignors, occupied no such position. These claims under contracts executed in other states cannot by any possibility be regarded as having been contracted or acquired in reliance upon this provision for service within the state of North Carolina. The assignees, who saw fit to embark upon the acquisition of foreign claims, did not do so in innocent reliance upon the right to bring such suits in their own state, for long before they began the accumulation of claims against the defendant it had formally, and, as we believe, in good faith, withdrawn from the state where they lived, and given formal notice of its revocation of the power of attorney. They did not acquire any such right to enforce jurisdiction in the courts of their own state against the defendant as makes it in any way inequitable or unjust that the power of attorney should be revoked. They are not of the class for whose protection it was originally executed. They have not acquired any rights upon the faith of it. The contracts which they seek to enforce were not secured by defendant from those who expected protection under it. We not only think that it is legal and equitable that defendant's revocation should be effective as against these parties, but that it would be extremely inequitable to hold the reverse.

The learned counsel for the plaintiff has called to our attention many cases which he claims are opposed to the views expressed. While some of them may contain isolated expressions which seem to sustain his view, we think that all of them which ought to be at all controlling upon this court may be clearly distinguished from the case at bar, and we shall only refer briefly to a few of them.

In Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley, supra, it appeared that plaintiff in error had been engaged for many years in transacting a general insurance business in Tennessee under a statute which, amongst other things, provided that any corporation that had any transaction with persons or concerning any property situated in the state through any agency whatever acting for it within the state should be held to be doing business within the meaning of the act, and also that process might be served upon any agent of the corporation found within the county where the suit was brought, no matter what character of agent such person might be. Thereafter, having issued many policies, the corporation assumed to withdraw from the state by recalling its agents and refusing to take new risks or issue new policies within the state. At this time many policies were outstanding upon which it continued to collect premiums through an agent residing in another state. Action was brought in the courts of Tennessee upon policies issued for the benefit of residents of that state while the company was regularly engaged in doing business there and before its attempt to withdraw, and service in aid action was made upon a conceded representative of the company who had come into the state for the purpose of adjusting and settling losses under said policies. It was held that under the circumstances of that case the company was doing business within the state, and that service was properly made upon it in the manner indicated. It will be at once observed that, independent of the statutory provision defining what should be held to constitute doing business within the meaning of the act under which plaintiff in error operated in the state of Tennessee, this decision was entirely in line with the principle adjudicated by this court in the Woodward Case. The rights involved were those of a policy holder resident in the state who had there contracted with the company while it was transacting business in that state under a statute which coupled with permission certain conditions for the service of process, and the principle upheld was that the company could not defeat the rights of the policy holder and by an attempted withdrawal from the state force him into some foreign jurisdiction.

Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Phelps, 190 U. S. 147, 47 L. ed. 987, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707, was based upon the same principle of upholding in favor of a citizen of Kentucky who had received from the plaintiff in error a policy of insurance while it was regularly transacting business in that state, the right to institute action by service of process upon the insurance commissioner in accordance with the provisions of a statute which permitted the company to transact business in that state under conditions allowing such service of process, notwithstanding the company after issuing the policy had attempted to withdraw from the state and cancel the right of service upon the commissioner.

In Birch v. Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. 91 App. Div. 384, 86 N. Y. Supp. 872, affirmed without opinion in 181 N. Y. 583, 74 N. E. 1115, judgment was recovered in the state of North Carolina upon various contracts of life insurance executed in that state while the defendant was regularly engaged in transacting its life insurance business there. Action was commenced by service of process upon the insurance commissioner, and it was held that such service was good, although the defendant had attempted to withdraw from the state and revoke its power of attorney before service was made. We see nothing in any of these cases which impairs the force of the conclusions reached by us.

The judgment appealed from should be modified by reducing the same by the amount of $8,792.42, with interest thereon from May 5, 1902, and, as so modified, should be affirmed, without costs to either party.

Cullen, Ch. J., and O'Brien, Haught, Vann, and Werner, JJ., concur. Willard Bartlett, J., not sitting.

Affirmed by the United States Supreme Court, December 12, 1910, 218 U. S. 573, 54 L. ed. 1155, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

WILSON R. HUNTER, Plff. in Err.,
v.

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY et al.

(218 U. S. 573, 54 L. ed. 1155, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127.)

Process — service on foreign insurance company — what is doing business.

1. The receipt by a foreign insurance company at its home office of premiums upon policies theretofore issued, together with four isolated acts extending over a period of three years, consisting in rewriting an existing policy, sending a check in payment of a policy, to be delivered upon receipt of certain unpaid assessments, and two adjustments within the state of claims

Note. — As to revocation by foreign corporation of appointment of attorney or agent to receive service of process, see the note appended to the opinion of the New York court of appeals in this case, ante, 677, affirmed by the above decision.

which have accrued, do not constitute doing business within the state after the company's asserted withdrawal therefrom in good faith, so as to preclude it from revoking its designation of the state insurance commissioner as its agent to receive service of process.

Same — revoking designation of state officer.

2. A foreign insurance company, upon withdrawing from the state in good faith, to escape the compulsion of N. C. act of February 10, 1899, requiring it to become a domestic corporation if it desires to continue to do business in the state, may revoke its appointment of the state insurance commissioner as its agent to receive service of process, so far as claims of citizens of other states are concerned, which are assigned after such withdrawal to a resident of the state for collection, although N. C. Laws 1899, chap. 54, continues the authority of the commissioner in force and irrevocable so long as any liability of the company shall remain outstanding in the state.

(December 12, 1910.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of New York to review a judgment remitted from the Court of Appeals, modifying a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, enforcing, upon the submission of an agreed case, certain foreign judgments recovered upon policies of life insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Paul Armitage, for plaintiff in error:

A state has the arbitrary power to exclude foreign insurance companies altogether from her territory.

Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 655, 39 L. ed. 297, 300, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207.

The business of insurance is not commerce. The contract of insurance is not an instrumentality of commerce. Issuing a policy of insurance is not a transaction of commerce. Such contracts are not interstate transactions, though the parties may be domiciled in different states. They do not constitute a part of the commerce between the states.

Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; Fire Asso. of Philadelphia v. New York, 119 U. S. 110, 30 L. ed. 342, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 108; Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. ed. 649, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 851; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 654, 39 L. ed. 297, 300, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207.

A state can inhibit the negotiation of insurance policies within her confines, even 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

through the medium of agents sent from other states.

Ibid.

A state has the power, if she allow any such insurance company to enter her confines, to determine the conditions on which the entry shall be made, and the right to enforce any conditions so imposed. The power to exclude embraces the power to regulate, and the power to enact and to enforce such regulations.

Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207.

When a foreign insurance corporation undertakes to transact business in a state other than that in which it is incorporated, it submits itself to the authority of the courts of such other state, and is bound, so long as that business continues, by the statutory provisions respecting the method of such courts obtaining jurisdiction over it.

Pringle v. Woolworth, 90 N. Y. 509; People v. Commercial Alliance L. Ins. Co. 7 App. Div. 297, 40 N. Y. Supp. 269; Gibbs v. Queen Ins. Co. 63 N. Y. 120, 20 Am. Rep. 513; Douglass v. Phenix Ins. Co. 138 N. Y. 220, 20 L.R.A. 118, 34 Am. St. Rep. 448, 33 N. E. 938; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Phelps, 190 U. S. 147, 47 L. ed. 987, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707; Gibson v. Manufacturers' F. & M. Ins. Co. 144 Mass. 81, 10 N. E. 729; Aldrich v. E. W. Blatchford & Co. 175 Mass. 369, 58 N. E. 700; People v. Fire Asso. of Philadelphia, 92 N. Y. 311, 44 Am. Rep. 380; Vose v. Cockcroft, 44 N. Y. 415; Sherman v. McKeon, 38 N. Y. 266; Phyfe v. Eimer, 45 N. Y. 102.

It becomes a material inquiry to ascertain whether, at the time of service of process in January, 1902, the Mutual Reserve Insurance Company was engaged in doing business within the state of North Carolina. For, if it was, it cannot be seriously contested that the service on the insurance commissioner was ineffectual against it.

Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 610, 43 L. ed. 571, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Phelps, supra.

The defendant company continued to do business in North Carolina, after the attempted revocation of the power of attorney given to the insurance commissioner, and was actually doing business within the state on the date when service of process was made in each of the suits resulting in the four judgments.

Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 43 L. ed. 569, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso.

v. Phelps, supra: Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. v. Birch, 200 U. S. 612, 50 L. ed. 620, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 752.

So long as the defendant continued to do business in the state, it will be presumed to have assented to be sued within the state by service on the insurance commissioner, and is estopped from showing either that it has not filed the requisite authority, or that it has revoked it.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. 65, 20 L. ed. 354.

The state of North Carolina had the right to prescribe such conditions as it saw fit before allowing a foreign corporation to do business within its borders.

Anglo-American Provision Co. v. Davis Provision Co. 169 N. Y. 510, 88 Am. St. Rep. 608, 62 N. E. 587; Hooper v. California, supra.

The state had the power to make the statute and power of attorney broad enough to authorize the insurance commissioner of that state to receive process in all actions of every nature of which its courts had jurisdiction.

Aldrich v. E. W. Blatchford & Co. 175 Mass. 371, 56 N. E. 700.

The North Carolina statute applies to all causes of action owned by its citizens, no matter where the contract was entered into.

Youmans v. Minnesota Title Ins. & T. Co. 67 Fed. 282; Johnston v. Trade Ins. Co. 132 Mass. 432; Wilson v. Martin-Wilson Automatic Fire Alarm Co. 149 Mass. 24, 20 N. E. 318; Mooney v. Buford & G. Mfg. Co. 18 C. C. A. 421, 34 U. S. App. 581, 72 Fed. 32; Darlington v. Rogers, 36 Phila. Leg. Int. 115.

A foreign corporation cannot, as a price of admission to a state, consent to being sued there in all actions of which the courts have jurisdiction, and appoint a state officer to receive process for it, and then, while continuing to do business, revoke the appointment.

Henrietta Min. & Mill. Co. v. Johnson, 173 U. S. 224, 43 L. ed. 676, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 402; State v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. 67 Wis. 624, 31 N. W. 229; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley, supra; Commercial Mut. Acci. Co. v. Davis, 213 U. S. 245, 53 L. ed. 782, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 445; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Phelps, supra; Ehrman v. Teutonia Ins. Co. 1 McCrary, 123, 1 Fed. 471.

While a power of attorney is ordinarily revocable at will, yet, when it is coupled with an interest, or given as security, or as part of a contract, or for a valuable consideration which the law deems sufficient to uphold an executory contract, or when it is given to a public officer of the state for the protection of its citizens, it is irrevocable.

Mechem, Agency, § 232; MacGregor v. Gardner, 14 Iowa, 326; Ewell's Evans, Agency, 110, note 1; 2 Kent, Com. 643; Story, Agency, 9th ed. 587; Terwilliger v. Ontario, C. & S. R. Co. 149 N. Y. 87, 43 N. E. 432; Collier v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 119 Fed. 619.

In filing its power of attorney and entering into the agreement with the state that such power of attorney should be irrevocable, defendant did so with full knowledge of the provisions of the Craig act. It is conclusively presumed to have entered into this contract with full knowledge of, and subject to, the provisions of that act.

Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Phinney, 178 U. S. 327, 44 L. ed. 1088, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906.

Messrs. William Hepburn Russell and Frank H. Platt, with Mr. William Beverly Winslow, for defendants in error:

To confer jurisdiction upon the courts of a state to render a judgment against a foreign corporation, the general rule is that the two elements must exist that service be made upon an agent of the company who the law will imply is authorized to receive service of process, and that the corporation is engaged in doing business in such state.

Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 27 L. ed. 222, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 354; Goldey v. Morning News, 156 U. S. 518, 39 L. ed. 517, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 559; Barrow S. S. Co. v. Kane, 170 U. S. 100, 111, 42 L. ed. 964, 968, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 43 L. ed. 569, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308; Conley v. Mathieson Alkali Works, 190 U. S. 406, 47 L. ed. 1113, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 728; Pennsylvania Lumbermen's Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Meyer, 197 U. S. 407, 49 L. ed. 810, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 483; Peterson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 205 U. S. 364, 51 L. ed. 841, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 513; Commercial Mut. Acci. Co. v. Davis, 213 U. S. 245, 255, 53 L. ed. 782, 787, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 445.

The converse of this proposition is equally true. If service be made upon an official of the corporation who is found in the state, it will be wholly ineffective to confer jurisdiction over such corporation, unless the corporation is doing business in the state.

Conley v. Mathieson Alkali Works, supra; Geer v. Mathieson Alkali Works, 190 U. S. 428, 47 L. ed. 1122, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 807.

The only modification which has been made in the above-stated rule is that where the corporation has done business in a state, and has incurred liabilities to residents of the state, and has been, as a condition of being permitted to do such business and to enter into contracts in the state with the residents thereof, required to designate an agent in the state upon whom process might be served, that designation becomes in effect a vested right of the persons making such contracts, of which neither the act of the corporation in voluntarily withdrawing from doing business in the state, nor the act of the state itself in excluding the corporation, can deprive them.

Biggs v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 128 N. C. 5, 37 S. E. 955; Moore v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 129 N. C. 31, 39 S. E. 637; Woodward v. Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. 178 N. Y. 485, 102 Am. St. Rep. 519, 71 N. E. 10; Birch v. Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. 181 N. Y. 583, 74 N. E. 1115, affirmed in 200 U. S. 612, 50 L. ed. 620, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 752; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Phelps, 190 U. S. 147, 47 L. ed. 987, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707.

The contention that service upon the insurance commissioner was sufficient to give the court jurisdiction rests upon the language of the so-called Willard act and of the power of attorney executed by the defendant corporation pursuant thereto. These were construed by the court of appeals adversely to the plaintiff's contention. Such conclusion did not constitute a denial of any right which plaintiff had under the Constitution of the United States, and was correct.

Smithsonian Institution v. St. John, 214 U. S. 19, 53 L. ed. 892, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 601; St. Louis, K. C. & C. R. Co. v. Wabash R. Co. 217 U. S. 247, 54 L. ed. 752, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 510.

It is well settled that a power of attorney, although irrevocable in terms, is revocable unless coupled with an interest or given for a consideration.

Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. 174, 5 L. ed. 589; Knapp v. Alvord, 10 Paige, 205, 40 Am. Dec. 241; Story, Agency, 9th ed. p. 587, § 476.

The fair construction of the so-called Willard act is that only a power of attorney which should be irrevocable as to those persons who contracted with the corporation in North Carolina was required.

Moore v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. and Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Phelps, supra.

There are limitations to the rule that a state may impose any condition it pleases in permitting foreign corporations to enter the state to do business.

Cable v. United States L. Ins. Co. 191 U. S. 288, 307, 48 L. ed. 188, 193, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 74.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

While the state can forbid the corporation coming into the state to make a contract, it cannot forbid its citizens lawfully making a contract with the corporation at its domicile, and thereafter performing the contract through the mail.

Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427.

The state may exclude the corporation from its borders when it cannot exclude an individual, but it cannot impair the obligation of its contracts any more than it can an individual's, nor deprive it of the benefits which flow therefrom.

Bedford v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 181 U. S. 227, 240, 45 L. ed. 834, 844, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 597.

Any provision making a corporation subject to jurisdiction merely because it is "doing business" in violation of law, without service upon a then-authorized agent in the state, is in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and a judgment in personam against it, not based on personal service on an authorized agent, is void.

Caledonian Coal Co. v. Baker, 196 U. S. 432, 444, 49 L. ed. 540, 545, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 375; Wetmore v. Karrick, 205 U. S. 141, 51 L. ed. 745, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434; Cella Commission Co. v. Bohlinger, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 537, 78 C. C. A. 467, 147 Fed. 419.

Mr. George W. Field also for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

This writ of error is prosecuted to review a judgment of the court of appeals of the state of New York, modifying a judgment of the supreme court of that state. The judgment of the court of appeals was remitted to and made the judgment of the latter court.

The action was brought by Hunter, whom we shall call plaintiff, against the insurance company, which we shall refer to as defendant, upon five judgments obtained in the state of North Carolina, recovered by one Emrick Wadsworth, a citizen of North Carolina, and owned by plaintiff. The judgments were recovered upon policies of insurance issued by defendant, one of which was issued to a citizen of North Carolina while defendant was doing business there, the others to citizens of New York and New Jersey. They were assigned to Wadsworth long after defendant had attempted to remove from North Carolina. Judgment was rendered for their full amount with interest and costs, to wit, the sum of $9,965, by direction of the appellate division of the court, to which the case was submitted upon an agreed statement of facts. The court of appeals reduced the same by the amount of the four judgments recovered on the policies issued in New York and New Jersey. The Federal question presented is whether due faith and credit was refused to the judgments, in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

The judgments were obtained by default, after service made upon the insurance commissioner of the state. The decision of the case turns upon the validity of the service.

The defendant is a life insurance company, organized under the laws of New York. Prior to March 13, 1899, it was duly admitted to do business in the state of North Carolina, it complying with the laws of the state successively passed, which required insurance companies to appoint agents upon whom service of process could be made.

On March 6, 1899, the legislature passed a law known as the Willard law. The law prescribed that no foreign insurance company should do business in the state until it had, by a duly executed instrument, filed in the office of the secretary of state, constituted and appointed the insurance commissioner its true and lawful attorney, upon whom all lawful process in any action or legal proceedings might be served, and agreed that such service should have the same force and validity as if served on the company, and that "the authority thereof" should "continue in force irrevocable so long as any liability of the company" should "remain outstanding in this commonwealth." Chapter 54 of the Laws of 1899.

On or about the 13th of April, defendant executed the power of attorney required, and thereupon a license was issued to it to do business, as provided by law, under which it did business in the state for a time.

The legislature which passed the Willard law passed also a law called the Craig act, by which it was provided that any foreign insurance company desiring to do business in the state after June 1 then ensuing must become a domestic corporation of the state. There were severe penalties prescribed for the violation of the act. The company was subjected to a penalty of $200 a day for every day it "continued to operate or do business without having complied with the requirements of the act," and it was deprived of the right of suing in the state courts, or to enter into any new contracts, or enforce those it had made. In addition to the penalty of $200, it was subjected to a penalty of $500 for each day that it did business after the 1st day of June, 1899, "without first becoming a domestic corporation."

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The act took effect on the 10th of February, 1899. In May of that year the board of directors of defendant passed a resolution to withdraw from the state, and to dispense with and terminate the services of all of its agents. It also revoked the authority of the insurance commissioner to act as its attorney to receive service of process. A certified copy of the resolution was served on the commissioner, and the agents of the company were withdrawn from the state, the premiums upon the policies theretofore issued by it being remitted by mail to its home office, where the policies and premiums were payable, and losses upon policies being paid by check from its office. Outside of this the record shows four transactions: (1) The rewriting of a policy of insurance in 1899, originally issued in 1886, which was mailed from its office in New York; (2) sending a check in payment of a policy issued prior to May 17, 1899, to be delivered upon receipt of certain unpaid assessments; (3) the adjustment in North Carolina, in June, 1902, of a loss upon a policy issued in Washington, District of Columbia, the beneficiary having removed to North Carolina; (4) the adjustment, by an attorney employed for the purpose, of a claim upon a policy written in North Carolina prior to May 17, 1899. The two first transactions were prior to the beginning of the actions in which the judgments were recovered, and the two last were subsequent to that time. These are the transactions upon which plaintiff relies to establish that defendant was doing business at that time in the state.

Three of the policies upon which judgments were recovered were issued in the state of New York long prior to the year 1899. The fourth policy was issued in New Jersey, also prior to 1899. The assignments to Wadsworth were made in December and January, 1902, and the suits were begun on January 20, 1902.

There is no controversy over the power of the state to pass the Willard and Craig acts, so called, or to make their provision conditions upon which foreign insurance corporations could do business in the state. The controversy is over the duration of the conditions. The decision upon that, plaintiff contends, depends upon the question whether the insurance company was doing business in the state at the time the actions on the policies were brought and process served; and, insisting that it was, cites Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 43 L. ed. 569, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Phelps, 190 U. S. 147, 47 L. ed. 987, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707. Plaintiff further insists that, even if it be assumed that defendant had withdrawn from the state in good faith, and had ceased to do business there in after May 18, 1899, it was still liable to be sued in the courts of the state "in any action or local proceeding of every nature of which the courts of North Carolina had jurisdiction," and that the insurance commissioner was its agent to receive service of process. This contention is based on the provision of the statute which continues the authority of the commissioner "in force and irrevocable so long as any liability of said company remains outstanding in said state."

If the situation of defendant, regarding what it had done and its obligations, was exactly expressed by the contentions of plaintiff, they might be irresistible. But not only the Willard act, but the Craig act, must be considered in determining defendant's conduct. It had done business in the state, and the former act became a part of its obligations to its policy holders. The latter act imposed new conditions upon it, and as an alternative to compliance with them, required it to remove from the state. An evasion of the requirement was, as we have seen, severely penalized. Money penalties, one of $200 and one of $500, for every day it should do business after the 1st of June, 1899, were imposed upon it, and no contract it should make or had made could be enforced in the courts of the state. Such were the alternatives presented by the Craig act. In other words, defendant was given the choice to become a domestic corporation or go out of the state. It chose to go out of the state, and adopted the only way it could to do so. We think such course was open to it, and we see no reason to question its good faith.

It is, however, contended that defendant "persisted in doing business in the state, and was so found at the time of the service of process in question." Four instances are adduced to sustain the contention, two of which occurred in 1899 and two in 1902. These instances have no relation to one another, and no relation to the transactions upon which the judgments were based. Between the first two and the last two there was an interval of three years, and yet it is insisted that there was such connection between them that they constituted doing business continuously in the state, and the defendant was hence precluded from revoking its power of attorney to the insurance commissioner. The contention of plaintiff, so far as based on the instances adduced, encounters a great difficulty. They were not new business. They related to old transactions, and were intended only to fulfil their obligations. This was the plain duty of defendant,—a duty which it could not evade, nor could the state even prevent it. Bedford v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 181 U. S. 227, 45 L. ed. 834, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 597. Between doing business for such purposes and doing business generally there is quite a difference. If not, the consequences are somewhat serious. The Craig act, as we have seen, imposes a penalty of $700 a day for each day after the 1st day of June, 1899, that a foreign corporation shall do business in the state without conforming to the provisions of the act.

Plaintiff, however, presses with earnestness, in support of his contention, the following cases: Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 43 L. ed. 569, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Phelps, 190 U. S. 147, 47 L. ed. 987, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707; Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. v. Birch, 200 U. S. 612, 50 L. ed. 620, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 752; Commercial Mut. Acci. Co. v. Davis, 213 U. S. 245, 53 L. ed. 782, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 445.

In the Spratley Case the life insurance policy which was the subject of the suit was issued by the insurance company when it was concededly present and doing business in the state of Tennessee. The service was upon an agent by the name of Chaffee, sent to investigate into the circumstances of the death of Spratley and the claims of his widow. These facts distinguish the case from the one at bar. But certain language of the court is quoted to establish, not only was the insurance company so doing business in the state as to justify service of process upon the agent appointed by the company, but doing business generally. The court, through Mr. Justice Peckham, said:

"We think the evidence in this case shows that the company was doing business within the state at the time of this service of process. From 1870 until 1894 it had done an active business throughout the state by its agents therein, and had issued policies of insurance upon the lives of citizens of the state. How many policies it had so issued does not appear. Its action in July, 1894, in assuming to withdraw from the state, was simply a recall of its agents doing business therein, the giving of a notice to the state insurance commissioner, and a refusal to take any new risks or to issue any new policies within the state. Its outstanding policies were not affected thereby, and it continued to collect the premiums upon them and to pay the losses arising thereunder, and it was doing so at the time of the service of process upon its agent."

And further:

"It cannot be said with truth, as we think, that an insurance company does no business within a state unless it have

agents therein who are continuously seeking new risks, and it is continuing to issue new policies upon such risks. Having succeeded in taking risks in the state through a number of years, it cannot be said to cease doing business therein when it ceases to obtain or ask for new risks or to issue new policies, while at the same time its old policies continue in force and the premiums thereon are continuously paid by the policy holders to an agent residing in another state, and who was once the agent in the state where the policy holders resided. This action on the part of the company constitutes doing business within the state, so far as is necessary, within the meaning of the law upon this subject. And this business was continuing at the time of the service of process on Mr. Chaffee in Memphis."

This reference to the law in the state must be considered. A statute of the state provided that process might be served upon any agent of a corporation doing business in the state, found within the county where the suit was brought, no matter what character of agent such person might be, and in the absence of such an agent it should be sufficient to serve process upon any person found in the county who represented the corporation at the time of the transaction out of which the suit arose took place. It was under this statute that service was made upon Chaffee. This service was held good, this court saying, in addition to what has been quoted above: "Even though we might be unprepared to say that a service of process upon 'any agent' found within the county, as provided in the statute, would be sufficient in the case of a foreign corporation, the question for us to decide is whether, upon the facts of this case, the service of process upon the person named was a sufficient service to give jurisdiction to the court over this corporation."

Further explanation of the language of the court is contained in the following passage:

"A vast mass of business is now done throughout the country by corporations which are chartered by states other than those in which they are transacting part of their business, and justice requires that some fair and reasonable means should exist for bringing such corporations within the jurisdiction of the courts of the state where the business was done, out of which the dispute arises." (Italics ours.)

Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Phelps is distinguished from the case at bar by the same features that distinguish the Spratley Case from it. The suit was brought by a citizen of the state of Kentucky upon a policy issued when the association was doing a general business in the state through regular agents, under a license from the state. The commissioner subsequently canceled its license, and it withdrew its agents from the state. The service of process in the action was nevertheless made upon the commissioner and sustained. It was stipulated by the parties that outstanding policies were continued in force after the action of the commissioner, on which the association had collected and was collecting dues, premiums, and assessments, and this court held, on the authority of the Spratley Case, that the association was doing business in the state. These general words must be qualified, as we have seen, like words in the cited case should be qualified, to protect transactions which had been entered into, and to give them the benefit of the law in view of which they were made. This court said: "The plaintiff was a citizen of Kentucky, and the cause of action arose out of transactions had between the plaintiff and defendant while the latter was carrying on business in the state of Kentucky, under license from the state." And it was said of the statute that it and "other kindred statutes enacted in various states indicate the purpose of the state that foreign corporations engaging in business within its limits shall submit the controversies growing out of that business to its courts, and not compel a citizen for such a controversy to seek, for the purpose of enforcing his claims, the state in which the corporation had its home."

Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. v. Birch was a like case. Certain judgments which were sued on in New York were obtained in actions upon policies issued when the insurance company was doing its regular business in the state of North Carolina, and antedated its resolution to withdraw from the state. The case was rested in the court of appeals of New York on Woodward v. Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. 178 N. Y. 490, 102 Am. St. Rep. 519, 71 N. E. 10. It was said in that case that the stipulation of the company in regard to service of process became an obligation of the company precisely as though it "had been incorporated in the policies; and thereafter, whether the company continued to do business in the state or not, policy holders could commence action by service upon the secretary of state," subsequently changed to the insurance commissioner. Woodward v. Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. was cited by this court in its opinion sustaining the judgment in the Birch Case.

Commercial Mut. Acci. Co. v. Davis has the same characteristics as the cases which we have reviewed, and needs no other comment than that it repeated the doctrine of the other cases.

The first contention of plaintiff is therefore untenable. The next contention is that, even if defendant did withdraw from the state in good faith, the authority to the insurance commissioner to receive service of process continued as long as the company had outstanding liabilities in the state. And this, it is insisted, constituted the duration of the authority not only for causes of action arising in the state, but for causes of action arising in other states. In other words, that the language of the statute is not limited by its purpose to protect the resident policy holders of the company, but for the benefit of every litigant upon any cause of action; and, to use the graphic language of the court of appeals, to "perpetuate a local forum to which, under guise of an assignment to some resident, nonresidents of far distant states might flock for the purpose of instituting litigation upon contracts issued to them at their homes, against a corporation there readily subject to service, and which long before had attempted in good faith to withdraw from the jurisdiction thus hunted out." [184 N. Y. 144, ante, 677, 76 N. E. 1074, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 294.]

This is certainly the logical consequence of plaintiff's contention, and to sustain it he relies upon Johnston v. Trade Ins. Co. 132 Mass. 432; Wilson v. Martin-Wilson Automatic Fire Alarm Co. 149 Mass. 24, 20 N. E. 318; Biggs v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 128 N. C. 5, 37 S. E. 955. A statute like that of North Carolina was construed in the Massachusetts cases, and therefore the construction given to it is instructive. In all of the cases the corporation had "a domicile of business in the commonwealth," to use the language of the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts, and the court recognized that the right to sue upon cause of action arising in another state was not within "the main purpose" of the statute passed on; indeed, that it "was not framed for that purpose," but decided that "the words 'all lawful processes in any action or proceeding' must be held to include all actions which might lawfully be brought against a company thus having a domicile of business in this commonwealth." In Wilson v. Martin-Wilson Automatic Fire Alarm Co. the contract sued on was made in the state, and was to be performed there.

In Biggs v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. the policy on which the action was based was issued to a resident of the state. The language of the court was quite general. The court did not discuss whether it was "ceasing to do business in the state" to transact that business through agents located outside of the state, by means of the 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

mail," though it may be said that the court expressed doubt of it by referring to the Spratley Case. It was said:

"It is sufficient to point out that the statute requires the power of attorney to be irrevocable, not 'as long as the company continues to do business' in this state, but as long as 'any liability of the company remains outstanding' in this state, and the contract with the state, as expressed in the power of attorney filed by the company, so specifies. No amount of authorities having a more or less fancied analogy can overcome these plain words of the statute, and of the power of attorney drawn and filed in conformity thereto. Green v. Equitable Mut. Life & Endowment Asso. 105 Iowa, 628, 75 N. W. 635; Ben Franklin Ins. Co. v. Gillett, 54 Md. 213."

This general language must be considered in reference to the case,—a conclusion which is justified by the decision of the court in Moore v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 129 N. C. 31, 39 S. E. 637, where it is said that the state, having the right to prescribe the terms upon which the insurance company might carry on its business in the state, and the company, "being permitted, proceeded to make contracts with citizens of the state, and became liable to them under these contracts. One of the provisions upon which defendant was allowed to do business here was that James R. Young, insurance commissioner, and his successors in office, should be constituted its agent, upon whom service of process might be made, and that said agency should continue so long as the defendant had any liabilities remaining unsatisfied in this state, arising from or out of its said business of insurance." As to the revocation of the authority of the commissioner, the court said:

"It is conceded that, as a general rule, a principal has the right to revoke a power of attorney at any time, whether it is in terms irrevocable or not. But to this general rule there are well-established exceptions, as to where it is coupled with an interest, or where it is contractual in its nature, given for a consideration and for the protection of someone or some interest. In our opinion this power falls under this exception to the general rule. It was contractual in its nature, was given upon consideration that defendant should have the right to carry on its business in this state, and for the protection of those who should deal with the defendant."

Manifestly, this means who should deal with the defendant in the state. The facts in the case at bar are different from the cited cases. The policies upon which the four judgments were recovered were not issued in North Carolina, and, not having been issued under the faith of its laws, are not entitled to their remedial sanction. The facts in this case are also different from those in the Massachusetts cases. Defendant did not have "a domicile of business" in the state, nor were the contracts to be performed there. It in good faith withdrew from the state,—withdrew, indeed, under the compulsion of law. We say "under compulsion of law," for clearly the Craig act required that as an alternative to compliance with its provisions. It presented a choice to defendant of one of two courses. Defendant accepted one of them, that is, withdrew from the state, and revoked the power which it had given to the insurance commissioner to accept service for it. Revoked it as far as it could do so. It could not revoke it as to any "interest or right founded or created upon faith thereof," and which required its perpetuation and continuance," as the court of appeals has correctly said, and we think with that learned court, that it would be extremely inequitable to regard it as irrevocable to plaintiff and those in his situation. Indeed, it is not within the contemplation of the statute that the authority to the commissioner is to be available to those in the situation of plaintiff.

Judgment affirmed.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

E. TIGER et al., Appts.,
v.
ROGERS COTTON CLEANER & GIN
COMPANY.

(— Ark. —, 130 S. W. 585.)

Corporation — repurchase of unpaid stock — effect.

1. An insolvent corporation has no power as against the rights of its creditors to purchase its own stock at a sale thereof for nonpayment of a balance due on the subscription, and thereby relieve the subscriber from further liability, since unpaid subscriptions are a trust fund for the benefit of creditors, of the benefit of which it cannot deprive them.

Same — power of president — purchase of stock.

2. The president of a corporation cannot, without authority of the directors, purchase for it its own stock, at a sale conducted for the purpose of enforcing payment of the unpaid balance of the subscription.

Garnishment — garnishee not to be affected.

3. That a garnishee was not made a party to the principal action, and no relief was demanded against him therein, does not prevent the court from rendering judgment 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ment against him where the writ of garnishment was served on him, if by statute it is not necessary to commence an action against the garnishee in order to authorize the court to render judgment against him.

Appeal — garnishment — first pleading of defense.

4. A garnishee cannot plead the statute of limitations to a recovery of a claim against him for the first time in the appellate court.

(July 11, 1910.)

APPEAL by the garnishees from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Mississippi County in plaintiff's favor in a garnishment proceeding to reach certain unpaid stock subscriptions. Affirmed.

Statement by Wood, J.:

The appellee on the 14th day of May 1908, obtained judgment against the Luxora Gin & Manufacturing Company in the sum of $476.60. Execution was issued upon the judgment against the judgment debtor, and a return of nulla bona was made thereon. On the 21st day of November, 1908, a writ of garnishment was issued against appellant and others summoning them as follows: "To answer what goods, property, chattels, and effects they, or either of them, had in their possession at the time this writ was served upon them, or that may have come into their possession since the service of this writ, belonging to the said Luxora Gin & Manufacturing Company. And they will further answer what sum or sums of money they, or either of them, owe the defendant, Luxora Gin & Manufacturing Company." Appellants answered "that said firm of Tiger Brothers had no goods, property, chattels, or effects in its possession, either at the time of the service of this writ or any other time within the past three years, belonging to the Luxora Gin & Manufacturing Company, and further states that it does not owe the Note. — Right of corporation to purchase its own share of stock.

This subject is treated in a note to Hall v. Henderson, 61 L.R.A. 621, and in a late note to McGregor v. Fitzpatrick, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 50.

The only later case on the subject found besides TIGER v. ROGERS COTTON CLEANER & GIN Co. is that of Clark v. E. C. Clark Mach. Co. 151 Mich. 416, 115 N. W. 416, holding that the assets of a corporation cannot be used by it in the purchase of its outstanding stock to the exclusion of subsequent creditors, and hence that a mortgage given by a corporation in payment of the purchase price of its own stock is invalid to the extent that such creditors are injured thereby.

R. A. E.

said Luxora Gin & Manufacturing Company any sum whatever." This answer was filed December 2, 1908.

After hearing the evidence the court found the facts as follows: "First. That the Luxora Gin & Manufacturing Company is a corporation. Second. That the garnishees, E. Tiger and N. Tiger, subscribed and agreed to pay par value for $500 worth of the capital stock of said corporation. Third. That said E. Tiger and N. Tiger did pay the sum of $100 on their subscription to the capital stock of said corporation, leaving a balance due of $400 on said capital stock, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, and amounting to the sum of $120 at this date, making a total, principal and interest, due from them to the said Luxora Gin & Manufacturing Company, of $520. Fourth. That on the 1st day of July, 1905, said Luxora Gin & Manufacturing Company offered for sale the other $400 worth of stock owned by the said E. Tiger and N. Tiger, to satisfy the balance of the unpaid subscription for the same, and there being no other bidders, John B. Driver, the then president of said corporation, bid for said corporation the amount of said unpaid subscription, and reported the same to the board of directors. Fifth. That when the purchase of said stock by said John B. Driver for the said Luxora Gin & Manufacturing Company was reported to said board of directors, the said board of directors expressly repudiated said transaction, and refused to ratify the same. Sixth. That on the 14th day of May, 1908, a judgment was rendered herein in favor of the Rogers Cotton Cleaner & Gin Company, and against the Luxora Gin & Manufacturing Company, on a promissory note for the sum of $474.60, upon which there is due a credit for the sum of $100, the amount realized from a sale of the property mentioned in said judgment. Seventh. The court further finds that at the time the stock of said E. Tiger and N. Tiger in said Luxora Gin & Manufacturing Company was sold, or attempted to be sold, to satisfy the unpaid subscription thereon, said corporation was hopelessly insolvent, and continued so down to the present time. Eighth. That at the time of the sale of said stock, or the attempt to sell said stock, the plaintiff was a creditor of said corporation, evidenced by the obligation upon which the judgment of May 14, 1908, was based." Upon these findings of fact the court declared the law to be that an insolvent corporation has no right as against its creditors to purchase its own stock, and that the purchase, or attempt to purchase, the stock of appellant on behalf of the Luxora Gin & Manufacturing Company, was null and void against the 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

appellee, who was then and still is a creditor of the Luxora Gin & Manufacturing Company. The court entered judgment in favor of appellee, against appellant, for the sum of $410 and costs.

From this judgment, appellant duly prosecutes this appeal.

Mr. W. J. Lamb for appellants.

Mr. J. T. Coston, for appellee:

The corporation had no right to repurchase its own stock.

1 Cook, Corp. § 311; Carter v. Union Printing Co. 54 Ark. 580, 16 S. W. 579.

Wood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It could serve no useful purpose to discuss in detail the evidence upon which the court based its findings of fact. It suffices to say that these findings are sustained by the evidence. Appellant contends "that at the time it filed its answer as garnishee herein, it was not, and had not been for more than three years, indebted in any sum whatever to the gin company." Appellants say this is so for the reason that their stock in the gin company was sold in July, 1905, and that thereafter appellants had no further interest in or connection with the gin company. But appellants' contention cannot be sustained. The court found, and the evidence tended to support that finding, "that, at the time the stock of appellants in the gin company was sold, or attempted to be sold, to satisfy the unpaid subscription thereon, said corporation was hopelessly insolvent." This being true, conceding for the present that there was a sale and purchase of the stock, the transaction was nevertheless void as to creditors of the corporation.

Mr. Cook in his excellent work on Corporations says: "If the corporation is insolvent at the time of the purchase, it is clearly an invalid transaction, and will be set aside. The rule goes still further, and declares that if a corporation, by a purchase of shares of its own capital stock, thereby reduces its actual assets below its capital stock and debts, . . . such purchase may be set aside, and the guilty corporate officers, as well as the vendor of the stock, may be rendered liable thereon at the instance of a corporate creditor." Cook, Corp. § 311, pp. 849, 850, and cases cited in notes 3 and 1 of above pages. The corporation in which appellants owned shares of capital stock for which they had not paid, being insolvent, the sale and purchase by it of these shares of stock was but tantamount to a voluntary release by the corporation to appellants of the balance due by them for their shares of capital stock. But the corporation could not do this. It has no right to enter into any arrangement with the stockholder himself, or to engage in any transaction on its own motion, the effect of which would be to release from liability those who owed for capital stock in the corporation. The capital stock of a corporation is a trust fund that must be devoted to the payment of its debts. Neither the corporation nor the individual stockholder can divert it directly or indirectly from this purpose. Carter v. Union Printing Co. 54 Ark. 580, 16 S. W. 579. In the above case this court quoted from the Supreme Court of the United States as follows: "Unpaid stock is as much a part of this pledge, and as much a part of the assets of the company, as the cash which has been paid in upon it. Creditors have the same right to look to it as to anything else, and the same right to insist upon its payment as upon the payment of any other debt due to the company. As regards creditors, there is no distinction between such a demand and any other asset which may form a part of the property and effects of the corporation." Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 56, 60, 61, 23 L. ed. 220, 222.

There is therefore no merit in the contention of appellants that, when appellee sold its machinery to the gin company, it had no right to deal with the gin company in the belief that appellants' subscription to the capital stock of that company was an asset of the company at that time. The reverse is true in view of the fact that the gin company was insolvent when the stock was sold and purchased by the gin company, conceding that it was. But the purchase of the stock by the president of the company without any previous authority from the board of directors to do so, and without any subsequent ratification of his unauthorized act, as was the case here, rendered the transaction void. The stock never passed by that sale out of appellants. They still owned and owed for it at the time the debt herein sued on was contracted, and at the time the writ of garnishment was served on them.

It is next contended by appellant "that it not being a party defendant in the suit, and no relief having been asked against it and no judgment prayed, that the court was without authority to render judgment against it." Since the passage of the act of April 8, 1889 (Acts 1889, p. 168), in reference to judicial garnishments, and the amendatory act of April 19, 1895 (Acts 1895, p. 196), "it is no longer necessary . . . to commence a separate action 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

against the garnishee in order to authorize the court to render a final judgment against him, but in the cases covered by these acts, final judgments may be rendered against the garnishee upon default made by him, or when on a trial the court finds that he is indebted to the defendant in the original judgment." Norman v. Poole, 70 Ark. 128, 66 S. W. 433. The writ of garnishment in the present case summoned appellants to answer what "property of the defendant they had in their possession," and "further to answer what sums of money they, or either of them, owe the defendant, Luxora Gin & Manufacturing Company." Appellee had obtained judgment against the gin company, and the writ of garnishment served on appellant gave the court jurisdiction to hear and determine the issue raised by the allegations contained in the writ. Appellant appeared and answered the writ, denying the allegations and interrogatories which the writ itself contained (which were sufficient), making the distinct issue that "it did not owe the gin company any sum whatever." In Little Rock Traction & Electric Co. v. Wilson, 66 Ark. 582, 587, 53 S. W. 43, 44, this court, through Judge Battle, said: "The writ of garnishment gives the person therein named as garnishee notice of the object of its issue, and commands him to appear at its return day, and answer what goods, chattels, moneys, credits, and effects he may have in his hands or possession belonging to the defendant. To this extent it serves as a summons and a pleading. The allegations and interrogatories call his attention to, specify, and remind him of the goods, chattels, moneys, credits, and effects supposed to be in his possession, touching which he is required to answer. If they had not been required by the statutes, there could be no necessity for their filing. The fact that the proceeding instituted by the writ may, so far as it affects the garnishee, be in the nature of an action against him, does not render the filing of the allegations and interrogatories a prerequisite to the investiture of the court or justice of the peace with jurisdiction."

Appellant insists that appellee is barred of any right to maintain this suit by the three-year statute of limitation. But appellant did not plead limitation in the lower court. It could have done so. Rood, Garnishment, § 376. It cannot be heard here on this plea for the first time.

The judgment is correct.

Affirmed.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

FARMERS' BANK OF NASHVILLE,
Plff. in Err.,
v.
JOHNSON, KING, & COMPANY.

(134 Ga. 486, 68 S. E. 85.)

Check — direction as to payment — effect.

1. Where a check was drawn on a bank located in another town than that in which the drawer resided, and immediately following the direction to the drawee bank, which was in the lower left-hand corner of the check, there were stamped, at the time when the check was drawn, the words, "Payable through (a named bank in another city of the same state), at current rate," this was a material part of the direction; and the drawee bank was not required to pay the check when not presented through the bank thus named, but directly by a third bank.

Same — protest — when authorized.

2. Under such circumstances, if the third bank, which held the check, presented it to the drawee bank, and the latter indorsed on it the statement that it would be paid when presented through the named bank, this did not authorize the bank holding the check to have it protested.

Same — wrongful protest — liability.

3. For the holder of a check to unlawfully cause a protest of it to be made, and notice to be given to the drawer and indorsers, without proper presentation for payment, according to its terms, furnishes a cause of action to the drawer.

Headnotes by LUMPKIN, J.

(May 11, 1910.)

Note. — Effect of direction on check to pay same through specified agency.

The above decision seems to be one of first impression in this country upon this point.

Attention should be called, however, to Commercial Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 118 N. C. 783, 32 L.R.A. 712, 54 Am. St. Rep. 753, 24 S. E. 524, which was an action upon a check which had stamped across its face, "This check will positively not be paid to" a named banking company or its agents. This stipulation was upheld so as to prevent any right of action on the check by the prohibited banking company against the drawee.

The lack of authority in this country upon the question here offered for discussion makes it advisable to consider the system of crossed checks in vogue in England, referred to in the above opinion; the more so, as, in the words of the text writer quoted in FARMERS' BANK v. JOHNSON, K. & Co., the English cases involving crossed checks are "precedent directly in force." A check is said to be specially crossed when the name of a bank or banking firm is written across the face of the check, and it is said to be generally crossed when the words "and company," or any abbreviation thereof, usually "& Co.," between two parallel transverse lines, are written across the check. Another form of a general crossing is recognized by the later English statutes, which consists merely of two parallel transverse lines across the face of the check without any words. That variety, however, appears in none of the cases.

The leading, though not the earliest, case declaring the law governing crossed checks, is Bellamy v. Marjoribanks, 7 Exch. 389, in which it was declared that crossing a check could not operate as an indorsement to the banker whose name was used, because it was not written with any intent to transfer the property in the check to him, and because it wanted the essential part of an indorsement,—the delivery of the instrument to the indorsee; and that therefore such crossing could not have the effect of restricting its negotiability to the banker whose name was written across it, since to allow it that effect would be to hold the instrument no longer a check. Parke, B., who delivered the opinion of the court, gives such a complete account of the origin as well as the legal effect of crossing checks as to make it highly advisable to quote his language in full: "The practice of crossing checks originated at the clearing house; the clerks of the different bankers who did business there having been accustomed to write across the checks the names of their employers, so as to enable the clearing-house clerks to make up the accounts. It is quite clear that this had nothing whatever to do with the restriction of negotiability; for, at the time when this was done, the checks were in the course of payment or presentation for payment, and all their negotiability was at an end. The establishment of the clearing house is comparatively modern, and was within the memory of several of the witnesses. It afterwards became a common practice to cross checks which were not intended to go through the clearing house at all, with the name of a banker, or with the words '& Co.,' and a custom or usage has certainly sprung up in regard to this also. All the witnesses agreed as to the fact of the existence of such a custom, and we think that the great preponderance of the evidence on both sides tended to show the custom to be that which is reported to have been stated by some of the jury in the case of Stewart v. Lee, 1 Moody & M. 161; viz., 'that where a check is crossed, bankers generally refuse to pay it to anyone except a banker; and if they do pay it to a person not a banker, they consider that they do it at their peril, in the event of the party to whom the payment is made not being entitled to receive it. That the object is to secure the payment, not to any particular banker, but to a banker, in order that ERROR to the Superior Court for Berrien County to review a judgment overruling a demurrer to the petition in an action brought to recover damages alleged to have been caused by the wrongful protest of a check. Affirmed.

Statement by Lumpkin, J.:

Johnson, King, & Company, a corporation doing business in Macon, brought suit for damages against the Farmers' Bank of Nashville, Georgia. The petition as amended alleged as follows: On December 30, 1905, the plaintiff issued a check of which the following is a copy:

Johnson, King, & Company.
No. 1044. $62.

Macon, Ga. Dec. 30th, 1905.

Pay to the order of Hawley & Hoops, sixty-two and 47/100 $62.47 dollars.

Johnson, King, & Co.,
By Jno. C. Holmes,
V. P. & Gen. Mgr.

To Bank of Nashville, Nashville, Ga.
Payable through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta, Valdosta, Ga., at current rate.

On the same date the plaintiff issued three other checks drawn on the Bank of Nashville, similar in form to the one above, and differing only as to amount and the name of the payee. The words, "Payable through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta, Val-it may be easily traced for whose use the money was received; and that it was not intended thereby to at all restrict the circulation or negotiability of the check, but merely to compel the holder to present it through a quarter of known respectability and credit.' We are strongly inclined to think that, on a full inquiry, the usage will turn out to be no more than this; and, considering the custom in this point of view, the crossing is a mere memorandum on the face of the check, and forms no part of the instrument itself, and in no way alters its effect. There can be no doubt that such an usage is highly beneficial to the public. These instruments are in their essential character payable to bearer, they are in many respects treated as bank notes, for which of late years they have been largely substituted; but like all other things, they are liable to be mislaid, or lost, or stolen, and may get into the hands of persons who are not entitled to receive payment of them. It is manifestly, therefore, a great protection and safeguard to the real owner, that there should exist the means of tracing and ascertaining for whose use the money paid on a check is received, and to whom the money actually goes; and the payment through a banker secures this object. . . . We think, therefore, that it is a matter of great public advantage and benefit that the custom 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

dosta, Ga., at current rate," were stamped on each check. The checks were presented to the Bank of Nashville, at Nashville, Georgia, by the Farmers' Bank of Nashville, Georgia; three of them being presented on January 8, 1906, and one on January 6, 1906. Upon presentation, the Bank of Nashville entered on the back of the checks, "Will pay when presented through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta, Georgia." Thereupon the Farmers' Bank of Nashville caused the checks to be protested, each protest bearing the same date as the presentation for payment; and notice of dishonor was sent to certain indorsers and to the drawer. The Bank of Nashville never refused to pay the checks, but, through its officers, stated to the Farmers' Bank of Nashville that it objected to the manner in which the checks were presented, it being different from the terms expressed on their face, and that they would be honored when presented through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta. At the time when the checks were drawn, and when presented to the Bank of Nashville by the Farmers' Bank of Nashville, the plaintiffs had a sufficient amount of money on deposit in the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta, subject to check for their payment. The plaintiff had an arrangement with the Bank of Nashville by which all checks drawn on that bank would be paid if presented through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta. The Farmer's Bank of Nashville or usage, which we have already mentioned as being said to exist in point of fact, should be maintained; and we think it well may, without at all improperly trenching upon or restricting the negotiability of checks. We think the crossing of a check is a protection and safeguard to the owner of the check, and that, in the event of a banker paying a crossed check otherwise than through a banker, the circumstances of his so paying would be strong evidence of negligence in an action against him. For instance, let us suppose the customer of a banker to draw and to cross a check, intending to pay it to a person to whom he was indebted, and that afterwards, and before handing it over to his creditor, he either lost it, or it was stolen from him. If this check was presented otherwise than through a banker, then, according to the custom or usage above mentioned, it would not be paid, but, if presented by a banker, it would. The mere circumstance of the necessity of placing the check in the hands of a banker would, of itself, oppose some impediment to a fraudulent holder in dealing with the check, and making it available; and the fact that it could at once be traced and ascertained for whose use the proceeds were received would give considerable aid in enabling the drawer to recover back the money, in the event of his being entitled wilfully disregarded the terms of the checks, which were that they were "payable through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta, Valdosta, Ga., at current rate," and, for the purpose of casting suspicion upon the credit of the plaintiff before the commercial world, protested the checks and thereby damaged the plaintiff. The protest was made for the purpose of causing the plaintiff to become offended with the Bank of Nashville, and of forcing it to become a depositor with the Farmers' Bank of Nashville and its associates. The defendant demurred to the petition. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

Messrs. Bule & Knight, Hendricks & Christian, and E. P. S. Denmark for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. W. A. Dodson and W. H. Griffin for defendant in error.

Lumpkin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

A story is told of a distinguished writer on the subject of negotiable instruments, to the effect that, when he was asked what first suggested to him the idea of preparing such a work, he answered that he became interested in the question as to whether a demand was necessary in order to enforce by suit a promissory note or acceptance payable by its terms at a specified place, and that the extensive inquiry on this subject into which he was led suggested to him the utility of a new work on negotiable instruments. The story further proceeds that, when the inquirer asked him whether such a demand was necessary, he humorously replied that he had forgotten. Whether this is without foundation or not, it serves to indicate the wealth of inharmonious learning which has been lavished upon a question which, at first sight, would appear to be quite narrow. Much of the conflict in authorities has arisen over the question whether, in an action against the maker of a promissory note or the acceptor of a bill of exchange payable at a particular place, it was necessary to aver and prove a demand at such place. In England the authorities were divided on the subject of such acceptances. The court of King's bench held that where there was an acceptance payable at a specified place, it was not necessary to allege or prove demand at that place, in a suit against the acceptor. The court of common pleas, on the other hand, held that this made a qualified acceptance, and that presentment at the place stipulated must be averred and proved. In 1820, the case of Rowe v. Young, 2 Brod. & B. 165, came before the House of Lords. It was there decided that, where the acceptance named a place of payment, demand at such place must be averred and proved. In the following year an act of Parliament was passed on the subject, declaring that an acceptance so to do. On the other hand, if the banker disregarded the custom, and paid the check to a private individual, that circumstance would be strong evidence against him in the event of his seeking to charge his customer with the payment, if the person actually presenting it was not the lawful holder and bearer of the check. The lawful owner of a check is, of necessity, entitled to receive payment of it. He could not sue the drawee, unless he had accepted the check,—a practice not usual, but legal,—but he could sue the drawer on non-payment of it, if he was the holder for value. No prudent banker, however, would pay a crossed check otherwise than to a banker, except he was fully satisfied as to the title of the party presenting it to receive payment. If he did so, he would run the risk of the bearer of the check having no title to it. We think there is no legal objection to the custom, if thus limited and understood, upon the ground of its being repugnant to the essential quality of a check, namely, its negotiability by delivery. There is no obligation upon anyone to receive payment by a check, whether it be crossed or not crossed; but if a man receive a crossed check, he seems to us not indeed to incur the obligation of presenting it for payment through a banker as a condition precedent, but he ought not to complain if the drawee does not pay without previous inquiry. There is really no restriction upon its negotiability, but it is, in our opinion, a reasonable and lawful practice and usage, in order to secure, as far as possible, payment of checks to honest and bona fide holders."

The earliest reported case involving a crossed check is, apparently, Stewart v. Lee, 1 Moody & M. 158, referred to in Bellamy v. Marjoribanks, supra, in which it was held a question for the jury whether bankers whose names were crossed on a check payable to the order of C. & S., assignees of P. or "bearer," were put upon notice that the proceeds of the check belonged to the assignees, and not to C., as survivor of a partnership, notwithstanding C. had directed the proceeds to be placed to the credit of the partnership, it appearing that such bankers were bankers both for the assignees and for the partnership.

Another case earlier in point of time than Bellamy v. Marjoribanks, supra, is Boddington v. Schlenker, 4 Barn. & Ad. 752, which was an action by the payee against the maker of a check upon which the latter had crossed the name of the former's banker, and in which it was held that the failure of such banker, to whom it was transmitted on the same day of its execution, to present it on that day to the clearing house before the firm upon which it was drawn had stopped payment, payable at a banker's or other specified place, without more, should be deemed a general acceptance; but if it were expressed to be payable at a banker's or other place "only, and not otherwise or elsewhere," it would be a qualified acceptance. This statute did not deal with promissory notes, and some of the decisions make a distinction as to them, where the place of payment was named in the body of them. In this country a contrary doctrine to that declared by the House of Lords was laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Wallace v. McConnell, 13 Pet. 136, 10 L. ed. 95. It was held in that case that in actions on promissory notes against the maker, or on bills of exchange against the acceptor, where the note or bill is made payable at a specified time and place, it is not necessary to aver in the declaration, or prove on the trial, that a demand for payment was made, in order to sustain the action; but, if the maker or acceptor was at the place at the time designated and was ready and offered to pay the money, it is matter of defense, to be pleaded and proved on his part. This decision has been generally followed in America, and the ruling has been adopted in this state. Dougherty v. Western Bank, 13 Ga. 287. It was said by this court that the defendant may plead readiness to pay at the place stipulated, or damages sustained by him in consequence of the neglect or omission to make the demand, and, upon proof of his plea, the defendant shall be exonerated to the extent though it might render him liable to his customer, did not discharge the drawer, the holder of a check being entitled by the general law to present it the day after he received it, and no custom being proved that a crossed check, if received by the payee, and sent by him to his banker in sufficient time, must be cleared the same day.

The next case in point of time after Bellamy v. Marjoribanks, supra, is Carlon v. Ireland, 5 El. & Bl. 765, in which recovery was refused against one not a banker, who innocently cashed a crossed check payable to the plaintiff or bearer, at the request of the plaintiff's clerk, who then absconded with the proceeds. It was held that the crossing of the check did not restrict its negotiability, and where the issue was who was its lawful holder, the crossing was material only on the question of good faith. Lord Justice Campbell said: "The check was payable to the bearer and negotiable. The crossing cannot, in the nature of things, at once leave it payable to bearer, and also make it not payable to the bearer. It leaves it negotiable; and, that being so, the question is the same as if it were a bank note, or any other negotiable instrument transferable by delivery; that question is whether it was taken in good faith, not whether there was due care, or whether there were circumstances that ought to have awakened suspicion."

The next case to involve a crossed check was one at nisi prius, Springfield v. Laneczari, 16 L. T. N. S. 361, in which the judge declared that the crossing of a check was a direction on the part of the maker that it should be paid only through a banker, and that the holder had done all that was required of him to comply with that direction by paying it in at his banker's within a reasonable time, and could not be held responsible for the delay of his bankers in presenting it for payment.

Up to the time of the last-cited case there does not seem to have been any legislation upon the subject of crossed checks, but by the statute 19 & 20 Vict. chap. 25, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

it was provided that crossing a check should have the force of a direction to the bankers upon whom it was made that the same was to be paid only to or through some bank, and that it should be so payable. In Simmons v. Taylor, 4 C. B. N. S. 463, in which the specific holding was that, under this statute, the crossing was no part of the check, and its fraudulent obligation no forgery, and that therefore a banker was justified in paying a check otherwise than to or through another banker, if, when presented, it was not crossed, this legislation was characterized by Bramwell, B., as "an abortive attempt to perform the impossible feat of rendering a draft which, upon the face of it, purports to be payable to the bearer, not payable to him. It is a thing which cannot be done: the utmost that can be done is that which the law had already done before, viz., to make the crossing of the check or draft operate as a caution to the banker to use a greater degree of vigilance. [Here the reporter in a footnote pertinently asked, 'What constitutes vigilance in a banker who has no option to exercise as to whether he will or will not pay the draft when presented?'] It may be that the statute has turned that which before was a mere caution to the banker, into an absolute direction to him not to pay the draft otherwise than to or through another banker, when the direction is put on by the drawer of the check himself. But, to hold that the direction forms part of the instrument itself, would be to attempt to perform the impossible feat I before alluded to, or to do that which would be equally impossible and inconsistent, viz., to say that the crossing should not affect the rights of the holder, and yet that the banker would not be bound to pay the draft. It is manifest to my mind that a bona fide holder of this check would have a remedy against the drawee upon it. It is plain that the negotiability of the instrument is not and never was affected by the crossing. I think the cross operates as a private direction to the banker, and that, if made by the customer, the banker would be liable to him of the damages which he has sustained. It will be observed that the decisions above mentioned have reference to a case in which the acceptor of a bill of exchange or a maker of a promissory note is sued, not to questions involving the liability or release of indorsers or drawers of accepted bills.

In many respects a check is like an inland bill of exchange; but there are some differences. A "check" has been defined to be "a draft or order upon a bank or banking house, purporting to be drawn upon a deposit of funds, for the payment at all events of a certain sum of money, to a certain person therein named, or to him or his order, or to bearer, and payable instantly on demand." 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. 5th ed. § 1566. A check does not have to be accepted upon presentment, but paid, if good and if properly presented. One of the differences between a common check and an ordinary inland bill after its acceptance is in relation to the drawer. In the former, the drawer is the principal debtor, and the check purports to be made upon a fund deposited; in the latter, the acceptor is the principal debtor. The negligence of the holder of a check in not making due presentment, or as to giving the drawer notice of dishonor, does not absolutely discharge him from liability except to the extent to which he may have suffered loss or injury by reason of such negligence.

These principles have been stated because citations have been made of cases which arose under them. They do not, however, for disobeying it,—the crossing by the customer being tantamount to a direction to the banker to pay the draft only to or through another banker. But, if the crossing is put on by someone other than the maker of the draft, I have a difficulty in seeing how the banker could be held liable for not obeying it. Whoever drew this act must have seen the difficulty, or rather the impossibility, of making the crossing part of the instrument itself, and at the same time preserving the negotiable character of the draft."

The decision just cited evidently called forth another statute, that of 21 & 22 Vict. chap. 79, which provided that the crossing should be part of the check, and its alteration or obliteration a forgery, and enacted more at large the provisions of 19 & 20 Vict. chap. 25, as to payment. It was held in Smith v. Union Bank, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 31, 4 Eng. Rul. Cas. 436, affirming L. R. 10 Q. B. 291, that this statute did not affect the negotiability of a check, and therefore that the payee of a check could not recover against the drawee bank, where it appeared that the check was stolen from the payee after he had indorsed his name on it, and crossed it with the name of his bankers, and it was finally passed for value to a holder who afterwards paid it into his bankers, who presented it to the payee bank, who paid it notwithstanding that it did not come through the bankers whose name was crossed on the check. Mr. Justice Blackburn, in delivering the opinion of the lower court, used the following language: "I take it that the effect of the statute is that the check still remains negotiable. The lawful holder of it cannot sue the drawer until he has presented it to the banker, and it has been dishonored; he cannot present it to the banker effectually, so as to make the check be dishonored, and enable him to fall back upon the drawer, except through the banker with whose name it has been crossed; but if he does present it through that bank (here the London and County Bank), and the banker upon whom it is drawn pays it, then the payment is perfectly good by the banker: all is right, and nothing can be found fault with at all. But in the present case the defendants, the bankers, who have paid it to the holder through another banker, without requiring presentment to be made through the bankers whose name was crossed upon it, have done a thing by which they have disobeyed the statute; and if the defendants had paid the check through the London and Westminster Bank to a person who was not the lawful holder, and did not take it bona fide, they have paid it to a man who was not the lawful owner, and I think they would have no defense at the suit of the real owner. But they in fact paid it, though through a wrong banker, to the real holder of the check, and therefore, though they did wrong, no one is damnified. This does not diminish the security given by crossed checks; for if a check were drawn payable to order, and then crossed, and the person to whose order it was drawn indorsed it specially to his bankers, or kept it unindorsed altogether, in either of these cases, if a thief got it and were to make a forged indorsement, the person who, in ignorance, took it, even for value, would not be holder at all, and anyone who took the check from him, and converted it to his own use, would be liable to the true holder in trover.

. . . Therefore there are obvious reasons why bankers should not and do not in practice generally pay checks to any bank but the one whose name is across the check; because they can do themselves no benefit, and they do not protect their customers, and may incur a very serious liability. But when it happens that they have paid to the right holder, though through a wrong banker, I do not see how anybody can complain, or bring an action at all." Lord Cairns, in delivering the opinion of the court of appeal, declared that the earlier cases clearly showed that whatever might have been the effect of crossing the check, its negotiability was not thereby restrained, and that it was impossible to hold that the statutes had restrained it, since there was not a word in fully cover the present case. Here the drawee of a check was a bank in a different place from where the check was drawn and the drawer resided. The direction to the drawee bank was at the left-hand lower corner of the check, and immediately under it were the words, "Payable through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta, Valdosta, Ga., at current rate." The check was not forwarded through the Valdosta Bank, but came into the possession of a bank in Nashville, Georgia, the place where the drawee bank was located, and was thus presented to it. Whether the check was deposited with such demanding bank, or sent to it for collection, or how it became the holder, is not stated. On presentment, the drawee bank indorsed on the back of the check these words, "Will pay when presented through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta." Thereupon the check was protested for nonpayment, and suit to recover damages was brought by the drawer against the collecting bank, which caused the protest to be made, on the ground that such protest was wrongful and was maliciously made.

Two questions are involved: (1) Whether the words, "Payable through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta," etc., formed a part of the check, which the drawee bank was bound to regard, or which it had the right to disregard. (2) Whether this direction required payment through the Valdosta Bank, or whether it was merely permissive, so that payment could be demanded through that channel or directly from the drawee Bank of Nashville. If the presentment to the drawee was required to be made through the Valdosta Bank, then the drawee had the right to decline payment except upon presentment in that manner; and if the bank holding the paper refused to recognize such reason for nonpayment on presentment by it, and caused the check to be protested, and notice to be given, this was unwarranted.

It was contended that the words, "Payable through the Citizens' Bank of Valdosta," etc., followed the signature, and formed no part of the check, but amounted merely to a memorandum, which the holder of the check did not have to regard. In England there is a well-known usage, which has now been made the subject of an act of Parliament, for the drawer or holder of a check to "cross" it with the name of a banker.

In 2 Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, 5th ed. § 1585a, it is stated that the effect of this was, "before the statute which now exists, a direction of the drawee bank to pay the check to no one but a banker; or rather, according to the cases, with only a caution or warning to the drawees that care must be used in paying it to anyone else."

In 1 Morse on Banks & Banking, 4th ed. § 245, it is said: "In this country the system of 'crossed checks,' strictly so called, is unknown. But of late the germ of a similar custom has begun to manifest itself. Occasionally checks have stamped or written upon them some form of words which is intended to secure their payment exclusively through the clearing house. No especial form has as yet been generally accepted, and the legal effect of none of those in use has ever been passed upon. It is safe to say, however, that there is no question but that the drawer could embody in his order a direction to his bank to pay only upon presentation of the instrument in the usual course through the clearing house, and that such a direction would be as valid and as them to that effect, their sole object being to give a direction to the drawee banker.

On the other hand, in Bobbett v. Pinkett, L. R. 1 Exch. Div. 368, recovery was allowed the maker of a crossed check payable to order, which was stolen from the payee, and his indorsement forged, though the defendant took it bona fide, in ignorance of the forgery, since the latter was therefore not the lawful holder of the check. One of the judges declared that not only could the payee maintain an action against the defendant, but that it was no less certain that the drawee bankers could have done so if the plaintiff had refused to allow them to debit his account with the amount of the check.

The statutes just referred to were repealed by the crossed checks act of 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. chap. 81), which in its turn was repealed by the bills of exchange act of 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. chap. 61), by which, with the amendment of 6 Edw. 7, chap. 17, crossed checks are now governed. By these acts it was provided that where a banker in good faith, and without negligence, received payment from a customer of a crossed check, and the customer had no title or defective title thereto, the banker should not incur any liability to the true owner of the check by reason only of having received such payment, and this provision has been the subject of interpretation in the following cases: Great Western R. Co. v. London & County Bkg. Co. [1901] A. C. 414; Capital & Counties Bank v. Gordon [1903] A. C. 240, affirming [1902] 1 K. B. 242, which allowed an appeal from the judgment of the trial court, reported in 83 L. T. N. S. 762; Matthiessen v. London & County Bank, L. R. 5 C. P. Div. 7; Kleinwort v. Comptoir National D'Escompte [1894] 2 Q. B. 157; Lacave v. Crédit Lyonnais [1897] 1 Q. B. 148; Clarke v. London & County Bkg. Co. [1897] 1 Q. B. 552; Akrokerri (Atlantic) Mines v. Economic Bank [1904] 2 K. B. 465; Bevan v. National Bank, 23 Times L. R. 65.

J. A. C.

binding upon the bank as a direction to pay only to the order of a particular person. If the check be payable to the order of A. B., it is probable that the privilege of including such instructions in his order, when indorsing over, might be accorded to him; certainly indorsements in this form are very frequent, and no bank would be safe in disregarding them. Supposing the direction to be properly given, the collecting and the paying bank must both respect it, and the English cases above mentioned would be precedent directly in force. It would amount to an express designation by the drawer, or the payee, of the manner in which alone payment is authorized to be demanded or made."

A check being in the nature of an order on a bank or banker to pay a certain sum purporting to be on deposit, there would seem to be no reason why the drawer could not direct the bank to pay only when presented through a specified channel or by a particular person or bank. The drawer is not compelled to make the check payable to bearer or order. Likewise, no sound reason is perceived why, in giving direction to the bank of deposit, he cannot make an addition to the mere order for payment. If the person to whom the check is delivered is not willing to accept it with such direction, he can reject it; but if he accepts it payable only through a particular bank, or through a particular banker, he cannot insist that the bank on which it is drawn must disregard this direction given to it by a depositor on the face of the paper. No ground has been suggested why such a direction by one to his banker, in ordering the latter to pay money, is illegal or unreasonable, the banks being in the same state and not far distant from each other. The case in hand does not present the question of whether the drawer of the check has been wholly or partially discharged by negligence or delay in presentation, but whether, in giving direction to his banker to pay the check, he can lawfully direct payment to be made through a certain medium, and whether the bank, when so instructed, is bound to disregard such direction at the demand of another collecting bank.

In Nazro v. Fuller, 24 Wend. 374, it was held that an alteration of a promissory note by the payee thereof, so as to make it purport to be payable at a particular place, vitiates it in the hands of an indorsee, so that he cannot recover upon it in an action against the maker; and that, if it be doubtful whether it be an alteration of a note or a mere memorandum by the payee, indicating where demand for payment should be made to charge him as indorser, the question, it seems, should be submitted to a jury.

In Warrington v. Early, 2 El. & Bl. 763, a promissory note was made payable six months after date, "with lawful interest." After it had been signed, without the assent of the maker, but with the assent of the holder, there was added, in the corner of the note, "interest at 6 per cent per annum." It was held that this addition materially altered the contract, and that the holder could not recover on the note against the maker.

As to alterations in written contracts in this state, see Civil Code 1895, §§ 3702, 3703; Gwin v. Anderson, 91 Ga. 827, 18 S. E. 43; Hotel Lanier Co. v. Johnson, 103 Ga. 604, 30 S. E. 558; Pritchard v. Smith, 77 Ga. 463. See also Woodworth v. Bank of America, 19 Johns. 391, 10 Am. Dec. 239; Polo Mfg. Co. v. Parr, 8 Neb. 379, 30 Am. Rep. 830, 1 N. W. 312; Farmers' Bank v. Ewing, 78 Ky. 264, 39 Am. Rep. 231; Wait v. Pomeroy, 20 Mich. 425, 4 Am. Rep. 395; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 5th ed. §§ 149, 150, pp. 173, 174, and citations; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 137(11), 140; McCalla v. McCalla, 48 Ga. 502; Griffin v. City Bank, 58 Ga. 584.

It is commonly stated that the contract must be collected "from four corners" of the document, and no part of what appears there is to be excluded; and Mr. Daniel, in his work on Negotiable Instruments, has somewhat broadly declared that, as indorsements are made on the back of a negotiable instrument, it might be said that the purport of the instrument is to be collected from "the eight corners." 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 5th ed. § 151, p. 175. A distinction is sometimes made between an entry upon a note or check at the time when it is made, and which is intended as a part of it, and a mere memorandum made by some person for convenience, and forming no part of the instrument. In the case before us the direction immediately follows the name of the drawee bank. From the allegations of the petition it appears to have been placed there when the check was drawn, as a part of the direction to the bank. It was a material part of such direction, and the drawee bank had the right to decline to disregard it.

It was argued that the statement that the check was "payable" through the Valdosta Bank did not indicate the exclusive method of collection, but gave to the holder an option to present it through that medium or through any other medium to the Nashville

Bank. If a negotiable instrument is payable at one of two banks, it may be presented for payment to either. The word "payable" has been defined as follows: "That may, can, or should be paid; suitable to be paid; that may be discharged or settled by delivery of value; matured; now due." Webster's Dict. As commonly employed in commercial paper or contracts, in stating the time or manner of payment, the word "payable" does not give to the debtor an option or privilege of paying at such time or in such manner, but signifies that payment is to be thus made. If it should be stated in a note or bill of exchange that the amount mentioned was payable in thirty days, clearly the expression would mean that such amount was to be paid at that time, not merely that the debtor might then pay it. So, if an obligation should be declared to be payable in gold coin of a certain fineness, it would mean that it was to be thus paid. And so numerous illustrations might be given. A direction in a check to the drawee bank that it is "payable" through another named bank means that it is to be paid in that way. Alma v. Guaranty Sav. Bank, 8 C. C. A. 564, 19 U. S. App. 622, 60 Fed. 203; Cate v. Patterson, 25 Mich. 191, 194; Johnson v. Dooley, 65 Ark. 71, 40 L.R.A. 74, 44 S. W. 1032; Easton v. Hyde, 13 Minn. 90, Gil. 83; Webster v. Cook, 38 Cal. 423. Taken in connection with the direction from the drawer of the check to the drawee bank to pay a certain sum, the addition meant that the sum was to be paid through the Valdosta Bank.

It follows, from what has been said, that, under the allegations of the petition, the drawee bank had a right to decline to pay the check until presented through the Valdosta Bank, and that, upon its entering upon the back of the check that it would pay when so presented, the collecting bank was not authorized to cause the check to be protested and notice to be given. It was therefore not erroneous for the trial judge to overrule the demurrer to the petition. We have not discussed the motive which it was alleged actuated the collecting bank in causing the protest to be made, as without it we hold that the petition set out a cause of action. Atlanta Nat. Bank v. Davis, 96 Ga. 334, 51 Am. St. Rep. 139, 23 S. E. 190; Hilton v. Jesup Bkg. Co. 128 Ga. 30, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 224, 57 S. E. 78, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 987; State Mut. Life & Annuity Asso. v. Baldwin, 116 Ga. 855, 43 S. E. 262.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

WILLIAM C. SMITH et al.

v.

WILLIAM H. STEPHENS, County Treasurer, Appt.

(173 Ind. 564, 91 N. E. 167.)

Tax — discrimination — bank stock — constitutional rights.

1. Stockholders of a bank are not denied constitutional privileges and immunities, uniformity of taxation, or the equal protection of the laws, by a statute allowing a deduction, in fixing the value of its capital stock for taxation, of only the assessed value of real estate held by it, rather than the amount invested in real estate, although it results in the taxation of the real estate to its full value, while such property is assessed to others at only a fraction of its value, if the statute provides that it shall be assessed at its full value.

Same — method of computing.

2. In determining the amount of capital and surplus of the stock of a bank for taxation, under a statute permitting the assessed value of real estate held by the bank to be deducted from the valuation of the capital stock, if the amount invested in real estate is deducted by the bank from its capital and surplus in making its return, the tax officers must treat that sum as disposed of in the real estate assessment, and cannot add it to the amount of capital and surplus returned, and deduct from the total merely the actual value at which the real estate was assessed.

Same — deduction of real estate.

3. If a bank, in making a return of its capital and surplus for taxation, deducts the amount invested in real estate, under a statute providing that the assessed value of its real estate may be deducted from the valuation of its capital stock, it is not entitled to a further deduction of such assessed valuation, such item being eliminated from the account.

(March 8, 1910.)

Note. — Constitutionality of statute which allows a deduction of only the assessed value of the real estate in assessing the capital stock of a corporation.

This is one phase of the more general question of constitutional equality in relation to corporate taxation treated in the note to Bacon v. State Tax Comrs. 60 L.R.A. 321. No cases decided since the preparation of the earlier note have been found which pass upon the precise question raised in SMITH v. STEPHENS.

It will be noted that in that case the contention was that a statute was invalid which authorized the deduction of only the assessed value of real estate, upon the ground that, since the real estate repre-

A PPEAL by complainants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Warren County sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in a suit to enjoin the collecting of alleged unlawful taxes assessed on certain corporate stock. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hanly, McAdams, & Artman for appellants.

Messrs. Stansbury & Billings for appellee.

Myers, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Complaint by appellants, as stockholders of Warren County Bank, to enjoin the treasurer from collecting alleged unlawful taxes assessed against them on their shares of stock.

The questions for determination arise upon the construction to be given Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908, §§ 10,208-10,210, inclusive. The complaint discloses that appellants were all the shareholders of the Warren County Bank. In making the statement for taxation in 1907, the cashier of the bank reported to the auditor, under § 10,210, that the capital stock of the bank was $50,000, its surplus $20,000, and its undivided profits $2,800; that $14,800 of its surplus, over and above the $20,000, had been invested in real estate, which the bank had been compelled to take in the course of its business, which real estate was situate in different townships from the township of the location of the bank; and the officer in his statement deducted the sum of $14,800 so invested from the surplus, and reported the remainder of its surplus, and undivided profits, together with its capital, for taxation at the sum of $72,800. The board of review added the $14,800 to the surplus and undivided profits, making a total of $87,600, upon which it imposed an assessment of 80 per cent on the whole, which was the rule applied in assessing all other bank sent an investment and an actual value greater than the assessed value, the deduction of the latter operated to render the residue, although still representing real estate, taxable in the guise of an assessment against stock, with the result that real estate owned by the bank was taxed to its full value, whereas real estate owned by individuals was assessed at only a fraction of its real value. There are cases involving statutory construction in respect of the method of computing values. Such cases come within the note to State Board v. People, 58 L.R.A. 513, on taxation of capital stock of corporations. Cases of this kind which hold that a deduction of the assessed value of real estate must be made may, in some sense, be regarded as resting on considerations applicable to a determination of the validity of a statute expressly providing for a deduction of the assessed value. For instance, it was said in State ex rel. Dillon v. Graybeal, 60 W. Va. 357, 55 S. E. 398, a case decided since the note in 58 L.R.A. was prepared: "The claim of right to deduct the actual value of the real estate, instead of its assessed value, is predicated upon the failure of the legislature to limit the word 'value' in the latter part of § 79 by the use of the word 'assessed' in connection with it, as it did in the first part of the section. To sustain this contention would impute to the legislature either a grave oversight, by which the taxes on vast amounts of values in the capital of banks and trust companies would be lost to the state, counties, and municipalities, or an intention to allow these values to escape taxation. Such institutions are located in the cities and towns of a prosperous and rapidly growing state. Their real-estate holdings are nearly always city property, constantly increasing in value. The assessment, of real estate made in 1905 is to remain unchanged until the year 1909, while the assessment 30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

of banks and trust companies is to be made annually. As the real-estate assessment cannot be changed, opportunities would be afforded in many instances, if the actual, instead of the assessed, value could be deducted, of cutting down the taxable value of the capital of the banks by deducting large valuations on account of real estate, due to appreciation since 1905, on which no taxes could be assessed or levied. In this case $35,700 was presumably the value of the bank's property when the real-estate assessment was made. Now it is over $70,000. To allow this large deduction, we must say the legislature intended that, under such conditions, $35,000 of the value of the capital of the bank should be released from taxation. The statement of the proposition works its own refutation. In limiting the reduction to the assessed value, no possible injustice is done the bank. In paying taxes on the assessed value of its real estate, and in addition thereto taxes on the aggregate value of its real estate and capital, surplus, and undivided profits, less the assessed value of the real estate, a bank pays taxes on nothing more than it owns. If allowed to deduct a sum larger than the assessed value of the real estate, as an actual value, it would pay on only a part of what it owns." It does not seem to have been urged that the statute as so construed was invalid, and it is cited merely for purposes of illustration.

A note on taxation of shares of stock and corporate assets as double taxation, which supplements a narrow phase of the note to 60 L.R.A. 321, to which reference has already been made, is appended to East Livermore v. Livermore Falls Trust & Bkg. Co. 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 952.

On the question of state taxation of national banks, see the note to 45 L.R.A. 737.

L. A. W.

shares, making $70,080; from this latter sum the board deducted $7,070, the assessed value of the real estate in which the bank had invested $14,800, leaving $63,010 for taxation. The bank appealed from this assessment to the board of state tax commissioners, which board dismissed the appeal on the ground that there was no right of appeal in the bank. The stockholders then paid the taxes based upon the amount which they admitted as correct, to wit, $58,240, and brought suit to enjoin collection of the difference by the treasurer alleged to be then threatened. A demurrer was sustained to the complaint, the ruling on which is the only error assigned.

The controversy arises over the wording of § 10,210, Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908, respecting the manner of assessing the shares of stock in a banking business represented by shares, that "whenever any such bank, banking association, or trust company shall have acquired real estate, the assessed value of such real estate shall be deducted from the valuation of the capital or capital stock of such bank, banking association, or trust company;" it being insisted, first, that if the bank is not permitted to deduct the amount it has invested in the real estate, but only the assessed value, then, as to the difference between the amount invested and the assessed value, such difference is twice or doubly taxed, in violation of the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution guarantying due process of law, unabridged privileges and immunities, and the equal protection of the laws, and § 1, art. 10, of the state Constitution, providing that taxation shall be upon a uniform and equal rate of assessment, and § 23, art. 1, of the state Constitution, prohibiting privileges and immunities to one class which, upon the same terms, shall not belong to all citizens. Taking the last proposition first, together with the equal protection and the privilege and immunity clauses of the Federal Constitution to which it is allied, if all who are in the same class or like situated are dealt with alike, there is no discrimination inimical to either Constitution. We have lately had occasion to go into these questions. Johnson County v. Johnson (1909) 173 Ind. —, 89 N. E. 590, and cases there collected, and it is unnecessary to cite the cases again. And whether the legislation is applicable to a large or small class is a purely legislative question. Johnson County v. Johnson, supra, and cases there cited.

What property shall be assessed, and how taxed, is a legislative question, so long as there is uniformity and equality of rate, as to those of the same class. Johnson County v. Johnson, supra, and cases cited; State 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ex rel. Lewis v. Smith, 158 Ind. 543, 63 L.R.A. 116, 63 N. E. 25, 214, 64 N. E. 18; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 133 Ind. 513, 18 L.R.A. 729, 33 N. E. 421; Gilson v. Rush County, 128 Ind. 65, 11 L.R.A. 835, 27 N. E. 235; Cooley, Taxn. 5, 169; Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 147, 59 Am. Dec. 759. The due process of law, equal protection of the laws, and the privilege and immunity clauses of § 1, art. 14, of the Amendments to the Federal Constitution, do not abridge the right of the states to adjust their systems of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways, so long as discrimination is not made against particular classes or particular persons. Johnson County v. Johnson, supra, and cases cited. State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, 23 L. ed. 663; Jennings v. Coal Ridge Improv. & Coal Co. 147 U. S. 147, 37 L. ed. 116, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 282; Travellers' Ins. Co. v. Connecticut (1901) 185 U. S. 364, 46 L. ed. 949, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673. It is not claimed here that there is discrimination, save in the one particular that the shareholders would be doubly taxed, in violation of the equality clause, by reason of being taxed on the difference between the assessed value of the real estate and the amount invested in the real estate upon which they are taxed, as surplus, in that the surplus to that extent is represented by the real estate, and so taxed. The object and the express letter of the statute, the system of taxation as a whole, is one thing; its application to administration is quite a different thing, and it is by reason of this difference, and not by reason of a deficiency or inequality in the law itself, that the condition arises which is here presented. The statute with respect to the assessment of both personal and real property is the same; it requires that each be assessed at its "true cash value," or "full true cash value, . . . being the price which could be obtained therefor at private sale, and not at force or auction sale." Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908, §§ 10,197, 10,202, 10,256. Take the case before us. It is alleged that the bank has invested $14,800 in real estate, and that it is of that value, yet it is only assessed for taxation at $7,070, less than half its "true cash value." Had it been assessed at its "true cash value," it would have been assessed at at least $14,800, so that it is seen that the fault lies not with the statute, but with the assessing authorities. It is no answer to say that the taxes are assessed upon an equal valuation with other lands, for if so, that only proves that none of them are assessed at their full true cash value; but, so far as the statute is concerned, that is the command in valuing. State ex rel. Lewis v. Smith (1901) 158 Ind. 565, 63

L.R.A. 116, 63 N. E. 25, 214, 64 N. E. 18; Willis v. Crowder, 134 Ind. 515, 34 N. E. 315; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 133 Ind. 513, 535, 18 L.R.A. 729, 33 N. E. 421. It can be no fault of the law that the valuing officers have failed in their duty.

If the land is assessed at less than one-half its admitted value, then appellants are not paying, by so much, as much as they ought to pay, but are paying relatively the same on the real estate, supposing the assessment upon all other lands to be made in the same manner; and the amount they are assessed on the difference in their surplus invested in the land would probably be about the equivalent, allowing for the difference in the rate between the township where the land is located and taxed and the township where the bank is located and taxed; but even that condition and that inequality is not one created by the statute, or one contemplated. The statute intends just the contrary; it intends equality, and if the true cash value of all property were made the basis for taxation as the statute intends, it would result in about as equal and uniform a rate as is possible to be devised. If that were the case, then, where it is provided, as in § 10,210, that "whenever any such bank, banking association, or trust company shall have acquired real estate, the assessed value of such real estate shall be deducted from the valuation of the capital or capital stock of such bank, banking association, or trust company," we have no difficulty in understanding, what was intended, and that is that the assessed value is intended by the statute to be the "true cash value," and this would result in equality among all classes of taxpayers, and on all classes of property. We are referred to § 10,234, Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908, referring to the taxation of domestic corporations, providing that "where the capital stock or any part thereof is invested in tangible property returned for taxation, such capital stock shall not be assessed to the extent that is so invested," as placing stress on the difference between the amount invested in land or tangible property and the assessed value of the tangible property, and permitting deduction of the amount so invested in assessing the stock or the corporation itself. It should be noted that this section applies to domestic corporations other than banking, and a different method of assessment is used, but the one idea is paramount as to the stock, and that is to ascertain its cash value, which, for the purposes of taxation, does not represent the tangible property, whilst for all other purposes it does; and if the capital stock exceeds in value that of the tangible property, the stock is taxable on the excess, but if the tangible property exceeds in value the capital stock, the latter is not taxable. Hyland v. Central Iron & Steel Co. 129 Ind. 68, 13 L.R.A. 515, 28 N. E. 308; Hyland v. Brazil Block Coal Co. 128 Ind. 335, 26 N. E. 672.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

If the land were assessed, as the statute commands, at its "full cash value," that would be the limit of the amount which should be paid upon, and manifestly not the amount invested. For example, suppose the bank had invested $14,800 in real estate, which was in fact only worth $7,070. Its surplus is in fact reduced $7,730, through a failing investment of $14,800, but it would be manifestly unjust to tax the shares for $14,800, when $7,070 is invested in real estate which is taxed, and as equally manifest that it would be unjust to tax the shares on the basis of a surplus of $7,730 which did not exist; so, for the purposes of taxation only, and to avoid double taxation, the real estate is separated, and taxed the same as other real estate, upon the theory that all real estate in the taxing district is assessed at its true cash value, and, as the representative of an equal amount of the surplus, this valuation is deducted from the valuation of the shares, and the remaining surplus, if any, goes to make up the valuation of the shares, as distinct from the real estate. But if the whole amount invested in the real estate were deducted, and the real estate taxed at one half its value, or less, as in this case, and only that amount taxed, an actual value of one half would not be taxed at all. In the absence of some showing, the land would be presumed to be equal in value to the amount invested in it. Take the other side of the question, and suppose that upon an investment of $14,800 the bank had acquired real estate of the value of $25,000. The shares are worth $10,200 more than the apparent assets, or nominal surplus; here again the value of the shares must be ascertained, but how ascertained. Fourteen thousand eight hundred dollars of the surplus is invested in the real estate, and the additional sum of $10,200 is an actual surplus. If the real estate were assessed at its full cash value, as the statute contemplates, it would represent not only the $14,800, but $10,200 additional, and that value would be taxed as land, not as shares, and that sum would be deducted from what would otherwise be the value of the shares, and the result would be the same in the taxing process as in case of the land being less in value than the amount invested, but it could not be insisted in such case that the land should be taxed, and the shares taxed for the difference between the investment and the added value, for that would clearly be double taxation, neither er to be presumed to be intended or given effect. The value of the stock for the purposes of taxation should not be confounded with its value as representing the actual value for any other purpose. The statute does not provide that the amount invested in the land shall be deducted, as in case of domestic corporations other than banking, for the obvious reasons that, in assessing the stock in such domestic corporations, the stock is only assessed on the excess value of the stock above the value of the tangible property, which may consist of land or other tangible property, or both, as important parts of the business; whilst as to banks they are supposed and intended to have their assets in money, as being quasi public institutions and servers of the public, and those incorporated under the state law can only acquire and hold real estate for certain defined purposes, and cannot hold other real estate for a longer period than five years. Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908, § 3340.

The statute provides for the deduction of the assessed value of the land upon the theory that that is the cash value, and upon that theory the one would, approximately at least, equal the other, and upon that theory of the statute there is no double taxation in the proposition. That it may not so occur in practice is not the fault of the law, but of those charged with its execution. Assessments upon true cash values would operate equally, and that is the design of the statute. We agree with counsel for appellants that the matter of deduction of the assessed value of the real estate from the valuation of the stock is an administrative matter, the basis for which is one of pure calculation from the statement required to be furnished. Its discretion and judgment must be exercised by the board of review in fixing the value of the stock, but the direction for the deduction arises, not from any discretion in that board, but from the positive and mandatory statute, binding on all alike, and the deduction should be made by the bank as a necessary part of its statement for the information and guidance of the board of review, whose duties with respect to the deduction are purely administrative. Owen County v. Spangler (1902) 159 Ind. 575, 65 N. E. 743; Monroe County v. Conner, 155 Ind. 484, 58 N. E. 828; Huntington County v. Heaston, 144 Ind. 583, 55 Am. St. Rep. 192, 41 N. E. 457, 43 N. E. 651; Vigo County v. Davis, 136 Ind. 503, 22 L.R.A. 515, 36 N. E. 141.

The subjects and methods of taxation are legislative matters, and cannot be disturbed so long as the method prescribed is applicable alike to all within the prescribed class. Corporations, individuals, wholesale and retail dealers, domestic and foreign corporations, may be separately classified and taxed differently, so long as the constituent classes are treated alike. Johnson County v. Johnson, supra, and cases there cited; Pomeroy v. Beach, 149 Ind. 516, 49 N. E. 370; Duckwall v. Jones, 156 Ind. 685, 58 N. E. 1055, 60 N. E. 797; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Oshkosh, A. & B. W. R. Co. 107 Wis. 192, 83 N. W. 294; State ex rel. Abbot v. McFetridge, 64 Wis. 150, 24 N. W. 140; Pingree v. Michigan C. R. Co. 118 Mich. 314, 53 L.R.A. 274, 76 N. W. 635; Com. v. Interstate Consol. Street R. Co. 187 Mass. 436, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 973, 73 N. E. 530, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 419; Buffalo East Side R. Co. v. Buffalo Street R. Co. 111 N. Y. 132, 2 L.R.A. 384, 19 N. E. 63; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 186 U. S. 257, 46 L. ed. 1151, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 183 U. S. 503, 46 L. ed. 298, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 95; Tullis v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 175 U. S. 349, 44 L. ed. 192, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 136; Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. ed. 841, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 56, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1028; Missouri v. Lewis (Bowman v. Lewis) 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. ed. 989; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa (Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cutts) 94 U. S. 163, 24 L. ed. 95; Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 30 L. ed. 578, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357.

We see no ground of constitutional objection to the statute, but its construction is so involved with the constitutional questions urged that we are constrained to depart from the ordinary rule of declining to pass upon constitutional questions where the case may be disposed of on other grounds, for the judgment must be reversed on other grounds. In making the assessment the taxing officers added to the nominal surplus of the bank, $14,800 of that surplus invested in real estate, which was clearly erroneous under any theory of the law. In such a case, where the sum invested in real estate is deducted from the capital stock or surplus, before or in making the return, the assessed value of the real estate should not be deducted in fixing the value of the stock, because, if it is eliminated from one side of the account, it should not be included in the other.

The language "deducted from the valuation of the capital or capital stock," in the statute, means deducted for the purposes of taxation, in fixing the valuation of the stock for taxation. Upon the basis adopted by the board making the assessment, there should have been taken 80 per cent, leaving for taxation $58,240, instead of $63,010; and for this error, the judgment must be reversed, with instructions to the court below to overrule the demurrer to the complaint, and for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

S. K. BOWES and Wife, Appts.,

v.

CITY OF ABERDEEN, Resp't.

(58 Wash. 535, 109 Pac. 369.)

Constitutional law — filling low land.

1. The police power extends to filling, against the protest of their owners, and assessing the expense upon the property benefited, lots located in or near the business portion of a city, which are covered by flood tide, and because of inability to drain them are a menace to the public health and a hindrance to the growth of the city, where the tract is of considerable extent, and the proposed improvement will allow proper drainage and the construction of needed streets.

Note. — Power to fill low lands at expense of owner.

Under ordinary circumstances, the power of health authorities to require property to be altered to protect the public health extends only to the abatement of the nuisance itself, leaving the manner of doing so to the property owner. Durgin v. Minot, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 241 and note.

There seems to be no doubt, however, that in particular cases, when necessary for the abatement of a nuisance, or to protect the public health, the authorities may fill or require low lots to be filled at the expense of the owner.

Thus, in Nickerson v. Boston, 131 Mass. 300, where a statute authorized the city to require the owners of lands in a certain district to raise the grade of same by filling with good materials to such a permanent grade as should be determined by the board of aldermen, in order to secure complete drainage, so as to abate and prevent nuisances and preserve the health of the city, and, in the event of failure of the property owners to do so, authorized the city to do the filling, and make the entire expense a lien on the land, the court, in sustaining the constitutionality of the statute, says: "It is not a statute to levy a tax, but its object is to abate and prevent nuisances, and to preserve the public health. It belongs to that class of police regulations to which private rights are held subject, and is founded upon the right of the public to protect itself from nuisances and to preserve the general health. The authority of the legislature to pass laws of this character is too well settled to be questioned."

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Statute — title — sufficiency.

2. The right to exercise the police power to fill low land in a city may be conferred by an act the title of which is, An Act Empowering Cities to Fill Low Lands within Their Borders, and for That Purpose to Exercise the Right of Eminent Domain.

Tax — local improvement — area assessment — validity.

3. The assessment for filling a low tract of land in a city may be laid upon the lots benefited according to area, although they are of different value, and some are filled to a greater depth than others, so that the cost of the work is greater.

Same — due process of law — right to hearing.

4. The assessment of an area tax upon property does not deprive the owner of his property without due process of law, if he has a right to be heard, either before the assessing body or in the courts.

(Fullerton, J., dissents.)

(May 31, 1910.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for Chehalis County,

In Bliss v. Kraus, 16 Ohio St. 54, an ordinance requiring the filling and drainage of lots in the city of Toledo, so as to remove therefrom all stagnant water, and providing that, on failure of the owners to do so, the filling was to be done by the city, and each lot assessed the cost thereof, was held to be constitutional and valid, the decision being put clearly on the right of the city to prevent nuisances.

In Charleston v. Werner, 38 S. C. 488, 37 Am. St. Rep. 776, 17 S. E. 33, an ordinance required the owner of a lot, when the same had been declared dangerous to the public health, to fill it up, and provided that, in the event of his failure to do so, it should be filled by the city, and the expense charged to the owner, to be recovered by action. In sustaining the validity of the ordinance, the court says: "The object of this proceeding is not to raise money to support the city government, or to improve the value of property in a particular locality (which may, however, be incidentally the result), but to put in operation the police power granted to the city council for the purpose of preserving the health of the city. It is the machinery provided for enforcing the law against nuisances which menace the health of the public."

... We must not, therefore, confound an exercise of the police power with the nice distinctions which belong to the doctrine of taxation for local improvements."

But the authority to construct drains will not authorize the filling of lots: and in Re Van Buren, 55 How. Pr. 513, it was held that an assessment for the construction of drains was invalid, where the greater part of the expense was in filling low ground.

R. L. S.

dismissing a bill filed to enjoin the making of certain public improvements. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. B. Bridges for appellants.

Messrs. A. M. Wade and Theo. B. Bruener for respondent.

Chadwick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The city of Aberdeen, a rapidly growing city of approximately 20,000 inhabitants, is situated on the Chehalis river at or near its junction with Grays Harbor, an inlet of the sea. Bordering the stream there is a wide flat or tidal marsh, intersected by sloughs, through which the tide and flood waters and storm drainage from the hills have been accustomed to flow. At certain times of the year and upon certain tides the water stands over the whole flat to a depth of from 3 to 4 feet, while at all times the ground water stands a few inches beneath the surface of the sloughs. The business part of the city, as well as a part of the residence district, is built upon these tide flats. The business of the city and the comfort and convenience of the citizens demand that the grade of the streets be raised so as to bring them above the level of the high tides. Up to this time it has been possible, as well as feasible, to make elevated plank streets or roadways and sidewalks, but the increasing price of lumber, its lack of durability, and other reasons, make it necessary to improve the streets in some permanent manner. It is possible to do this in one of two ways: to grade or fill the streets and alleys up to the required level, or fill the whole district, including the lots and blocks. To accomplish the first plan would require the erection of banks or retaining walls along the street lines, with openings left thereunder for drainage. To carry out this plan would cost approximately 50 cents a cubic yard. The other plan, being the one adopted by the city council, could be accomplished by hydraulicking the mud and silt from the harbor or river channels, or dirt from the adjacent hills, and would cost approximately 18 cents per cubic yard. The answer of the city to the petition of the appellants recites the further condition as warranting the improvement in the manner contemplated: "That the lands within the said improvement district have become and now are an important part of the city of Aberdeen, and are fast becoming of more importance as a part of the said city; that many houses, barns, outbuildings, and other structures have been built upon the private property within the said district, and many other like structures are being built thereon, and many more will be built thereon; that because of the low, swampy condition of said lands, and because of the inability to drain the same, and because of the stagnant waters standing thereupon, and because of the many dwellings, barns, stores, and other structures located upon said lands, the said lands have become and are greatly detrimental to the public health and to the public welfare of the persons residing within the said district, and the city of Aberdeen generally, and that said condition is an unsanitary one, and dangerous to the public health and welfare of the citizens of the said district and of all of the citizens of the said city of Aberdeen; . . . that to fill the said streets and alleys as aforesaid without filling the said private property would leave all of the said private property low, wet, and marshy ground, and would cause the same to be more unsanitary than the same now is without said streets and alleys being filled, and would cause the water to stand upon the said private lands throughout the year, even to a greater extent than the same now stands thereupon, and would cause the same to be very unsanitary and detrimental and dangerous to the public health and welfare of the said citizens; that it is necessary, for the purposes aforesaid, to fill the said streets and alleys, and to fill the private property to the grade aforesaid; and that the public health and public welfare of the said citizens of the said district and of the said city of Aberdeen require that such filling be done; that the said public health and public welfare of the said citizens required the said grades to be re-established and raised because the old grade of the said streets and alleys was too low, and did not, in any manner, provide for the drainage of the said district. the said grade as formerly established being a level one throughout the said district, and that for sanitary reasons and in order to keep the water from standing upon the said streets and private property, and in order that the same might be drained, it was necessary that the said grade of the said streets and alleys be raised as described in the complaint herein; that the public health and public welfare required and requires the raising of the grade of the said streets and alleys aforesaid, and the filling of the said streets and alleys, as aforesaid, and the filling of the said lots, as described in the petition herein."

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

While it is provided, in § 5 of the act of 1909 (chapter 147, p. 572 [Rem. & Bal. Code, § 7975]), under which the city is probably proceeding, that the filling of unimproved and uncultivated lowlands of the character described in the answer and in the ordinance declaring the intention of the city, shall not be considered a taking or damaging within the constitutional meaning of these terms, the city in its answer disclaims any intention or purpose to condemn the right to fill the lots and blocks belonging to private owners. We are of the opinion that the constitutional question thus raised may be safely disregarded, for, if the city can fill the property of a private owner under the act of 1909 or the act of 1907 (Laws 1907, §§ 53-56, p. 657 [Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 7636-7639]), in the manner contemplated, it must be done under the exercise of its police power, and not because the legislature has undertaken to say what shall be, or rather what shall not be, a taking or damaging of property. This is a judicial question, and were we inclined to pursue it further, we would not, as at present advised, feel bound by the declaration of the legislature. The regularity of all antecedent proceedings on the part of the council is not challenged by plaintiffs, so that the case is squarely before the court upon the question whether, under the facts as we have outlined them, a city can, in the exercise of its police power, fill the property of a protesting landowner so as to make a present condition sanitary, or anticipate a condition which is reasonably certain to follow the ordinary growth of a thrifty city.

While the evidence is conflicting, in the sense that a witness testified that present conditions were not unsanitary, the weight of the evidence is overwhelmingly in favor of the city's contention. Mr. Benn, the mayor, who has been a resident of the city since the first house was erected, says the conditions are unsanitary, and attributes present and possible conditions to the natural growth of the city, and the stoppage of the natural ditches and drains, resulting from ordinary use. The health officer of the city testifies that there has been a greater mortality, especially among children living upon or over the tidal marshes, than upon the hill districts, and attributes the fact to the pollution of the soil consequent upon human habitation without proper drainage.

Mr. Ewart, the city engineer, whose description of the physical conditions is accepted by the petitioners, and whom we therefore conclude to be skilled in his profession, says:

Q. What effect does the levelness of this land have upon the drainage and sewerage?

A. To put a sewer system on the level of this ground is impracticable. They are too flat. The sewer pipe would have to be laid on a gradual slope of the river, and it would make them above the level of the lots in the district proposed to be filled:

Q. In the proposed fill, Mr. Ewart, are these lands to be leveled more on the back side?

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A. They will have an incline of 6 inches to the block from the hill to the river; that is the least practical fall you can make on the streets. . . .

Q. Do you consider, Mr. Ewart,—you have heard the testimony as to the sanitary conditions in this district,—do you consider that the land within this district, or that this district as it stands, is unsanitary?

A. Very.

Q. Will you give your reasons why?

A. The presence of human beings tends to make it unsanitary. The offal from the table, from the animal excrement, is bound to accumulate more or less in this soggy ground, and makes it unsanitary.

Q. Your idea then would be that the more people live in that district the more unsanitary it would be?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you consider this property was unsanitary in its original condition?

A. It was by itself. Of course, if there was nobody there, no one would likely to get sick.

Q. To make as favorable illustration as you can, suppose there was no one living but one man in that district?

A. Outside the dampness, it would not be unsanitary.

Q. Would the dampness be unsanitary?

A. It is; yes. A great many people suffer from cold and on account of dampness.

Q. You have never known of any plague or great amount of sickness on account of this condition, have you, in the city of Aberdeen or Hoquiam and that neighborhood?

A. Yes.

Q. You think that there is more sickness from the people living on the more level ground than on the high ground, or hill district?

A. This particular place has not been settled thick enough to cause that condition yet, but where it is more thickly settled, it is; yes.

Q. Then your idea, boiled down, amounts to this: That in its original condition, when the tide came and went, and the sloughs were not interfered with, it was simply unsanitary; but that it would become more unsanitary as the district became more populated?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that it would become more unsanitary than it is now?

A. Yes, sir. . . .

Q. I want to get at your idea as to the necessity of filling this property, because of sanitary conditions; as I understand you, you think it is necessary?

A. I do. If you confine a few people in the district, and dike the district, and you allow no more people to go in there, and keep them absolutely clean, make them keep their houses clean and their sewerage and garbage out of the way, you might have a sanitary district; but it is not practicable to do that. For instance, the district immediately west of this it is planned to dike, and the people living there are widely separated, and for the present that would answer; but if heavily populated, it would not be practicable or sanitary.

Q. Is there not some way of making this land sanitary without so much expense and without filling it?

A. I do not think so. You could make it more nearly sanitary by diking it, but we have the tide water from the river; and whenever you dam that out you also dam in the storm water, and all your water will be dammed in at the same time that your tide water is dammed out.

Plaintiffs asked for an order restraining the city from further prosecuting its design. After a trial upon the merits, the complaint was dismissed, and the plaintiffs have appealed.

But one assignment of error is made; that is, that the court erred in dismissing plaintiffs' complaint with prejudice. This is argued under two subdivisions: (1) That the ordinance is void, inasmuch as it takes and damages appellants' property without due process of law; (2) because the ordinance, as shown upon its face and by the testimony, is unreasonable and arbitrary. It is admitted that "the property owner has not an absolute control over his property, but that he holds it subject to the rights of the community at large, and that it is one of the conditions of his tenure that he hold or use his property so as not to injure others." But it is said that "the police power, except in cases of extreme emergencies or of imminent danger, cannot take from the property owner his property without paying full compensation therefor, and without proving a public necessity for such taking." Just what the police power of a state or city may be is, as all of the authorities agree, or, at least, those following the Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394, incapable of exact definition or limitation; for, as was most pertinently said in Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 25 L. ed. 1079, "it is always easier to determine whether a particular case comes within the general scope of the power, than to give an abstract definition of the power itself which will be in all respects accurate."

Incapability of definition, however, does not destroy the right of the public to safeguard property, insure the general health, protect the morals, preserve the peace, or 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

compel the use of property consistent with surrounding conditions by the exercise of arbitrary power, and in disregard of the primary right of the individual. A subject when measured by other conditions may warrant its exercise, whereas, if the relative condition be lacking, the power will be denied. Its exercise in proper cases marks the growth and development of the law rather than, as some assert, a tyrannical assertion of governmental powers denied by our written Constitutions. Although the fundamental truths must, from their very nature, remain unchanged, the right of property is a legal right, and not a natural right, and it must be measured always by reference to the rights of others and of the public. Neither an individual nor the public has the right to take the property of another and put it to a private use. But it would be manifestly destructive to the advancement or development of organized communities to put the public to the burden of rendering compensation to one, or to many, when the individual use is, or might be, a menace to the health, morals, or peace of the whole community. These are the principal grounds upon which the right to exercise the police power rests, and the only question confronting us is whether the present attempt comes within these recognized principles. Freund, in his work on Police Power, § 143, says: "The questions which present themselves in the examination of a safety or health measure are: Does a danger exist? Is it of sufficient magnitude? Does it concern the public? Does the proposed measure tend to remove it? Is the restraint or requirement in proportion to the danger? Is it possible to secure the object sought without impairing essential rights and principles? Does the choice of a particular measure show that some other interest than safety or health was the actual motive of legislation?"

The first test proposed—does the danger exist—may be almost summarily disposed of. Although we are not prepared to indorse the rule asserted by some case writers,—that a court will be bound by a legislative direction to that effect,—we are not put to a consideration of that question in this case. The evidence, as we have shown, abundantly sustains the declaration of the city council that the land proposed to be filled is unsanitary, and is or may become a menace to the public health. That it is of sufficient magnitude, and concerns the whole public in so far as the municipality is concerned, is likewise shown. The area to be filled covers approximately 1,000 city lots, with adjoining streets and alleys. These are located partly within and partly adjoining the business portion of the city, where permanent streets are necessary, and where undrained land would jeopardize health and retard the growth of the city. So, too, the proposed improvement will remove the danger, leaving the area affected above the higher waters at flood tides or storm periods, and insure perfect drainage as well as an entire absence of stagnant water. The proposed improvement is not disproportionate to the danger, for it is shown that, if the danger is removed at all, it cannot be done in any other practical or economical way.

The remaining tests require more extended argument, and may be discussed together. They are covered by the appellants' objection that the exercise of the power asserted in this case is unjust and arbitrary. Appellants base their contentions primarily upon the statement in Lewis on Eminent Domain, (2d ed.) vol. 1, p. 473: "The police power, so far as it relates to property, is a power to regulate its use, and is negative or inhibitory in its character. A man cannot be compelled under the police power to devote his property to any particular use, however advantageous to himself or beneficial to the public; but he may be compelled to refrain from any use which is detrimental to the public. This is the beginning and the end of police power over private property. No instance can be cited outside of the mill and drainage acts (which are in controversy) in which the owner of private property has been compelled to devote it or submit to its devotion to a particular use by virtue of the police power or of any power except that of eminent domain." The rule is also quoted from 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 223: "To effect the drainage of large tracts of land, and thereby make them fit for habitation and use, is a purpose substantially public to justify the exercise of the right of eminent domain." To say that the police power can only be exercised in given cases, and then call a halt, would be to fix a limitation which, from the very nature of the power itself, cannot be done.

It is asserted however, that, if the case falls within the drainage cases, this court has expressly held that the right to proceed thereunder cannot be sustained by reference to the police power, but must be carried out under the law of eminent domain, and the following decisions of this court are cited and relied upon: Askam v. King County, 9 Wash. 1, 36 Pac. 1097; Skagit County v. Stiles, 10 Wash. 388, 39 Pac. 116; Snohomish County v. Hayward, 11 Wash. 429, 39 Pac. 652. The Askam Case was properly decided. In that case suit was prosecuted by one over whose land it was proposed to run a ditch for the purpose of draining the lands of others. He was not in fault, nor was he using his property to the detriment of the public. As was said by the writer of the opinion: "Even if we concede that the requirements of the law are such that the board of county commissioners must decide that the swamps to be drained are a nuisance, before they will proceed in the matter, yet the intention does not appear in the act to declare the nuisance to be of such imminent danger to the public welfare as to require private property of others than those maintaining the nuisance to be taken without compensation." While the other cases relied upon affirm correct principles of the law, they were, in the opinion of the writer, considering the facts of each particular case, improperly decided. At any rate, in the light of subsequent decisions of this court, they should not be considered authority in this case. The difference between one whose land is taken or damaged in the aid of a public improvement, and one whose land is actually improved, was noticed in Lewis County v. Gordon, 20 Wash. 80, 54 Pac. 779. In Wurts v. Hoagland, 114 U. S. 606, 29 L. ed. 229, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1086, the reasoning of Chancellor Zabriskie in Coster v. Tide Water Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 70, is adopted as a correct statement of the law: "The principle of them all is to make an improvement common to all concerned, at the common expense of all. And to effect this object, the acts provide that the works to effect the drainage may be located on any part of the lands drained, paying the owner of the land thus occupied compensation for the damage by such use. So far private property is taken by them; farther, it is not. In none of them is the owner divested of his fee, and in most there is no corporation in which it could be vested, and for all other purposes the title of the land remained in the owner. To effect such common drainage, power was in some cases given to continue these drains through adjacent lands not drained, upon compensation. All this was an ancient and well-known exercise of legislative power, and may well be considered as included in the grant of legislative power in the Constitution."

That the legislature has the right to assert its police power in this regard cannot now be questioned. Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. p. 868; Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. 617; Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 41 L. ed. 369, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663; Head v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. 113 U. S. 9, 28 L. ed. 889, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441. It would unnecessarily and unreasonably extend the limit of this opinion to notice the long line of cases where the state courts have construed this power. But whether the facts of the particular case warrant the assertion of the power is a judicial question, to be resolved by the courts. Freund, Pol. Power, § 142. "It is sometimes difficult to draw a precise line of distinction between the public and private objects of improvements of the nature under consideration here. It is true, the owner of land may use it and cultivate it as he desires, so long as he does not injuriously affect the rights of others. But the public also has an interest beyond that of the mere sanitary condition of land, and founded upon other and different principles than the controlling or abatement of nuisances, where any considerable number of persons are concerned, or tract of land is useless, and improvements may be made commensurate to the benefits received, and the land itself may be taxed for such benefits. The principle requires careful application, but many illustrations of its existence can be found, sustained by the highest authority." Lewis County v. Gordon, supra.

It will thus be seen that the conflict of authority upon the right to exercise the police power or to proceed by eminent domain is apparent rather than real. Both rules exist, but their application, as Judge Reavis has said in the Lewis County Case, requires careful application, and must be made to depend in every case upon the subject of the particular action when measured by the public interest. Resting upon the principle that it is the duty of a landowner to so keep his property that no menace to the public health shall come therefrom, courts have held that a city could, under its police power, fill up low-lying lands and recover the cost thereof. Charleston v. Werner, 38 S. C. 488, 37 Am. St. Rep. 776, 17 S. E. 33; Rochester v. Simpson, 134 N. Y. 414, 31 N. E. 871; Nickerson v. Boston, 131 Mass. 306.

It is also urged that the title of the act of 1909—"An Act Empowering Cities of the Second and Third Class to Fill Low Lands within Their Borders, and for That Purpose to Exercise the Right of Eminent Domain for the Taking and Damaging of Property, and Providing a Method for Making Compensation Therefor, and Providing for Levying and Collection of Special Assessments on the Property Benefitted, and Declaring an Emergency"—is insufficient to warrant an exercise of the police power. Although the city probably has the right to exercise its police power in all proper cases as an incident to its general governmental powers, or under the general-welfare clause of its charter, we nevertheless believe the title to be sufficient. The employment of the words "to exercise the right of eminent domain" can be held to apply only to such property or improvements as may be actually taken or destroyed, and not to the filling of the land itself, which is in no sense taken, but is left to the free use of the owner. Section 3 of the act makes this plain. The purpose need not be expressed in words; the power to fill is sufficiently broad to include any reason recognized by the law for the exercise of the power.

It was said in Re Morgan, 26 Colo. 415, 47 L.R.A. 52, 77 Am. St. Rep. 269, 58 Pac. 1071, with some hesitation, though why is not made clear to us, that "when it is clearly perceived from the terms of an act that the thing prohibited necessarily affects the public health, it may not be necessary expressly to declare therein what the object of the act is." If the title advises the citizen that the subject of the act is to fill low lands, and gives notice of a procedure, it is enough, and will be sustained so long as the right can be rested on any recognized principle, although the "purposes" be not stated in terms. Lien v. Norman County, 80 Minn. 63, 82 N. W. 1094.

Finally, it is urged that the plan of assessment—that is, that "the several parcels of land located in the improvement district to be assessed for such improvement shall be assessed according to and in proportion to the surface area, 1 square foot of surface to be the unit of assessment" (Laws 1909, p. 572, § 5; Rem. & Bal. Code § 7975)—would deprive the owner of his property without due process of law. It is said that it would be manifestly unreasonable and arbitrary to assess the property of one who may have a lot worth only $750 the same amount as one whose lot is worth $5,000, or one whose lot is filled only 3 feet deep the same as one whose lot is filled 5 or 6 feet. No system of taxation or assessment is fair and equal in the abstract. We can only approximate equality. The right to assess the cost of improvements by area in this class of cases has been sustained by the highest authority. Parsons v. District of Columbia, 170 U. S. 45, 42 L. ed. 943, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 521; Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 548-589, 42 L. ed. 270-288, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 966; French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 181 U. S. 324, 45 L. ed. 879, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625.

The right to assess by area has been most frequently upheld in the drainage and levee cases coming out of the Southern states, although it is affirmed in most all of the states, the courts holding that the provision of the Constitution which requires all property to be taxed according to its value is applicable only to taxation in its ordinary and received sense, and not to local assessments, where money is raised to be expended on the property taxed. In Egyptian Levee

Co. v. Hardin, 27 Mo. 405, 72 Am. Dec. 276, a tax not exceeding 50 cents per acre was upheld. The court said: "The present case may be taken as an illustration, and will show the folly of judicial interference. The charter of the levee company requires the tax to be regulated by the number of acres, and not their value. This, upon first impressions, might carry an appearance of injustice; but it is not very easy, from all the facts disclosed in the record of this case, to infer that any practical injustice whatever has been done. Lands in the neighborhood of Alexandria are rated at $75 an acre, and, for aught that appears were so rated before the company was organized. The lands of the complainants are only estimated at $20 per acre. If the improvement increases the value of each class of lands pari passu, there is no injustice. If the levee or embankment and canals raise the price of Alexandria lands to $75 per acre, and increase the value of the complainant's land, distant perhaps 15 miles from Alexandria, to $25 an acre, where is the hardship complained of? Where lands were unequal in value before the proposed adventure or improvement, it was surely not the purpose of the company to bring these lands to an equality of valuation. It was not contemplated that land worth $20 an acre should be brought up to $100 at the same time that land worth previously $75 an acre should be raised to $100 per acre. This difference in value, if it arose from causes entirely independent of the overflow or its prevention, must of course still continue after the completion of the works. Neither party has a right to complain if the increase of value in each has been in the same proportion to the original value in both cases. Indeed, it is quite apparent that a taxation upon value, and not quantity, would, in the hypothesis stated, produce great inequality. The burden would not be distributed in proportion to the benefit. How this may be in point of fact, we, of course, do not pretend to know; but there is nothing in the record to show that the facts may not be exactly as we have supposed." To the same effect is Austin v. Seattle, 2 Wash. 667, 27 Pac. 557. The cases will be found in Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. p. 735; 25 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 201, and 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1201.

Nor do we believe that appellants are in any way deprived of their property without due process of law, within the rule of Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616, and Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, supra. If it be conceded that the legislative department has not the right to arbitrarily fix the amount of the tax, the act of 1909 is within that line of cases holding that, if the citizen be given an opportunity to be heard, either before the assessing body or in the courts, then the levy of such special assessments will not operate as a deprivation of rights of property without due process of law. The act in question provides for a hearing upon the assessments levied, and that at such time the board may hear, consider, and determine objections and protests, and make "such alterations and modifications in the assessment roll as justice and equity may require."

It may be understood that we have not overlooked the point made by appellants that, but for an embankment made by a railroad operated along the water front under a franchise granted by the city council, the present improvement would not be necessary. There is evidence tending to show that the railroad grade is not responsible for present conditions; but, whether it is so or not, its removal would operate to restore original conditions, which are shown to be equally inconsistent with the present necessities of the public.

The judgment of the lower court is affirmed:

Rudkin, Ch. J., and Gose and Morris, JJ., concur.

Fullerton, J., dissenting:

The legislature of the state of Washington, at its 1909 session; passed an act relating to filling lands by cities of the second and third classes. Laws 1909, p. 569, chap. 147 (Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 7971 et seq.) Section 1 of the act provides that whenever the city council of any such city shall deem it necessary or expedient, on account of the public health, sanitation, the general welfare, or other cause, to fill or raise the grades or elevation of any marsh lands, swamp lands, tide lands, or lands commonly known as "tide flats," or any other low lands situated within the limits of such city, and to clear and prepare said lands for such filling, such city council shall have power to do so, and to tax the cost thereof to the property benefited. Section 3 provides that "the filling of unimproved and uncultivated low lands of the character mentioned in § 1 of this act shall not be considered as damaging or taking of such lands." Section 4 provides for preparing plans and specifications of the improvement, and for an estimate of the cost and expense thereof, in which shall be included "the cost of supervision and engineering, abstractor's fees, interest and discounts, and all other expenses incidental to said improvement." Section 5 provides for the making of an assessment roll, and further provides that the "entire amount of compensation . . . including all of the costs and expenses incidental to the condemnation proceedings . . . with the entire cost and expense of making the improvement may be assessed against the property within the district, subject to assessment;" and that "the several parcels of land located within said improvement district, to be assessed for such improvement, shall be assessed according to and in proportion to surface area, 1 square foot of surface to be the unit of assessment." Further sections provide for condemning the improvements upon such property, and others relate to the procedure, the act containing elaborate provisions for carrying into effect the declared purposes.

Within the corporate limits of the city of Aberdeen, and lying immediately west of its principal business section, is a large area of level land that was formerly marsh land, so situated that it is subject to the ebb and flow of the tide. In its natural state it was penetrated by sloughs, which admitted the tides, and served as drains for seepage and surface waters. The surface of the land, while above the normal, was below the extreme tides, and would be covered entirely with water when these occurred. This caused no ill effects to the public health, however, as the drainage was complete and effectual. But with the advent of population came highways and railroads. These were constructed down the bank of the river, across the mouths of the sloughs, partially damming them up; and while they have a tendency to cut off the inflow of the tides, they also cut off the outflow of the seepage and surface waters, thus causing the waters to accumulate in stagnant pools, menacing the health of the community. The tract in question is of considerable area, being triangular in shape, having a base of some 4,000 feet, with an altitude of perhaps 3,200 feet. It was long since platted into lots, blocks, streets and alleys as a part of the city of Aberdeen. The streets have been dedicated to public use, and the city early established grade lines over them. The lots number about 1,000, and are divided among a number of owners, who hold in severalty; they range in value from $750 to $5,000, owing to location. A few business houses and a number of dwellings with their accompanying outhouses have been erected on lots within the district, but in the main they remain unimproved.

In the early summer of 1908, the city council conceived the idea of improving the above described district. To that end on June 23, 1909, it passed an ordinance establishing new grades over the entire tract, making them higher than the earlier established grades. On September 15, 1909, it 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

adopted a resolution declaring it to be the intention of the city council to "clear, grub, and fill up to the established grade . . . all of the lots, lands, and parcels of lands, . . . and all of the streets, alleys, and public places, on that portion of the town site" of the city of Aberdeen above described, reciting that it appeared to the city council that it was to the best interests of public health, sanitation, and general welfare of the inhabitants of the city of Aberdeen so to do; reciting, further, that it was necessary to condemn certain private property in order to make the improvement, but that the cost thereof, including the costs of making the improvement, with incidental costs, would not exceed $330,000. On November 17, 1909, the city council passed an ordinance directing the improvement to be made. In the ordinance it directed the city attorney to bring all necessary suits to ascertain the amount of damages to be awarded for property taken or damaged by reason of making the improvement; it directed that the total cost and expense of making the improvement, "including the cost of making compensation for property taken or damaged, and including the cost of supervision, engineering, abstract fees, interest and discounts, and all other expenses incidental thereto, not exceeding the estimated cost, three hundred and thirty thousand dollars ($330,000), . . . be taxed and assessed against all of the lots, lands, and parcels of land included in such tract, and that the several parcels of land . . . be assessed according to and in proportion to surface area, 1 square foot of surface to be the unit of assessment." Immediate payment for the work is provided for by the issuance of bonds, which in turn will be taken up when the assessments are paid. After the passage of the ordinance, the city brought condemnation proceedings against certain property holders who had improvements on their lots which it was conceived would be damaged by the fill, but no proceedings were instituted against persons owning unimproved lots in the district. This action was thereupon begun by the appellant to enjoin the prosecution of the work. In his complaint he alleged that he was the owner of unimproved property in the district sought to be improved; that his property would be greatly and irreparably injured and damaged by the proposed fill, and that such damages had not been first ascertained and paid to him. He then alleged that the ordinance and the laws under which the ordinance was passed were unconstitutional and void for various reasons, among which were that it sought to take his property without compensation and without due process of law. To the complaint the city answered, expressly admitting that the complainant's property would be irreparably injured by the fill, but alleged that the tract sought to be filled was fast becoming unsanitary and a menace to the public health, and that the necessity for the work was imperative because of this fact; further answering, the defendants alleged that it is not the "intention of the city of Aberdeen to at any time condemn or appropriate the right to raise the said grade and fill the said streets and the said private property as aforesaid; that because of the matters and things hereinbefore set out, the condition of the district is such that the city of Aberdeen has a lawful right to raise the said grade and fill said streets, alleys, and private property without the payment at any time of any damage, . . . and that the city intends to and will make such fill in the manner set out herein, and in the complaint,"—that is, at the cost of the private property therein according to area, without reference to benefits or injuries, or any consideration of relative values. On the issues made a trial was had, in which evidence was introduced on the part of the city, tending to show that the tract in question was unsanitary, and that it was necessary to make the fill proposed to render it healthful, and, indeed, it may be conceded that such was the distinct weight of the evidence. The trial judge concluded therefrom that the plaintiff was without cause of complaint, and entered a judgment dismissing his action, with prejudice to his right to further litigate the questions involved. This is the judgment from which the present appeal is taken, and the judgment this court affirms in the foregoing opinion.

The judgment is affirmed on the ground, as I understand it, that the acts of the city, both committed and contemplated, are but a legitimate exercise of its police powers, and therefore invade no lawful right of the appellant. With this doctrine I am unable to agree. I have no doubt that when the owner of private real property suffers it to become a menace to the public health, either through the accumulation of stagnant water thereon or other causes, the municipality can, under its police powers, interfere and correct the evil, even to the extent of destroying the property if the necessities of the case require it to go to that extent; and that it can, furthermore, if the nuisance is one created by the property owner, abate it at his expense. But this, as I understand the rule, is the beginning and the end of the police power over private property. The state cannot lawfully, under the guise of abating a nuisance, compel an owner to make his property conform to some previously conceived scheme of public improvement; it cannot compel him, at his own expense, or at the expense of his property, to abate a nuisance on his own land created by another than himself; nor can it compel him to abate a nuisance in the public streets, or subject his property to the expense of abating it, beyond the benefit the removal of the nuisance confers upon it. All these principles have been violated in the case before us. Nowhere is it pretended that it is necessary, for the purpose merely of abating the nuisance existing upon the appellant's property, to raise it up to the grade the city has adopted as its scheme of street improvement. No doubt that it will conduce to the public welfare to grade the streets to that extent, but it is clear that this goes far beyond the necessities of the case, if abatement of the nuisance is the ultimate purpose. Not only did the city raise the grades of the streets above those formerly existing, but the very resolution by which the proceedings were initiated calls it an "improvement," and to carry out the work it is proposed to "clear and grub" the lots preparatory to filing them,—a proceeding wholly unnecessary if the mere abatement of a nuisance is the purpose of the city. That the city in the abatement of a nuisance is limited in its procedure to the removal of the cause of the nuisance is maintained by all authority. In 29 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1218, the rule is stated as follows: "A public nuisance may be summarily abated by the public authorities, but this power must be reasonably exercised, without doing unnecessary damage or injury to property, and is limited to a removal of that in which the nuisance consists." So in Eckhardt v. Buffalo, 19 App. Div. 1, 46 N. Y. Supp. 204, it was held that the officers of the municipality exceeded their authority and rendered themselves personally liable, where, under the guise of abating a nuisance, they caused a new structure to be erected at great expense to the owner, when the result sought to be accomplished could have been obtained by repairing and cleansing the old structure at a very moderate cost. In the course of the opinion this language was used: "In Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636, it was held that, while the legislature may determine that laws are required to protect and secure the public health, comfort, and safety, it may not, under the guise of police regulations, arbitrarily infringe upon personal or property rights; and its determination as to what is a proper exercise of the power is not final or conclusive, but is subject to the scrutiny of the courts. With more persuasive force it may be said that no sanitary board or officer can be permitted, under the guise of a power to abate nuisances detrimental to health, not only to remove or abate the nuisance in so far as the public health and welfare may be endangered by its existence, but also to proceed in a summary manner, and cause new erections to be made and new appliances, contrivances, and conveniences to be used and adopted, at a large expense to the owner, and far beyond what the exigencies of the particular case may require."

That an owner of land cannot be compelled to abate at his own expense a nuisance thereon caused by the municipality itself or by some third person without the owner's connivance or consent is also in accord with the great weight of authority. In the case of Hannibal v. Richards, 82 Mo. 330, the city constructed an embankment in the street in front of defendant's lots, which occasioned the water to accumulate on them, and injuriously affect the health of the city. The defendant having refused to comply with an ordinance requiring him to fill the lots, the work was done by the city, and it brought an action to recover the cost and expense thereof. The court say: "Now, we are asked to hold, also, that the city may create a nuisance upon the lot of an individual, and then have it abated at his expense, if he refuse to do it when ordered. As well at once declare that no one can acquire any rights to town or city lots which the municipal corporation is bound to respect. The city cannot create a nuisance upon the property of a citizen and compel him to abate it. Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 269. The cost of filling the lots was the extent of defendant's liability, if any existed, and we see no reason why defendant should not have been permitted to show that it was less than plaintiff claimed. There is no law declaring municipal corporations infallible, or that their demands are incontestable. The charter authorizing the city to fill a lot, on default made by the owner, gives her a demand against him for the cost of filling it, if done by the city, and the averment of the amount and cost of the work is one upon which an issue may be made. At a trifling expense at the time plaintiff passed the ordinance requiring these lots to be filled, the pond could have been drained; and but for the neglect of the plaintiff to make such drain, the nuisance complained of would never have existed."

In Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 243, the defendant city graded an alley adjoining, and made a fill in the street in front of plaintiff's lots, causing the water to flow and remain stagnant thereon, and a special tax of $498.75 was levied upon the lots by the city, $111.25 of which was to pay for 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the grading, and $387.50 for abating the nuisance created by the city as aforesaid. Plaintiff instituted an action to restrain the collection of the special assessment, and the trial court held the nuisance tax illegal. This view was sustained by the supreme court, on a review of the case, Paine, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, saying: "I am also of the opinion that the tax assessed against the plaintiff's lots to abate a nuisance which, it appears, was created entirely by the act of the city, in so constructing a street as to cause the water to flow and remain upon the lots, which it would not otherwise have done, is illegal. I cannot recognize the right of a corporation to create a nuisance on the lot of an individual. But to create the nuisance, and then tax him to abate it, is a double wrong. I shall not attempt any examination of the question upon authority, but I am satisfied such a right cannot be sustained. I think this conclusion results from the reasoning of Mr. Justice Smith in Goodall v. Milwaukee, 5 Wis. 32, which I fully approve. And until I am prepared to say that private rights must yield, even to the extent of total destruction, rather than place any impediment in the way of whatever proceedings corporations may see fit to take, I cannot say that a city may create a nuisance on the lot of a citizen without making him any compensation for the damage, and then tax him to abate it." In Lasbury v. McCague, 56 Neb. 220, 78 N. W. 862, it appeared that the city of Omaha in grading a street dammed the outlet of a stream, preventing the water from escaping, and causing it to back up on land owned by one Baer, where it stagnated and became a nuisance. The city passed an ordinance directing the lot to be filled with earth, and levied the cost thereof on the lot. In a suit to declare invalid the assessment, the court said: "It requires no argument to show that whatever nuisance existed on the lot in dispute by the reason of the accumulation of stagnant water was directly chargeable to the city of Omaha. The foregoing quotation from the written stipulation of facts makes it perfectly plain that the nuisance abated by the city was created by its agents. This being so, to permit the city to assess the costs and expenses of abating the nuisance it created against plaintiff's lot would, indeed, be a reproach upon the law. If this special tax can be upheld in an equitable proceeding, then, by a parity of reasoning, one who creates a nuisance upon the land of his neighbor may have it abated at the expense of the latter, and a court of equity could not afford relief. The mere statement of the proposition shows its absurdity."

That the nuisance sought to be abated in the present case was not caused by the appellant cannot be gainsaid. As long as the tides of the sea were permitted to ebb and flow over it as they were wont to do in a state of nature, the land was wholesome. It became to the contrary only when the embankments by the railroads and by the public for highways were constructed, which cut off this flow. These were not of the appellant's construction, and to charge him with the abatement of a nuisance caused thereby violates every principle of justice.

I have found no adjudicated case where a municipality has attempted under its police powers to abate a nuisance in the public streets at the expense of the abutting and adjoining property, where the owners of the property were not the creators of the nuisance. Heretofore it has been supposed that this required the exercise of the powers of eminent domain, proceedings in which the property holder had a right to be heard on the question of the cost of the proceeding and the amount it was proposed to tax against his property. In this proceeding the appellant has been denied this right. He at no time had or has had an opportunity to question either the necessity of the work, the amount it is proposed to pay for it, or the proportionate share thereof it is proposed to assess upon his property. This is taking his property for a public use without compensation and without due process of law. But this particular case has peculiar hardships. It will be remembered that the appellant alleged in his complaint that his property would be irreparably damaged by the fill the city proposed to make, and that this allegation was expressly admitted in the answer of the city; not by mere silence or failure to deny the allegation, but in express words. It will be remembered, also, that certain lots in the district have buildings upon them recognized as improvements, and which the city has condemned and paid for; that the lots sought to be filled are unequal in value, and unequal in respect that some of them require more material to fill them than will be required to fill the appellant's lot, and also that some of the lots will be materially benefited by the fill, yet it is proposed to pay the cost of the work by an assessment upon the lots within the district according to area. In other words, the appellant's lot, which is irreparably damaged by the fill, is taxed to pay not only for the fill itself, but to pay damages assessed to other lots which may be materially benefited by the fill. Aside from the fact that this seems directly contrary to the first section of the act 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

under which the city is proceeding, I can find no authority that justifies it, even where the principle is seemingly favored by the legislature.

The drainage cases are cited by the majority as maintaining this doctrine, but I cannot think them in point. None of them lay down the rule that property in the district proposed to be drained can be taxed indiscriminately to pay the cost of the work, regardless of the question of the originator of the nuisance, or whether the property proposed to be assessed is benefited or damaged by the work. On the contrary, the assessment is sustained on one or both of two theories: either that the owner of the land was responsible for the nuisance, and under obligations to remove it, or its removal distinctly benefited his property. I have referred to some of the cases where the first question was involved; examples of the second can be found in the main opinion. Take, for instance, the case of Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663. There the tax was upheld on the express ground that it was levied on property benefited, as witness the following extract from the opinion of the court: "In some states the reclamation is made by building levees on the banks of streams which are subject to overflow; in other states by ditches to carry off the surplus water. Levees or embankments are necessary to protect lands on the lower Mississippi against annual inundations. The expense of such works may be charged against parties specially benefited, and be made a lien upon their property. All that is required in such cases is that the charges shall be apportioned in some just and reasonable mode, according to the benefit received."

To the same effect is Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 41 L. ed. 369, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56. And so Cooley in his work on Taxation, at the place cited by the majority, says that the "special benefits from the enhancement of values must accrue mainly to the owners of the lands drained, who ought therefore to bear the expense,"—clearly indicating that the basis of the right to assess in such cases was the fact that the work conferred a benefit. But it is needless to pursue the inquiry. As I say, I can find no case where private property damaged by a fill is taxed not only to make the fill causing the damage, but to fill other property, both public and private, some of which is actually benefited by the fill.

I regret, also, that the majority have seen fit to declare that a front-foot or area assessment, whether in proportion to or in excess of benefits conferred on property by the improvement, violates no constitutional inhibition. In Austin v. Seattle, 2 Wash. 667, 27 Pac. 557, it was held, it is true, that such an assessment did not violate the provisions of the Constitution relating to equality and uniformity in taxation, but the principle of that case, as I understand it, has been repudiated by a long line of cases decided by us since that time. In McNamee v. Tacoma, 24 Wash. 591, 64 Pac. 791, an assessment for a street improvement was attacked on the ground that it was made on a front-foot basis, and not in accordance with benefits. In its opinion the court conceded that the true rule was that an "assessment must be tested by the benefits, and that the exaction from the owner of private property of the cost of a public improvement in substantial excess of the special benefits accruing to him is, to the extent of such excess, a taking, under the guise of taxation, of private property for public use without compensation;" holding, however, that the statute under which the assessment was made did require an assessment according to benefits, and not a front-foot assessment. To the same effect are the following cases: Annie Wright Seminary v. Tacoma, 23 Wash. 109, 62 Pac. 444; Alexander v. Tacoma, 35 Wash. 366, 77 Pac. 686; New Whatcom v. Bellingham Bay Improv. Co. 16 Wash. 131, 47 Pac. 236. This, to my mind, is the only rule that can logically stand the constitutional test; for any rule that taxes property in excess of benefits, that is not applied to all property alike, takes such property for public use without compensation.

It is finally suggested in the opinion that the relator may find relief in a hearing up on the assessment roll. But in the face of the statute declaring that his property, being unimproved, shall not be considered damaged by the fill, the positive declaration of the city in its answer to his complaint, that it "has a lawful right to . . . fill private property without the payment of damage," and intends to exercise that right, and the announcement earlier in the opinion of the majority that the city will not exceed its powers in so doing, I am afraid the appellant's chances of remuneration from this final test are not of the best. But the argument is not sound for another reason; it overlooks the constitutional requirement that damages to property taken for a public use must be ascertained and paid into court for the owner before his property is taken.

The judgment appealed from should be reversed.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

J. S. COWART, Plff. in Err.,
v.

W. E. CALDWELL COMPANY.

(134 Ga. 544, 68 S. E. 500.)

Garnishment — funds in hands of trustee in bankruptcy.

1. A fund in the hands of a trustee in bankruptcy, which the referee has ordered him to pay to a named person, cannot be reached by a creditor of such person by a summons of garnishment, directed to and served upon the trustee.

Same — attachment — dismissal — improper process.

2. It is not erroneous to dismiss an attachment when the only levy of the same is by the service of such a summons of garnishment.

Judgment — attachment — dismissal — general demurrer — effect.

3. Although an attachment may be dismissed because of its invalidity, the plaintiff is entitled to proceed for a verdict and general judgment on his declaration, if the defendant has appeared and made defense.

(a) The filing of a general demurrer to the declaration is equivalent to pleading to the merits of the case.

[June 14, 1910.]

Headnotes by FISH, Ch. J.

Note. — Right to attach or garnish funds in the hands of officer of court after he has been ordered to pay same to party.

This was the subject of a note to Boylan v. Hines, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 757; hence, only cases decided subsequently thereto are included herein. The doctrine therein stated, that "in the absence of express statutory authority therefor, it is settled law that, in general, funds in custodia legis are not subject either to attachment or garnishment," was applied in COWART v. W. E. CALDWELL COMPANY as to the right to garnish funds in the hands of a trustee in bankruptcy.

Under very similar circumstances it was also applied in Rockland Sav. Bank v. Alden, 103 Me. 230, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1220, 68 Atl. 863, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 806, and Re Hollander, 181 Fed. 1019. In the latter case it was stated that the law is well settled that dividends in the hands of a trustee in bankruptcy are not subject to attachment.

The reason for this rule is well stated in Rockland Sav. Bank v. Alden, supra.

In National Lumber Co. v. Turner, 2 Ga. App. 750, 59 S. E. 15, the doctrine is stated without reservation or exception that, without the aid of a statute, an administrator or an executor cannot be garnished for the funds which he holds as such administrator or executor. Since he is an officer of the ERROR to the Superior Court for Early County to review a judgment dismissing an attachment proceeding to recover the amount of a debt alleged to be due and unpaid. Reversed.

Statement by Fish, Ch. J.:

On October 18, 1907, J. S. Cowart sued out an attachment against W. E. Caldwell & Company to recover the amount of a debt alleged to be due the plaintiff, the ground of the attachment being that "the said W. E. Caldwell & Company resides out of this state." The proceeding was returnable to the April term, 1908, of the superior court of Early county, and upon it summons of garnishment was issued against D. W. James, individually and as trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of T. A. Bailey. On October 25, 1907, James, in response to the summons of garnishment, filed an answer in which he stated that he had been served with summons of garnishment in the case of J. S. Cowart v. W. E. Caldwell & Company, that he "owed the defendant nothing, and had no property, money, or effects of it at the time of the service of said summons, and that between that time and the date of this answer had neither owed the defendant anything, nor received nor gotten possession of any property, money, or effects belonging to it, except that at the time of such service he, as trustee in bankruptcy of T. A. Bailey, had in his hands $5,000," the same being the net proceeds of the sale of certain lumber, which sale was made by him under an order of the referee before whom the bankruptcy proceeding was pending, in which order he was directed to pay the net proceeds of the sale to the Caldwell Company or its attorneys. On the same date the W. E. Caldwell Company gave a bond to dissolve the garnishment. On April 6, 1908, Cowart filed in the superior court his declaration in attachment against "W. E. Caldwell Company." On August 8, 1908, the W. E. Caldwell Company entered what it termed "its first and special appearance" before the court. In this pleading it was stated that the "special appearance" was made for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the court the following facts, which the pleader stood ready to prove: (1) "There is no such concern as the 'W. E. Caldwell & Company,' named as defendants to the above-stated action, and alleged to be a resident of Louisville, Kentucky, but that is the place whereat the 'W. E. Caldwell Company,' resides and conducts business." (2) From the allegations in the declarations in attachment "the movant herein has gathered the impression that the plaintiff's intention was to sue out at-court, and as such must account for all funds in his hands, therefore it is improper and against public policy for another court to interfere with the administration.

In Thorsen v. Hooper, 50 Or. 497, 93 Pac. 361, the right to garnish funds in the hands of an administrator was denied because no order had been made, settling the claim or directing its payment. The right to garnish after such order, however, was recognized, the court saying: "Until the share of a creditor, heir, or legatee of an estate has been ascertained and ordered paid by the court, the money or funds of the estate are in the custody of the law, and not subject to levy under execution or process of garnishment."

Money in the clerk's hands, directed by decree to be paid to a third person, cannot be reached by a foreign attachment, since such money is in the custody of the law. "It was the res which was the subject-matter of the action brought to determine its ownership and disposition. Such being its status, the court alone had authority over it, and that authority was one which could be properly exercised only through the medium of proceedings had in or relating to the pending cause. The jurisdiction which the court had over it could not be invaded by scire facias proceedings in the court of common pleas, or for that matter, any other court." Shelton v. Wolthausen, 80 Conn. 599, 125 Am. St. Rep. 131, 69 Atl. 1030.

But the general rule, that property in the 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

possession of the court cannot be attached, has no application to a deposit with the clerk of the court, not made by or under the authority of the court. Lemly v. Ellis, 143 N. C. 200, 55 S. E. 629.

The general rule that property in the hands of a receiver is not subject to garnishment except by leave of the court appointing the receiver has no application where nothing remains to be done except to pay the money on a final decree. Robertson v. Detroit Pattern Works, 152 Mich. 612, 110 N. W. 196, 15 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 131.

In Re Shelly (Del.) 73 Atl. 796, the court, while denying the right to attach the distributive share of the proceeds of a sheriff's sale while in the sheriff's hands, before the confirmation of the sale and an order of distribution, said that money in the hands of the sheriff cannot be attached until after he has performed his fiduciary duties by applying the proceeds of the sale to all legal demands; and added: "When the money is applied to all legal demands, and a balance or overplus is ascertained, then such balance or overplus is held by him otherwise than in his fiduciary capacity and for it he is liable either to be sued or attached."

And see Boylan v. Hines, 62 W. Va. 486, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 757, 125 Am. St. Rep. 983, 59 S. E. 503, which holds that money may be garnished in the hands of special commissioners after a decree directing same to be paid to the owner. A. G. S.

tachment proceedings against movant, but, not knowing the correct name by which movant should be styled, used the misnomer, 'W. E. Caldwell & Company,' in naming the defendant to the . . . suit, and in referring to the defendant in the attachment proceedings." (3) "Movant is interested in bringing about a conclusion and determination of this attachment suit, inasmuch as the property and funds now in the hands of" the garnishee belong to it, and it is unjustly deprived of the use and benefit thereof, as the garnishee declines to turn over the same to movant pending the attachment proceedings. (4) Movant "is unwilling to voluntarily submit itself to the jurisdiction of this court, and voluntarily appear and defend said attachment suit, which is a nullity, because: (1) Said proceeding is not brought against any legal entity, the said named defendant being neither a natural nor an artificial person; (2) The attachment bond is void, and the writ of attachment issued on said bond and accompanying affidavit made by the plaintiff is a mere nullity, because there is no such person as the 'W. E. Caldwell & Company,' and (3) this court has not, by virtue of said attachment proceeding, acquired jurisdiction over either the person or property of movant herein." There was a prayer to be allowed to enter a special appearance for the purpose of proving the facts above alleged, that "upon due proof made thereof . . . said attachment proceeding be dismissed at the cost of the plaintiff, and that the garnishee be authorized and required to surrender possession of the property levied upon to movant." On the same day, the W. E. Caldwell Company "before pleading to the merits," but without referring to its "special appearance," filed a general demurrer, and also several special demurrers to the declaration in attachment. On the same date, subject to the motion to dismiss the plaintiff's proceedings and to the demurrers, it filed an answer to the declaration in attachment. The plaintiff, by leave of the court, amended his pleadings by striking the words "W. E. Caldwell & Company," whenever they occurred, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "W. E. Caldwell Company, a corporation," alleging that the words stricken were used in lieu of the correct name of the corporation by mistake and were a mere accidental misnomer. This amendment was allowed over the objection of the W. E. Caldwell Company; and the court thereupon overruled the motion to dismiss the plaintiff's proceedings, based upon the grounds above indicated. The defendant then made an oral motion to dismiss the proceedings, upon the 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ground that the "court had not acquired jurisdiction in rem over any property belonging to the defendant, and that the defendant had not, by its filing of a bond to dissolve the garnishment, or by pleading without reservation to the merits, or otherwise, voluntarily submitted itself to the jurisdiction of the court, and personal service had not been perfected on said defendant." This motion the court sustained by dismissing the entire attachment proceeding, including the declaration in attachment. The plaintiff thereupon excepted and sued out a writ of error. No cross bill of exceptions was filed by the defendant.

Messrs. L. M. Rambo and Pope & Bennet for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Pottle & Glessner, for defendant in error:

It is only where a defendant voluntarily appears and pleads to the merits, "without pleading to the jurisdiction, and without excepting thereto," that he can be deemed to have thereby admitted or waived the jurisdiction of the court.

Macon & B. R. Co. v. Gibson, 85 Ga. 24, 21 Am. St. Rep. 135, 11 S. E. 442; Adams v. Lamar, 8 Ga. 95; Epps v. Buckmaster, 104 Ga. 701, 30 S. E. 959; Thomas v. Morrisett, 76 Ga. 402; High v. Padrosa, 119 Ga. 651, 46 S. E. 859; Associated Press v. United Press, 104 Ga. 54, 29 S. E. 869; Cox v. Potts, 67 Ga. 521; Parker v. Brady, 56 Ga. 373.

The W. E. Caldwell Company, by giving a bond to dissolve the garnishment, in order to obtain the money in the hands of the garnishee, did not submit itself to the jurisdiction of the court, so as to authorize the court to proceed against it in personam.

Henry v. Lennox-Haldeman Co. 116 Ga. 9, 42 S. E. 383; Beasley v. Lennox-Haldeman Co. 116 Ga. 13, 42 S. E. 385; Glower v. Glidden Varnish Co. 120 Ga. 983, 48 S. E. 355; Brumby v. Rickoff, 94 Ga. 429, 21 S. E. 232; Perryman v. Pope, 94 Ga. 672, 21 S. E. 715.

Money held by a trustee in bankruptcy is not subject to attachment or any other process issuing from a state court.

Loveland, Bankr. 3d ed. §§ 268, 269; 2 Remington, Bankr. §§ 2224, 2225, p. 1363; Field v. Jones, 11 Ga. 413; Fulghum v. J. P. Williams Co. 114 Ga. 647, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1055, 88 Am. St. Rep. 48, 40 S. E. 695; Fountain v. Mills, 111 Ga. 122, 36 S. E. 428; Zorn v. Wheatley, 61 Ga. 438; Lowe v. Stephens, 66 Ga. 607.

A void attachment will neither uphold the levy nor a bond given to supersede the levy.

Bruce v. Conyers, 54 Ga. 678; Walter v. Kierstead, 74 Ga. 25.

Fish, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question whether the court erred in allowing the amendment to the plaintiff's proceedings, by which the words "W. E. Caldwell Company, a corporation," were inserted in lieu of the words "W. E. Caldwell & Company," wherever the latter occurred, is not before this court, as no exception to this ruling was taken. For a like reason the overruling of the "special appearance" motion to dismiss is not before us. This last mentioned ruling, of course, naturally followed the other, as, after the amendment was allowed, the proceedings were clearly against the W. E. Caldwell Company as a corporation. We must treat the case, therefore, as if the proceedings were originally against the W. E. Caldwell Company, a foreign corporation. So treating it, did the court err in sustaining the defendant's oral motion to dismiss the entire proceedings, upon the grounds that the court had acquired no jurisdiction in rem over any property belonging to the defendant, and nothing had occurred by which the court had acquired jurisdiction to render a personal or general judgment against the defendant? The judgment of the court was partly right and partly wrong. As to the attachment and garnishment proceeding, it was right; as to the declaration in attachment, it was wrong. The untraversed answer of the garnishee showed that at the time of the service of the summons of garnishment, he, as an individual, owed nothing to the defendant in attachment, the W. E. Caldwell Company, a nonresident corporation, and had nothing in his hands belonging to that corporation, and had not since such service become indebted to that company, or received any of its property or effects; but that, as trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of T. A. Bailey, he had in his hands $5,000, the net proceeds of certain lumber, which had come into his possession as such trustee, and which he had sold under an order of the referee in bankruptcy, which directed him to make such sale, and to pay over the net proceeds thereof to the W. E. Caldwell Company. The general rule is that while property or money is in custodia legis, the officer holding it is the mere hand of the court; his possession is the possession of the court; to interfere with his possession is to invade the jurisdiction of the court itself; and an officer so situated is bound by the orders and judgments of the court whose mere agent he is, and he can make no disposition of such money or property without the consent of his own court, express or implied. Among the legal custodians to whom these principles have been applied are trustees or assignees in bankruptcy. Rood, Garnishment, § 27, and citations. It has been so held in Georgia, in regard to receivers. Zorn v. Wheatley, 61 Ga. 437 (2), 441; Lowe v. Stephens, 66 Ga. 607; Fountain v. Mills, 111 Ga. 122, 36 S. E. 428; Fulghum v. J. P. Williams Co. 114 Ga. 643, 647, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1055, 88 Am. St. Rep. 48, 40 S. E. 695. It has been held that, even after the bill has been dismissed, the receiver is still the officer of the court, and not subject to garnishment. Field v. Jones, 11 Ga. 413.

It is contended, however, in the present case, that, inasmuch as the order of the referee directed the trustee to pay over the net proceeds of the sale to the W. E. Caldwell Company, it was thereby segregated and became a direct indebtedness or amount due to that company, and hence was subject to garnishment by its creditor. If a garnishment is served, a judgment rendered upon it against the garnishee must be upon it either against him in his individual capacity or in his official capacity,—either against his personal funds or against the funds in his hands as trustee. This was not a transaction between James individually and the Caldwell Company, nor an individual indebtedness by him to that company, even though the company might have a right to proceed against him if he failed to pay it in accordance with the order of the court; for such right would arise out of the fact that he had not carried out such order. The garnishment recognizes the action of the court ordering the sale and the payment of the net proceeds as a valid order, and is founded upon it. Without that order there would have been no sale and consequently no proceeds to pay. The garnishment proceeding, therefore, is necessarily against the trustee in his representative capacity, and is an effort to subject funds which he holds in that capacity under an order of the referee or bankrupt court. That court has exclusive jurisdiction in matters of bankruptcy; the state court has none. In the regular order of proceedings, after distribution has been made, the bankrupt will seek a discharge, and the trustee, upon filing his report and account and vouchers, will also apply for a discharge. The court of bankruptcy will hardly grant him a discharge from his trust so long as he had money in his hands arising under an order of the court, not finally paid out or disposed of as the court had directed. If a state court could garnish a trustee in bankruptcy, to catch funds in his hands which had been ordered paid by the court to which he was directly amenable, but which he had not actually paid out, and could compel him to withhold the payment, regardless of the order of the court of bankruptcy, it will be readily perceived that confusion and conflicts of jurisdiction would at once arise, and that a state court, by means of a garnishment, could indefinitely delay the final winding up of the matter in bankruptcy and the final discharge of the trustee. It has accordingly been held that a garnishment will not lie from a state court to a trustee or assignee in bankruptcy, to catch dividends which have been declared in favor of certain creditors, or the amount which will be going to them under a composition. Re Cunningham Iowa Dist. Ct. 9 Cent. Law J. 208, Fed. Cas. No. 3,478; Loveland, Bankr. 3d ed. § 268, p. 782; 2 Remington, Bankr. §§ 224, 225, p. 1363. As the garnishment, in so far as it was directed to and served upon James as trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of Bailey, was without authority of law and void, and in so far as it was directed to and served upon him in his individual capacity, it failed to reach and fasten upon any property or asset belonging to the defendant, no lawful levy of the attachment was made; and consequently the court was without jurisdiction of the attachment proceeding, and therefore properly dismissed it.

The error which the court committed was in also dismissing the declaration in attachment. The Civil Code of 1895, § 4575, declares: "When the defendant has given bond and security, as provided in this Code, or when he has appeared and made defense by himself or attorney at law, or when he has been cited to appear, as provided in this Code, the judgment rendered against him in such case shall bind all his property, and shall have the same force and effect as when there has been personal service." Section 4557 provides that where notice in writing has been given, as therein provided, to the defendant, of the pendency of the attachment and the proceedings thereon, "the judgment rendered upon such attachment shall have the same force and effect as judgments rendered at common law; and no declaration shall be dismissed because the attachment may have been dismissed or discontinued, but the plaintiff shall be entitled to judgment on the declaration filed, as in other cases at common law, upon the merits of the case." These two sections of the Code have been construed together; and 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) it has been accordingly held that under their provisions, although the attachment may be dismissed because of its invalidity, still the plaintiff is entitled to proceed for a verdict and a general judgment on his declaration, if the defendant has appeared and made defense (Joseph v. Stein, 52 Ga. 332 [2]), or if he has replevied the property levied upon under the attachment (Camp. v. Cahn, 53 Ga. 558 [2]), or if he has been duly cited to appear (McAndrew v. Irish American Bank, 117 Ga. 510 [2], 43 S. E. 858).

In the present case the defendant filed a general demurrer to the declaration in attachment. It is well settled that the filing of a general demurrer is equivalent to pleading to the merits of the case. Lyons v. Planters' Loan & Sav. Bank, 86 Ga. 485 (1), 12 L.R.A. 155, 12 S. E. 882; Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Atkinson, 94 Ga. 780, 21 S. E. 1010; Southern R. Co. v. Cook, 106 Ga. 451 (3), 32 S. E. 585; Paulk v. Tanner, 106 Ga. 219 (1), 32 S. E. 99; Dykes v. Jones, 129 Ga. 99, 103, 58 S. E. 645.

Counsel for defendant in error, however, contend that the demurrer was filed subject to the motion for which the defendant made its "special appearance." There was no express reservation to this effect in the demurrer; but admitting that the demurrer was so filed, and that, being so filed, it did not, when it was filed, amount to pleading to the merits, or to appearing and making defense in the case made by the declaration in attachment; still, when this written motion to dismiss was overruled by the court, and no exception was taken by the defendant to this ruling, the general demurrer stood permanently uncovered; it was stripped of the protection afforded by the motion under cover of which it was made, and thenceforth stood as the equivalent of a plea to the merits without reservation. Being made subject to the final determination of the motion to dismiss which preceded it, and this motion having been finally decided against the defendant, the demurrer was, of course, no longer subject to this motion. In other words, the demurrer was made for the purpose of being considered in the event that the precedent motion to dismiss should be overruled, and, when this motion was overruled, the demurrer stood as unconditional pleading in the case.

Judgment reversed.

All the Justices concur.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

ELBERT N. MANNING et al.

v.

MERCANTILE SECURITIES COMPANY

et al.

and

BIRCH F. RHODUS et al., Appts.

SAME

v.

BIRCH F. RHODUS et al., Impleaded, etc.,
Plffs. in Err.

(242 Ill. 584, 90 N. E. 238.)

Appeal — contempt proceedings — title of cause.

1. An appeal in a contempt proceeding is properly entitled the same as in the principal proceeding, where the contempt proceeding is really but an incident of the original suit.

Witness — incrimination — delivery of books — sufficiency of answer.

2. The mere statement by an officer of a corporation who has been directed to turn its books over to a receiver, that he has been indicted for an offense connected with the management of the corporation, and that the contents of the books may tend to incriminate him, is not sufficient to excuse him from obeying the order of the court, but it is necessary to state facts from which the court can determine that such is the fact.

Same — partial obedience — necessity.

3. That some of the books of a corporation might tend to incriminate its officers will not excuse them from complying with an order of the court directing them to turn over to a receiver all books and papers belonging to the corporation, so far as it can be obeyed without incriminating them.

Same — receivership — privilege of officer.

4. An officer of a corporation cannot refuse to comply with an order of an equity court to turn over its books to a receiver, because they may have a tendency to incriminate him, since in such cases the books go into the custody of the court, and the constitutional protection of witnesses does not apply, because the court can protect the officer from the use of the books against him.

Sequestration — corporate books — pendency of appeal.

5. The pendency of an appeal from an order committing officers of a corporation for contempt in disobeying an order directing them to turn over the corporate books to a receiver will not prevent the nisi prius court from sequestering the corporate property.

Constitutional law — property rights — corporate books — sequestration.

6. Securing, by writ of sequestration, the books and property of a corporation pending an appeal by its officers from an order adjudging them in contempt for refusing to turn them over to a receiver, does not deprive the officers of any of their constitutional property rights.

(Farmer, Ch. J., and Vickers, J., dissent.)

(December 22, 1909.)

Note. — Right of officer of a corporation to refuse to turn over its books to a receiver, upon the ground that they have a tendency to incriminate him.

This question appears to have arisen for the first time in MANNING v. MERCANTILE SECURITIES CO. A few cases closely analogous will, however, be discussed.

The decision in the MANNING CASE, that an officer of a corporation cannot refuse to comply with an order of an equity court to turn over its books to a receiver, because they may have a tendency to incriminate him, is placed principally on the ground that the officer is not asked to turn over the books for testimonial purposes, but to aid the receiver in ascertaining the assets and liabilities of the corporation; and that, as the receiver is an officer of the court, his custody is that of the court, which will protect the officer of the corporation against any improper use of the books as evidence against him. It is, at least, extremely doubtful whether the constitutional rights of the officer will not be violated if the officer can be compelled to turn over the books to the receiver, and then the receiver can voluntarily turn over the books to a criminal or other court, or 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) can be compelled to do so by process, because the effect would be the same as if he were compelled in the first place to turn over the books to some court to be used against him. Yet this is practically what happened in McElree v. Darlington, 187 Pa. 593, 67 Am. St. Rep. 592, 41 Atl. 456. There a receiver was appointed for a banking corporation at the request of certain depositors, creditors, and stockholders. Later, its president was indicted for receiving a deposit with knowledge that he and the corporation he represented were then insolvent, and with intent to embezzle the same. It was held to be error for the court to refuse to grant leave to the district attorney and another to examine the books of the corporation, then in the hands of the receiver, to secure evidence for the prosecution of the president for the embezzlement. The court said: "This ruling was obviously made on the assumption that the books and papers were the property of said party, and that an examination of them by persons interested in the affairs of the corporation as shareholders, bondholders, or depositors was not admissible, because it might result in the discovery of transactions having a tendency to criminate him. But the books and papers of the corporation are not the property of the officers or employees, nor are SEPARATE APPEALS by defendants Birch F. Rhodus et al. from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cook County, punishing them for contempt of court in failing to comply with an order entered in a suit to wind up the affairs of the Mercantile Securities Company, of which they were officers, directing them to turn over the corporate books and papers to John C. Fetzer, receiver. Affirmed.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Cook County to review a judgment granting a writ of sequestration to secure possession of the books and papers of the Mercantile Securities Company. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Joseph B. David and Benjamin C. Bachrach, for appellants and plaintiffs in error:

A witness is not bound to answer any question, either in a court of law or equity, the answer to which will expose him to any penalty, forfeiture, or punishment, or which will have a tendency to accuse him of any crime or misdemeanor, or to expose him to any penalty or forfeiture, or which would be a link in a chain of evidence to convict him of a criminal offense.

Lamson v. Boyden, 160 Ill. 618, 43 N. E. 781; Minters v. People, 139 Ill. 363, 29 N. E. 45; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 453; Story, Eq. Pl. § 846; 1 Wharton, Ev. § 534; Henry v. Bank of Salina, 1 N. Y. 83.

Whenever a witness is excused from giving testimony upon the ground that his answers might tend to incriminate him, or subject him to fines, penalties, and forfeitures, he cannot be compelled to produce books or papers which will have the same effect.

Lamson v. Boyden, supra; 1 Wharton, Ev. § 533; Boyle v. Smithman, 146 Pa. 255, 23 Atl. 397; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 816, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195.

One cannot be compelled to produce his own books, or the books of another which are under his control as agent, or otherwise, they intended to protect them against the consequences of the frauds they may have perpetrated in their respective spheres of labor or duty. An officer or employee of a corporation who is under indictment for embezzlement of its funds may not require of his employer a suppression or concealment of his own entries in its books, although the entries may furnish the material clue to his crime, and possibly afford satisfactory evidence of it." It is doubtless true that a corporation or employer will not be prevented from producing books and documents which will incriminate an officer or employee; but a different question arises when they are in the possession of the officer himself, and he is asked to turn them over. The rule is, then, as stated by Wigmore on Evidence, § 2259, that "where the corporate misconduct involves also the claimant's misconduct [as well as that of the corporation's], or where the document is in reality the personal act of the claimant, though nominally that of the corporation, its disclosures are virtually his own, and to that extent his privilege protects him from producing them."

To like effect, see Ex parte Chapman, 153 Fed. 371.

In McElree v. Darlington it did not appear how the receiver became possessed of the books in the first instance, whether by a voluntary turning over of the books by the president, or otherwise. But that would be immaterial because, strictly speaking, there could be no voluntary turning over if the court would coerce it in case of refusal, as was pointed out in Blum v. State, infra. It is difficult to see how MANNING V. MERCANTILE SECURITIES CO. and McElree v. Darlington can be harmonized without destroying the constitutional privilege.

It was held in Tolleson v. Greene, 83 Ga. 499, 10 S. E. 120, that an officer of a bank could not refuse to turn over its assets to a receiver, or to tell what he did with them, on the ground that to do so would furnish evidence which would convict him of crime, although he was at the time under indictment for embezzling certain drafts intrusted to him, presumably as agent of the bank, by the president of another bank, and although in his answer to a rule nisi to turn over the assets, he denied having had such property in his control at the time the rule was served upon him, which answer the court found to be false. In giving its judgment the court said: "The mistake, we conceive, of counsel for the plaintiff in error, is in not drawing the distinction between discovery and relief. No discovery of facts which would tend to criminate the party can be compelled. . . . But as a measure of relief, to compel a party to part with property which he may have stolen is no violation of any privilege which the law gives. . . . There certainly can be no privilege in any person to hold on to the fruits of crime as a means of preventing punishment." And again: "How would his surrender of them [the assets] tend any more to convict him of embezzling or stealing than would his retention of them? It seems to us that a prompt surrender in obedience to an order of the proper court would be favorable to innocence rather than evidence of guilt." But surely, if a man is indicted for stealing a horse, and under the penalties of contempt is compelled to deliver up the horse alleged to have been stolen, one very material link in the chain of evidence against him is proven, to wit, his possession of the horse.

In Blum v. State, 94 Md. 375, 56 L.R.A. 322, 51 Atl. 26, receivers appointed for a firm at the request of one partner, and with the consent of the others, took charge of the firm books. The partners were subsequently indicted on the charge of obtaining prop-where their production would tend to criminate him.

Re Moser, 138 Mich. 302, 101 N. W. 588, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 31; Ex parte Chapman, 153 Fed. 371.

Where the records of a corporation disclose the commission of a criminal offense by the corporation, and also show an officer's complicity therein, such officer may properly refuse to produce such books and records before the grand jury for the purpose of enabling such body to determine whether an offense had been committed, because the production of such books would tend to criminate him.

Ex parte Chapman, supra.

Where the corporate misconduct involves also the claimant's misconduct, or where the document is in reality the personal act of the claimant, though nominally that of the corporation, its disclosures are virtually his own, and to that extent his privilege protects him from producing them.

3 Wigmore, Ev. § 2059, p. 3116; R. v. Pur-

erty under false pretenses. It was held that to allow at the trial the introduction, in evidence against them, of the firm books in the possession of the receivers, was a violation of the constitutional provision "that no man ought to be compelled to give evidence against himself." In answer to the objection that the books had been voluntarily turned over to the receivers, the court said: "But it is not correct to say that the books had been voluntarily turned over to the receivers for the purpose for which they are now sought to be used. If we should grant, for the sake of argument, all that may fairly be implied from the fact that the proceeding for receivers was by consent, the fact would remain that the books were surrendered under the order of the court, and what is far more important, and indeed vital to the determination of the question, the further fact that it cannot for a moment be contended that the appointment of receivers contemplated any criminal proceeding against the traversers, and that they can therefore be held to have waived any constitutional privilege in their defense. The purpose of a receivership is the preservation and proper disposition of the subject of litigation. The receiver is not the representative of the state, nor even of the creditors, but the hand of the court, whose control is exerted for the benefit of those ultimately found entitled to the subject of litigation, and not to aid the state in making out a case in a criminal prosecution."

In State v. Strait, 94 Minn. 384, 102 N. W. 913, one of two partners doing a private banking business filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy, and turned over the assets and books of the firm to the receiver. The receiver, without any process of the court, took the books before a grand jury, and, largely because of the evidence there contained, an indictment was returned against nell, 1 Wils. 239; R. v. Cornelius, 2 Strange, 1210; United States Exp. Co. v. Henderson, 60 Iowa, 40, 28, N. W. 426.

When the thing forbidden in the 5th Amendment, namely, compelling a man to be a witness against himself, is the object of the search and seizure of his private papers, it is "an unreasonable search and seizure" within the 14th Amendment.

Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 20 L. ed. 746, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524.

The meaning of the 5th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States is not merely that a person shall not be compelled to be a witness against himself in a criminal prosecution against himself, but its object is to insure that a person shall not be compelled, when acting as a witness in any investigation, to give testimony which might tend to show that he himself has committed a crime.

Counselman v. Hitchcock, supra.

The seizure or compulsory production of a man's private papers to be used in evi-the partners for receiving money while insolvent. It was held, criticizing Blum v. State, supra, that the evidence was properly received, and that the indictments could not be set aside because of its admission.

It was held in Re Kanter, 117 Fed. 356, that a bankrupt will not be compelled to turn over to the receiver all his books of account, records, etc., where he is, at the time, under indictment in a state court for fraudulently removing, secreting, and disposing of his property, and of obtaining goods under false pretenses, and explicitly swears that the books, etc., sought will furnish evidence against him, and from the circumstances the court thinks that such would probably be the case.

In Re Hess, 134 Fed. 109, it was held that, as to whether the books and papers of an involuntary bankrupt actually contained incriminatory matter, the bankrupt is not the judge. Says the court: "Where, under these circumstances, a bankrupt pleads this privilege, he should be required to bring the books and papers which he alleges contain the incriminating evidence before either the court or referee in bankruptcy; and, when it is made to appear that his plea is well founded, the court can make such order in the case as will fully protect him from discovery of such evidence, and, at the same time, if possible, enable the trustee to obtain such information from the books as is always necessary and indispensable in the settlement of bankrupt estates." Accordingly, the matter was referred to a referee "to take such testimony as the bankrupt may offer to show his answer that his books and papers contain evidence which may tend to incriminate him is made in good faith, to protect him against a criminal prosecution that has been instituted, or which will probably be brought, against him, and report such evidence and his conclusions dence against himself is equivalent to compelling him to be a witness against himself, and, in a prosecution for a crime, penalty, or forfeiture, is equally within the prohibition of the 5th Amendment.

Boyd v. United States, supra.

Sequestration to enforce obedience to an order of court will not issue where one adjudged to be in contempt is not in actual custody for such contempt.

Fletcher, Eq. Pl. & Pr. § 735, p. 759; Hosack v. Rogers, 11 Paige, 603; Adams, Eq. 324; Kinsey v. Yardley, 1 Dick. 265; 2 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. §§ 1048-1050.

The granting of the order allowing the writ of sequestration to issue was in contravention of §§ 6 and 10 of article II. of the Constitution of the state of Illinois, in that the same constituted an unreasonable search and seizure.

Boyd v. United States, supra; Lester v. People, 150 Ill. 408, 41 Am. St. Rep. 375, 23 N. E. 387, 37 N. E. 1004.

Messrs. Weissenbach & Meloan and Kraus, Alschuler, & Holden, for appellees and defendants in error:

The order to turn over the books and papers in question to the receiver involves no privilege of a witness, and does not admit of disobedience on the ground of constitutional privilege against giving self-incriminating evidence in a criminal case.

Story, Eq. Pl. § 525; Tolleson v. Greene, 83 Ga. 499, 10 S. E. 120; 1 Greenl. Ev. 16th ed. § 469F; 3 Wigmore, Ev. § 2264, pp. 3123-4; Haught v. Irwin, 166 Pa. 548, 31 Atl. 260; United States v. Price, 163 Fed. 904; Re Harris, 164 Fed. 292; Re Hark, 136 Fed. 986.

thereon to this court; specifying which of said documents, if any, do or do not contain such alleged incriminating evidence." This course was followed in Re Hark, 136 Fed. 986, and in Re Edward Hess & Co. 136 Fed. 988.

In Re Harris, 164 Fed. 292, where a bankrupt was merely threatened with prosecution, and objected to delivering up his books of account to the receiver on the ground that they contained incriminatory matter, but had permitted and was willing to permit the receiver to consult the books while in the custody of his attorney, provided that he was assured that no use would be made of any information contained in them in aid of any criminal information, the court directed the following order to be made: "An order may be entered directing that the attorney for the bankrupt deliver the books to the receiver, who is to receive them as the agent of the bankrupt, and is to use them or permit their use by any other person only for the purpose of the civil administration of the estate in bankruptcy. The order may contain a provision that, in case any sub-

The 14th and 5th Amendments to the Federal Constitution do not apply to procedure in state courts.

Barron v. Baltimore, 7 Pet. 243, 8 L. ed. 672.

It is essential that the witness asserting privilege show reasonable probability that the evidence which he is called upon to give will tend to incriminate, and he must support his claim by his unequivocal oath that the evidence called for, if produced, will tend to incriminate.

Consolidated Rendering Co. v. Vermont, 207 U. S. 541, 52 L. ed. 327, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 178, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 658; People ex rel. Akin v. Butler Street Foundry & Iron Co. 201 Ill. 248, 66 N. E. 349; State v. Thaden, 43 Minn. 253, 45 N. W. 447; Ex parte Hedden, 29 Nev. 352, 90 Pac. 743, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1173; McElree v. Darlington, 187 Pa. 593, 67 Am. St. Rep. 592, 41 Atl. 456.

The answers of the defendants wholly fail to show that there was anything in the books or papers that would tend to incriminate.

Kanter v. Circuit Court Clerk, 108 Ill. 301; People ex rel. Taylor v. Seaman, 8 Misc. 152, 29 N. Y. Supp. 329; United States v. Collins, 145 Fed. 709, s. c. 146 Fed. 555; State v. Kent (State v. Pancoast) 5 N. D. 516, 35 L.R.A. 532, 67 N. W. 1052; Re Knickerbocker S. B. Co. 139 Fed. 716.

No Federal constitutional provisions are involved.

Re Consolidated Rendering Co. 80 Vt. 55, 66 Atl. 790, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1069; State v. Miller, 71 N. J. L. 527, 60 Atl. 202; Barron v. Baltimore, 7 Pet. 243 8 L.

poena or other process is issued for the purpose of obtaining possession of the books in the receiver's custody, it shall be the duty of the receiver to notify the bankrupt, and not to part with the books until the bankrupt has had an opportunity to raise the question of his constitutional privilege in the same manner as though his books had remained in his own possession."

As to conclusiveness of witness's statement that the answer to questions against which he pleads his privilege would tend to criminate him, see note to McGorray v. Sutter, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 165, especially on page 170 as to production of documents. As to admissibility against defendant of documents or articles taken from him, see note to State v. Fuller, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 762. As to admissibility of schedules filed in Federal bankruptcy proceedings in a prosecution against a bankrupt for concealment of property, see note to Johnson v. United States, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1194. As to constitutional protection against being forced to furnish evidence against one's self in a civil case, see note to Levy v. Superior Court, 29 L.R.A. 811.

R. A. E.

ed. 672; Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 48 L. ed. 575, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 372; Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 50 L. ed. 652, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 370; Jack v. Kansas, 199 U. S. 372, 50 L. ed. 234, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 73, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 689.

Sequestration is process to enforce the decree appointing the receiver, and is collateral to the order of commitment.

Barnesly v. Powell, 1 Dick. 130; Tatham v. Parker, 1 Smale & G. 506.

Attachment and sequestration are concurrent and alternative processes, both or either being available.

Blake v. Blake, 80 Ill. 523.

Sequestration was a proper measure of protection.

Keighler v. Ward, 8 Md. 254; Lovett v. Rogers, 3 Hoffman, Ch. Pr. cxvii.; Trigg v. Trigg, 1 Dick. 325; Lupton v. Hescott, 1 Sim. & Stu. 274; Detillin v. Gale, 1 Sim. & Stu. 275, note; 2 Barbour, Ch. Pr. 2d ed. 281; Hayes v. Hayes, 4 Del. Ch. 22; Sykes v. Dyson, L. R. 9 Eq. Cas. 228.

Hand, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The several appeals of Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, and Edward T. Rhodus from a judgment entered by the circuit court of Cook county on September 24, 1908, finding the said Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, and Edward T. Rhodus guilty of contempt of court, and committing them to the jail of Cook county not to exceed six months, for the failure of said Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, and Edward T. Rhodus to comply with an order theretofore entered in a certain chancery suit then pending in the circuit court of Cook county, wherein John C. Fetzer had been appointed receiver of the Mercantile Securities Company, requiring them, said Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, and Edward T. Rhodus, as officers of said corporation, to turn over to said John C. Fetzer, as such receiver, all the books of account, papers, documents, correspondence, stock books, stock register, check books, canceled checks, and other papers, of whatsoever kind and character, in their possession belonging to the Mercantile Securities Company, together with a writ of error sued out by Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, and Edward T. Rhodus to review the action of said circuit court in granting an order of sequestration, have been consolidated in this court.

The bill in the chancery suit in which John C. Fetzer had been appointed receiver of the Mercantile Securities Company was filed by Elbert N. Manning, Louis P. Hugel, Herbert N. Cheetham, and the Stadler Photographing Company against the Mercantile Securities Company, Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, Edward T. Rhodus, Minnie C. Scully, and eight corporations other than the Mercantile Securities Company, which corporations had been organized by said Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, and Edward T. Rhodus. The said Birch F. Rhodus was the president, Thomas Rhodus the vice president, Edward T. Rhodus the vice president and secretary, and Minnie C. Scully the treasurer of said Mercantile Securities Company, which corporation was organized under the laws of the state of Maine, the objects of which were stated in its charter to be the buying and selling of municipal bonds and other municipal securities, also stocks, bonds, mortgages, and commercial paper, and which corporation had a nominal capital stock of $2,500,000. It was averred in the bill that all of the said corporations, including the Mercantile Securities Company, were fraudulently organized by Birch F. Thomas, and Edward T. Rhodus, and that said Mercantile Securities Company had no other business than that of dealing in the fraudulent and worthless stocks of said corporations, and that its assets represented moneys received from the sales of stock to the public, and that the complainants were stockholders of said corporation; the object of the bill being to wind up the affairs of said Mercantile Securities Company.

It appears from the record that on the 18th day of September (the day upon which he was appointed receiver) John C. Fetzer made a demand upon the appellants to turn over to him, as such receiver, the books, etc., of the Mercantile Securities Company, and that said Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, and Edward T. Rhodus, upon the advice of counsel, refused to turn over to said receiver the books, etc., of said Mercantile Securities Company; that on the 19th day of September John C. Fetzer, as such receiver, applied to the circuit court in said chancery suit for a rule upon said Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, and Edward T. Rhodus to require them to turn over to him all books, etc., of the Mercantile Securities Company, whereupon the court entered an order that said Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, and Edward T. Rhodus turn over said books, etc., to said John C. Fetzer, as receiver, on or before the 22d day of September, or show cause on that day why they should not be attached for a contempt of court; that on September 23d the said Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, and Edward T. Rhodus filed a joint answer to the order which required them to turn over the said books, etc., or show cause, in which they averred, among other things, that on the 23d day of July, 1908, an indictment was returned by the grand jury into the district court of the United States for the northern district of Illinois against them, charging them with having devised a scheme to defraud, and, for the purpose of carrying said scheme into effect, they had deposited in the postoffice at Chicago certain letters, in violation of § 5480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3696); and attached to their answer a copy of said indictment, and averred that, from an inspection of the said indictment, it would appear that the matters and things required by the court to be turned over and delivered by the said Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, and Edward T. Rhodus referred directly to and were a part of the matters and things charged in said indictment against them, and in which answer Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, and Edward T. Rhodus admitted they had in their possession the books, etc., of the Mercantile Securities Company, but averred that they had declined to turn over said books to said John C. Fetzer, as receiver, as the said books of account, papers, documents, correspondence, stock books, stock register, check books, canceled checks, and other papers "might tend to incriminate" them, the said Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, and Edward T. Rhodus. The answer further averred that they were then under said indictment in the United States district court, and that they availed themselves of their rights under §§ 6 and 10 of article 2 of the Constitution of this state, and the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and further said that they should not be required to give evidence against themselves, and should not be required to furnish evidence which could be used in any criminal proceeding against them, and averred that the circuit court was without power to order them to give or furnish evidence which might be used against them in any criminal proceeding. It also appears from the record that on September 24th, after a full hearing, the court held that said answer showed no good cause why said Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, and Edward T. Rhodus should not turn over said books, etc., to said John C. Fetzer, as receiver, and entered an order adjudging them to be in contempt of court, and committing them to the county jail of Cook county, which is the order from which the several appeals are prosecuted.

The several contentions of the parties will be considered in what we deem to be their logical order.

As a preliminary question, it is insisted that the several appeals are not properly entitled in this court. In Lester v. People, 150 Ill. 408, 41 Am. St. Rep. 375, 23 N. E. 387, 37 N. E. 1004, it was held that, ordinarily, whether a contempt proceeding should be entitled and prosecuted as an independent proceeding in the name of the people, or carried on as a part of the civil proceedings to which it is incident, is of comparatively little importance, and that the practice is not uniform. It was, however, said that, where the proceeding is for a criminal contempt, it was more appropriate to prosecute in the name of the people, but where the contempt proceeding is really but an incident of the principal suit, the usual practice is to entitle the papers in the original cause. The contempt proceeding was really but an incident of the original chancery suit, and we are of opinion the appeals were properly prosecuted to this court under the same title as the chancery suit bore in the circuit court.

It is contended that the answer filed by Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, and Edward T. Rhodus does not show that their constitutional right not to be compelled to give evidence against themselves will be impaired or infringed upon by said Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, and Edward T. Rhodus being required and compelled to deliver to the said John C. Fetzer, as receiver, the possession of the books, papers, documents, correspondence, stock books, stock register, check books, canceled checks, and other papers of the Mercantile Securities Company in their possession as officers of the said company. The appellants averred in their answer that they had been indicted in the United States district court for a violation of § 5480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3696, for having devised a scheme to defraud, and having used the United States mails to carry into effect said scheme; that, from an inspection of the indictment found against them by the United States grand jury, it would appear that the matters and things required to be turned over and delivered to the receiver refer directly to and are a part of the matters and things charged in said indictment, and that they had declined to turn over the said books, etc., to said receiver, as they might tend to incriminate them; and the question now presented for decision is: Does said answer, admitting its averments to be true, make such a case as entitles the appellants to claim their constitutional privilege to not be witnesses or to furnish evidence against themselves?

The right of a witness to refuse to furnish evidence which will incriminate himself is a constitutional right, too firmly established to be questioned. Lamson v. Boyden, 100 Ill. 613, 43 N. E. 781; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 816, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep.

195. To hold, however, that a party to a chancery suit may assert his constitutional privilege by saying, in response to an order of court that he turn over to a receiver the books, etc., of an insolvent corporation, "I have been indicted for a criminal offense by reason of my connection with the corporation of which I am an officer, as will appear from reading the indictment found against me, and if I obey the order of the court, and turn over to the receiver the books, etc., of the corporation, they may contain matters which may tend to incriminate me," would be to hold that an officer of an insolvent corporation ordered to turn over the books, etc., of the corporation might set himself up as the sole and absolute judge as to whether the books, etc., which he had been ordered by the court to turn over to the receiver would incriminate him, which would be to place in the hands of an officer of an insolvent corporation the power to withhold from the receiver of said corporation the books, papers, documents, and assets of the corporation to whatever extent he might see fit. We think, therefore, that the bare statement of a party to such a proceeding, that the books, etc., which he had been ordered to turn over to the receiver might tend to incriminate him, is not sufficient to excuse him from obeying the order of the court; but that his answer should place the matter in such shape that the court can intelligently determine the question from an examination of the averments of the answer, or, if necessary, from an inspection of the books, etc., whether they would tend to incriminate the party required to surrender them to the receiver. We think the rule announced by Chief Justice Cockburn in R. v. Boyes, 1 Best & S. 311, to be a practicable one, where he said: "To entitle a party called as a witness to the privilege of silence, the court must see, from the circumstances of the case and the nature of the evidence which the witness is called to give, that there is reasonable ground to apprehend danger to the witness from his being compelled to answer." Applying this rule to the case at bar, we think it apparent that it does not appear from the averments of the answer of the appellants that the books, etc., of the said corporation contain any evidence of an incriminating character as against the appellants, and that their surrender to the receiver would tend to incriminate the appellants. People ex rel. Akin v. Butler Street Foundry & Iron Co. 201 Ill. 236, 66 N. E. 349; State v. Thaden, 43 Minn. 253, 45 N. W. 447; Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 40 L. ed. 819, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 369, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644.

The books, etc., declined to be turned over to the receiver of the Mercantile Securities Company by the appellants may be presumed to be numerous, and it may be safely presumed that a large proportion of them—at least some of them—evidence transactions which would not tend to prove the appellants were guilty of the commission of a crime. By reason of the fact, therefore, that some of the books, etc., of said corporation, in the hands of the appellants, might show guilt, and others might not furnish evidence of criminal misconduct, the fact that some would tend to incriminate them would be no reason for their withholding other books, papers, documents, etc., from the receiver, which would in no way tend to incriminate them. We think their answer should therefore have pointed out, from the numerous books and documents in their hands, such books and documents as were incriminating in their character, and accompany their answer by an offer to turn over to the receiver the remaining books, etc., in their possession. Such seems to be the practice with reference to the discovery and inspection of documents which are privileged, and we can see no reason why the rule thus established should not be applied to a case like this, if the constitutional privilege contended for by the appellants can be invoked in a case like this, which question we will consider hereafter in this opinion. In 4 Elliott on Evidence, chap. 162, § 3289, that author says: "The adverse party cannot be required to produce documents which are privileged. If he claims any document in his possession to be privileged, he must so state in his affidavit, and must specify which, if any, of the documents referred to, is the document he objects to producing, stating fully upon what grounds the objection is based, and as far as possible verify the facts upon which the objection is founded. It has been held that an affidavit is insufficient which merely states that the documents are privileged. The facts must be stated under oath on which the claim of privilege is made. These must be so stated that the court may determine from the facts set out whether or not the document is privileged." In People ex rel. Akin v. Butler Street Foundry & Iron Co. supra, on page 248 of 201 Ill., this court quoted with approval the following excerpt from Brown v. Walker, supra, where it was said: "The constitutional privilege is not, however, to be so far extended that it 'may be put forward for a sentimental reason, or for a purely fanciful protection of the witness against an imaginary danger, and for the real purpose of securing immunity to some third person who is interested in concealing the facts to which he would testify.'" Our conclusion is, upon this branch of the case, that the trial court did not err in holding that the appellants' answer was not sufficient to excuse them from turning over to the receiver the books, etc., of said corporation in their possession.
30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

We have proceeded thus far on the theory of the appellants, which is that they can claim their constitutional privilege in this proceeding the same as they could had they been subpoenaed as witnesses to give evidence, or been required by subpoena duces tecum to produce the books, etc., of the corporation of which they were officers, before a petit or grand jury in a case pending in court or under investigation before a grand jury. We do not think, however, the position of appellants that they can claim their constitutional privilege in this proceeding in the same manner that they could were they called as witnesses, or called upon by a subpoena duces tecum to produce books, etc., correct. It is apparent that a party called to give evidence as a witness, or to produce in court, to be used in evidence, the books, etc., of a corporation, of which he is in possession as its officer, is in entirely a different situation from what an officer of an insolvent corporation is, who is directed by the court in which the affairs of the corporation are being wound up, and to which proceeding he is a party, to turn over the books, etc., of the corporation in his possession, to a receiver of the corporation. In one case the party is required to produce the books, etc., of the corporation to be used as evidence, and in the other case the court is granting to the complainant the relief prayed for in his bill; and, while a court of equity will not force a party to subject himself to punishment for a criminal offense, it will not permit him to protect himself against equitable relief by alleging that if he answers the bill filed against him, or turns over to a receiver property belonging to an insolvent corporation of which he is an officer, he will subject himself to the consequences of a crime. Story, Eq. Pl. § 525. In this case the complainants by their bill made a case against the appellants and the corporation of which they were officers, which entitled them to equitable relief, a part of which relief was to have turned over to the receiver of the corporation the books, etc., of said corporation. If an officer of a corporation could, by claiming that the books, etc., of the corporation in his possession contained evidence of his criminal misconduct in the management of the affairs of the corporation, prevent the receiver of the corporation from obtaining the possession of the books, etc., of the corporation, which were necessary for him to have in order to properly administer the affairs of the corporation, and close up its business under the direction of the court, such officer would have the power, in effect, to deprive a court of equity of jurisdiction to close up the affairs of an insolvent corporation, by declining to deliver possession of the books, etc., of the corporation to the receiver appointed by the court. We are of the opinion that while the appellants could not be called upon to explain any of their conduct as officers of said Mercantile Securities Company, which would tend to incriminate them, they could be required by the court to turn over to the receiver the books, etc., of the corporation. Tolleson v. Greene, 83 Ga. 499, 10 S. E. 120.

The possession of a receiver is the possession of the court making the appointment, the property being regarded, while in the hands of the receiver, as in the custody of the law. The receiver's possession, therefore, is neither adverse to the complainant nor to the defendant in the litigation, but the possession of the property is in the court, through its receiver, where it must remain for the protection of all parties in interest, until the court disposes of the possession by ordering the receiver to sell the property, or to turn it over to the party to whom it may ultimately be found to belong. High, Receivers, § 134. If, therefore, the books, etc., turned over to the receiver under the order of the court entered in this case should, upon examination by the court, be found to contain evidence which would incriminate appellants, the appellants could be fully protected by the court from the use of such evidence against them, while the books, etc., are in the hands of the receiver and under the direction of the court. Where books and other documents are produced upon the service of a subpoena duces tecum they are brought directly into court to be used as evidence, while books, documents, and other papers turned over to a receiver under the direction of the court remain in the custody and control of the court, and could not be used as evidence against the party turning them over, except by the order of the court whose receiver had them in his possession. "A bare possibility of legal peril" is not sufficient to entitle a witness to protection, and, as there is no reasonable probability of the defendants being deprived of their constitutional rights, they were not excused from obeying the order of the court. People ex rel. Akin v. Butler Street Foundry & Iron Co.; Brown v. Walker; R. v. Boyes,—supra.

It will be observed that all the cases cited by the appellants to sustain their contention that their constitutional privilege would be infringed by being required to surrender said books to said receiver are cases where a witness was required to testify, or to produce books and papers in court to be used in evidence, notably the cases of Lamson v. Boyden and Counselman v. Hitchcock, supra, and Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524,—all of which cases are clearly distinguishable from the case at bar.

After the order had been entered finding the appellants to be guilty of contempt of court, and committing them to the county jail of Cook county, they prayed an appeal from that order to the appellate court for the first district, and gave bond in accordance with the order allowing the appeal. While that order was in force, John C. Fetzner, as receiver, applied to the circuit court for an order of sequestration against the property of the appellants, which order was made, and a writ of sequestration was issued. Subsequent to the issuing of the writ, the order allowing the appeal to the appellate court was set aside by the trial court, and thereupon a writ of error was sued out from this court to review the action of the trial court in granting said order of sequestration against the appellants' property. It is contended that the court erred in granting said writ while the appeal was pending in the appellate court from the order committing the appellants to the county jail or Cook county for contempt of court. The writ of sequestration is said to have been introduced as a process in chancery proceedings by Sir Nicholas Bacon in the reign of Elizabeth, and that it was brought to the United States with the chancery system of England, and that its office in equity practice is to furnish a remedy by which property is taken possession of by a court of chancery, in order to enforce obedience to a decree, and that, while the writ has gone almost out of use since the courts of chancery have power to issue executions against real estate, to enforce the payment of chancery decrees, it has not been abolished or prohibited, and may be resorted to whenever it is deemed necessary. 19 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 540. The writ of sequestration is recognized by §§ 42 and 47 of the Chancery Code of this state, and it was invoked with effect in the case of Wightman v. Wightman, 45 Ill. 167, where it was used to enforce the payment of alimony where the defendant was contumacious, and refused to pay alimony although he had an estate, and was committed to jail for a failure to pay alimony. The writ of sequestration in chancery runs against the property of a contumacious defendant, and is a proceeding in rem, while a contempt proceeding is against the person of a contumacious defendant, and is in personam. The Chancery Code of this state, as was the case in the chancery practice of England, provides for those two methods of enforcing a chancery decree, and the fact that the appellants had prosecuted an appeal in the contempt proceedings, which they afterwards abandoned, did not prevent a resort to the writ of sequestration, to enforce obedience to the order of the court to turn over the books, etc., of said corporation to the receiver. Blake v. Blake, 80 Ill. 523; Rev. Stat. 1908, chap. 22, §§ 42, 47. The remedies are concurrent and alternative.

It is next urged that the order for the writ of sequestration was improperly made, as it is said it deprived the appellants of their constitutional rights under §§ 6 and 10 of article 2 of the Constitution of this state, and the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. As we have seen, the surrender of the books, etc., of the Mercantile Securities Company to its receiver by the appellants was not a deprivation of their constitutional rights, either state or Federal. The bill filed by the complainants charged that Birch F. Rhodus, Thomas Rhodus, and Edward T. Rhodus, individually and through the corporations owned and controlled by them, had appropriated the common stock of the Mercantile Securities Company, $1,250,000 in amount, and had appropriated to their own use more than $300,000 of the proceeds of the sale of its preferred stock, and the appellants admitted they were in possession and control of all of the books of account, papers, documents, correspondence, stock books, stock register, check books, canceled checks, and other papers, of whatsoever kind and character, of the said Mercantile Securities Company, but refused to obey the order of the court to turn them over to the receiver of said corporation, on the ground that the turning over of said books, etc., to said receiver "might tend to incriminate" them, and, when adjudged guilty of a contempt of court, they appealed from that order, the result of which was to leave them in the possession of all the books, etc., and assets of said Mercantile Securities Company, without any security that said books, etc., and assets of the corporation would be forthcoming in case it should be adjudged it was their duty to obey the order of the circuit court requiring them to turn over said books, etc., to said receiver, from which decree no appeal had ever been prayed or perfected. We think that the trial court therefore properly issued the writ of sequestration against the property of the appellants, to the end that the decree of the circuit court requiring them to turn over to said receiver said books, etc., might not be defeated and rendered fruitless in case it was finally held the appellants were bound to obey said decree.

The judgment of the Circuit Court in adjudging the appellants guilty of a contempt of court, and the judgment of the Circuit Court awarding the writ of sequestration, will be affirmed.

Cartwright, J., concurring:

I agree with the conclusion reached in this case, for the reason that the answer of the defendants was not sufficient to show that the books and papers which they were ordered to turn over to the receiver contained evidence which would tend to incriminate them.

Farmer, Ch. J., and Vickers, J., dissent.

Affirmed by Supreme Court of the United States, May 31, 1910, 217 U. S. 597, 54 L. ed. 896, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 696.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

HENRY FLIEGE

v.

KANSAS CITY WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY et al., Appts.

(82 Kan. 147, 107 Pac. 555.)

Servant — employer and vendor of purchased machine — injury in installation — joint liability.

1. A manufacturing company sold a machine to a railway company, retaining the title thereto until payment was made, and undertook to furnish a competent engineer

Headnotes by JOHNSTON, Ch. J.

Note. — Joint liability of master and person installing machine to employee injured during installation.

The authorities are not entirely harmonious in respect to what constitutes joint liability for negligent injuries, and no clear and comprehensive statement can be given which will entirely harmonize the different authorities.

One of the clearest statements upon this point is given in Matthews v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 56 N. J. L. 34, 22 L.R.A. 261, 27 Atl. 919, where the court says: "If two or more persons owe to another the same duty, and by their common neglect of that duty he is injured, doubtless the tort is joint, and upon well-settled principles each, any, or all of the tort feors may be held. But when each of two or more persons owes to another a separate duty, which each wrongfully neglects to perform, then, although the duties were diverse and disconnected, and the negli- 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) to superintend the erection and installation of the machine on the railway company's premises, and the railway company undertook to furnish employees to assist in installing and starting the machine. While the work was in progress, an employee of the railway company, acting under the direction of the engineer of the manufacturing company, was negligently injured. Held, that the manufacturing company and the railway company were engaged in a joint operation, and there was imposed on them the joint duty to use due care towards those employed in the work; and, as an employee was injured through the omission or negligent performance of that duty, the companies were guilty of a joint tort, upon which arose a joint and several liability to the injured employee.

Same — contributory negligence.

2. Under the facts in the case, it is held that the employee was not guilty of contributory negligence in not adopting another and safer method of performing the task assigned to him.

(March 12, 1910.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Leavenworth County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. L. Alden, with Messrs. J. E. McFadden and Lathrop, Morrow, Fox, & Moore, for appellants:

As a matter of law, Ray was not, as to the work in which he was engaged at the time the plaintiff was hurt, a servant of the defendant the General Electric Company, and defendant cannot be held liable for his negligence, if any, in connection with that work.

gence of each was without concert, if such several neglects concurred and united together in causing injury, the tort is equally joint, and the tort feors are subject to a like liability."

This statement is quoted with approval in 1 Cooley on Torts, p. 247.

Under such a definition it would seem that there could be no question of the joint liability of the defendants in FLIEGE v. KANSAS CITY W. R. Co.

The decision in Old Times Distilling Co. v. Zehnder, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 753, 52 S. W. 1051, set out at length in the FLIEGE CASE fully sustains the latter decision.

A few other decisions may be cited as supporting the proposition that the owner of premises and a person engaged in installing a machine upon the premises for the owner are jointly liable to a servant who is injured by their concurring negligence.

Thus, in American Cotton Co. v. Simmons, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 189, 87 S. W. 842, Rourke v. White Moss Colliery Co. L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 205; Donovan v. Laing [1893] 1 Q. B. 629; Standard Oil Co. v. Anderson, 212 U. S. 215, 53 L. ed. 480, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252; Byrne v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 24 L.R.A. 693, 9 C. C. A. 666, 22 U. S. App. 220, 61 Fed. 607; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Stepp, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 350, 90 C. C. A. 431, 164 Fed. 791; Wyllie v. Palmer, 137 N. Y. 248, 19 L.R.A. 285, 33 N. E. 381; Hasty v. Sears, 157 Mass. 123, 34 Am. St. Rep. 267, 31 N. E. 759; Coughlan v. Cambridge, 166 Mass. 268, 44 N. E. 218; Samuelian v. American Tool & Mach. Co. 168 Mass. 15, 46 N. E. 98; Consolidated Fireworks Co. v. Koehl, 190 Ill. 148, 60 N. E. 87; Ewan v. Lippincott, 47 N. J. L. 192, 54 Am. Rep. 148; Swackhamer v. Johnson, 39 Or. 383, 54 L.R.A. 625, 65 Pac. 91; Hardy v. Shedden Co. 37 L.R.A. 33, 24 C. C. A. 261, 47 U. S. App. 362, 78 Fed. 610; Miller v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co. 76 Iowa, 655, 14 Am. St. Rep. 258, 39 N. W. 188; Powell v. Virginia Constr. Co. 88 Tenn. 692, 17 Am. St. Rep. 925, 13 S. W. 691; Anderson v. Boyer, 156 N. Y. 93, 50 N. E. 976; Delory v. Blodgett, 185 Mass. 126, 64 L.R.A. 114, 102 Am. St. Rep. 328, 69 N. E. 1078.

Mr. Samuel Maher, with Messrs. A. E. Dempsey, Pierre R. Porter, and H. W. Wolcott, for appellee.

Johnston, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action by Henry Fliege against the Kansas City Western Railway Company and the General Electric Company to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been negligently inflicted upon him by the two companies. The railway company purchased from the electric company a heavy machine, called a "rotary converter," which was to be installed at a station on the railway company's line, and to that end the electric company was to furnish a competent engineer to have charge of the erection and starting of the engine. The electric company sent W. W. Ray to superintend the installation and starting of the machine, and the railway company co-operated in the work, and furnished Jeffers, its consulting engineer, Fliege, and other of its employees to assist Ray in the work. In the course of installing the machine they were moving a heavy part of it, called the "field piece," to its place on a metal bed. Across the metal bed some heavy planks had been placed, upon which the field piece rested while being moved to its place. Ray and Jeffers were on one side of this ponderous machine, and Fliege and others upon the opposite side. Jeffers suggested that it was necessary to put another block or wood cushion under the field piece, and Ray directed that it be done. In obedience to the order, Fliege procured a scantling and was placing it under the heavy field piece, when Ray and Jeffers, who were standing with crowbars on the other side of the machine, without any notice, pried the field piece and pushed it over, thereby catching and crushing Fliege's hand before he had time or opportunity to withdraw it. The reckless action of Ray and Jeffers in shoving this heavy machine over on Fliege when he was underneath and in a position of danger, without warning, and without reference to whether he had executed the order and withdrawn to a place of safety, was a clear case of culpable negligence on the part of those who had charge of the work. It is contended by the companies that Fliege was where one of the defendants was engaged in erecting a gin plant for the other upon the latter's premises, and during the course of the construction of said plant it became necessary to lower two large oil tanks into an excavation, the work being done under the supervision and direction of one who was alleged to be the common foreman of both of the defendants, it was held that both owed the plaintiff the duty to use ordinary care in furnishing him with reasonably safe appliances to use in the work of lowering the tanks, and the failure to perform this duty upon the part of their common foreman rendered both corporations or either liable to the plaintiff for damages resulting from such failure.

The court held untenable the defendants' contention that, as they had separate contracts with the foreman, and consequently negligence could be charged on either of these companies only through separate channels of imputed negligence, this cause of action could not be prosecuted jointly against the defendants.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

So, the owners or operators of an amusement park and plumbers who were doing work there under contract may be held jointly liable to a servant of the plumbers who was injured by the concurring negligence of the park owners and the plumbers. Bagley v. Wonderland Co. 205 Mass. 238, 91 N. E. 317.

And where a contractor undertakes to place a structure on foundations to be furnished by the landowner, and the landowner knowingly furnishes an insufficient foundation, and the contractor, knowing of such insufficiency, directs his employees to work upon the structure, whereby they are injured in consequence of the giving way of the foundation, a joint recovery for injuries to one of such employees may be had against the contractor and the landowner. Consolidated Ice Mach. Co. v. Keifer, 134 Ill. 481, 10 L.R.A. 696, 23 Am. St. Rep. 688, 25 N. E. 799.

W. M. G.

guilty of contributory negligence in failing to adopt a safer method of putting the block under the machine. There is nothing substantial in this contention. Nothing in the machine itself or its position suggested danger to Fliege. He had a right to assume that it would not be moved until the cushion was placed and he had reached a position of safety, and at least would not be moved without giving him notice. It may be that, standing on the other side of the machine, they could not see just when Fliege had completed the task; but that fact only made the duty to warn Fliege more obligatory. Any method of putting the timber under the machine was safe enough, if the ordinary precautions had been taken. The only peril in the case arose from the action of Ray and Jeffers in shoving the machine over upon Fliege while he was under it, without giving him warning and an opportunity to protect himself.

After insisting that the injury was not the result of the negligence of either, each of the appellants contends for itself that Fliege was not its servant, and if the injury was negligently inflicted, it was the negligence of the other appellant. The railway company contends that, under the contract, the electric company was to furnish a competent engineer to superintend the installation and erection of the machinery, and in effect to set up the machine, and turn it over complete to the railway company. It contends, further, that Ray did not represent the railway company, was not subject to its orders, and that the employees of the railway company were turned over to and were in fact working for the electric company. On the other hand, the electric company insists that Ray was not acting as its employee, when Fliege was injured; that he had been merely loaned to the railway company to assist in installing the machinery which that company had purchased, and, although he remained the general servant of the electric company, and was paid by it, he was really serving the railway company in doing the work; and that the railway company must answer for his negligence. The attitude of the companies depended upon the contract made in the sale of the machine and their action under it. Some of its provisions are obscure; but taken together and in the light of other evidence as to its execution, they show that the erection and installation of the machine was a joint undertaking, and that each was responsible for the negligence of the other. The electric company, which sold the machine, and retained the title until payment for it should be made, undertook to furnish a competent engineer and help install the machine. This was done for itself, and was more than the mere loaning of an employee to the railway company. It agreed to co-operate in the setting up of the machine. The railway company, which had purchased the machine, undertook, among other things, to furnish its employees, who were to assist the electric company in installing the machine, and these employees were paid by itself. They acted, it is true, under the direction of Ray; but he, it appears, was in fact a common foreman for both companies in installing the machine. Being a joint undertaking, and both companies having co-operated in an act which directly caused an injury to Fliege, they are jointly and severally liable to him.

It has been said to be "well settled that the law will not undertake to apportion consequences between two or more persons jointly guilty of wrongful conduct toward another, though their contributions to the injury were in unequal degrees and from different motives." Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Durand, 65 Kan. 380, 69 Pac. 356; Kansas City v. File, 60 Kan. 157, 55 Pac. 877. In Old Times Distilling Co. v. Zehnder, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 753, 52 S. W. 1051, Hoffman, Ahlers, & Company contracted to make a heater and place it in a distillery. The foreman of the distillery company directed one of its employees to go and assist in lifting the heater to its place, and it appears that the distillery company had agreed to furnish men to assist in putting the heater in the distillery, and was to pay certain employees according to the time employed. It was held that the putting of the heater in the distillery was a joint undertaking of the distillery company and the makers of the heater, and that both parties were liable to a servant of the distillery company, who assisted in the work and was negligently injured while doing so. As the appellants in this case were engaged in a joint operation, there was a joint duty imposed upon them to use due care towards Fliege while he was under the machine; and as he was injured through the omission or negligent performance of this duty, there was a joint tort, upon which arose a joint and several liability against the companies. As tending to support this view, see American Cotton Co. v. Simmons, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 189, 87 S. W. 842; Walton v. Miller, 109 Va. 210, 132 Am. St. Rep. 908, 63 S. E. 458; Olson v. Phoenix Mfg. Co. 103 Wis. 337, 79 N. W. 409; Consolidated Ice Mach. Co. v. Keifer, 134 Ill. 481, 10 L.R.A. 696, 23 Am. St. Rep. 688, 25 N. E. 799; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Gossett, 172 Ind. 525, 87 N. E. 723; 4 Thomp. Neg. § 5003; 6 Thomp. Neg. § 7435; Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. 223; 33 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 726.

The case appears to have been fairly submitted to the jury as to the liability of either or both of the companies for the injury of the appellee. Whether Fliege was the servant of one or both companies when injured, and their relation to him, depended not alone upon the contract, but also upon the manner in which the contract was executed, and the conduct of the companies at the time of the injury. We see no good reason to complain of the instructions, and the objections to rulings on testimony are not deemed to be material.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

CORNELIUS W. STYNES

v.

BOSTON ELEVATED RAILWAY COMPANY.

(206 Mass. 75, 91 N. E. 998.)

Damages — personal injury — inability to labor — value of substitute.

While, upon the question of damages to be awarded for a personal injury, plaintiff, as proof of his personal incapacity to perform labor, may give evidence that he was compelled to employ servants to perform labor formerly done by himself, he cannot show the amount which he is compelled to pay for such service, since it would have no bearing upon the diminished value of his own services.

(May 18, 1910.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Middlesex County made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence, which resulted in a verdict for plaintiff. Sustained.

The plaintiff was injured in a collision between a team driven by him and one of defendant's cars.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. Hugh D. McLellan for defendant.

Messrs. Coakley & Sherman and R. H. Sherman for plaintiff.

Braley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, when injured, was engaged in buying secondhand barrels, which, after they had been cleaned and repaired, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) he put upon the market and sold. By his personal efforts a profitable business had been established, which was seriously interrupted by his being wholly unable to carry it on for some time after the injury; and it was not until quite a long period of partial incapacity had elapsed that he could resume full control. The defendant, while conceding that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for physical and mental pain and suffering, with the expenses incurred for medical attendance and nursing, and to be fully recompensed for loss of time and for partial or permanent disability, contends that evidence of the employment of those whom he hired to perform his work at the shop while disabled, and of the amount of wages paid to them, was erroneously admitted. In form and substance the plaintiff seeks to recover

Note. — Admissibility, on question of damages for personal injuries, of amount paid for services of substitute during incapacity.

As affecting earning capacity.

In a number of cases it has been held, contrary to the decision in STYNES v. BOSTON ELEV. R. Co., that the amount paid for a substitute during the plaintiff's incapacity due to his injuries is admissible upon the question of his personal incapacity to perform labor.

Thus, in Grady v. St. Louis Transit Co. 102 Mo. App. 212, 76 S. W. 673, it was held that from the plaintiff's evidence as to his earning capacity per diem prior to the casualty, and as to the fact that thereafter he had been compelled to employ assistance in the conduct of his business at a rate of compensation specified, the jury could with facility compute the extent to which his earning power had been lessened and impaired as the result of the injury sustained by him.

And in Batten v. St. Louis Transit Co. 102 Mo. App. 285, 76 S. W. 727, it was held that evidence that the plaintiff was keeping a boarding house when she was injured, that prior to her injury she did certain necessary work in and about the keeping of the house, that after her injury she was unable to do any of this work, and was compelled to hire others to do it for her, and that this hired help cost her a certain sum each week, furnished a substantial and reasonable basis from which the jury could, with reasonable correctness, estimate the value of the plaintiff's individual labor in the conduct of her business.

So, in Galveston City R. Co. v. Chapman, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 551, 80 S. W. 856, it was held that the fact that the plaintiff was compelled to hire a man at $25 per week to do the work he himself had previously done was evidence bearing on the value of plaintiff's earning capacity.

And in Robinson v. St. Louis & Suburban damages which necessarily resulted from the personal injuries inflicted by the defendant's wrong. The impairment of earning capacity is generally regarded in suits of this character as a very appreciable and well-recognized element of damage. To prove the value of the deprivation, the plaintiff may introduce evidence not only of his average earnings before and after the injury, but of his diminished capacity for labor, or of his entire loss of ability to earn money in the future. If, because of greater skill, he received higher wages than the ordinary workman in the same calling, this fact may be shown, or, if described as a physician, his professional reputation and the fact of his having had a lucrative practice before the accident, which had diminished because of it, are admissible, even if these circumstances ordinarily tend to prove that the plaintiff's time was of more than usual importance as compared with the average workman or medical practitioner. O'Brien v. Look, 171 Mass. 36, 50 N. E. 458; Murdock v. New York & B. Despatch Exp. Co. 167 Mass. 549, 550, 46 N. E. 57; Conklin v. Consolidated R. Co. 196 Mass. 302, 307, 82 N. E. 23, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 857; Sibley v. Nason, 196 Mass. 125, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1173, 124 Am. St. Rep. 520, 81 N. E. 887, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 938; Braithwaite v. Hall, 168 Mass. 38, 40, 46 N. E. 398; Holmes v. Halde, 74 Me. 28, 43 Am. Rep. 567; McNamara v. Clintonville, 62 Wis. 207, 51 Am. Rep. 722, 22 N. W. 472; Wade v. Leroy, 20 How. 34, 15 L. ed. 813. The reason is given by Holmes, J., in Braithwaite v. Hall, supra, where, after having stated that such evidence was admissible under a declaration alleging general damages, he continued: "If any distinctions in the val-

R. Co. 103 Mo. App. 110, 77 S. W. 493, it was held that the plaintiff, a horse trainer, was, upon proof that prior to his injury he had trained his horses himself, but subsequently thereto had been compelled to hire such training done, entitled to recover for such loss of earnings.

As is stated in STYNES v. BOSTON ELEV. R. Co., it was held in Macon Consol. Street R. Co. v. Barnes, 113 Ga. 212, 38 S. E. 750, that evidence of the amount paid for the services of substitutes was admissible as bearing on the impairment of the plaintiff's earning capacity. In this case the plaintiff was a court stenographer, and introduced proof that after his injury he was compelled to hire typewriters at the cost of $25 per month to do part of the work, as he himself could no longer do that part of it which necessitated continued use of a typewriting machine. The court said that in view of this it seemed clear that the additional proof to the effect that he was obliged to employ help at least tended to show decreased power to labor, and the cost of the help was relevant as to the extent of the decrease.

The jury is warranted in regarding the amount which it became necessary to pay the person who took the plaintiff's place, and performed her duties as housekeeper, as a fair measure of the value of such duties and of the earning power of the plaintiff. Olin v. Bradford, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 7.

Where the plaintiff's testimony showed that he was necessarily compelled to employ a man to perform the work he was engaged in at the time of the injury, and he stated without objection that the value of the services of the person so hired by him did not exceed $50 per month, it was held in Welmeyer v. St. Louis Transit Co. 198 Mo. 527, 95 S. W. 925, that from such testimony it might reasonably be inferred that the loss of the plaintiff's earnings during the time he was incapacitated for the work by reason of his injuries was at least 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) equal to the amount he paid another to fill his place during that time.

Although the employment of a substitute cannot be made to support proof of damages in the absence of a specific allegation, it is admissible as a fact corroborative of the plaintiff's disability. Brachfeld v. Third Ave. R. Co. 30 Misc. 425, 62 N. Y. Supp. 470.

In Denison & S. R. Co. v. Powell, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 454, 80 S. W. 1054, it was held that there was no error in the action of the trial court overruling the objections of the defendant to the admission of the testimony of the plaintiff's wife that the plaintiff kept hired help to do the household work as long as he was able, and that afterwards her husband and children did the most of it, as this testimony tended to corroborate her other testimony showing that she was unable to do her household work.

But damages for decreased earning capacity of a traveling salesman by reason of an accident cannot be based on the facts that he was made lame thereby, and could not visit his customers as readily, and that he had to employ an assistant, where it does not appear what he earned under these conditions. Diamond Rubber Co. v. Harryman, 41 Colo. 415, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 775, 92 Pac. 922.

In Paquin v. St. Louis & Suburban R. Co. 90 Mo. App. 119, it was held that it was not competent for the plaintiff to introduce evidence of what he had paid others to perform the same services in carrying on his business that he would have performed but for the injury. But it is pointed out in Welmeyer v. St. Louis Transit Co. supra, that in the Paquin Case there was an entire absence from the petition of any allegation with respect to loss of earnings.

Amount paid substitute as a disbursement.

In a number of actions for personal in-ue of men's time are admitted, there is no reason why the whole actual difference should not be recognized. To this extent a tortfeasor takes the risk of the value of what he destroys." It is, however, to be remembered, as often pointed out, that such inquiries are descriptive only of the plaintiff's loss of earning power, and the estimated income based upon previous earnings, which if it had not been for the injury, he probably would have received, cannot as such be considered an element of damages. The principle upon which these decisions rest is that the plaintiff can recover only for the loss or impairment of his productive power as an individual, which may be ascertained and estimated according to the nature and scope of his employment, calling, or profession. If, in the case at bar, the plaintiff's physical or mental disability, or both combined, prevented him from performing his accustomed work, whether it consisted in manual labor or the discharge, in combination with such labor, of the duties required to manage the business, as skillfully as before, it was competent in proof of damages for him to introduce evidence of the nature and extent of his employment, with the importance of his personal oversight, in order that the jury might be able to estimate the fair value of all the services out of which he acquired a livelihood, and of which he had been deprived. Ballou v. Farnum, 11 Allen, 73, 79; George v. Haverhill, 110 Mass. 506; Turner v. Boston & M. R. Co. 158 Mass. 261, 266, 33 N. E. 520; Harmon v. Old Colony R. Co. 168 juries, it has been held or assumed without discussion that the plaintiff is entitled upon proper pleadings to recover as a part of his disbursements or damage, the wages he was obliged to pay to a substitute during his confinement or incapacity. The Joseph Stickney, 31 Fed. 156; Ashcraft v. Chapman, 38 Conn. 230; White v. People's R. Co. 6 Penn. (Del.) 476, 72 Atl. 1059; Chicago v. Hoy, 75 Ill. 530; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Zeiger, 182 Ill. 9, 74 Am. St. Rep. 157, 54 N. E. 1006; Sachra v. Manilla, 120 Iowa, 562, 95 N. W. 198; Williams v. Edmunds, 75 Mich. 92, 42 N. W. 534; Schreck v. Jersey City, H. & P. Street R. Co. (N. J. L.) 55 Atl. 650; Munk v. Watertown, 67 Hun, 261, 22 N. Y. Supp. 227; Friedman v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 52 Misc. 477, 102 N. Y. Supp. 525; Gumb v. Twenty-Third Street R. Co. 26 Jones & S. 1, 30 N. Y. S. R. 253, 9 N. Y. Supp. 316; Moran v. New York City R. Co. 94 N. Y. Supp. 302; Willis v. Second Ave. Traction Co. 189 Pa. 430, 42 Atl. 1; Olin v. Bradford, supra.

So, in North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Zeiger, supra, it was held that the expense necessarily incurred by a plaintiff disabled because of the negligence of the defendant, in procuring competent help in his business, to do the work which he would have performed by himself had he not been disabled, was a proper subject of allowance for damages in an action for the injuries.

And one who, because of an injury caused by the negligence of a railroad company, is compelled to employ help, is entitled to recover whatever the help cost. Willis v. Second Ave. Traction Co. supra.

So, the amount paid by a farmer injured by the negligence of the defendant, for labor on his farm while he was disabled, which he himself otherwise would have performed, is a proper element of damages, as an expense necessarily incurred as a result of the injuries. Ashcraft v. Chapman, supra.

But a recovery cannot be had both for the amount paid to substitutes and for the value of the time of the person injured.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Indianapolis & M. Rapid Transit Co. v. Reeder, 42 Ind. App. 520, 85 N. E. 1042; Kendall v. Albia, 73 Iowa, 241, 34 N. W. 833; Blackman v. Gardiner & P. Bridge, 75 Me. 214; Gumb v. Twenty-Third Street R. Co. supra.

So, in Indianapolis & M. Rapid Transit Co. v. Reeder, supra, which was an action by a husband for the loss of his wife's services, it was held that an instruction was erroneous by which the jury were required to allow the plaintiff both the value of the wife's services and the sums paid to the domestics who took her place in consequence of the injury.

And upon the question of the value of the plaintiff's time in his business, evidence that he had to hire someone to do his business, and that he paid him a certain amount per day, is not subject to the objection that it would allow the plaintiff to recover double damages, where the total amount paid to the substitute is not given, as in such a case the jury could have allowed him only nominal damages for the wages of such substitute. Kendall v. Albia, supra.

So, in Blackman v. Gardiner & P. Bridge, supra, it was held that the law would not allow the plaintiff to recover for her own loss of time and loss of capacity to labor, and, in addition thereto, recover what she had been obliged to pay a domestic to supply that loss of labor.

The cost of hiring substitutes being a special damage, no recovery is allowable unless it is expressly pleaded and proved. Nelson v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 113 Mo. App. 659, 88 S. W. 781; Gumb v. Twenty-Third Street R. Co. 114 N. Y. 411, 21 N. E. 993; Haszlacher v. Third Ave. R. Co. 26 Misc. 865, 56 N. Y. Supp. 380; Brachfeld v. Third Ave. R. Co. supra.

Nor is a recovery allowable for money paid to substitutes where the reasonable value of the services of the substitutes is not shown, nor is it shown that such help was necessary. Costello v. New York City R. Co. 91 N. Y. Supp. 23.

W. M. G.

Mass. 377, 47 N. E. 100; Finken v. Elm City Brass Co. 73 Conn. 423, 47 Atl. 670; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Dale, 76 Pa. 47, 49; Silsby v. Michigan Car Co. 95 Mich. 204, 54 N. W. 761; Moore v. Kalamazoo, 109 Mich. 176, 66 N. W. 1089; Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 264, 48 Am. Rep. 622; Wallace v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 195 Pa. 127, 52 L.R.A. 33, 45 Atl. 685; District of Columbia v. Woodbury, 136 U. S. 450, 459, 34 L. ed. 472, 475, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 990; Phillips v. London & S. W. R. Co. L. R. 5 C. P. Div. 286, 290, s. c. L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. 78, 81, 87, 8 Eng. Rul. Cas. 447, L. R. 4 Q. B. Div. 406, 408.

In further proof of his personal incapacity, but not as an independent element of recovery, the plaintiff also could show that for some months he was compelled to employ servants to perform work formerly done by himself. Ballou v. Farnum, 11 Allen, 73; Rooney v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 173 Mass. 222, 53 N. E. 435; Silsby v. Michigan Car Co. 95 Mich. 209, 54 N. W. 761; District of Columbia v. Woodbury, supra. In Macon Consol. Street R. Co. v. Barnes, 113 Ga. 212, 38 S. E. 756, it was further held that evidence of the amount paid for such services was also admissible. But we are unable to adopt this view. It was the plaintiff's own earning power which is to be ascertained and valued. The cost of the services of these employees being contingent upon the wages they could command, which would depend upon their competency or upon the sum the plaintiff's necessity might have compelled him to pay, evidence of the compensation demanded or received by them had no substantial tendency to measure the diminution of the plaintiff's ability either to perform labor or to conduct his business in person, and should have been excluded. Ballou v. Farnum, supra; Braithwaite v. Hall, 168 Mass. 38, 46 N. E. 398. It may be true, as the plaintiff urges, that when viewed with all the testimony relating to his injuries, to which no exceptions were taken, this evidence had little or no effect in the enhancement of damages, yet we are unable to say that it was manifestly so immaterial as not to have increased the verdict.

The exceptions must be sustained, but as the defendant admits there was evidence for the jury of its liability, the new trial will be limited to damages only. Whipple v. Rich, 180 Mass. 477, 63 N. E. 5. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND, & PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

DALPHUS EASTHAM et al.

(— Okla. —, 110 Pac. 887.)

Mail — legal papers — delay beyond filing time — effect.

In an action filed in a county court, the answer day was July 21, 1908. July 20, 1908, counsel for defendant in another county deposited in the United States postoffice, postage paid, an envelop addressed to the clerk of the county court, containing a motion directed to plaintiff's petition. In due and regular course of mail, the said motion would have reached its destination in time, but, by reason of the miscarriage of the mail, the same was delayed, and arrived a day late. At the time of its arrival, the court was engaged in trying the cause. Counsel for defendant, prior to the conclusion of the trial, and the rendition of judgment, asked leave to file the motion, which was by the court denied, and judgment rendered as on default. Counsel for defendant filed a motion for a new trial, alleging accident and surprise, setting up the foregoing facts with a showing of defense to plaintiff's action. This motion the court denied. Held, error.

(July 12, 1910.)

Headnote by DUNN, Ch. J.

Note. — Delay of mail or train or loss of mail, as accident or surprise for which judgment by default may be set aside.

The decision in CHICAGO, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. EASTHAM seems to be in accord with the general rule that where a party to an action has acted in good faith and with due diligence, a delay or loss in the mails or a delay of a train, resulting in his suffering a default judgment, is a cause for which such judgment may be set aside.

A case involving the same facts and holding as CHICAGO, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. EASTHAM, and decided by the same court at the same time, is Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Reese (Okla.) 110 Pac. 1071; and another case involving a similar situation is Corning v. Tripp, 1 How. Pr. 14, set out in the opinion to CHICAGO, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. EASTHAM, where, defendant's attorney having duly and properly mailed to the clerk of the court an answer, which, in the ordinary course of mail, should have been received within two days and in ample time, but was not received until seven days later, one day after judgment had been entered by default, the default was set aside, and defendant permitted, on terms, to come in and defend.

ERROR to the Coal County Court to review a judgment in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover damages caused by the inundation of plaintiffs' lands, which was alleged to have been caused by the obstruction by defendant of a natural water course. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. G. Ralls, for plaintiff in error:

It was the duty of the trial court to consider the grounds alleged for a new trial, and to overrule the motion pro forma requires the appellate court to look into the questions of facts.

Leavenworth, L. & G. R. Co. v. Cook, 18 Kan. 271; Manhattan, A. & B. R. Co. v. Keeler, 32 Kan. 163, 4 Pac. 143; Larabee v. Hall, 50 Kan. 311, 31 Pac. 1062; Smith v. Benton, 54 Kan. 708, 39 Pac. 701.

The action of the county court was arbitrary and pro forma.

Leavenworth, L. & G. R. Co. v. Cook, and Manhattan, A. & B. R. Co. v. Keeler, supra;

So, also, in Boyd v. Williams, 70 N. J. L. 185, 56 Atl. 135, a judgment by default was opened for the purpose of letting the defendant in to plead, where a plea was prepared and verified and duly mailed to the clerk of the court in time for filing within the time limited by law, but was lost in the mails.

And where defendant's attorney, three days before the expiration of the statutory time to answer, forwarded by express, under a special agreement with the express agent, no United States mail being then established there, a letter containing a demurrer to be filed, which should have been carried through and delivered for filing in one day, but, through delay of the express agent, was not delivered until one day after the time for answering had expired, there was held to be no abuse of discretion of the court below in setting aside the default judgment. Loeb v. Schmith, 1 Mont. 87.

In Williams v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 110 N. C. 466, 15 S. E. 97, set out in the opinion to CHICAGO, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. EASTHAM, a delay in the transmission of papers "by railway mail, a method of transmission of papers and letter through baggage masters, universally adopted by this and other railroads, and usually safe and reliable," was one circumstance among several, during the course of the handling of a summons by many different agents of the defendant, in accordance with its system, leading to a failure to appear and answer in time, and resulting in a default judgment, which, upon the facts shown, was set aside for surprise and excusable neglect, the court finding that "the default was occasioned by unavoidable accident."

Where, in a case involving a large sum of money, an amended complaint, after a demurrer had been sustained on appeal, was mailed to defendant's attorney, and in due course of the mails should have reached him 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Larabee v. Hall, 50 Kan. 311, 31 Pac. 1062; Smith v. Benton, 54 Kan. 708, 39 Pac. 701.

Messrs. C. O. Blake, Thomas R. Beaman, and Fooshee & Brunson also for plaintiff in error.

Mr. D. H. Linebaugh, for defendants in error.

Dunn, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was begun on June 25, 1908, by R. M. Eastham, as plaintiff, against the Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific Railway Company, as defendant, in the county court of Coal county, Oklahoma. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and the defendant appealed the case to this court. While pending here, suggestion of the death of the plaintiff was made, and by stipulation the case is revived by Dalphus Eastham and Arthur Eastham, as the sole and only heirs at law of R. M. Eastham, deceased. In the petition filed by the said decedent, it was in two or three days, but was not received until a month later, when, supposing that it had come in due course, the postmark not showing otherwise, and neither the defendant nor his grantees having received notice of the amended complaint, the attorney served a demurrer within ten days and within what he supposed was the required time, but after judgment by default had been entered, it was held that the defendant's default should be set aside, under a statute providing that a party may be relieved from a judgment taken against him through mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. Malone v. Big Flat Gravel Min. Co. 93 Cal. 384, 28 Pac. 1063.

So, a default judgment entered against a defendant after the overruling of his demurrer to the complaint will be set aside where it appears that a regular notice of overruling the demurrer and of time to answer was given by mail, addressed to one of the members of the firm of attorneys representing the defendant, but was never received, and neither that member nor the firm nor the defendant had any notice of the overruling of the demurrer or knowledge that the court had passed thereon, until after judgment had been entered upon default. Clark v. Oyharzabal, 129 Cal. 328, 61 Pac. 1119.

Where an attorney whom defendant had employed to be present when the cause was called for trial, and procure, if possible, a continuance, took a train in time to reach the place of trial the evening before the case was called, but was detained in consequence of an unavoidable accident on the railroad, the court, on appeal from an order setting aside the default judgment, said: "This shows a perfectly satisfactory reason why he did not reach the place of trial until after the cause was reached and judgment rendered." Omro v. Ward, 19 Wis. 233.

alleged, in substance, that plaintiff was the owner of lot No. 2 in block No. 27, in the city of Coalgate, together with all the improvements thereon; that the defendant company, subsequent to the acquisition by plaintiff of this property, constructed a branch line of railroad from near its Coalgate station to the city of Lehigh, and in the construction of said road erected a heavy embankment of dirt from 6 to 8 feet high, which filled up and stopped a natural water course about two blocks east of the property mentioned; that this embankment during the months of April, May, and June, 1908, and at other times, caused the water naturally flowing in this stream to accumulate, back up, spread out, inundate, and cover plaintiff's property, which was his home; and that the water compelled him to abandon the same,—all of which acts resulted in damages in an amount averred to be $750. Summons was issued and served upon the defendant requiring it to answer on or before the 21st of July, 1908. The defendant company having failed to answer or otherwise plead, on July 22, 1908, counsel for plaintiff filed a motion asking that judgment be rendered against the defendant as on default, and that the court impanel a jury for the purpose of assessing damages. This motion was by the court, at 2 P. M. on the said 22d of July, 1908, sustained, and the plaintiff, after waving a jury, requested the court to hear the evidence and assess the damages, which was done, and a judgment was rendered for plaintiff in the sum of $745. In the transcript before us immediately following the recital of judgment, there appears a paper entitled "motion to require the plaintiff to make his petition more definite and certain," and which sets out in detail wherein the petition of plaintiff is averred to be indefinite and uncertain. This paper appears to be indorsed: "2:40 P. M., refused to file for the reason that it was offered during the trial and before judgment. R. H. Wells, County Judge. July 22, 1908. Filed at 4 P. M. after judgment rendered by court. J. F. Threadgill, Ex Officio Clerk of County Court." On the same day counsel for defendant filed a motion to set aside and vacate the default judgment entered, in which was set up a number of grounds tending to show accident and surprise which prevented counsel from having filed, prior to the expiration of the statutory time, the motion last above referred to. Within three days thereafter and on July 25, 1908, counsel for defendant filed a motion for a new trial setting up the statutory grounds, and thereafter filed a paper entitled "amendments to motion for a new trial," which is merely a statement in detail of the grounds for the same.

This showing is verified, and one of the paragraphs thereof is as follows: "The court was informed prior to entering judg-

And in Smith v. Rawlings, 83 Va. 674, 3 S. E. 238, set out in the opinion in CHICAGO, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. EASTHAM, where it appeared that plaintiff started for court in time to have reached there before the trial of his case, but failed to arrive in time by reason of delays in trains and their failure to connect, it was held that a verdict found in his absence for defendant should have been set aside and a new trial granted, as "his failure to reach the court in time should be imputed to an accident which he could not foresee."

In Williams v. Kessler, 82 Ind. 183, however, it was held that plaintiff did not show a legal cause for having his default and a judgment against him set aside, where he was delayed on his way to the place of trial by a failure to make train connections, but thereafter could have arrived in time if he had not stopped off to get a witness with whom he had arranged to meet the earlier train, which he had expected to be on, and to go with him.

And where it appears that defendant's answer containing affirmative matter as a defense was duly served on the clerk during term time, and immediately mailed to plaintiff's attorney, who resided outside the county, but on account of delay in the mail was not received by them until the day before the last for pleading thereto, and too late for them so to plead within the time required, it was held in Payne v. Savage, 51 Or. 463, 94 Pac. 750, that there was not such an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court as will be disturbed on appeal, in its refusing to set aside a judgment for defendant on the pleadings, on the ground that it was taken against the plaintiff by mistake, surprise, inadvertence, and excusable neglect, as plaintiff's attorneys were negligent in not appearing within the time for pleading to the answer, as required by statute and the rules and the practice of the court, "and the excuse offered was not such as to require the court, in exercise of a sound discretion, to relieve them from the consequences."

So, in Meadows v. Hudson, 90 Ark. 294, 119 S. W. 269, where defendant's attorney had conducted the trial of the case in defendant's absence, and judgment had gone against him, it was held that the appellate court could not say that the trial court erred in a matter addressed to its discretion, in refusing to grant defendant a new trial because of "accident," upon his showing, as a reason for his absence from the trial, that his attorney had agreed to notify him of the date his case was set for trial, and had duly mailed him a letter for that purpose, at least, a week before the date set, but that such letter had been lost in the mail, and he had never received it.

A. C. W.

ment that the general attorney for the defendant had mailed to the clerk of said court pleadings to be filed, and had mailed same in time for them to have reached said court on the answer day, and, this case not being set for trial, the court should have given reasonable time for said pleadings to reach its destination, and defendant shows that in truth and in fact in cases pending in the county court of Coal county, Oklahoma, it is the duty of the general attorney, C. O. Blake, and his assistant, Thomas R. Beaman, to prepare all pleadings to be filed in court, and that the local attorneys, Fooshee & Brunson, had no authority to prepare such pleadings, and are not general attorneys for this defendant, but only act under special direction from the general attorney; that said pleadings were prepared by the said Thomas R. Beaman, and deposited in the United States postoffice at El Reno, Oklahoma, about 6 o'clock P. M. on the 20th day of July, 1908; that in due course of mail the same should have arrived at Coalgate at 12:45 P. M. on the 21st of July, 1908, going from El Reno to Oklahoma City on the Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific, and from Oklahoma City to Coalgate on the Missouri, Kansas, & Texas; that the mail was making said time regularly, and defendant had a right to and did rely upon said mail making said time; and that, if it did not, it is not the fault of this defendant. Defendant says that said pleading was a motion to require said plaintiff to make his petition more definite and certain by paragraphing his different causes of action, and by stating the dates of the alleged overflow, and alleging the value of the various items for which he claims damages; that such pleading should have been sustained, and the plaintiff should have been required to have amended his petition in conformity therewith. The defendant says that it inclosed said motion with a letter in an envelop together with a general motion in the case of O. T. Reese v. this defendant, and addressed said envelop to the clerk of the county court, Coal county, Oklahoma, and that said envelop containing said pleadings was placed in the outgoing mail by the postmaster at El Reno at 8:30 P. M. July 20, 1908, as shown by the original envelop, which is attached to the defendant's motion to set aside and vacate default judgment, which was filed July 22, 1908, and marked 'Exhibit A;' and defendant says that said envelop containing said motion and letters, in due course of the mail, should have been received by the clerk of this court not later than 1:30 P. M. the 21st day of July, 1908, and should have been filed on said day; and defendant says that it is informed that said envelop did not reach Coalgate until after said hour, and that, on examination of the back of said envelop, the same appears to be stamped as follows: 'Coalgate, Okl., Jul. 22 8 a m 1908.' And defendant says that said envelop had been carried by Coalgate to Atoka, by an oversight of the mail clerk, and returned to Coalgate on the evening of the 21st day of July; and defendant says that this was an unavoidable accident which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against." And further that "the plaintiff was the only witness in his behalf, and he, for the purpose of deceiving the court, falsely testified that the damages to the house and orchard were about $250, and that a reasonable value of the lot with the orchard before the railroad was constructed was $450, and that after its construction it was of no value at all, and that the damage to the household effects and the house was $200, when in truth and in fact said lot was not worth over $50 and said house was not worth over $75, and that the damage to the said house was not over $10, if anything, when in truth and in fact there was no damage done to the said household effects of said plaintiff,—all of which the plaintiff well knew at the time he was so testifying, and defendant says that plaintiff so testified for the purpose of perpetrating a fraud not only upon this defendant, but upon the court." In support of the proposition last noted, there was filed a number of affidavits of parties living in and around Coalgate. The court denied both the motion to set aside the judgment and the motion for a new trial. Counsel for defendant prepared, had allowed, and filed a bill of exceptions making the matters hereinbefore referred to a part of the record, and have brought the same to this court on transcript, and we are asked to review and reverse the action of the trial court.

30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In the case of Corning v. Tripp, 1 How. Pr. 14, it appears that counsel for defendant mailed his answer to the clerk of the court. He placed the same in the postoffice, prepaying the postage thereon. In the ordinary course of mail it would have reached the clerk two days thereafter, but the same was not received by the clerk until seven days thereafter. On the day before it was received, judgment was entered for the plaintiff by default. The court, on a showing of these facts by the defendant, opened the case and allowed him to plead.

The case of Williams v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 110 N. C. 466, 15 S. E. 97, was a case wherein judgment was entered by default, and was afterwards set aside by the supreme court of North Carolina upon a showing of facts as follows: "The summons was served July 7th, on the station agent at Goldsboro, and by him duly forwarded to the headquarters of the company at Atlanta, according to regulations, by the managing officer delivered to the general southern counsel, and by them, on July 18, 1891, all the papers were sent to David Schenck, the counsel of the North Carolina division. That by mistake the papers were sent to Mr. Cothran, the counsel for the South Carolina division, along with papers in two other cases. On July 20th, fifteen days before court met, Mr. Cothran sent the papers to Mr. Schenck, but by some mischance the papers were not received by Mr. Schenck until the night of August 4th. That these papers were sent by railway mail, a method of transmission of papers and letters through baggage masters, universally adopted by this and other railroads, and usually safe and reliable. That Mr. Schenck was sick when the papers were received, but on the next day sent the papers to F. H. Busbee, who was an attorney, resident in Raleigh, North Carolina, having charge of the business of the Richmond & Danville Railroad in eastern North Carolina, including Duplin county. That Mr. Busbee had left Raleigh, by the advice of a physician, the day the papers were sent, August 5th, and did not receive them. That if he had been in Raleigh on August 5th, he could not have reached Duplin court by August 6th, at noon. That as soon as the fact of Mr. Busbee's absence was communicated to Mr. Schenck by wire, he telegraphed Mr. I. F. Dortch, local attorney of the company at Goldsboro, to repair to Duplin court, but the court had adjourned the same day the message was received. Upon these facts the court adjudged that the default was occasioned by unavoidable accident, and ordered that the judgment by default be vacated, and that the defendant be allowed to file an answer or demurr." The court in the consideration of that case said: "It must be remembered that the effect of the decision of this court is to strike out a judgment rendered under a technical rule, and allow the defendant to answer, so that the case may be tried hereafter by a jury upon its merits. If, therefore, the court has done more than justice to a corporation, an impartial jury of the country can be trusted, with the aid of a judge, to apply the law to the facts, and determine whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover at all, as well as fix the amount of damage, if any, that shall be awarded. I am unable to perceive how a grievous wrong can be done to the plaintiff by leaving the merits of his cause to be reached by the ancient method of trial by a jury of the country. . . . The right to relief against a judgment rendered under a technical rule of practice must not be made to depend solely upon the movements of the sand in the hourglass, or the uncertain progress of the judge in disposing of the docket, but upon sound principles of equity and justice. Where there is doubt as to the proper method of disposing of such an application, it is always safe, when it can be done without violating the law, to have an action tried upon its merits, rather than determined upon a technicality."

In the case of Smith v. Rawlings, 83 Va. 674, 3 S. E. 238, it appeared that when the case was called for trial, counsel for Smith moved for a continuance because Smith desired to be a witness on his own behalf and was absent. This motion was overruled, and the case proceeded with. Two days thereafter Smith appeared in court and filed an affidavit in which he stated: "That he had started for Amherst Courthouse on the morning of the 10th of April, 1884, the first day of the term, on the Richmond & Alleghany Railroad, to connect at Lynchburg with a train running to Amherst Courthouse; that the train on the Richmond & Allegheny Railroad failed to connect at Lynchburg, the early freight train having just left; and that he then took the next train, which started at 10:30 o'clock A. M.; but that this last-named train was delayed on the route; and that when he reached Amherst Courthouse the trial was over." In the consideration of these facts the court said: "The failure of Smith to attend at the trial cannot fairly be imputed to negligence on his part. He started for court in time to have reached there before the case was tried, we may safely assume from the failure of the record to disprove it, if the trains on the Richmond & Allegheny Railroad had not failed to connect at Lynchburg with the train running to Amherst Courthouse. He then took the next train for that place, and but for its being delayed on the route, it seems probable that he would have reached court before the trial had ended. In any event, he, the plaintiff in error, seems to have used reasonable and proper efforts to attend the trial, and his failure to reach the court in time should be imputed to an accident which he could not foresee, rather than negligence on his part."

The uncontroverted showing made in the record before us is that, had there been no miscarriage in the mail, the motion prepared by counsel would have reached Coalgate at about noon of the 21st day of July, 1908, instead of the next day. The record shows that defendant's motion reached the hands of the court during the taking of the evidence, and prior to the rendition of judgment, and on the reasoning of the foregoing cases we hold the court erred in the exercise of its discretion in denying to defendant the right to file it, and be heard upon it, and in proceeding to render judgment as was done. No testimony was taken on the hearing except that of plaintiff, and the affidavits filed show conclusively that plaintiff's recovery is far in excess of his damage. Every litigant is entitled to his day in court. Being free from fault no mere accident should foreclose against plaintiff his right to have his claim against the defendant tried and determined; but the scales of justice should be held in equipoise, and the defendant is likewise entitled to have its day in court, and to have its defense against the claim of plaintiff heard, and no accident not its fault should foreclose this right on its part.

The cause is accordingly remanded to the County Court of Coal County, with instructions to set aside the judgment heretofore entered, and allow defendant to file its motion.

Turner, Williams, Kane, and Hayes, JJ., concur.

SOUTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

GEORGE H. MONTAGUE, Appt.,
v.

INEZ MAY MONTAGUE, Respnt.

(— S. D. —, 127 N. W. 639.)

Marriage — annulment — residence in state.

Statutes prescribing a term of residence in actions for divorce do not apply to actions for annulment of marriage.

(May 24, 1910.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Circuit Court for Lincoln County sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to annul a marriage. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Joseph Mitchell Donovan, for appellant:

The statutory provisions on divorce have no application to suits to annul a marriage.

Price v. Price, 124 N. Y. 589, 12 L.R.A. 359, 27 N. E. 383; Berry v. Berry, 130 App. Div. 53, 114 N. Y. Supp. 497; Conrad v. Conrad, 124 App. Div. 780, 109 N. Y. Supp. 387; Erkenbrach v. Erkenbrach, 96 N. Y. 456; Burtis v. Burtis, Hopk. Ch. 557, 14 Am. Dec. 563; Griffin v. Griffin, 47 N. Y. 138; Ensign v. Ensign, 54 Misc. 289, 105 N. Y. Supp. 917; de Meli v. de Meli, 120 N. 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Y. 485, 17 Am. St. Rep. 652, 24 N. E. 996; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 63 Misc. 580, 117 N. Y. Supp. 671; Livingston v. Livingston, 173 N. Y. 389, 61 L.R.A. 800, 93 Am. St. Rep. 600, 66 N. E. 123; Avakian v. Avakian, 69 N. J. Eq. 89, 60 Atl. 521; 26 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 87.

Mr. William G. Porter, for respondent:

The term "divorce" was intended to include nullity suits.

Piper v. Piper, 46 Wash. 671, 91 Pac. 189; Wilson v. Wilson, 95 Minn. 464, 104 N. W. 300.

Smith, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff brought an action in the circuit court of Lincoln county for annulment of marriage. The complaint states, in substance, that plaintiff had been a bona fide resident in good faith of the state of South Dakota for a period of more than six months next preceding the commencement of the action, and at the time of the commencement

Note. — Local domicil or residence as a condition of jurisdiction of action for annulment of marriage.

It will be observed that the question is not whether jurisdiction of a suit to annul a marriage may rest upon local domicil, but whether a local domicil or residence is a necessary condition of the jurisdiction, including the point as to the length of the domicil or residence necessary for that purpose.

Most of the cases cited in this note seem to assume that a local domicil, or at least a local residence, at the time the action is commenced, is a condition of jurisdiction of an action to annul a marriage.

But in Simonin v. Mallac (1860) 2 Swabey & T. 67, the fact that the ceremony was performed in England, between persons domiciled in France, was held in itself sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the English courts of a suit for nullity, irrespective of the domicil of the parties at the time of the suit. As a matter of fact, however, the petitioner (the woman) was actually residing in England at the time of the suit, and England was her domicil if the marriage was not valid.

In Avakian v. Avakian, 69 N. J. Eq. 89, 60 Atl. 521, the defendant having appeared by solicitor and answered the bill without taking any exception either to the jurisdiction of the subject-matter or of his person, the vice chancellor said that under the circumstances he was not sure that any residence on the part of complainant within the state was essential to the jurisdiction of a court of New Jersey to entertain a suit to annul the marriage, remarking in this connection that such a suit is not limited by the terms of the divorce statute as to residence, etc., but is based on the original inherent and general jurisdiction of the court over questions arising out of contract thereof was a citizen and elector of the state of South Dakota; that plaintiff and defendant entered into a form of marriage in the state of New York on the 17th day of May, 1907; that the marriage was procured by fraud of the defendant, and was voidable under the laws of New York, and is likewise voidable under the laws of the state of South Dakota; that plaintiff would not have entered into said marriage but for the fraudulent representations of defendant, and that the parties have not lived together since the discovery of the fraud; that four years have not elapsed since the discovery of the fraud. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that the complaint shows that the plaintiff had not been a resident of the state of South Dakota for one year, and of the county of Lincoln for three months, prior to the commencement of the action. The contention of the defendant is that chapter 132, Laws S. D. 1907, relating to residence in divorce actions, applies to a suit to annul marriage. The court having sustained the demurrer, plaintiff brings the action to this court for review.

The question presented by the record is whether a residence of one year in the state is a jurisdictional prerequisite to maintaining an action for the annulment of a marriage. No other question is presented. Section 1, chapter 132, Sess. Laws 1907, provides: "Section 1. Plaintiff in an action for a divorce must have been an actual resident in good faith of this state for one year, and of the county where such action is commenced for three months, next preceding the commencement of said action, except as herein otherwise provided." The other provisions of the statute have no relevancy to the question presented here. There is no statute of this state specifically prescribing a period of residence in actions for annulment of marriage. The marriage contract and the annulment of marriage are treated under article 1 of part 3 of the Civil Code, while divorce is treated in article 2 of the same chapter as a distinct action. The fundamental distinction between the annulment of a marriage contract and its dissolution by divorce is very well stated in § 566, Nelson on Divorce & Separation: "The term 'divorce' in its accurate sense denotes a dissolution or suspension by law of the marital relation. As a legal term and unaided by context, it means a dissolution of the bonds of matrimony. When a marriage is dissolved, the action of the court proceeds upon proof that a valid marriage existed and created rights and liabilities. The decree of divorce usually proceeds to make a final adjustment of these liabilities. The decree of annulment declares, in effect, that no valid marriage ever existed, and restores the parties to their former position, and relieves them from civil and criminal liability. The decree of divorce operates from the time it is rendered, but the nullity inter partes. The case next cited was distinguished upon the ground that the defendant was not personally subject to the jurisdiction of the court, and that, without a domicile of the complainant, there was no such res in the state as would give the court jurisdiction to proceed against the defendant in the absence of service within the jurisdiction. As a matter of fact, however, the court in the Avakian Case seems to have been of the opinion that the complainant was not only residing in New Jersey, but was domiciled there.

In Blumenthal v. Tannenholz, 31 N. J. Eq. 194, referred to in the last case, the jurisdiction of a court of New Jersey of a suit to annul for fraud a marriage celebrated in New Jersey was denied upon the ground that neither of the parties was domiciled in New Jersey, the defendant, who was served by publication, not being even a resident of New Jersey, and the domicile of the plaintiff, who was a minor, being constructively in Canada, where her parents were domiciled, although she appears to have been residing in New Jersey at the time suit was brought. The decision is expressly referred to the ground that the jurisdiction rests upon a local domicile of at least one of the parties at the time the suit is commenced.

In Roberts v. Brennan [1902] P. 143, the president of the probate division declared 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that in his opinion the jurisdiction of suits of nullity depends on residence, and not upon domicile, and, accordingly, pronounced a judgment of nullity against respondent, whose domicile was Irish, the ceremony having taken place in the Isle of Man. Apparently, neither the petitioner nor respondent was domiciled in England, though presumably one or both were actually residing there.

In Barney v. Cunes, 68 Vt. 51, 33 Atl. 897, the court quotes with approval the statement in Bishop on Marriage, Divorce, & Separation, § 73, that a suit to declare a marriage void from the beginning may and should be carried on in the courts of the domicile. In this case, however, the petitioner was domiciled in the state both at the time of the pretended marriage and at the time suit was brought, so that there was in reality no question as to the necessity of a local domicile.

And in Hall v. Hall, 67 Misc. 267, 122 N. Y. Supp. 401 (reversed on another ground in 123 N. Y. Supp. 1118), the court disposed of the contention that it was without jurisdiction, by the statement that both parties to the action were residents of the state when the action was commenced, and that it was immaterial that the marriage sought to be annulled was celebrated in another state.

In Mitchell v. Mitchell, 63 Misc. 580, 117 decree relates back to the time the void marriage was entered into." Under the provisions of § 61, Civil Code, a marriage may be annulled by an action in the circuit court "for any of the following causes existing at the time of the marriage." The statute then specifies six separate grounds upon which a marriage may be annulled, each of which relates to causes existing at or prior to the time of the marriage. Section 67 of the Civil Code provides that divorces may be granted "for any of the following causes," and then specifies six grounds for divorce, each of which relates to the conduct of the parties subsequent to the marriage contract. Section 62 of the Civil Code prescribes a distinct period of limitation within which an action for annulment must be commenced, and prescribes a distinct and different period of limitation for each of the six grounds or causes for annulment. The only limitation as to the time within which actions for divorce may be begun is found in § 84 of the Civil Code, which provides that a divorce must be denied when there is an unreasonable lapse of time before commencement of the action, defines what is an unreasonable lapse of time, and further provides that the presumption arising from lapse of time may be rebutted by showing reasonable grounds for the delay in commencing the action. Section 85 provides: "There is no limitation of time for commencing actions for divorce, except such as are contained in the foregoing § 84." Section 29 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "The circuit court possesses chancery as well as common-law jurisdiction." In 26 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 908, ¶ 2, it is said: "A court of chancery, in the exercise of its ordinary powers and jurisdiction, and without the authority of a statute, may take jurisdiction of a suit to annul a marriage where the cause alleged is one of the well-known grounds on which equity gives relief in cases of contract, such as fraud, error, duress, or mental incapacity." The grounds upon which a marriage may be annulled in a court of chancery are clearly defined by text writers and the decisions of the various chancery courts, and an examination of the decisions and rules thus recognized makes it entirely clear that the provisions of § 61 of the Civil Code, defining the causes for annulment of marriage, constitute simply a very clear, full, and exact codification of the rules established by the decisions of the chancery courts. From these decisions it is apparent that actions for the annulment of a marriage, and actions for divorce, are entirely separate and distinct in their grounds, object, and effect. A valid marriage creates a marriage "status," but a marriage which is void by reason of any of the matters specified as grounds for annulments in § 61 logically does not create the marriage "status."

In the case of Avakian v. Avakian, 69 N. J. Eq. 89, 60 Atl. 521, an action to annul a marriage for duress, the court says: "But

N. Y. Supp. 671, upholding the jurisdiction of a court of New York to entertain a suit to annul a marriage celebrated in Canada, the parties were domiciled in New York both at the time of the marriage and at the time of the suit, so that there was no question as to the necessity of a local domicile or residence in order to sustain the jurisdiction. And that is also true of Bater v. Bater, 21 Times L. R. 517.

It will be observed that in MONTAGUE v. MONTAGUE, also, the plaintiff was domiciled in, or was at least a resident of, the state at the time the action was brought; and the question was simply whether the statutory provisions prescribing the term of local residence or domicile of a plaintiff in a divorce suit apply to a suit to annul a marriage, and, as there suggested, that question may be affected by the context and legislative history of the statutory provisions.

Thus, the decision in Wilson v. Wilson, 95 Minn. 464, 104 N. W. 300, that the provision of § 4792 of the General Statutes of 1894, that no divorce shall be granted unless the complainant has resided in the state one year immediately preceding the time of exhibiting the complaint, is applicable to a suit to annul a void or voidable marriage under §§ 4785-4789, was influenced, if not controlled, by the consideration that chap. 62 of the General Statutes, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

bearing the general heading "Divorce," had its origin in chap. 66 of the Statutes of 1851, and, as originally enacted, contained the same general provisions as now exist under the general head "Divorce." The court said that it was not reasonable to suppose that the legislature intended to make any distinction when, at a later period, what is now § 4792 was added.

In Eliot v. Eliot, 77 Wis. 634, 10 L.R.A. 568, 46 N. W. 806, the court said that the statutory provision that "no divorce shall be granted unless the complainant shall have resided within this state one year immediately preceding the time of the commencement of the action" was undoubtedly applicable to an action to annul a marriage on the ground of nonage. There was no discussion of the point, however, and the decision was merely to the effect that the averments of the complaint in that respect were sufficient to satisfy the statute.

The decision in Piper v. Piper, 46 Wash. 671, 91 Pac. 189, that a statute providing for service by publication in actions for divorce authorizes such service in suits for annulment, is therefore not in point. As pointed out in MONTAGUE v. MONTAGUE, the two actions had been treated by the legislature together and as belonging to one subject.

J. D. C.

another important consideration intervenes. The jurisdiction of this court over the subject-matter of this cause is not based upon or derived from the divorce statute. Hence, it is not limited by any of the terms of that statute as to residence, etc. It is based on the original, inherent, and general jurisdiction of this court over questions arising out of contracts inter partes, and is exercised over contracts of marriage in which is found some vice inherent in their origin, precisely as in cases arising out of ordinary contract. . . . I shall add the suggestion that this action is not properly classified as a suit for a divorce, which is almost universally based upon some cause of action arising after the marriage, and which dissolves a valid marriage." In 1907 the New Jersey legislature passed an act requiring a residence in the state for one year in actions for annulment, while in divorce actions it requires a residence of two years. In some states, as in Minnesota and Washington, the statutes regulating divorce and annulment actions are contained in a single act. The statute in Washington (Rem. & Bal. Code, § 984) provides that "in divorce and nullity suits, the complainant must reside in the state for one year prior to suit." It is apparent, therefore, that the ruling in Piper v. Piper, 46 Wash. 671, 91 Pac. 189, is not pertinent to the question before us. The same statutory rule exists in West Virginia. Martin v. Martin, 54 W. Va. 301, 46 S. E. 120, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 612. In South Carolina there is no statutory provision whatever authorizing divorces, but the chancery courts of that state exercise jurisdiction to annul marriage as in other chancery or equity cases. Mattison v. Mattison, 1 Strobb. Eq. 387, 47 Am. Dec. 541. See Lawless v. Chamberlain, 18 Ont. Rep. 296.

In view of these well-settled rules, in the light of which the act of the legislative assembly must be construed, and which act in its terms applies only to actions for divorce, we are clearly of opinion that the act was not intended to, and does not, apply to actions for annulment of marriage. The order and judgment of the trial court are reversed.

VERMONT SUPREME COURT.

CORA E. CROMPTON, Appt.,
v.

ALBERT H. BEEDLE et al.

(83 Vt. 287, 75 Atl. 331.)

Sale — misrepresentation by purchaser — rescission.

1. A vendor of a farm may maintain a bill to secure a reconveyance, where he had 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

never seen the property and was ignorant of the fact that it contained valuable deposits of stone, and sold the property at one fifth of its value, upon the representation of the vendee, who desired to secure it for the value of the stone, that he knew the value of the property, and that it was only the amount paid; that the property was inaccessible, and that he desired to secure it for another purpose.

Same — negligence — effect.

2. That a sale induced by the fraudulent representations of the purchaser was made in pursuance of an option, and that, pending the option, the vendor made no effort to ascertain the truth of the representations, will not defeat a bill by the vendor to secure a reconveyance of the property, if the false representations were relied on in making the conveyance, and induced the vendor to forbear making an investigation.

Pleading — conflicting allegations — construction.

3. The allegation that a quarry is undeveloped does not conflict with another that it is of great value, so as to make demurrable a bill to annul a conveyance of the property secured by fraud.

Rescission — fraud — estoppel.

4. One who induces a sale of real property by fraudulent representations as to its value cannot avoid liability to reconvey, on the theory that the vendor has no right to rely on his representations.

(February 16, 1910.)

Note. — Effect of purchaser's concealment or misrepresentation of fact affecting the value of real estate.

I. Where vendor seeks affirmative relief.

a. Distinction between mere failure to disclose and fraudulent concealment, misrepresentation, etc., 748.

b. What amounts to a fraudulent concealment or misrepresentation.

1. Value, location, 750.

2. Valuable minerals, 751.

3. Interest of vendor, 753.

4. Miscellaneous, 753.

c. Failure to disclose, 754.

II. Where purchaser seeks specific performance, 755.

I. Where vendor seeks affirmative relief.

a. Distinction between mere failure to disclose and fraudulent concealment, misrepresentation, etc.,

While ordinarily the mere failure by the purchaser of real estate to disclose facts in his knowledge which materially enhance the value of real estate he is purchasing does not constitute fraud entitling the vendor to affirmative relief on the ground of fraud, yet the purchaser must say or do nothing to disarm the vendor, or induce

A PPEAL by oratrix from a decree of the Chancery Court for Orange County dismissing a bill filed to set aside a deed of certain lands, the execution of which by her was alleged to have been induced by fraud of defendants, the purchasers. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Clarence P. Cowles, Sherman R. Moulton, and March M. Wilson, for appellant:

Misrepresentations made for the purpose of inducing the person to whom made to forbear from investigation are fraudulent.

Haygarth v. Wearing, L. R. 12 Eq. 320; Morgan v. Dinges, 23 Neb. 271, 8 Am. St. Rep. 121, 36 N. W. 544; Mountain v. Day, 91 Minn. 249, 97 N. W. 883; Robinson v.

Reinhart, 137 Ind. 674, 36 N. E. 519; Burr v. Willson, 22 Minn. 206; McKnight v. Thompson, 39 Neb. 752, 58 N. W. 453; Simar v. Canaday, 53 N. Y. 298, 13 Am. Rep. 523; Chrysler v. Canaday, 90 N. Y. 272, 43 Am. Rep. 166; Andrews v. Jackson, 168 Mass. 266, 37 L.R.A. 402, 60 Am. St. Rep. 390, 47 N. E. 412; Medbury v. Watson, 6 Met. 247, 39 Am. Dec. 726; Parker v. Moulton, 114 Mass. 99, 19 Am. Rep. 316; Kimball v. Bangs, 144 Mass. 321, 11 N. E. 113; Boddy v. Henry, 126 Iowa, 31, 101 N. W. 447; Vernon v. Keyes, 12 East, 632; Gustafson v. Rustemeyer, 70 Conn. 125, 39 L.R.A. 644, 66 Am. St. Rep. 92, 39 Atl. 104; People v. Peckens, 153 N. Y. 576, 47 N. E. 887; Scott v. Haynes, 12 Mo. App. 597; Cox v. Gerkin, 38 Ill. App. 341; Bacon him to refrain from investigation, or otherwise prevent him from ascertaining the truth, since very slight circumstances in addition to intentional concealment are sufficient to constitute fraud entitling the vendor to affirmative relief. Stackpole v. Hancock, 40 Fla. 362, 45 L.R.A. 814, 24 So. 914; Akers v. Martin, 110 Ky. 335, 61 S. W. 465; Livingston v. Peru Iron Co. 2 Paige, 390, reversed on other grounds in 9 Wend. 511; Smith v. Beatty, 37 N. C. (2 Ired. Eq.) 466; 40 Am. Dec. 435; Turner v. Harvey, Jacob, 178; Dolman v. Nokes, 22 Beav. 402; Fox v. Mackreth, 2 Bro. Ch. 400.

Thus, in Turner v. Harvey, supra, Lord Eldon, adverting to the general principle that parties dealing for the purchase of real estate have a right to put each other at arm's length, and if the purchaser knows of facts enhancing the value of the property, and the vendor makes no inquiry with reference thereto, the former is not bound to give him information thereof, added: "But a very little is sufficient to affect the application of that principle; if a word, if a single word, be dropped which tends to mislead the vendor, that principle will not be allowed to operate."

In Dolman v. Nokes, supra, Sir John Romilly, the master of the rolls, remarked that it is not generally the duty of a purchaser to inform a vendor of any of the circumstances he may be acquainted with which may make it desirable for him to purchase, or make it available, still, if at the time of the purchase the purchaser makes an express statement of fact which causes the contract to be made, and on the faith of which alone the contract is made, and that fact is false, or if there is a fact which it is well known will prevent the contract, and this fact is suppressed by the purchaser for that reason, it may invalidate the whole transaction, depending upon the circumstances and facts of the case.

And in Livingston v. Peru Iron Co. supra, the lord chancellor, while conceding that the simple suppression by the buyer of a fact which materially enhanced the value of the property is not sufficient to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud, remarked that very slight circumstances in addition to the intentional concealment of a fact are sufficient to constitute a fraud upon the vendor.

Akers v. Martin, supra, while conceding the general rule that a purchaser of real estate does not commit a fraud upon the vendor by failing to communicate to him knowledge of facts of which the vendor is ignorant, and of which the purchaser is informed, which enhance the value of the property, held that if, in addition to the purchaser's silence, there was any statement, word, or act on his part which tended affirmatively to a suppression of the truth, covering up or disguising the truth, or to a withdrawal or distraction of the party's attention from the real facts, then the line is overstepped, and the concealment becomes fraud. Applying the doctrine, a purchaser of real estate who fraudulently represented that there was no timber of certain kinds upon land he was seeking to buy, which would enhance the value of the land, was held to commit a fraud upon a vendor selling in reliance upon such representations, against which a court of equity will relieve.

One of the leading cases on this subject is Fox v. Mackreth, supra. Although in this case there was evidence of actual fraud other than mere concealment, yet the latter question was also discussed. On this point Lord Chancellor Thurlow said: "Without insisting upon technical morality, I don't agree with those who say that where an advantage has been taken in a contract, which a man of delicacy would not have taken, it must be set aside. Suppose, for instance, that A, knowing there to be a mine in the estate of B, of which he knew B was ignorant, should enter into a contract to purchase the estate of B for the price of the estate without considering the mine, could the court set it aside? Why not, since B was not apprised of the mine, and A was? Because A, as the buyer, was not obliged, from the nature of the contract, to make the discovery. It is therefore essentially necessary, in order to set aside the transaction, not only that a great advantage should be taken, but it must arise from some obligation in the party to make the discovery. The court will not correct a contract merely because a man of nice honor would not have entered into it; it must fall within some definition of fraud; the rule must be drawn so as not to affect the general transactions of mankind." While the foregoing language supports the proposition that, in the absence of some confidential relation, mere concealment of a fact affecting the value of real estate will not ordinarily constitute fraud upon the part of the purchaser, it does not, however, support cases citing it, to the extent of holding that the fact of concealment, together with any other representation or conduct, to induce the sale, would not constitute fraud. Indeed, taking the language of the learned jurist as a whole, it is clear that he intended to limit the doctrine to cases involving the mere fact of concealment, for later in the opinion he added that if a stranger had said to the vendor, "I will deal fairly with you," and afterward misrepresented the value, that alone would have been sufficient to render fraudulent a conveyance made in reliance thereon.

v. Frisbie, 15 Hun, 26; McClellan v. Scott, 24 Wis. 81; Harris v. McMurray, 23 Ind. 9; Ladd v. Pigott, 114 Ill. 647, 2 N. E. 503; Stevens v. Allen, 51 Kan. 144, 32 Pac. 922; Turner v. Harvey, Jacob, 178; Walters v. Morgan, 3 DeG. F. & J. 718, s. c. 4 L. T. N. S. 758; Turner v. Green [1895] 2 Ch. 209; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 13th ed. § 192; Livingston v. Peru Iron Co. 2 Paige, 393; Hanscom v. Drullard, 79 Cal. 234, 21 Pac. 736; Brady v. Finn, 162 Mass. 260, 38 N. E. 506; Malory v. Leach, 35 Vt. 156, 82 Am. Dec. 625; Howard v. Gould, 28 Vt. 523, 67 Am. Dec. 728; Graham v. Stiles, 38 Vt. 578; Central R. Co. v. Kisch, 36 L. J. Ch. N. S. 849, 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 759; Thompson v. Randall, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 716, 90 S. W. 251; Merwin, Eq. & Eq. Pl. p. 269, § 500.

In Smith v. Beatty, supra, it was said that a vendee or lessee of land who knows that there is a mine on the land is not compelled to disclose that fact to the vendor or lessor; but if he is interrogated as to his knowledge of such a thing, and he then denies any knowledge of the mine, this denial will make the transaction fraudulent.

And in Stackpole v. Hancock, supra, it was said that, "according to the rule of the common law, a vendee who has information of a mine on the land of another, of which he is ignorant, is under no legal obligation to disclose such fact in making a purchase. Under such circumstances, the vendee may remain silent as to the real facts, and purchase; but such situation places him under legal obligation to do no act or make any representation calculated Representations of value made by one having knowledge of the true value, to one who is ignorant thereof, and has not equal means of knowledge, are statements of fact.

Morehead v. Eades, 3 Bush, 121; Stones v. Richmond, 21 Mo. App. 17; White v. Loudon, 90 Hun, 218, 28 N. Y. Supp. 619, 36 N. Y. Supp. 1135; Cahn v. Reid, 18 Mo. App. 115; Murray v. Tolman, 162, Ill. 417, 44 N. E. 748; Borders v. Kattleman, 142 Ill. 96, 31 N. E. 19; Newton v. Ganss, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 90, 26 S. W. 81; Miner v. Medbury, 6 Wis. 295; Nowlin v. Snow, 40 Mich. 699; Chase v. Boughton, 93 Mich. 285, 54 N. W. 44; Cressler v. Rees, 27 Neb. 515, 20 Am. St. Rep. 691, 43 N. W. 363; Jackson v. Collins, 39 Mich. 557; Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet. 26, 10 L. ed. 42; Tacoma to mislead the owner into the belief that there was no mine on the land. If the vendee undertakes to speak under such circumstances, he must utter the truth."

So, in Caples v. Steel, 7 Or. 492, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 1, the court remarked that "a person who knows that there is a mine on the land of another, of which fact the owner is ignorant, may nevertheless buy it without disclosing his knowledge of its existence to the owner, and this will be no fraud on the part of the purchaser. . . . Where, however, one about to purchase a tract of land willfully misstates any material fact to the owner, or by any act intentionally misleads him in regard to the value of the land, and through these misrepresentations succeeds in inducing the owner to part with his property for less than its value, a court of equity will relieve him, and set aside the contract thus made as a fraudulent transaction."

b. What amounts to a fraudulent concealment or misrepresentation.

1. Value, location.

False representations by the purchaser of real estate as to the value of the real estate, coupled with false representations as to location, condition, etc., constitute fraud which will entitle the vendor to rescind a sale made in reliance upon such representations, he being ignorant with reference thereto, and the purchaser informed in that regard. Lofgren v. Peterson, 54 Minn. 343, 56 N. W. 44 (false representation as to value, location, and the price allowed in exchange for other real estate); Manley v. Carl, 20 Ohio C. C. 161 (false representations that land was worn out, in bad repair, and of "but little value"); Masterton v. Beers, 6 Robt. 368 (falsely asserting an event had happened, the happening of which influenced the owner in fixing the selling price); Morgan v. Dinges, 23 Neb. 271, 8 Am. St. Rep. 121, 36 N. W. 544 (concealing facts affecting the value, and in effect belittling the owner's interest, and falsely asserting that it had been cut off by tax sale).

v. Tacoma Light & Water Co. 17 Wash. 458, 50 Pac. 55; Cruess v. Fessler, 39 Cal. 336; McClellan v. Scott, supra, 81; Hetland v. Bilstad, 140 Iowa, 411, 118 N. W. 422; J. H. Clark Co. v. Rice, 127 Wis. 451, 106 N. W. 231, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 505; Picard v. McCormick, 11 Mich. 68; Neil v. Cummings, 75 Ill. 170; Gifford v. Carvill. 29 Cal. 589, 6 Mor. Min. Rep. 558; Wall v. Stubbs, 1 Madd. Ch. 80; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 13th ed. p. 206, note.

The oratrix had the right to rely upon the representations made to her by the defendant.

Mountain v. Day, supra; Smith v. McDonald, 139 Mich. 225, 102 N. W. 738; Endsley v. Johns, 120 Ill. 469, 60 Am. Rep.

Compare with People v. Tynon, 2 Colo. App. 131, 29 Pac. 809, which holds that a statement by a purchaser of land familiar with its value that it is worth $12 per acre, when as a matter of fact it is worth $25 per acre, does not constitute a fraud upon the vendor, although ignorant of the value, which will authorize him to rescind a conveyance made in reliance upon such representations, since such representations are simply statements of opinions as to the value of property considered generally with reference to its market price, as to which there might be wide differences of opinion. The court said this was a matter upon which the vendor had as full and ample knowledge or opportunity for information as had the vendee.

Where a purchaser of land, knowing that the vendor was ignorant of conditions existing in the locality of the land enhancing its value, makes false representations to the vendor as to the value of the land, these facts are sufficient to justify the court in submitting to the jury the question of fraud, in an action by the vendor against the vendee for fraudulent representations as to the value of the land. Mountain v. Day, 91 Minn. 249, 97 N. W. 883.

A cause of action against a vendee of real estate, for fraud and deceit in procuring the sale thereof, is established by showing that the vendor was a deaf mute, mentally weak and ignorant of the value of the land conveyed, and was induced to sell and convey the same in reliance upon false representations as to its value by the purchaser, who knew of the ignorance of the vendor, and made such representations with knowledge of their falsity and for the purpose of misleading and deceiving him. Culley v. Jones, 164 Ind. 168, 73 N. E. 94.

Generally, the value of real estate is a mere matter of opinion, and representations of value should be grossly and palpably false to authorize an inference of fraud therefrom which would entitle the vendor of real estate to rescind a conveyance thereof. A representation by a brother to his sister that certain land owned by her is worth $8 per acre, when as a matter of fact it is worth $10 to $12 per acre, is not sufficient to justify an inference of fraudulent intent entitling the sister to rescind a conveyance of real estate to the brother, where her interest therein was subject to the dower right of her mother, and the brother purchased subject thereto. Marshall v. Lewis, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 140.

572, 12 N. E. 247; Clark v. Ralls (Iowa) 24 N. W. 507.

One who has made misrepresentations cannot be heard to say that the person to whom he has made them should not have believed him, and the latter cannot be charged with negligence in so doing.

Chamberslin v. Fuller, 59 Vt. 247, 9 Atl. 832; Chamberlain v. Rankin, 49 Vt. 133; Kendall v. Wilson, 41 Vt. 567; Reynell v. Sprye, 8 Hare, 222, affirmed in 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 633; Shepherd v. Kain, 5 Barn. & Ald. 240; Robinson v. Reinhart, supra; Riley v. Bell, 120 Iowa, 618, 95 N. W. 170; Wilson v. Nichols, 72 Conn. 173, 43 Atl. 1052; Borders v. Kattleman, supra; Reid v. Flippen, 47 Ga. 273; Harvey v. Smith, 17 Ind. 272; Ladd v. Pigott, 114 Ill. 647, 2 N.

In Pennybacker v. Laidley, 33 W. Va. 624, 11 S. E. 39, the court said that where parties deal at arm's length, and there is no fiduciary relation between them, then the mere silence on the part of the purchaser, or failure to disclose knowledge on his part of peculiar value belonging to the property sold, would not be sufficient to set aside a sale fairly made, and which was otherwise unimpeachable. Applying this doctrine to the facts, it was held that an attorney at law who knew that a deed by a married woman of real estate worth upwards of $200,000 was void because not acknowledged as required by law did not commit a fraud upon her by procuring from her a conveyance of such land for the sum of $500, even though he falsely represented that her interest therein was merely her dower right, she, at the time of making the conveyance, believing she was only conveying such right in the property, although she did not think that she had any interest whatever therein, the effect of the defect in acknowledgment being a question as to which lawyers might differ.

2. Valuable minerals.

A purchaser of real estate commits a fraud upon the vendor entitling the latter to rescind a sale of the real estate, where the former, with knowledge of the existence in the land of some valuable mineral, of which the latter is ignorant, makes misrepresentations with reference thereto, or upon direct inquiry by the vendor fails to disclose same.

Thus, where the vendor of land was without knowledge of the existence of an oil well therein, and the purchaser, with knowledge in regard thereto, upon inquiry,

E. 503; Stevens v. Allen, 51 Kan. 144, 32 Pac. 922; American Nat. Bank v. Hammond, 25 Colo. 367, 55 Pac. 1090; Dashiel v. Harshman, 113 Iowa, 283, 85 N. W. 85; Boddy v. Henry, 126 Iowa, 31, 101 N. W. 447; May v. Loomis, 140 N. C. 350, 52 S. E. 728; Hutchinson v. Gorman, 71 Ark. 305, 73 S. W. 793; Western Cottage Piano & Organ Co. v. Anderson, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 513, 101 S. W. 1061; Hanson v. Kline, 136 Iowa, 101, 113 N. W. 504; Eastern Trust & Bkg. Co. v. Cunningham, 103 Me. 455, 70 Atl. 17; Turner v. Kuehnle, 70 N. J. Eq. 61, 62 Atl. 327; Handy v. Waldron, 19 R. I. 618, 35 Atl. 884; Smith v. Werkheiser, 152 Mich. 177, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1092, 125 Am. St. Rep. 406, 115 N. W. 964; United States Gypsum

Co. v. Shields (Tex. Civ. App.) 106 S. W. 724, affirmed in 101 Tex. 473, 108 S. W. 1165; Perry v. Rogers, 62 Neb. 898, 87 N. W. 1063; Smith v. McDonald, supra; Manuel v. Shafer, 135 Wis. 241, 115 N. W. 801; Steen v. Weisten, 51 Or. 473, 94 Pac. 834; Judd v. Walker, 215 Mo. 312, 114 S. W. 979; Rollins v. Quimby, 200 Mass. 162, 86 N. E. 350; Tacoma v. Tacoma Light & Water Co. 17 Wash. 458, 50 Pac. 55; Buckley v. Acme Food Co. 113 Ill. App. 210; Wells v. Adams, 88 Mo. App. 215; White v. Loudon, supra; Miller v. John, 111 Ill. App. 56.

Messrs. John C. Sherburne, William B. C. Stickney, and W. A. Dutton, for appellees:

If A, knowing of a mine on the estate of informed the former that he had no such knowledge, such concealment constitutes fraud sufficient to entitle the vendor to a cancelation of the contract for the sale of the land. Burrows v. Fitch, 62 W. Va. 116, 57 S. E. 283.

The same result was reached in Livingston v. Peru Iron Co., 2 Paige, 390, reversed on other grounds in 9 Wend. 511, where a vendee represented to the vendor that certain wild land he desired to purchase was worth nothing except for the purpose of sheep pasture, he at the time knowing of a valuable iron bed on the property, of which the vendor was ignorant.

And in Stackpole v. Hancock, 40 Fla. 362, 45 L.R.A. 814, 24 So. 914, where a vendee represented that he wanted the land to add to land of his own in order to complete a body of timber land, and that the land was valuable only for the timber on it, he at the time knowing of valuable deposits therein of phosphate, of which the vendor was ignorant.

Also, in Bowman v. Bates, 2 Bibb, 47, 4 Am. Dec. 677, 6 Mor. Min. Rep. 363, where a purchaser of land concealed from the vendor the fact that it contained valuable salt deposits, and also induced the agent of the vendor to refrain from sending him information in that regard.

So, it amounts to fraud on the part of purchasers of land at judicial sale, which will invalidate a conveyance of the property, after having discovered upon the land prior to the sale a valuable cave of great dimensions, with numerous avenues and apartments containing grand and magnificent curiosities, to secretly explore it by day and night, and carefully stop up and conceal the entrance thereto, to prevent any other prospective purchaser from gaining any knowledge of the extent and magnificence or real value of the cave, and, instead of divulging the discovery, to report that the cave on the premises was nothing but a mud hole, the report being made to persons who might be prospective bidders for the property, and to ask others who had some information as to the value of the cave to "keep mum" with 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) reference thereto. Merchants' Bank v. Campbell, 75 Va. 455.

But in Caples v. Steel, supra, it was held not to constitute a fraud entitling the vendor of real estate to set aside a conveyance or thereof, for the vendee, who lived near the land and was acquainted with it, to refrain from informing the vendor of indications of coal in the land; and neither was he under any obligation to take the vendee to the several places where shafts had been sunk or tunnels run into the ground in prospecting for veins of coal, although he was showing the vendor over the property.

And in Storthz v. Arnold, 74 Ark. 68, 84 S. W. 1036, a purchaser of land residing near it, by representing to the owners, who resided at a distance therefrom, that its value was much less than it really was, was held not to have committed a fraud upon the vendors sufficient to authorize a rescission of the conveyance, although he also believed the land to contain valuable minerals, and bought it for this purpose, and concealed this fact from the vendors, who were poor ignorant negro girls, they, however, advising with their adult relatives in regard thereto.

